For Work With Underprivileged Children Quincy Native Sheena Curley Honored By White House

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy native Sheena Curley was recently recognized by the White House as a "Champion of Change" for her work with underprivileged children as the director of the Knoxville Kiwanis Fresh Air Camp.

"I love to work with challenges. Kids that are challenges are more fun to work with than kids that just follow directions," said Curley. "I just feel that they need to know that there is unconditional love and that you will support them when they are doing their best. If they are doing their best then they should really be supported."

Curley, who has been running the camp for over 20 years, gives up her summer vacations so that underprivileged children and children with disabilities will have a memorable summer experience that they might not be able to have otherwise.

"A lot of the kids that come to the camp are from agencies where the kids are in need," said Curley. "They need a break, or mom needs a break or they just need to have places where they can go and stay out of trouble. My goal is to teach conflict resolution, because a lot of these kids come in and the biggest way for them to handle things is to hit, and to punch or to scream, I give them other ways."

Curley wasn't able to make the trip to the White House in September. She was diagnosed with breast cancer and underwent chemotherapy treatments on the day that she, along with 13 others, were to be recognized.

When they called me from Washington, D.C. to get my Social Security number I thought the guy was joking and I told him I don't give out my Social Security number. ## Pedestrian Safety, Towing Focus For Council Jan. 16

By SCOTT JACKSON

After nearly 100 pedestrians were struck by vehicles in 2012, the City Council's public safety committee will begin the new year looking for ways to quell the problem.

In December, Ward 4 Councilor Brian Palmucci – the committee's chairman – and Councilor Doug Gutro introduced a resolution requesting a report on all such accidents from over the last three years. Palmucci told The Sun he anticipates having that information before the Jan. 16 meeting. He said that meeting would focus on sorting through the documents and taking input from various stakeholders, including the Police and Public Works Departments. A second meeting to be held either this month or in February would focus more on solutions.

"It will be a fact finding meeting where we take in as much information as we can," Palmucci

Cahill Trial Status Update Friday

Attorneys representing former Treasurer Tim Cahill and prosecutors from the attorney general's office are due back in court tomorrow (Friday) for a status update on Cahill's corruption trial.

Cahill, a Quincy resident and former city councillor, was indicted last April on two counts of conspiracy. Prosecutors alleged he used public money for Lottery ads to give a boost to his failed 2010 gubernatorial campaign. Cahill argued the ads were necessary to defend the Lottery from third-party attacks – the Lottery ads didn't mention Cahill by name and his voice and likeness were not used.

Last month, Judge Christine Roach declared a mistrial after the jury could not come to a unanimous verdict following seven days of deliberations. She asked attorneys from both sides to meet with her on Jan. 4, Friday.

Brad Bailey, one of Cahill's attorneys and a former federal prosecutor, told The Sun that it was too early to speculate about what would happen at the meeting. He said the parties could inform the judge that they are working towards a settlement or have reached one, or prosecutors could say whether or not they plan on pursuing another trial or ask for more time – as of now there is no deadline to make that decision.

"The only deadline is that the parties show up in court January 4th," Bailey said.

He added that Roach could impose a deadline for that decision during after speaking to both sides.

While the jury could not come to a verdict on Cahill, they did acquit his co-defendant Scott Campbell of the same two charges. Campbell, also a Quincy resident, was Cahill's chief of staff at the Treasury and campaign manager.

Quincy Police Arrest Three On Drug Charges

Seize Over 26 Grams Of Heroin, $2,290 In Cash, Jeep Cherokee

Three suspects are due back in court on Jan. 14 after being arrested on drug charges last week.

Around 4 p.m. on Dec. 26, the Quincy Police Drug Control Unit was conducting an investigation targeting Angela Tantillo, 26, of Fall River. Police had been investigating Tantillo for about a month, alleging that she was selling narcotics in different locations around the city.

That afternoon detectives observed her operating a vehicle in the vicinity of Burgin Parkway/Paul Harold Bridge/Parkingway. Police say they saw Tantillo conduct a drug deal at that time, and then they arrested her. Detectives found heroin and cash in the vehicle, and transported Tantillo to the station for booking. The seized substance was tested using the city's handheld Tru-Narc device, which confirmed that it was heroin.

In total, police seized more than 26 grams of heroin with a $6,000 street value, $2,290 in cash, and a 2006 Jeep Grand Cherokee. Also in the vehicle were Tantillo's children. Det. Lt. Patrick Glynn of QPD's Special Investigations and Narcotics Unit said the arresting detectives thought it was disturbing that she would have them with her.

"The quantity of drugs and cash seized were significant for this dealer [as] it separated her from the heroin and cash profits," Glynn said. "The most disturbing issue for the detectives, especially during the Holiday Season, is that Ms. Tantillo had her children with her during the sales of illegal drugs. This is a common practice among drug dealers believing the police will not stop, search, and arrest individuals with children."

The Department of Children and Families was notified about the incident and Glynn is hopeful they can assist Tantillo's children.

Tantillo was charged with trafficking heroin, distribution of a class "a" substance (heroin), and conspiracy to violate drug laws. She pleaded not guilty at her Dec. 27 arraignment at the Francis X. Bellotti Courthouse. She was held on $50,000 cash bail/$500,000 surety and has a probable cause hearing scheduled for Jan. 14.

Also charged were Michael Browne, 23 of Quincy, and Michael Quigley, 23 of Weymouth. Browne was charged with conspiracy to violate drug laws and being present where heroin was kept. Quigley was charged with operating a vehicle without a license, possession of a class "a" substance (heroin), and conspiracy to violate drug laws. Browne and Quigley both pleaded not guilty and were released on their own recognizance. They're also due back in court on Jan. 14.

Glynn credited Quincy residents for helping in the investigation by contacting the department's drug hotline.

"This arrest demonstrates the success of the collaborative efforts of the police and citizens working together. Information supplied via the drug hotline and other tips assisted in leading to this arrest," Glynn said. "We are grateful for the continued support through the drug hotline."

W. Quincy Fire Displaces Two Families

By SCOTT JACKSON

A one-alarm fire forced two West Quincy families from their homes just before Christmas.

At 9:13 p.m. on Dec. 23, the Fire Department was called to a duplex at 456/458 Granite St., according to Fire Inspector Jimmy Wong, the department's investigator. It took two engines and two ladders about two hours to extinguish the fire, Wong said, and the damage was more extensive to the unit at 456 Granite St. than the other unit.

"456 actually suffered more damage than 458 - 458 had some water and smoke damage, 456 had fire, smoke, and water damage," Wong said.

The residents have not yet been able to return to the duplex and won't be able to until repairs are made. The four people at 456 Granite St. were staying at the home of a friend or relative, Wong said, and the four at 458 Granite St. stayed in a hotel paid for by the property owner for one night and were then under the care of the Red Cross.

Wong said the fire was caused by electrical problems in the duplex. No firefighters or residents were injured.

Dry Cleaners' New Building Before Planning Board

By SCOTT JACKSON

Nearly six months after a four-alarm fire gutted Dependable Cleaners' headquarters on Quincy Avenue, the company will appear before the Planning Board next Wednesday with plans to replace the building.

Planning Director Dennis Harrington said the proposed building at 320 Quincy Ave. would be approximately the same size and layout as the original building, which Dependable had owned since the 1970s. The design will be updated to reflect current building codes, and the parking lot will include added spaces.

Unlike the old building, which housed both a laundromat and the company's main office, the new building will have sprinklers, according to Robert Conlon of the Inspectional Services Department. New buildings over 7,500 square feet are required to have sprinklers; the old Dependable headquarters was exempt from that requirement because it was built before the codes made it mandatory.

The new building, which will be about 14,000 square feet, is being designed by the Wyrosdic Design & Construction Company of Lynnfield. Harrington said H.W. Moore Associates of Boston is reviewing the plan. Harrington said the Planning Board will look over a site plan review of the site. They will also look at how the construction would impact drainage in the area — Quincy Avenue has no drains on it.

"Quincy Ave. is an old state highway and doesn't have any storm drainage," Harrington said. "They need a drain analysis and they need a site plan review."

Harrington said it's too early to know if the board will vote on the proposal at the meeting, which will be held Jan. 9 at 7 p.m. inside the temporary City Council chambers. But he did note that the company has a right to rebuild after a fire, as long as it follows modern building standards.

"This was a catastrophic loss by fire, they have rights that others don't have,"

Harrington said. "They still have to comply with the rules but they're entitled to rebuild."

The fire broke on the afternoon of July 14, and was caused by a mechanical problem in the dry cleaning equipment in the rear of the building. It took the Fire Department's entire fleet — eight engines and three ladders — and a ladder and engine from Boston eight hours to extinguish the fire, though hot spots continued flaring up over the next two days. The fire caused extensive structural damage to the rear three-quarters of the building and the laundromat in front was done in by smoke and water damage.

Dependable Cleaners CEO Christa Hagearty couldn't be reached for comment, but after the fire she vowed to rebuild on the site where her parents started the chain.

"We're committed to the site," Hagearty told The Sun then.

The Planning Board will also hold its third hearing on a proposed luxury apartment development at Marina Bay during next Wednesday's meeting.

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows — a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized... or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get:
  - > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required
  - > A mortgage with a competitive rate
  - > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home
  - > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity — most likely once-in-a-lifetime — for first-time homebuyers. Is that you... or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

Son Beams

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

What You WON'T See in 2013

I hope no one minds that I borrow a theme that my dad used to write about at the beginning of a new year.

Henry's traditional "New Year's" column focused on "things you won't see" – a take-off on prognosticators who offered their predictions on what would happen in the new year ahead.

I'm not an expert on what will occur during the next 12 months in Quincy.

But here are a few items that you probably won't see in 2013:

You won't see Mayor Thomas Koch calling it a career at City Hall this year. The mayor will seek a fourth term this fall.

You won't see The Quincy Sun supporting the petition for a four-year mayoral term. And you won't see this newspaper endorse any political candidate in any local race.

You won't see Councillor Brian Palmucci filing traffic ordinances calling for double utility poles in his ward or anywhere else in Quincy.

You won't see Paul Moody, commander of the Sons of the American Squadron 294, refuse any American flags for Veterans Island at Fort Square.

You won't see School Committeeman Paul Bregoli giving second thoughts to his plan to consolidate the two high schools.

You won't see DPW Program Manager John Sullivan throwing away anything that can be recycled. And you won't see Sully say anything negative about the island of Bermuda.

You won't see Linda Bowes at the Kennedy Center not helping seniors – and that's ditto for Council on Aging Director Tom Clasby.

You won't see Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee advocating for another summer of road closures on the Neponset Bridge.

You won't see Ward 2 Councillor Brad Croall asking the state Department of Transportation to delay construction of the new Fore River Bridge.

You won't see Councillor Doug Gutro not ask for an update on Honeywell. Or suggesting that the speed limit on Hancock Street be raised to 60 mph.

You won't see Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten Hughes change her political party to Democrat.

You won't see architect Jim Edwards ask the city to demolish the James R. McIntyre Government Center (Old City Hall) and replace it with a parking lot.

You won't see Norfolk County District Attorney Michael Morrissey without a cell phone.

You won't see Gary Haynes, director of the historical program at United First Parish Church, and Adams National Historical Park Supt. Marianne Peak turn away any tourists.

You won't see the Quincy Partnership's St. Patrick's Day Brunch on Quincy Access TV . . . unless it's censored and given an "R" rating.

You won't see DPW Commissioner Dan Raymondi doing any "rain" or "snow" dances.

And you won't see 2012 again.

Happy, Healthy New Year to all our friends from the staff of The Quincy Sun.

Sheena Curley Honored By White House

that may be selected to go to the White House.

"I didn't think I would make it because at that point they had thousands of Kiwanis, because every club does a project. I was very ecstatic (about being chosen as one of the 14) but I knew I couldn't go because when they told me the date I had a chemo signed up, so I told them I couldn't give them an answer until I checked with my doctors."

While living in Quincy, Curley worked as a substitute teacher and aide in Quincy Public Schools special needs classrooms from 1976-1982, as well working at the Cerebral Palsy Center from 1983-1991. She moved to Knoxville, TN in 1991 after her husband William Curley, also a native of Quincy, retired from the Navy and wanted to go somewhere warm.

For the past 19 years Curley has spent her time working and teaching children and adults affected by addiction at the Great Starts Program in Knoxville.

"In 1993 I went to work at a high-risk nursery for drug-addicted newborns, and I became the director of it in 1996," said Curley. "I went to work on the adult side in 2007 and started teaching parenting classes. I needed a break. I had run the nursery for almost 13 years."

It was during her time working for the Great Starts Program that Curley got involved and started working as the director for the Knoxville Kiwanis Fresh Air Camp. The overnight camp runs for four weeks with an additional two weeks of day camp for children with disabilities.

"When I was working for the Great Start Program, the president of the club at the time asked me if I would do the camp. At Great Start you had summers off, and she knew I liked to stay busy," said Curley. "So I said I would do it for a couple of years and I have now been there 20 years. I love the kids, and I have changed a lot of things about the camp and have made a lot of things better."

One of those changes included changing the age range from 6-15 to 7-12, along with allowing some of those kids who were 13-15 years of age to come work for her as helpers. Another addition Curley has added to the camp program is the assistance of volunteers and groups helping out throughout the four weeks that the kids are there.

"I am so thankful for the 130 volunteers who give their time each year," said Curley. "We have church groups, Key Clubs, club members, and private and public schools helping us each year."

Curley said that every child who attends the camp applies and is interviewed; anyone selected is allowed to attend the camp for free thanks to a $300 donation from every member of the downtown Kiwanis Club. She added that she hopes that this year they will be able to get even more donations from surrounding Kiwanis Clubs in the Tennessee area in hopes of one day being able to accept more than 150 kids into the camp.

"None of the kids pay, this is all free to the families. They drop the kids off on Monday and they pick them up. If they can't afford something the kid needs, I have places where I get them for the kids. Anything they need will be paid for while they are there," said Curley. "I won't say no to a kid who I know has had a good week. I know what they have in their homes, because I made home visits with my job, because I know where they come from. It is important to know why you're there, why you're doing it and what good can you do, what can you really pull out of the kids."

While at camp kids participate in a number of different activities held throughout the day and into the night. They enjoy recreational activities, including swimming, basketball, hiking, arts and crafts and board games, along with enjoying movie nights, and even a day where the local zoo visits the camp.

Even while battling breast cancer Curley hasn't slowed down. She still is doing preparation work for this summer's camp, but she also knows at some point she will have to find someone to take her place.

"I'm a workaholic, I have to be busy. Just to show you, I'm in chemo and I'm not suppose to be doing anything and I am still working for the camp," said Curley. "I hope to do the camp for another five to 10 more years. My goal right now is to find someone to take my place. I need someone that has a love for children, not do it for the money, or for the title or the name."

They need to do it for the love of the children."

The Klein Pharmacy was in the corner store at the time and later became the Downs Pharmacy. For over 30 years the W.T. Grant Company was just beyond the pharmacy with entrances on both Billings Road and Hancock Street. Over the years many of the stores in the Downs have been changed a number of times, but since 1964 this corner has been home to the landmark Balducci's Pizza and Sub Shop. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Tobin To Give 'Accounting' In Mid-Term Address

Mayor Arthur H. Tobin will begin his second year in office Jan. 2 with a mid-term address in which he will compare the promises he made in his Inaugural with his accomplishments of the past year.

HOSPITAL AUDIT FINDINGS TO BE DISCLOSED JAN. 8

Track Saga Over; Time To Move On

I have little interest in engaging Mr. Chetwynd's vitriolic sermon (Dec. 20) point by point. However, I am compelled to address certain gross misstatements. As he prefers "Mr. O'Brien knows" format, let's go with that.

Mr. O'Brien knows: the reason why the track was removed from Veterans' Stadium. Apparently, Mr. Chetwynd doesn't know, or he wouldn't have implied its removal was optional.

Mr. O'Brien knows: Mr. Chetwynd's attempt to impugn my "failure to disclose" and my "wrongdoing" is diversionary and laughable. His "research" never bothered to determine that I joined the board at Parks and Recreation in March 2011. As such, I could not have "illegally" voted approval of the track in 2008.

Mr. O'Brien knows: as a former track athlete, I'd become quite familiar with the track's siting and construction issues before joining the board at Parks. As an unpaid Parks board member, I have no axe to grind for or against anyone.

The simple fact of the matter, Mr. Chetwynd, is that the track was approved by the School Committee voting procedure your group sought. It was built, then opened on a wonderful day in a touching ceremony. You were present, and you seemingly enjoyed it. You could have left it at that.

But you wanted to write to The Sun. Fine. You could have acknowledged the joyful ribbon cutting, and ended there. Instead, you veered off into snarky political statements whose timing was a year after the fact.

They reflected not a happy ending, but more like the ruminations of an antagonist.

You can't be so self-righteous or naive that you expected no reply by someone in the community. And your response has only showed me that you'll rail against being held to the same account you zealously hold others.

The track saga ended long ago. It's time to move on.

The Most Dishonest Campaign

The most dishonest campaign I have ever seen.

I started voting in 1968. It was the first election I was old enough to vote in. I have missed exactly one primary election in 44 years.

I have voted for candidates with philosophies as diverse as Ron Paul and George McGovern, and have listened carefully to what they have said all of these years.

I thought that I had seen the most dishonest and intentionally deceptive campaign I had ever seen when Keating blanketed the media with falsehoods about the drug search of a teen in Wareham that Perry had no part in whatsoever.

To watch the disgusting campaign of Warren fraught with intentional deception and straight up lies about Scott Brown is unbearable.

If a station gets an ad to broadcast and it's reviewed before it's aired, the station should be obligated to verify the honesty of what they are broadcasting onto our airways.

A call to the producers of the ad to ask them to cite the reason that they are telling the public that her opponent was "against equal wages for women" and "he's going to take the women's choices away" would have been fairly easy to verify or to dispel. If you cannot verify your claims, you should not be allowed to air it.

If the local supermarket is claiming it gives away prime ribs in its ads, it better be able to verify that it is in fact giving away prime ribs.

If the local car dealer says he is selling Fords for less than anyone else, he better be doing what he says or no ad!

I feel that there is no difference between those and political claims.

Six NQHS Students To Compete On High School Quiz Show

By EMILY TAFT

Six students from North Quincy High School will be teaming up to face 15 other high school teams during the fourth season of WGBH's High School Quiz Show later this month.

The team, made up of seniors Tim Bill, Cynthia Nelson, Kasey Shen, Nathan Donohue, and juniors Yi Fung, and Celeste Dang, competed against 89 other public schools in Massachusetts on Nov. 4 to make it to the top 16 that will compete on the show Jan. 26.

"It was exciting to make it to the top 16, we didn't have any idea how well we would do going into the competition," said Bill. "We were pleasantly surprised at the outcome."

To make it to the top 16 teams, the six teammates sat in a hotel room, during what is called Super Sunday, answering questions and not knowing how the other teams were doing and didn't find out that they had made the top 16 until Nov. 13.

"It will be a different experience to be on stage answering questions as opposed to what we did on Super Sunday," said Nelson. "My family was more excited than I was to hear that we made the top 16."

The students were chosen to be a part of the team by the faculty of North Quincy High School and will have the chance to compete in four different rounds of competition. The team is comprised of two alternates and four students competing, and each student was picked to be a part of the team because of their areas of expertise, covering a variety of topics from science, history and math to foreign languages, literature and humanity.

In January, the top 16 teams will start the single elimination rounds pairing up against each other until only two schools remain at round four. For each round the team makes it to they collect points, and depending on the round they may be penalized points if they answer a question incorrectly.

In round one, the toss-up round, teams face other teams answering short answer and multiple-choice random topic questions worth 10 points. In round two, the head-to-head round, individual players of teams face other players answering random topic, short answer only questions for 10 points. In round three, the category round, teams again face other teams and players will pick from a board of six themed categories each has five short answer or multiple-choice questions. The points for the questions in round three range from 10-30 depending on the level of difficulty. Round four, the lightning round, places teams against teams to answer random category questions in short answer form for 20 points.

For Super Sunday the team didn't get together after hours to study or practice for the competition, but they said they plan to study the recommended material that WGBH suggests. The team received a grant from State Street in order to purchase the materials they will need to study for the single elimination rounds in January. The team will also be practicing how to answer questions on stage in front of an audience and they will also be working on their nerves.

"All of us at North Quincy High are proud of these students and what they've accomplished so far," said NQHS Principal Robert Shaw. "Their achievement reflects their commitment to excellence and the hard work of the team and their advisors."

The winning team will take home the High School Quiz Show trophy, commemorative plaques for each team member and coach, an award of $250 towards the team/school and the title of High School Quiz Show Champions.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

Garnet, one of the modern and a high degree of brilliance, recognized birthstones for January, is probably best known for a fiery red color that could warm any winter night. However, not all garnets are deep red. In fact, garnet actually encompasses a family of more than ten different gemstones of similar chemical composition with different names and colors (excluding only blue). Aside from velvet red Almandine garnet, there are also the rarest and most valuable green Demantoid and cinnamon-colored Hessonite, as well as a host of others. All possess excellent hardness, which makes them perfect for everyday wear.

January is the month of the deep burgundy red garnet, a symbol of passion. A gift of garnet is thought to be symbolic of love and the desire for a loved one's safe travel and speedy homecoming. Here at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center you will find exquisite garnet rings, garnet pendants and garnet earrings. ## Suzie's Black Bean Soup

There is nothing like a hot cup of soup especially on a cold, raw, winter day. Today's recipe is from my daughter Suzie, a nutritionist, for a delicious black bean soup. She said to buy organic when you can.

BLACK BEAN SOUP

- 1 large onion (chopped)
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 3 cloves garlic (pressed or minced)
- 2 teaspoons cumin
- 1 can crushed tomatoes
- 3-4 cups vegetable broth
- 2 cans black beans (drained and rinsed)
- 2 carrots (peeled and sliced)

A huge bunch of mixed greens- spinach, kale, chard or whatever you like. They shrink, so usually do a bunch. Suzie said she bought a container of Olivia's baby spinach, then added chopped chard or kale.

- 1 cup corn
- 1 zucchini (chopped)
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 chipotle peppers drained and chopped fine (don't touch your eyes after chopping)
- 1- cup cilantro, chopped
- Juice of one lime

In a stockpot, cook the onions in the hot oil for five minutes, then add the garlic and cumin. Add the chipotles, tomatoes and broth. Then add the carrots and greens, cover and simmer for about 30 minutes. Add the beans and corn and cook uncovered for about 10 minutes. Lastly, add the cilantro and lime juice.

Let sit a while before serving. Suzie said she likes a dollop of plain Greek yogurt on top instead of sour cream.

Shirley's Peanut Butter Bon Bons

If you love peanut butter and chocolate, you will enjoy this recipe given to me by my friend Shirley. We were talking on the phone recently and although she enjoys baking, she liked this recipe because it is a no-bake one.

It can be prepared ahead of time and kept for days in the refrigerator.

SHIRLEY'S PEANUT BUTTER BON BONS

- 1- pound confectionery sugar
- 1-18 ounce jar peanut butter
- 1 stick unsalted butter (softened)

- 1- teaspoon vanilla
- 1 bag chocolate wafers
- 1 bag white chocolate wafers (optional)

Mix all of the ingredients together except the chocolate wafers. Make into small bite sized balls and place on a cookie sheet. Refrigerate for three hours or overnight.

While these are cooling, melt the chocolate wafers. When the balls are cooled cover each one with the melted chocolate. Refrigerate again until the chocolate hardens. She said she also used the white chocolate wafers, cut them in halves, and then decorated each bon bon.

Tilted Kilt Hearing Jan. 30

By EMILY TAFT

The Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission will meet on Jan. 30 to discuss the ruling the Quincy Board of License Commissioners made during their Aug. 28th meeting denying an all alcohol restaurant license to the Tilted Kilt.

The hearing was originally set for Dec. 12, but after filing for an appeal restaurant owners, Gordon Hyde and Ashtok Patel and their lawyer Louis Cassis, decided to make a motion to have the decision made by the License Board to be completely thrown out. The Commission decided to deny that motion and now the date for the appeal hearing has been set for Jan. 30th at 10:30 a.m. it will be held in the ABCC building on 239 Causeway St., first floor, Boston.

During a recent License Board meeting Chairman and City Clerk Joseph Shea said that they are holding the liquor license the Tilted Kilt owners applied for until after the hearing with the ABCC incase the boards decision is overturned.

All parties are required to submit a joint pre-hearing memorandum to the Commission within 20 days of receipt of the notice. The memorandum will contain the contested issues of law and the positions of the parties on those issues, along with a list of witnesses that will be called by each party, among other things.

The board voted to deny the license during a second hearing on Aug. 28th. During the first hearing on the license the board voted unanimously in favor, but shortly after that meeting it was found that St. John's was within 500 feet of the proposed site of the Tilted Kilt, and the church was not notified. The board subsequently held a second hearing on the matter and the license was then denied.

Board members Jay Duca, the city's director of Inspectional Services, Police Chief Paul Keenan and Shea voted against the license during the second meeting on the matter Aug. 28th meeting. Supporting the license were Fire Chief Joseph Barron and Health Commissioner Andrew Scheele, the board's co-chairman.

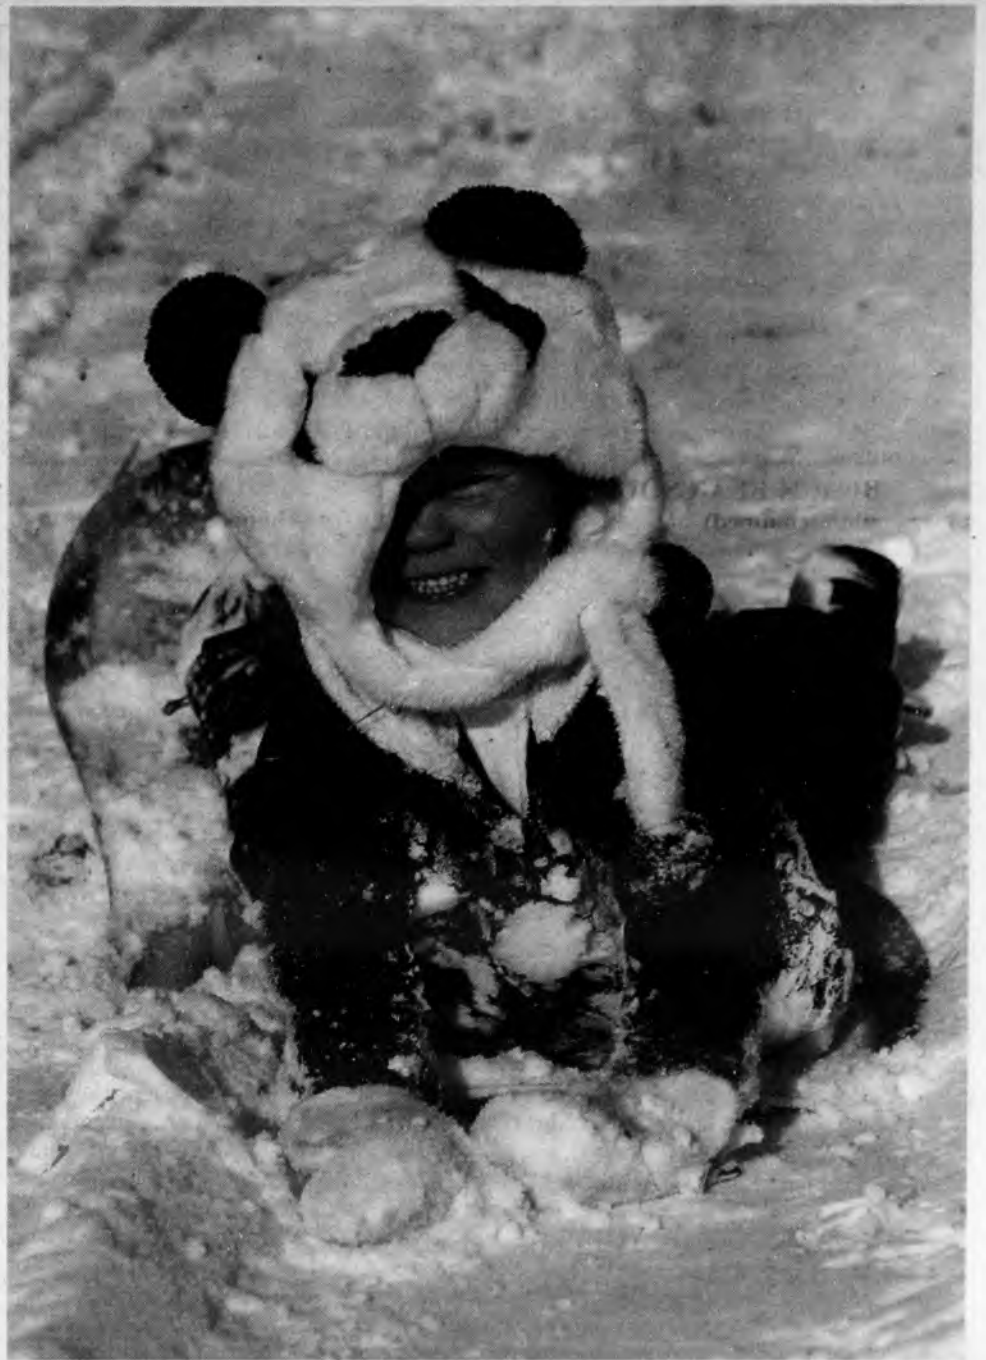

Over 20 residents spoke to the board voicing their opinions on the restaurant and the attire their waiters and waitresses would be required to wear. Seventeen people spoke against the license, three in favor, and one spoke as a neutral party during the August meeting. The board also received a number of petitions signed by more than 400 citizens against the proposal.

The Commission, in some cases, has the power to suspend, modify, revoke or cancel licenses. Decisions by the ABCC are posted within 30 days of the hearing.

If the ABCC approves of the decision the License Board made the owners of Tilted Kilt can then appeal the ABCC's decision to the superior court within 30 days of receipt of the decision.

If the ABCC disapproves of the actions made by the license board they will recommend further action. The board then must take the recommended action within five days of receipt of the ABCC's decision. They then decide whether they want to continue with their original decision or implement the recommendations from the ABCC. If the board decides to stay with their original decision the owners of the Tilted Kilt may file a suit against them in court or they may reappeal to the ABCC within five days.

Mayor To Outline New Initiatives At Mid-Term

time for our City, and there is much work – and many challenges – in the months ahead. I'm very much looking forward to sharing our vision with the community."

For the first time, the Mayor's address and ceremonial first City Council meeting of the new year will be held in the historic Richardson Room of the Thomas Crane Public Library. With the City Council Chamber in the McIntyre Government Center (Old City Hall) closed for renovations, officials needed to find an alternative location. The Richardson Room "is a perfect fit," Koch said.

"The library is a nationally recognized jewel, and we thought this would be a nice opportunity to showcase it in a way that hasn't been done previously," Koch said.

The library is listed on the U.S. National Register of Historic Places and has been designated a U.S. National Historic Landmark.

The address will mark the midpoint of Koch's third term and the start of his sixth year in office. While he was adamant that the address would not be a "year in review," the mayor said the work of the last several years fits into the larger picture of what lays ahead.

Noting the Quincy Center redevelopment, the construction of a new Central Middle School, citywide infrastructure and school improvements as well as broader economic development efforts, Koch said it's "all part of our shared future, and the work we have in the coming year."

Koch also said as in prior addresses this year's mid-term will likely stress the theme of working together to advance the city, and highlight specific examples of work done by others that has had a positive effect on Quincy.

"We are all in this together, and there are so many people who work incredibly hard on a daily basis to push this city in the right direction," Koch said, "and they do it by working together."

The mayor said he is looking forward to sharing new ideas as well as details of any announcements and new initiatives with the council and the public at Monday's event.

Orientation For Literacy Volunteers Jan. 9, 16

Literacy Volunteers of Massachusetts-Quincy at the Thomas Crane Public Library is seeking literacy volunteer tutors.

Volunteers provide free, one-on-one tutoring in basic reading and writing to adults on the South Shore.

Orientation sessions are held to determine if the program is compatible with a person's skills and interests and whether they want to make this volunteer commitment.

Orientations will be held on Wednesday, Jan. 9 and Wednesday, Jan. 16 at 6 p.m.

To sign up for an orientation, call 617-376-1314 or email qliteracy@ocln.org.

Pedestrian Safety, Towing Focus For Council Jan. 16

said. "It's a two part process the first being gathering information and the second is identifying problems and solutions."

Palmucci explained that the council is unsure about what the root of the surge in pedestrian accidents is. When the resolution was introduced on Dec. 3, for example, nearly every councillor spoke on the issue presenting differing views on the problem.

"They all had a different belief about what the issue is," Palmucci said. "That begs for us to really get into it – is it a pedestrian issue, is it an engineering issue, or is it a vehicle issue?"

In addition to the Police and DPW, Palmucci has asked a number of individuals to attend the meeting. They include the heads of each school's parent-teacher organization, representatives from the Asian community, and state transportation officials. Palmucci also extended an invitation to School Committee Vice Chairwoman Barbara Isola because he believes children's safety is paramount.

"We have so many children walking to school," Palmucci said. "If we don't provide safety for them we're doing a disservice."

Through Monday morning, there had been 96 pedestrian accidents in Quincy in 2012, compared to 71 in 2011. The problem has been so widespread that some residents have put forward their own solutions. One resident, Peter Gleba of the Fenno House, suggested marking entrances to crosswalks with yellow paint and installing senior crossing signs at his building in a letter to Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymondi obtained by the Sun. Raymondi was unavailable for comment.

Pedestrian safety will not be the only item on the meeting's agenda.

The committee will also take a look at towing companies – specifically any city and state regulations governing their operations. Palmucci introduced a resolution in November asking the city to review the rules because tow companies are a major point of contention among the residents he represents.

"Since I was elected about three years ago one of the most frequent concerns from constituents is the tow companies," Palmucci said. "We need to step back and see what regulations govern tow companies in the city."

In the resolution, Palmucci asked for information from a myriad of city and state authorities. The goal of the meeting will be to put information he has received on the record – unlike the pedestrian safety topic, officials are not expected to discuss towing regulations with the committee. The information received could lead to new regulations, though Palmucci isn't so sure about that.

"I'm not sure there's any-

DA Morrissey Awards $2,000 School Security Grant To Quincy College

Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael W. Morrissey recently visited Quincy College to present a $2,000 grant to improve security on campus — part of his second annual School Safety Grant program.

The program reinvests seized drug money into making Quincy and Norfolk County safer.

"Our schools need to be safe places, places of refuge in order to be effective places of learning," Morrissey said. "Taking money that was forfeited by drug dealers and thugs and making capital improvements to the public schools in Norfolk County that make them safer and more secure — I consider that an excellent use of that money."

Last year, Morrissey disbursed $21,000 in 1 for 1 matching grants of up to $3,000 last year. This year he offered direct grants of up to $2,000. Quincy College's successful application asked for assistance funding improved door locking mechanism to better control who is entering its facilities.

"We share with District Attorney Morrissey a commitment to ensuring the safety and security of the College for the several thousand students who come here every day seeking a safe and secure environment in which to learn and improve themselves," said college President Peter H. Tsaffaras. "We greatly appreciate this grant as it helps us further our ongoing efforts to enhance campus safety, and we look forward to working with District Attorney Morrissey's office in the future on items of mutual importance."

In October, Morrissey

awarded a $2,000 grant for security cameras at Broad Meadows Middle School, the Lincoln Hancock and Squantum Elementary Schools.

Last year, Quincy's successful grant submission asked District Attorney Morrissey to fund $3,000 of the $6,500 price of installing security cameras for external surveillance at the Clifford Marshall and Snug Harbor elementary schools and the Sterling, Atlantic and Point Webster middle schools.

All of the grants were drawn on funds seized during narcotics trafficking investigations and subsequently forfeited by drug dealers during court proceedings.

Dukakis Sees 2012 As An 'Historic Election'

Former Bay State Governor Speaks At Library

By EMILY TAFT

Former Governor Michael Dukakis recently spoke to a crowded room full of Quincy residents and Quincy College students at the Thomas Crane Public Library about the recent Presidential election, and the changes that are happening in the country and Quincy.

"I think there are some very interesting things that are well worth thinking about in the aftermath of this election," said Dukakis. "For one thing, this country is changing . . . I think this may well be a historic election, for a number of reasons, obviously the fact that an African American was re-elected for a second time, and can you believe it, Elizabeth Warren was the first woman ever elected to the Senate in Massachusetts, I think it's great, but you wonder, a little, why has it taken this long?"

in progress, we can always make it better."

Dukakis said he believes the way elections are won, and the way Warren won, was because of the grassroots organization approach, and these people are winning elections now because the country is changing.

"I think what we are seeing is a changing mosaic," said Dukakis. "One of the great strengths of this country is that we were all born someplace else. Either our parents, or our grandparents, or our great-grandparents wanted a better life for themselves and their family so that's why they came to the United States.

"We all have our own life stories, and they are all different, they are all part of this mosaic called the United States of America. If my party has got any brains, and I hope they do, we will try and build on the success of this election."

Dukakis was elected into the Massachusetts legislature in 1962 and served four terms in the House of Representatives and in 1986 he was voted the most effective Governor in the United States. He was the 65th and 67th Governor of Massachusetts, from 1975-1979 and 1983-1991.

The 1988 Democratic nominee for President, Dukakis now teaches at Northeastern University and the University of California at Los Angeles.

"I'm a guy, for reasons I'm not sure I understand, was very interested in politics from a very early age," said Dukakis. "At the age of eight, in third grade, I had a teacher who decided to have an election for class officer, and I ran for class president. I believe so strongly in the importance of offering real educational opportunity to every single person in this country, on an on-going basis."

The college awarded Dukakis with the "Distinguished Speaker" award for his outstanding work and accomplishments in government, and dedication to the advancement of higher education in Quincy College.

SEVENTY-FIVE SCOUTS from the Boston Minuteman Council, including 32 from Quincy's Troop 42 and several others from Houghs Neck's Troop 6, delivered supplies to West Creek Methodist Church on the Jersey Shore to help residents impacted by Hurricane Sandy.

THE SCOUTS' first task was cleaning up Camp Citta in Barnegat Township, NJ. The boys chopped 20 cords of wood, allowing the camp to re-open the next weekend.

Helping Sandy Victims A Moving Experience For Scouts

By SCOTT JACKSON

Scoutmaster Ray Theberge's Scouts in Troop 42 have been active in the community before, collecting food as part of the Scouts for Food food drive and cleaning up Quincy beaches as part of the Cleaner, Greener program. They have launched fundraisers after natural disasters, like last year's earthquake and tsunami in Japan.

But those efforts were nothing compared to the journey 32 Scouts from the troop, and about 40 more from other area troops, including Troop 6 from Houghs Neck, took when they traveled to New Jersey Nov. 30. A convoy of Scouts in a motor coach, 15-passenger van, and box and pick-up trucks went to assist in Hurricane Sandy cleanup efforts.

"On a case by case basis, as disasters happen, we think of how to help them. Often we do fundraisers. It's pretty rare to have a disaster so powerful so close to us, and it's tough to bring 11, 12, 13-year olds into a winter storm," Theberge said. "Seventy-five people in a motor coach isn't something we do."

The Scouts ventured to New Jersey after Boston Minuteman Council CEO Chuck Eaton heard about devastation at Camp Citta — a Boy Scout reservation in Barnegat Township, NJ —

from his counterpart in the area. Trees across the camp were downed and it was thought that it would require weeks of work to clear the camp to get it up and running again. When Theberge heard about the camp, he felt it was a great chance to teach his Scouts important life lessons.

"This was perfect for the boys. They're going to learn a life lesson," Theberge said. "We made some calls. Through the generosity of community supporters we raised the funds for the trip."

The convoy of Scouts and supplies departed after school on Nov. 30, a Friday. They arrived at Camp Citta and used it as a base of operations. And they cleaned up the camp that Saturday, allowing the camp ranger to re-open it the very next weekend.

"He offered us a tent site and a little cabin and we offered to do some site cleaning," Theberge said. "The boys cut 20 cords of wood. He opened his camp the very next weekend."

That night Theberge's Scouts prepared food for the entire camp. They ended up serving local residents who stopped by the camp that night.

But the next day was the most emotional for the troop.

That day began when the Scouts got back into their convoy of trucks, and delivered supplies to the Methodist Church in West Creek, a few miles down the road from Camp Citta. They dropped food, water, clothes, and other essentials at the church, before leaving and driving down the road to Tuckerton and Little Egg Harbor.

"We took the motor coach into Tuckerton and Little Egg Harbor — it was devastated by storm surge," Theberge said. "Entire homes were missing either because the home collapsed or got washed away."

The Scouts broke out into teams of ten to deliver supplies to homeowners in Tuckerton and Little Egg Harbor, two neighboring communities that had a combined population of 24,000 before Sandy struck.

"The emotional connection really came on Sunday when they saw the devastation," Theberge said. "That was very touching and the house occupants broke into tears. It really hit home when they interacted with the community."

Since returning from New Jersey, Troop 42 has received an overwhelming response from the community. But he said his troop and others across the city are always working to make a difference in the community.

"In the City of Quincy there are 200 Scouts doing great things every day," Theberge.

IN THE JERSEY Shore community of Tuckerton, the Scouts saw many houses missing or sinking into the ocean. The Scouts delivered supplies to survivors of the storm who were still in their houses, bring tears to residents' eyes.

New Door Locks Add Security, Style

This Is A Hammer

By SAMANTHA MAZZOTTA

Q: We're buying a new house in a couple of months, and one of my friends mentioned that once the purchase is final and before we move in, I should replace all the doorknobs and locks on the exterior doors for security purposes. Is this really something we should do? What's the best way to replace them? -- Clark in Syracuse, N.Y.

A: While I haven't heard a lot about changing doorknobs and deadbolts on new homes for security purposes (you could just have the locks rekeyed), it certainly wouldn't hurt to do so. In addition to having new locks that no one else has the key to, you get the added benefit of choosing new styles of hardware for your exterior doors.

Once you've picked out the new doorknobs and deadbolts, remove and replace the old hardware one at a time. If there are any problems with installing the locks, you'll at least have one working lock on the door while you solve the problem.

Remove the doorknob by first taking off the cover plates. There may be screws holding the plates in place; unscrew and remove those. If there are no visible screws, check the doorknob on the interior side. A small slot should be visible on one side of the handle, usually behind the knob. You should be able to push in the small metal piece inside the slot, using a paper clip or even the tip of a key, until the knob pops loose. Now take off the cover plate.

An underlying plate will be visible. This can be popped off by locating a small notch on the edge of the plate where it presses against the door. Insert a flat head screwdriver into the notch and gently twist it to loosen the plate.

Now you're free to unscrew the attaching screws that hold the doorknob assembly. You also will need to remove the screws from the latch plate on the side of the door. Remove the assembly carefully so you don't damage the door.

If you intend to replace the strike plate as well, remove that from the door frame.

To install a new doorknob, reverse the above procedure. You may find that the new doorknob doesn't line up quite the same as the old. You can adjust the backset (the distance between the center of the doorknob and the edge of the door) to correct this. If you replace the strike plate, make sure the latch hits it correctly. Tighten up all the screws, being sure not to overtighten, and test to make sure the door latches and locks properly.

Replacing a deadbolt lock is very similar to replacing the doorknob. The biggest difference (and difficulty) is if a door does not already have a deadbolt installed. In that case you'll have to drill holes for the deadbolt and the latch before installing the new hardware.

HOME TIP: Maintain exterior door locks by cleaning and lubricating with a professional-quality product like Lockase or Tri-Flow, rather than squirting in graphite powder.

NORTH QUINCY senior forward Pat Verhault tangles with Quincy junior defenseman Jimmy Brennick during the Red Raiders' 6-1 win in the opening round of the Quincy Youth Christmas Tournament last week at Quincy Youth Arena. Verhault scored two goals in game one and also scored in North Quincy's 3-1 win over King Philip for the tournament title.

MR. STINGY - North Quincy goalie Nolan Greene stopped all but two shots (38 saves in all) in the Red Raiders' two wins in the Quincy Youth Christmas Tournament. North defeated Quincy 6-1 in the opening game and King Philip 3-1 in the championship.

North Quincy Defeats KP For Christmas Tourney Title

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was entirely fitting that one of the men who helped begin the Quincy Youth Christmas Tournament coached the first team to keep the championship in the city.

"It's cool, it's something special for the kids. They get a trophy and their picture taken. They get a sense of accomplishment that you don't usually get during the regular season," said North Quincy coach Matt Gibbons after his club had defeated King Philip, 3-1 in the championship game in the third annual holiday tourney last week.

Robbie Cameron, Shawn Grady and Pat Verhault scored, and North forechecked, backchecked, and played fundamental hockey out of a textbook in earning the title. Milton had won the first two crowns in a tourney that Gibbons played a major role in bringing to Quincy.

"It means a lot because it's our own tourney. We started it," said senior Rudy Tryon who has been a giant on defense for the first five games of the season. "Until tonight, North Quincy hadn't won a tournament at home since I've been here. My sophomore year, we lost to Milton in the finals, last year Quincy beat us. For the seniors, this means a lot."

The foundation of the win was the defense which has given just seven goals in five games. It began with the forechecking which pinned KP in their zone and when the Warriors came out, they came out disorganized. There was effort and depth here. North (4-1) played three lines and they all marked their men and skated their lanes. The names were Grady, Cameron, Verhault, Andrew Currie, Nick McGaughey, Sean Farnham, John McEvilly, Mike Finn, and Martin Blake. They all played hard, honest two-way hockey.

"When we forecheck like that, we can beat anybody," said Gibbons.

Red Raiders Skate Past Presidents In Opener - Page 21

"Our forechecking makes it almost intimidating to break out and that makes the defense's job easier," said Tryon.

The defense flourished in all three zones. The Red Raiders owned the neutral zone, denying KP any chances to set up. The defense made the plays at the blue line and kept everything clean in front for Nolan Greene who has given just one goal in each of his last four starts and had a quiet night for once with 13 saves.

"He was backing us up for a few games, now we're backing him up," said Gibbons.

There was depth on defense as well. North went seven deep, and it was depth with quality. Tryon, Matt Monahan, Josh Hayward, Ryan Martin, Matt McDonald, Timmy Glynn and Brendan Brady gave North needed minutes in its second game in two nights.

"Brady and Monahan are playing more minutes than ever and they're very consistent," said Gibbons.

Gibbons was concerned about the first ten minutes and a possible sluggish start after the high-intensity Quincy game. Not to worry. The Red Raiders poured seven shots on goal in the first 1:20. They had the first 12 shots on net for the game. However, they ran into a hot goalie for the second straight night in Dylan Unger, and the only goal of the first came from Cameron on a tip in of a drive from the point by Hayward. Martin also drew an assist on the play.

North upped it to 2-0 in the first two minutes of the second when Grady tucked home a rebound at close range with assists to Mc-Gaughey and Currie. However, Jack Riley scored on a breakaway for KP early in the third to cut it to 2-1. North had a 26-6 edge in shots through two (34-14 for the game) and it felt like the Red Raiders should be up by five goals. They were not and they had to respond.

"At that point you either step up or you don't. One or the other," said Gibbons.

The Red Raiders checked and checked some more. They held KP to two shots over the final 12 minutes and successfully navigated back-to-back shorthanded situations thanks to the stifling work of McGaughey, Grady, Tryon, and McDonald. Verhault put it out of reach with his third goal in two nights, an empty netter from Cameron with 29 seconds left.

"The penalty kills were the key. We just didn't let them set up," said Gibbons.

When Gibbons was an assistant at North, the Red Raiders played in a holiday tourney in Gloucester.

Gloucester vs. Haverhill was the feature game and North played Essex County from Vermont. Gibbons liked the excitement of the tourney and the crowds it drew. When he was named head coach at North, he talked to Athletic Director Jim Rendle and the Quincy Youth Hockey people about bringing a holiday tourney to Quincy.

"Actually, I was tired of playing Essex. It seemed like they were state champions every year," said Gibbons.

The tourney has flourished in Quincy. Milton is natural local draw. King Philip made the finals this year. North and Quincy is the dream marquee game. Their game last week drew one of the biggest crowds ever in the youth hockey building. And now the title is in the city with the coach and team who helped bring it home. It feels right.

"It feels like we won something," said Gibbons.

Verhault, Currie Spark Red Raiders Past Presidents

By BILL GRIFFIN

A year ago in the first round of the Quincy Youth Christmas Tourney, Quincy stunned North Quincy in an upset that was so shocking it had chants of USA! USA! ringing out from the stands in memory of the United States legendary victory over the Soviet Union in the 1980 Olympics in Lake Placid.

Many teams would have drawn on the bitter memory for inspiration. Not North Quincy. The Red Raiders live in the present and it serves them well.

Senior Pat Verhault and the red-hot Andrew Currie each scored twice and sophomore Mike Finn handed out a pair of brilliant assists to carry North past the Presidents, 6-1 before an overflow crowd in the opening round of the holiday tourney at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena last week.

"I didn't say a word to them about last year. Not a word," said North coach Matt Gibbons. "Look, this is a special rivalry. It's Quincy. The arena is packed. But we didn't want to play with the mentality that if we won this game, it made our whole season. It got us two points closer to where we want to go."

"I didn't think of last year once," said Verhault. "All day I thought about the scoring slump I was in and on the ice, I just wanted to find a way to put the puck into the net."

Putting the puck in the net for North required almost perfect offense in the face of a 39-save effort from Quincy's Ryan Higgins. He made 31 saves through two periods, had the Presidents up 1-0 after one, tied at 1-1 in the final three minutes of the second period and with- in 2-1 entering the third. He stopped slap shots, wrist shots, rebounds, deflections and breakaways. All six North Quincy goals were on great passes, precise shots, and wicked re-directions. There was nothing easy, nothing soft. Only the best offense would do.

"For two periods, he was unbelievable," said Gibbons.

"That was the best game he's played this year," said Quincy coach Tim Lewis.

A lesser team might have pressed, changed its plan, looked for the perfect shot against a hot goalie. North just its played its game. The Red Raiders fed senior defenseman Rudy Tryon (two assists) at the point for his booming slap shot. Currie, who scored twice for the third straight game, hit on two perfect deflections in a four-goal third period. Verhault finished a pair of cross-crease passes from Finn, who set up two Sean Farnham goals against Brockton, and is emerging as a pleasant surprise early in the season.

"Mike can thread the needle with his passes," said Gibbons. "Some passes are accidental. He knows what he's doing. He has a high hockey IQ."

"He put the passes right on my stick. All I had to do was finish into the open side," said Verhault.

Verhault's finishes of the two-on-ones with Finn were a pleasant reward for coach and player.

"We run a two-on-one drill just for Pat in practice and he never scores off it," smiled Gibbons.

"It's called the Verhault Drill. In practice, I never finish it. Tonight, in the game I was able to," said Verhault.

Junior Nolan Greene was steady and sure with 25 saves. Quincy scored just over three minutes into the game and that was it. He handled the puck well, worked effectively with his defense, and was at his best early in the third when Mike Pugsley, Patrick Freeman, and Jake Hallisey pressed for five unanswered shots early in the third with North up, 2-1.

"He's plays calm and that translates to the whole team," said Gibbons.

Freeman put the Presidents up, 1-0 at 3:07 of the first when he found the open side off a faceoff with assists to Hallisey and Matt Davis. The rest of the first period belonged to North, but Higgins gave nothing.

"The conversation between the first and second periods was to keep doing what we doing. One or two had to go in," said Gibbons.

Shawn Grady (goal, two assists) tied it at 1:13. He moved clear down the right wing, dragged the puck until just the right moment and hit the top corner on the short side with assists to Nick McGaughey (goal and an assist) and Matt McDona- ld. Verhault finished the first of his two setups from Finn with 2:48 left in the period to put the Red Raiders up to stay, 2-1. Robbie Cameron also had an assist on the play.

North put it away in the third with four goals. Currie made it 3-1 by deflecting a Tryon rocket off a nice passing play with Grady with 7:46 left. The Verhault-Finn connection upped it to 4-1 just over a minute later. McGaughey drove home a rebound with 3:17 remaining and Currie finished it with a deflection from Brendan Cox and Ryan Mock in the final two minutes.

"In the past we've got up 2-1 or 3-1 and that would be it. It was nice to see us keep the pedal on the gas and finish the game," said Gibbons.

For Quincy, Hallisey (two off the crossbar), Freeman and Mike Pugsley buzzed around the North net all night. Brandon Beal and Ryan Harty were solid on defense, and Aidan Pugsley worked well on the penalty-killing unit. There were long stretches during which Quincy was right there, skating with North and testing Greene. However, there was the inconsistency that comes with a young team (two seniors) which is still growing.

"There were times tonight when we were right with them," said Lewis. "What we have to do is put together three periods, 45 minutes of consistent hockey, and we haven't done that yet. It's part of the growing process, but it is frustrating."

MAINTAINING YOUR POSITION IN THE WORKPLACE

These days, lots of people have work concerns. For some, the problem is not so much keeping their job as it is being able to maintain a high level of performance. In many cases, employees spend so much time at work in front of their computer screens that the muscles and ligaments that support their heads and necks become strained from overuse. While symptoms may disappear with rest, stretching, and massage, they are likely to reappear and even become chronic unless further action is taken. In this respect, spinal manipulation performed by the chiropractor is a proven method for reducing neck pain caused by poor posture and extended computer use. The goal is to avert recurrences of neck pain.

At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we are specially skilled in the techniques of spinal adjustments and knowledgeable in the prevention of back and other muscu-loskeletal problems. A little care and attention can help you keep the pain at bay. Maintain a healthy weight. Exercise regularly. Sit up straight. When you lift something heavy, let your legs do the work. Scheduling regular spinal checkups is the best way to prevent spinal problems that could cause back pain. Call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health. If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

If you have injured yourself on the job, you are able to see a chiropractor without a referral. Even if you have seen occupational health, you are still able to see your local chiropractor for relief.

HANNAH DONOVAN — shown here bringing the ball upcourt against Quincy Dec. 14 — was a strong rebounder in the Red Raiders' 54-32 victory over the Presidents in the consolation game of the Abigail Adams Holiday Tournament.

QUINCY'S KAYLA McARDLE was also named to the All-Tournament Team. She led the Presidents with 9 points but Quincy bowed to North Quincy in the consolation game, 54-32. The Red Raiders' win snapped a nine-game losing streak to the Presidents dating back to 2009.

North Quincy Bounces Quincy, 54-32

By BILL GRIFFIN

The gym may have been a little quieter, the crowd a little smaller, the anticipation a little less sharp, but any victory in the North Quincy-Quincy rivalry is a sweet one. Few were sweeter than the one North savored in the consolation round of the Abigail Adams Holiday Tournament last week.

Coach Jessica Worden and every player on the Red Raiders team did something they had never done before. They beat Quincy in a game of basketball.

Maya Umoren controlled the inside with 17 points and junior Haley McKay spearheaded a defense which broke open a close game in the second half for a 54-32 victory which snapped a nine-game losing streak to Quincy which dates back to 2009.

"It was my first win against Quincy and none of the kids had even beaten them. Given how strong the rivalry is, it's satisfying," said Worden whose team authored a 33-point turnaround from the 51-40 defeat the Red Raiders suffered to Quincy on December 14.

"It meant a lot especially to the seniors because we had never beaten them," said McKay who gave a clinic on how to play man-to-man defense. "A lot of the Quincy kids are friends. I know them and have played against them which makes this a great feeling."

It started with North's man-to-man defense which held Quincy to 12 points in the second half and four in the final period. The defense started with McKay. "We had to deny their guards the ball," said Worden.

McKay matched up with Quincy's guards in North's man-to-man. McKay ran through a thousand picks, followed inside cuts and outside circling, kept her hands up, denied clear looks and contested each inch, each pass, each shot. It was effort as much as it was ability, and it took Quincy out of its offense.

"It's tiring to play that kind of defense. It takes commitment, but Haley stayed with it," said Worden.

The Red Raiders used their quickness in a three-guard set for most of the game and moved the ball beautifully. They ran through all their options on offense. Jane Minton (14) and Caitlin Bulger (6) hit from the outside, got to the basket, and moved the ball crisply inside to Umoren for clean looks. Annie Dow (five assists) and McKay kept the offensive flow running smoothly.

"We went small to match up with them. We have quickness and players who can play at different positions," said Worden.

Umoren, who made the all-tourney team, used a soft touch on short jumpers and a strong presence off the boards (12 rebounds). Sam McNally (seven points) and Hannah Donovan helped North rebound well out of a small lineup.

"Maya is so powerful that she's hard to deal with inside," said Quincy coach Jeff Bretsch. "She's strong and tonight she played with a lot of confidence."

Kayla McArdle, who made the all-tourney team, led Quincy for the second straight game with nine. Courtney Ryan had eight and Alyssa Lydon had a three-point jumper, a fast-break bucket and a quicksilver drive to keep Quincy tied at 12 after one and within 25-20 at the half before North's defense seized the game for a 46-28 edge entering the fourth.

"Give North credit. In the second half, they came out and attacked. They have a veteran team and they know what they are doing," said Bretsch.

Quincy (3-3) will regain

the services of 6'4" freshman Nicole Jorgensen, who missed the last three games with injury, against Bridgewater-Raynham at home January 2. North (3-3) hosts Plymouth North January 2.

In the opening, round, Quincy fought back from a 12-point deficit to take the lead before falling to Weymouth, 45-41. McArdle had 13 while junior Caroline McBride had 10 points and six rebounds.

North fell to powerful Braintree, 61-28. McNally had eight and Umoren played excellent defense against the Wamps' high-scoring front line.

Braintree won the tourney with a 48-16 win over Weymouth in the final.

Quincy Hockey Falls To Milton

By BILL GRIFFIN

Consolation games are never easy. Consolation games the night after playing an archrival are especially difficult.

Milton jumped to a fast start, built a five-goal lead and held off a strong Quincy finish to drop the Presidents, 8-4 in the consolation game of the Quincy Youth Christmas Tournament last week.

"We may have been a little flat at the start," said assistant coach Ted Walsh whose club fell to North, 6-1 the previous night. "We don't teach them that a consolation game is any less important. It means as much as any other game. It might have taken half a period to find our legs, but once we did, I thought we played pretty well."

Sophomore forward

Brian O'Callaghan had two goals for the Presidents while Patrick Donovan and Sean Brennick added singletons.

Milton led 3-1 after one and 6-1 after two. O'Callaghan scored in the first for the Presidents when he grabbed a loose puck off a faceoff just to the left of the crease and slipped it home with assists to Jake Hallisey and Patrick Freeman.

"O'Callaghan has a nicer scorer's touch and he's a young player who is still learning," said Walsh.

Quincy pumped in three goals and had its strongest period in the third. Donovan scored a shorthanded goal at the 3:00 mark with a top-shelf finish to the far side from the faceoff circle with an assist to Aidan Pugsley. O'Callaghan connected again on an unassisted goal with 10:19 left in the game when he intercepted a clearing pass and swept it in the open side. Brennick took a pretty feed from Mike Gendreau and tipped it home into the top corner for Quincy's final goal.

"The third period was our best. I thought we outplayed them," said Walsh.

Sophomore Ryan Higgins stopped 33 shots which gave him 72 saves in the two-night tournament. Along with his goal, Donovan played a strong two-way game.

"Ryan was excellent again and Patrick didn't take a shift off all night," said Walsh.

Quincy (1-4) traveled to Pembroke yesterday (Wednesday) for a 7:50 p.m. face-off against the Titans.

NORTH QUINCY'S HALEY MCKAY (No. 32) spearheaded North Quincy's defense and also kept the Red Raiders offense firing on all cylinders to help spark North's first win over Quincy since 2009. Quincy Sun File Photo/Robert Bosworth

North Quincy Boys Best Quincy In Hoop Tourney

By JEFF OHLSON

The John Adams Tournament is always an early season test for the teams involved. That test was never bigger for the Raiders (5-1) and Presidents (4-2), as they found themselves facing each other in the finals in what was an early season rivalry treat for everyone in attendance.

After beating Weymouth 70-64 Quincy coach Dave Parry didn't waste any time before looking towards North Quincy. "This is going to be fun... Going against North Quincy in the championship game, does it get any better than that? This is our first win in this tournament ever, can't ask for a bigger game tomorrow."

In their win, Quincy weathered nearly 20 turnovers and great 3-point shooting by the Wildcats and leaned on the long range prowess of sophomore Colin Evans, who was 5 of 6 from distance in the semi final match up and had a team high 19 points.

"Colin Evans is a special player, and when he's going good, it opens up the offense for the rest of the team," said Coach Parry.

On the other side of things, North Quincy needed overtime to get past Braintree in its matchup. With the Raiders up by two with seven seconds left in regulation, the Wamps found a lay up after seven unanswered points to tie the game.

In overtime, it was the 'Gould show' as the senior guards took over for the Raiders starting things early with a Pat Gould three-point-play off of a layup and foul and followed by a steal by Dan Gould, who scored 20 points in the game, that led to more free throws. After Braintree made a small run to tie the game, Dan Gould drove to the hoop to draw another foul with 5.6 seconds left in overtime. Gould hit both and the Wamps missed a contested three-pointer to end the game.

North Quincy coach Kevin Barrett knows just how import the Gould brothers are to the success of the Raiders.

"They are huge. Exactly what you would expect from senior captains. They just keep hitting their free throws and making big shots. They have been doing it for the better part of three years and that's what they are all about, stepping up and playing big when you need it the most," said Coach Barrett.

The Raiders coach also knew that his team would have to play better if it really wanted to take home the Adams tournament championship.

"It's a win, and that's the magic word, it's a win. We will take it and we look forward to the opportunity to win another Adams Championship. But if we think we can play the way we played tonight and win tomorrow though, we got another thing coming," said Coach Barrett.

With the match up all set up after both teams notched their respective wins, it was time for the big rivalry game everyone has seen over and over but this time there was a championship on the line.

It was all defense in the first quarter as both teams can out physical, referee's were forced to issue a few warnings, and neither team could find their touch around the rim. Quincy came away with the early advantage leading 14-7 after the first quarter, and they could attribute that to outrebounding the Raiders 8-3. One of the players leading the rebound charge was Quincy sophomore James Lam who notched nine rebounds in the game to go with six points.

The Presidents early success would begin to falter in the second quarter as the Raiders went on a run of their own outscoring Quincy 15-8 and mostly doing so by forcing turnovers and creating foul trouble for Quincy. North Quincy's Kyle Richardson created back-to-back Quincy turnovers that lead to six points for the junior guard, who had 11 points overall. Quincy's main problem in the turnover game was the inexperienced players that had to see early minutes due to foul trouble.

"We got in a lot of foul trouble, and we had to bring a lot of guys in the game early and put them in positions they weren't used to being in," said Quincy's coach David Parry.

Going into the half the game was all knotted up at 22-22 and the third quarter was just as tight as North Quincy and the Presidents battled back and forth to what went into the fourth quarter as a three-point Raiders' lead 34-37.

The fourth quarter was a lot more of what Raiders fans are used to seeing as once again, the Goulds took over. Early in the final quarter Pat and Dan Gould created back-to-back-to-back Presidents' turnovers that led to a 10-point run that all but buried Quincy under a 47-34 Raiders lead. Dan Gould had 20 points to go with 5 rebounds and Pat Gould had 12 points and 4 rebounds.

Quincy would battle back towards the end of the game as Jaquan Harris didn't give up and continued driving towards the hoop, creating 6 free throw attempts and eventually bringing the game back to a single digit

Raider lead, but it wasn't enough as time would expire in the game with North Quincy beating Quincy 58-47 to capture their second Adams Championship.

North Quincy coach Kevin Barrett was pleased with how his team played through a tough start.

"Huge win, something we haven't done in four years, big win for us. Tonight was our night, I was really proud of our kids and how they stuck with it through a tough beginning. Our defense and our rebounding really did it for us tonight, it was a different win for us," said Coach Barrett.

Quincy Coach David Parry liked what he saw and looks forward to the next time the Presidents and Raiders meet again.

"We played well, we had trouble with fouls and turnovers, but we can improve and work on those areas.

NORTH QUINCY'S Kyle Richardson - shown here in a game against Quincy Dec. 14 - scored 11 points for the Red Raiders enroute to a 58-47 win over the Presidents in the final of the John Adams Tournament.

We'll see them again and we look forward to it," said Coach Parry.

The championship was North Quincy's first in four years and second since the Adams Cup started.

Dick Laracy Plays In 70+ Roy Hobbs World Series

Dick Laracy, a retired Quincy police officer, continues to play baseball at the age of 80.

After playing the outfield for the Cardinals in the 58 and over division of the MA/RI Independent League last summer, Laracy recently played in the 70 and over Roy Hobbs World Series at Jet Blue Park, the new spring training complex for the Boston Red Sox in Fort Myers, FL.

Laracy caught for the National American Wildcats, a team made up of players from the Chicago area. They finished third (bronze medal) losing to South Dakota 5-2 in the semi-final game. South Dakota went on to win the championship game against the Western Silver Foxes, 4-3.

Laracy batted .383 with an on-base percentage of .444, with a walk and three RBIs before being sidelined with a pulled muscle. He was replaced behind the plate by 70-year-old Randy Hundley, a coach on the team who caught for 14 years in the Major Leagues, including 10 seasons for the Chicago Cubs.

DICK LARACY

The World Series is a wood-bat tournament with nine-inning games.

Laracy will be playing this winter in Florida in a senior league leading up to playing in the Legends of Baseball spring fling from April 10-14 at the Red Sox spring training complex.

"Give North credit. In the second half, they came out and attacked. They have a veteran team and they know what they are doing," said Bretsch.

Quincy (3-3) will regain

the services of 6'4" freshman Nicole Jorgensen, who missed the last three games with injury, against Bridgewater-Raynham at home January 2. North (3-3) hosts Plymouth North January 2.

In the opening, round, Quincy fought back from a 12-point deficit to take the lead before falling to Weymouth, 45-41. McArdle had 13 while junior Caroline McBride had 10 points and six rebounds.

North fell to powerful Braintree, 61-28. McNally had eight and Umoren played excellent defense against the Wamps' high-scoring front line.

Braintree won the tourney with a 48-16 win over Weymouth in the final.

Quincy Hockey Falls To Milton

By BILL GRIFFIN

Consolation games are never easy. Consolation games the night after playing an archrival are especially difficult.

Milton jumped to a fast start, built a five-goal lead and held off a strong Quincy finish to drop the Presidents, 8-4 in the consolation game of the Quincy Youth Christmas Tournament last week.

"We may have been a little flat at the start," said assistant coach Ted Walsh whose club fell to North, 6-1 the previous night. "We don't teach them that a consolation game is any less important. It means as much as any other game. It might have taken half a period to find our legs, but once we did, I thought we played pretty well."

Sophomore forward

Brian O'Callaghan had two goals for the Presidents while Patrick Donovan and Sean Brennick added singletons.

Milton led 3-1 after one and 6-1 after two. O'Callaghan scored in the first for the Presidents when he grabbed a loose puck off a faceoff just to the left of the crease and slipped it home with assists to Jake Hallisey and Patrick Freeman.

"O'Callaghan has a nicer scorer's touch and he's a young player who is still learning," said Walsh.

Quincy pumped in three goals and had its strongest period in the third. Donovan scored a shorthanded goal at the 3:00 mark with a top-shelf finish to the far side from the faceoff circle with an assist to Aidan Pugsley. O'Callaghan connected again on an unassisted goal with 10:19 left in the game when he intercepted a clearing pass and swept it in the open side. Brennick took a pretty feed from Mike Gendreau and tipped it home into the top corner for Quincy's final goal.

"The third period was our best. I thought we outplayed them," said Walsh.

Sophomore Ryan Higgins stopped 33 shots which gave him 72 saves in the two-night tournament. Along with his goal, Donovan played a strong two-way game.

"Ryan was excellent again and Patrick didn't take a shift off all night," said Walsh.

Quincy (1-4) traveled to Pembroke yesterday (Wednesday) for a 7:50 p.m. face-off against the Titans.

North Quincy Boys Best Quincy In Hoop Tourney

By JEFF OHLSON

The John Adams Tournament is always an early season test for the teams involved. That test was never bigger for the Raiders (5-1) and Presidents (4-2), as they found themselves facing each other in the finals in what was an early season rivalry treat for everyone in attendance.

After beating Weymouth 70-64 Quincy coach Dave Parry didn't waste any time before looking towards North Quincy. "This is going to be fun... Going against North Quincy in the championship game, does it get any better than that? This is our first win in this tournament ever, can't ask for a bigger game tomorrow."

In their win, Quincy weathered nearly 20 turnovers and great 3-point shooting by the Wildcats and leaned on the long range prowess of sophomore Colin Evans, who was 5 of 6 from distance in the semi final match up and had a team high 19 points.

"Colin Evans is a special player, and when he's going good, it opens up the offense for the rest of the team," said Coach Parry.

On the other side of things, North Quincy needed overtime to get past Braintree in its matchup. With the Raiders up by two with seven seconds left in regulation, the Wamps found a lay up after seven unanswered points to tie the game.

In overtime, it was the 'Gould show' as the senior guards took over for the Raiders starting things early with a Pat Gould three-point-play off of a layup and foul and followed by a steal by Dan Gould, who scored 20 points in the game, that led to more free throws. After Braintree made a small run to tie the game, Dan Gould drove to the hoop to draw another foul with 5.6 seconds left in overtime. Gould hit both and the Wamps missed a contested three-pointer to end the game.

North Quincy coach Kevin Barrett knows just how import the Gould brothers are to the success of the Raiders.

"They are huge. Exactly what you would expect from senior captains. They just keep hitting their free throws and making big shots. They have been doing it for the better part of three years and that's what they are all about, stepping up and playing big when you need it the most," said Coach Barrett.

The Raiders coach also knew that his team would have to play better if it really wanted to take home the Adams tournament championship.

"It's a win, and that's the magic word, it's a win. We will take it and we look forward to the opportunity to win another Adams Championship. But If we think we can play the way we played tonight and win tomorrow though, we got another thing coming," said Coach Barrett.

With the match up all set up after both teams notched their respective wins, it was time for the big rivalry game everyone has seen over and over but this time there was a championship on the line.

It was all defense in the first quarter as both teams can out physical, referee's were forced to issue a few warnings, and neither team could find their touch around the rim. Quincy came away with the early advantage leading 14-7 after the first quarter, and they could attribute that to outrebounding the Raiders 8-3. One of the players leading the rebound charge was Quincy sophomore James Lam who notched nine rebounds in the game to go with six points.

The Presidents early success would begin to falter in the second quarter as the Raiders went on a run of their own outscoring Quincy 15-8 and mostly doing so by forcing turnovers and creating foul trouble for Quincy. North Quincy's Kyle Richardson created back-to-back Quincy turnovers that lead to six points for the junior guard, who had 11 points overall. Quincy's main problem in the turnover game was the inexperienced players that had to see early minutes due to foul trouble.

"We got in a lot of foul trouble, and we had to bring a lot of guys in the game early and put them in positions they weren't used to being in," said Quincy's coach David Parry.

Going into the half the game was all knotted up at 22-22 and the third quarter was just as tight as North Quincy and the Presidents battled back and forth to what went into the fourth quarter as a three-point Raiders' lead 34-37.

The fourth quarter was a lot more of what Raiders fans are used to seeing as once again, the Goulds took over. Early in the final quarter Pat and Dan Gould created back-to-back-to-back Presidents' turnovers that led to a 10-point run that all but buried Quincy under a 47-34 Raiders lead. Dan Gould had 20 points to go with 5 rebounds and Pat Gould had 12 points and 4 rebounds.

Quincy would battle back towards the end of the game as Jaquan Harris didn't give up and continued driving towards the hoop, creating 6 free throw attempts and eventually bringing the game back to a single digit

Raider lead, but it wasn't enough as time would expire in the game with North Quincy beating Quincy 58-47 to capture their second Adams Championship.

North Quincy coach Kevin Barrett was pleased with how his team played through a tough start.

"Huge win, something we haven't done in four years, big win for us. Tonight was our night, I was really proud of our kids and how they stuck with it through a tough beginning. Our defense and our rebounding really did it for us tonight, it was a different win for us," said Coach Barrett.

Quincy Coach David Parry liked what he saw and looks forward to the next time the Presidents and Raiders meet again.

"We played well, we had trouble with fouls and turnovers, but we can improve and work on those areas.

NORTH QUINCY'S Kyle Richardson - shown here in a game against Quincy Dec. 14 - scored 11 points for the Red Raiders enroute to a 58-47 win over the Presidents in the final of the John Adams Tournament.

We'll see them again and we look forward to it," said Coach Parry.

The championship was North Quincy's first in four years and second since the Adams Cup started.

Dick Laracy Plays In 70+ Roy Hobbs World Series

Dick Laracy, a retired Quincy police officer, continues to play baseball at the age of 80.

After playing the outfield for the Cardinals in the 58 and over division of the MA/RI Independent League last summer, Laracy recently played in the 70 and over Roy Hobbs World Series at Jet Blue Park, the new spring training complex for the Boston Red Sox in Fort Myers, FL.

Laracy caught for the National American Wildcats, a team made up of players from the Chicago area. They finished third (bronze medal) losing to South Dakota 5-2 in the semi-final game. South Dakota went on to win the championship game against the Western Silver Foxes, 4-3.

Laracy batted .383 with an on-base percentage of .444, with a walk and three RBIs before being sidelined with a pulled muscle. He was replaced behind the plate by 70-year-old Randy Hundley, a coach on the team who caught for 14 years in the Major Leagues, including 10 seasons for the Chicago Cubs.

The World Series is a wood-bat tournament with nine-inning games.

Laracy will be playing this winter in Florida in a senior league leading up to playing in the Legends of Baseball spring fling from April 10-14 at the Red Sox spring training complex.

On Wednesday, Dec. 19, at approximately 8:41 p.m., Officer Matt Tobin was dispatched to the area of City Hall regarding the theft of a bicycle. Quincy Police Communications announced that they had a witness on the phone that saw a male steal a bicycle from the area of McIntyre Mall near 1305 Hancock St.

The caller/witness stated that he was following the thief and gave directions to the Police dispatcher, who broadcast the information to responding units. Officers Matt Patten, Jay Borden, Paul Foley and Matt Tobin flooded the area of Spear Street and Francis Avenue.

Contact was lost with the witness, but as Officer Tobin drove down Brackett Street from McGrath Highway, he observed a male matching the description given, walking at a brisk pace through a car dealership. When Officer Tobin pulled over to exit his cruiser, the suspect removed his backpack, threw it underneath a car and continued walking. Officer Tobin instructed the suspect to stop, which he complied.

Officers Foley and Borden arrived on scene to assist Officer Tobin. The Officers observed that the suspect was out of breath and his eyes were watering. When asked where he was coming from, the suspect hesitated and then said, "From over there" as he pointed towards the area of Spear Street. Officer Tobin asked the suspect if he had a bicycle with him. The suspect denied having a bicycle, stating, "My bike is at Ashmont station."

When asked where he was going, the suspect said, "I'm going over here for something because my people's are up here," as he pointed to the elderly housing unit on Brackett Street. The male appeared very nervous and reached for his jacket pockets. Officer Tobin conducted a pat-frisk of the suspect and asked him if he had anything on him that could be considered dangerous. The suspect denied having anything but did say that all he had was a bracelet that he wears but for no particular reason. He added that it was in his pocket and not on his wrist.

This conversation perked Officer Tobin's interest because it was odd for the suspect to justify why he had a bracelet in his pocket. As Officer Tobin pat down the outside jacket of the suspect, he felt an item that were shaped like a pair of wire or bolt cutters. When the officer asked the suspect what the item was, the suspect said, "I have no idea."

The officer removed diagonal pliers from inside the jacket. The suspect then said that he was at work earlier plastering and that was why he had the tool on him. When asked how he used pliers to plaster, the suspect responded, "I don't know man - just stick me in the car and arrest me already."

Officer Tobin advised the suspect that he was being detained while the investigation continued. The officer then retrieved the backpack from underneath the vehicle and asked the suspect what was in it. The suspect said, "I don't know." Officer Tobin found a pair of purple eyeglasses in a purple case, an umbrella, and a coiled cable combination bicycle lock that was in the locked position.

Meanwhile, Officer Patten located the witness and transported him to where the suspect was being held. Once the witness saw the suspect, he confirmed that the detainee was the same person he observed cutting the bicycle lock from the bicycle and then stealing the bicycle. The witness showed Officer Patten where the bicycle was stolen from and recovered the damaged lock, which had clearly been cut with a sharp instrument. The male suspect was advised he was under arrest for the felony destruction of property and the larceny of the bicycle.

As the suspect was searched further, Officer Tobin found a lady's diamond tennis bracelet and a silver dollar coin in the suspect's right front jeans pocket. The suspect did not see what was removed from his pocket, so the Officer asked the suspect what was found on him. The suspect said he had no idea.

When Officer Tobin told the suspect what he found, the suspect suddenly recalled, claiming that the bracelet was his. He was unable to tell the officer he had a silver dollar in his pocket which Officer Tobin found to be unusual. Officer Tobin also found a handicapped MBTA Charlie Card with a female's name and photo on it. A small amount of marijuana was also found in the watch pocket of the suspect, which was seized and logged in for destruction.

The suspect was placed in the cruiser as other officers continued to search for the stolen bicycle. Unable to locate the bicycle, Officer Foley read the suspect his Miranda warnings and asked if he would tell where the bicycle was. Officer Foley advised the suspect that a witness called the police on him as he was stealing the bicycle and chased him.

The suspect said, "That guy wasn't chasing me and that was my bicycle I was on." When reminded that he earlier stated his bicycle was at Ashmont, the suspect denied making that statement. It became clear he was not going to cooperate, so Officer Tobin attempted to close the cruiser door, but the suspect placed his leg outside the door. When the door hit his leg, the suspect began yelling that the officer closed the door on his knee.

The officer told the suspect to get all the way in the car so the door could be closed. The suspect refused and yelled, "F@#$ you" and then spit on the officer's uniform. Officer Tobin took out his mace and again ordered the suspect to get in the cruiser so the door could be closed. The suspect again replied with, "F@#$ you." The officer gave a quick spray of mace which resulted in the suspect complying.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You might be hurt by a colleague's harsh criticism. But don't let it shake your confidence in what you're trying to do. A more positive aspect starts to appear by week's end.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You're torn between your sensible self and the part of you that enjoys acquiring lovely things. Best advice: Wait for an end-of-month sale, and then buy something wonderful.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Your artistic side has practical applications this week, such as redecorating your home or redesigning your personal stationery. Whatever you do, someone special will like it.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You could be drawn into a problem 'twixt friends or family members. Best bet: Ask the questions that go to the heart of the matter, then get them all together for a group hug.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) As much as you love being the center of attention, your big Lion's heart impels you to share the spotlight with a colleague who helped you with that well-praised project.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Your eagerness to act on a challenge is wisely tempered early in the week by a lack of necessary information. Things begin to clear up during the weekend.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A relationship you'd hoped would keep going seems to be going nowhere. Close it out and move on to a brighter romantic aspect just beginning to manifest itself.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Things don't go completely as planned this week. But enjoy the surprises, even if you have to adjust your schedule. Some of them could be quite delightful.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Making choices is usually easy for straight-shooting Archers.

But a new development could deflect your aim. Try to put off decisions until you know more.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) While part of you might prefer taking a more familiar path, let your more daring and -- admit it -- super-curious self see what the unexplored has to offer.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Those nasty types have slithered back under the rocks and present no more problems. Now's the time to move ahead on that promising new relationship.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A new offer could clear up that lingering money problem. Also, a more confident attitude on your part might well help get that personal situation back on track.

BORN THIS WEEK: You have a way of turning chaos into order. You're also generous with your help for those who seek it.

A Job Well Done

By QUINCY POLICE LT. DAN MINTON

At the station, Fallon Ambulance technicians flushed out the suspect's eyes. He was then placed in a holding cell. The suspect was able to free one hand from a cuff and challenged the officers to a fight. The officers in the cell block were able to subdue and re-handcuff the violent suspect after using mace again.

Once the suspect was calm enough to book, he gave a false name and date of birth. He also claimed he had no idea what his parent's names were, could not recall his social security number, or when he was last arrested. He then refused to be booked and was placed back in a cell.

The suspect was booked a few hours later and positively identified, with a very lengthy and violent criminal history. The suspect, a 25 year-old homeless person, was charged with, "Willful malicious destruction to personal property(bike lock), Larceny over $250 (bicycle), Possession of a burglarious instrument(dikes), A&B on a Police Officer(spitting), Resisting arrest and Receiving stolen property over $250 (diamond bracelet, silver dollar, eyeglasses, MBTA pass).

Pedestrian Safety, Towing Focus For Council Jan. 16

thing the city can and should do," Palmucci said. "Perhaps concerns residents are expressing are state issues and they should be reaching out to state officials."

The committee will also look into an ordinance enacted in 2010 that allows the Fire Department to charge property owners for false fire alarms caused by mechanical failure, malfunction, improper installation, negligence on the half of the user or maliciousness. The ordinance allows a charge of $100 for the third such alarm in each fiscal year and $200 for the fourth and subsequent alarms.

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin put forward a resolution asking the committee to undertake that review in October. He did so on behalf of a condo association in his ward; the association argues that they are being treated as a single property when charges are assessed instead of each unit being treated separately.

"They believe condos are individual residences," Coughlin said. "I have a responsibility to give a voice to the people I represent."

Additionally Coughlin, who did support the ordinance in 2010, would like to see how effective it has been since it was implemented.

"I have no data on that right now, I want to get it in a public forum," Coughlin said. "I think it's healthy to take a look after we pass an ordinance."

Likewise, Gutro hopes to receive the requested information at the meeting and an update on plans being made in problematic areas. He expects the committee to continue discussing the matter throughout the year.

"My expectation is that it will not be solved in one meeting. The public safety committee will probably continue that discussion over the year and maybe in the next one," Gutro said.

Gutro added:

"The real measuring stick next year - 2013 - and the year after that is have we made the city safer for pedestrians and motor vehicle drivers?"

QCARE Celebrates New Office At 162 Old Colony Ave.

Quincy After School Child Care, Inc. (QCARE) recently celebrated the official opening of its new main office space with a ribbon cutting ceremony.

The new main office space is located on the Adult Studies Campus of Eastern Nazarene College at 162 Old Colony Ave.

Mayor Thomas Koch, members of the QCARE staff and Board of Directors, local public officials and community members joined to congratulate the agency.

Due to rain, the ribbon cutting took place in the first floor lobby of the 162 Old Colony Ave. building, with those in attendance welcomed to an open house in the QCARE offices on the 2nd floor immediately following.

The ceremony began with remarks from Quincy After School Child Care Executive Director, Sarah Morrison who gave a brief history of the organization.

"Our agency could not continue our important work without the support of the City, the Mayor's Office and Quincy Public Schools," Morrison said. "I am grateful for our relationships with so many of this city's offices. So many people across Quincy help to make our work a reality. It truly does take a village to raise a child."

Morrison added:

"We have been tremendously impressed by and are thankful for the Eastern Nazarene College community and staff. As we move forward in our new main office, we anticipate both a positive and long term partnership between Quincy After School Child Care and ENC."

Addressing the group, Quincy After School Board President Arthur Keough noted the importance of the work of the agency.

"We have been fortunate to be able to serve Quincy children for the past 25 years, and have been blessed to watch them grow and foster them along the way. We are hopeful that we will continue our work for at least another 25 years with the same result," said

By SCOTT JACKSON

Mayor Tom Koch announced a series of initiatives for Quincy's schools, infrastructure, and parks Monday night during his third midterm address. But the biggest news revolved around two key parts of Quincy Center.

Speaking before a standing room only crowd in the 131-year-old Henry Hobson Richardson Room at the Thomas Crane Library, the mayor announced that Chicago-based LaSalle Investment Management would be investing $56 million in the new Merchants Row. Developer Beal/Street-Works is expected to break ground on the $120 million Merchants Row project, their first development in the new downtown, by the spring.

Information Meeting Jan. 15 On Fore River Bridge Project

The Massachusetts Department of Transport (MassDOT) has scheduled a Public Information Meeting for the Fore River Bridge Replacement Project Tuesday, Jan. 15 from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. in the McCullough Building, Whipple Senior Center, gymnasium, 182

Green St., Weymouth.

The meeting will provide an overview of the construction plans and traffic impacts for the replacement of the Fore River Bridge, which carries Route 3A over the Fore River between Quincy and Weymouth. MassDOT's design/build team for the the project will lead a discussion and answer questions.

Gov. Deval Patrick and other elected officials in November broke ground on the start of construction to replace the Fore River Bridge connecting Quincy and Weymouth.

The $244 million replacement project is one of five "megaprojects" funded through the Patrick-Murray Administration's Accelerated Bridge Program. Since the program's start in 2008, the number of structurally deficient bridges has declined approximately 20 percent.

The Fore River Bridge project replaces a temporary bridge constructed in 2002 with a new vertical-lift bridge. The Fore River channel will be widened to accommodate the vessels that serve the active petroleum terminal, and its vertical clearance in the down position will be higher to reduce the number of openings for sailboats. Design improvements will improve the aesthetics of the bridge.

The joint venture selected for the project is JF White and Skanska-Koch.

Completion is scheduled for fall 2016.

Council To Inquire About DPW Violations; Fine Levied By State DEP

By SCOTT JACKSON

The City Council wants to know why Quincy could be on the hook for more than $38,000 after being cited for violations of state environmental regulations.

In October, the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (MassDEP) listed more than two dozen violations of state regulations in a consent order agreed to by the city.

The majority of the violations occurred at the DPW's Sea Street facility during a visit by state inspectors in November 2011. Among other items, the consent order faults the department for not cleaning up waste oil that spilled into a containment berm quick enough; not labeling and storing hazardous waste properly; dumping catch basin cleanings onto the ground, thus allowing wastewater to enter the Town River; and allowing wastewater to enter the Town River when street sweepers were rinsed off.

The order also faulted the city for violations that arose during the construction of Quincy's new track on Coddington Street. Those violations include the using dirt with debris mixed in to pre-load the site and allowing sediment and other pollutants into the adjacent wetland area.

The consent order gives the city one year – until October 2013 – to fix the problems at the DPW yard. If they are not adequately addressed, Quincy could face a fine of $38,782.50. Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest, chairwoman of the council's public works committee, and Councillor Doug Gutro introduced a resolution asking the administration to explain how the violations could have happened and how the city plans to remedy the issue.

"The nature of the City Council request was to try to gain an understanding – in the eyes of the administration – what happened, what will the cost be, how has the city modified practices to comply with the law," Gutro told The Sun.

Gutro said the violations cited in the 15-page document could point to larger problems.

"I think it's a troubling series of events that speak to a potential systemic problem," Gutro said.

The city did not make public the consent order immediately after it was signed by Mayor Tom Koch. Residents were able to obtain copies via public records requests to the state. A copy of the consent order was emailed to The Sun by a concerned citizen.

Gutro, referencing late U.S. House Speaker Tip O'Neill, said the city should have been more forthcoming.

"It's a mystery to me why they wouldn't (acknowledge it sooner)," Gutro said. "Tip O'Neill used to say 'hang a lantern on your problems.' You should be the first one to come forward and explain why it won't happen again."

Quincy resident Laura Innis, who says she first informed the city of potential violations at the site in the summer of 2011, stated the city's cover up only compounded the problem.

"The City of Quincy's continuing non-compliance is deeply troubling. This was done on purpose. Whether they were trying to save money not disposing of the toxic stuff prop-

Unanimously Re-Elected Council President

McFarland: Council 'Eyes, Ears, Voice' Of City's Residents

By SCOTT JACKSON

After being unanimously re-elected to his second one-year term as City Council president, Michael McFarland vowed the council would be the eyes, ears, and voice of Quincy's residents.

"The primary role of the Quincy City Council is a lot less fun than the mayor's role. We are the eyes and the ears and the voice of the citizens of Quincy, and as part of that role we are to keep the mayor and the administration on time and on budget," McFarland said. "Sometimes they're not very happy with us, but you know something? We do a good job. We approve all appropriations, we approve the budget, we disapprove some items but we get it done."

He pointed out a number of accomplishments achieved by the council under his leadership in 2012 — the first issuance of a building permit under revised special permit granting authority rules; quarterly updates on Quincy Center redevelopment and the approval of

Cahill Trial Status Hearing Continued To Jan. 25

By SCOTT JACKSON

The status of corruption charges against former Treasurer Tim Cahill remains up in the air following a meeting with the presiding judge.

After the jury in the case failed to reach a verdict on two conspiracy charges against the former treasurer, a Quincy resident and former city councillor, Judge Christine Roach declared a mistrial on Dec. 12. At the time she asked attorneys from both sides to meet with her on Jan. 4, last Friday, for a status conference.

At that meeting, the hearing was continued to Jan. 25 at 10:30 a.m. inside the Suffolk County Superior Courthouse. Emalie Gainey, spokesperson for Attorney General Martha Coakley, said prosecutors are reviewing their options as they continue a dialogue with Cahill's lawyers.

"We have not yet made a decision in this matter, but are in discussions with defense counsel and are continuing to review all of our options," Gainey said.

Brad Bailey, one of Cahill's co-counsels, declined to comment on any such discussions saying only that he expects to be back in court as scheduled.

"We expect to be back in court on January 25th," Bailey said.

He added that Cahill is holding up well and returning to his day-to-day life.

"One our client is doing fine. Like all of us he's getting back in normal life," Bailey said. "Seven weeks is a long time to be on trial."

Cahill was indicted last April on charges he used money earmarked for Lottery ads to buoy his ultimately unsuccessful 2010 gubernatorial campaign. Since being indicted, he's maintained that the ads were needed to defend the Lottery in the wake of attack ads funded by the Republican Governor's Association;

Cahill's voice and likeness were not in the ads and his name was not mentioned.

Jury selection in the case began the last week of October and opening arguments were made on Nov. 5. Jury deliberations started Dec. 4 and on Dec. 12 the mistrial was declared on charges against Cahill.

Scott Campbell, a Quincy resident and Cahill's chief of staff at the Treasury, was acquitted on the same charges by the same jury the day before the mistrial was declared against his former boss.

A third Quincy resident, Alfred Grazioso, Jr., was indicted along with Cahill and Campbell on obstruction of justice charges. Prosecutors allege the former chief of staff for the Lottery intimidated witnesses during the course of the investigation. Grazioso pleaded not guilty to those charges in April. His trial will start Feb. 11 after a trial date was set during the status conference last week.

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows — a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized... or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get: > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required > A mortgage with a competitive rate > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity — most likely once-in-a-lifetime — for first-time homebuyers. Is that you... or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Jan. 23, 1849, Elizabeth Blackwell is granted a medical degree from Geneva College in New York, becoming the first female to be officially recognized as a physician in U.S. history. In 1857, she founded the New York Infirmary for Women and Children.

• On Jan. 27, 1888, the National Geographic Society is founded in Washington, D.C. Readership in its magazine did not grow, however, until it discarded the format of overly technical articles and used articles of general interest accompanied by photographs. "National Geographic" quickly became known for its stunning and pioneering photography.

• On Jan. 25, 1905, at the Premier Mine in Pretoria, South Africa, a 3,106-carat diamond, the "Cullinan," is discovered. Worried that the diamond might be stolen in transit from Africa to London, a phony diamond was sent as a decoy aboard a steamer ship loaded with detectives, while the real stone slowly made its way in a plain box.

• On Jan. 24, 1935, canned beer makes its debut when the Gottfried Krueger Brewing Company delivered 2,000 cans of beer and ale to faithful Krueger drinkers in Richmond, Va. Ninety-one percent of the drinkers approved of the canned beer, prompting Krueger to give the green light to further production.

• On Jan. 26, 1945, the most decorated soldier of World War II, American Lt. Audie Murphy, is wounded in France. Murphy was wounded three times, fought in nine major campaigns across Europe, and was credited with killing 241 Germans. He won 37 medals and decorations.

• On Jan. 22, 1973, the Supreme Court decriminalizes abortion by handing down its decision in the case of Roe v. Wade. For most of the country's first 100 years, abortion was not a criminal offense, nor was it considered immoral.

The Mid-Term Tradition

Mayor Thomas Koch continued a city tradition that dates back at least a half century Monday when he delivered the third Mid-Term address of his mayoral tenure.

The mayor's mid-term address – also known as the "State of the City" – is a political custom in Quincy but it is not a requirement of the city's charter.

But when did this custom start?

City Political Historian and former Mayor Frank McCauley believes the mid-term tradition of the mayor delivering a "status report" of city affairs at the city council's first meeting of the year (at the half-way point of the mayor's term in office) probably began after the city moved from the Plan E city manager type of government back to Plan A (strong form of mayor) government in the late 1950s.

McCAULEY

Plan E (with a city manager running the city – the mayor was elected by the city council and performed mainly ceremonial duties) lasted from 1950 to 1957. A referendum to return to Plan A was endorsed by city voters in the 1955 election. The last city council under Plan E organized Jan. 2, 1956 and two years later the city returned to Plan A.

The first mayor to serve under the new Plan A was Amelio Della Chiesa, a city councillor who was elected mayor in November, 1957.

Although he says he's not exactly sure, McCauley believes it was probably Mayor Della Chiesa who gave the first mid-term address as it is known today. Della Chiesa served as mayor under the second Plan A charter from 1958 to 1965.

DELLA CHIESA

"The mid-term address has been a custom for years in Quincy," says McCauley whose 32-year political career began in 1963 when he was elected Ward 1 councillor. He is the only Quincy citizen to serve in all four elective offices: Ward councillor, councillor at-large, school committee and mayor.

"It's a progress report for the mayor," McCauley says. "It's a chance for the mayor to talk about the last year and to give a look at next year."

The mayor's mid-term address – or "State of the City" – is sort of like a local version of the President's "State of the Union." That speech serves as a report to Congress on the condition of the nation and also provides an opportunity for the president to outline his legislative agenda.

The Constitution states that the President "shall from time to time give to Congress information on the State of the Union." But the President is not required to give a speech. The tradition of the "State of the Union" address before a joint session of Congress in January or February (if it is an inaugural year) as we know it today began with Woodrow Wilson. Before Wilson, Presidents gave a written report describing the state of the union.

Back in Quincy, the Mid-Term address has traditionally been delivered in the Council Chamber of old City Hall (James R. McIntyre Government Center.) However, because the building is being renovated, Koch decided to move the venue to the historic Richardson Room at the Thomas Crane Library.

Another wrinkle this year: Koch delivered the mid-term in the evening. Traditionally, the mid-term has been held in the morning.

Perhaps one of the most memorable Mid-Term addresses came in 1989 when McCauley gave his surprise "Sayonara" speech announcing he would not seek a fifth term as mayor that fall. McCauley's decision set off a political scramble for the mayor's seat and attracted four well-known candidates: Councillors Jim Sheets and Stephen McGrath, former Mayor Joseph LaRaia and businessman Peter O'Connell.

Sheets and O'Connell would be nominated in the preliminary election and Sheets won the final election and went on to serve 12 years – the longest tenure of any Plan A mayor.

POLITICAL OBSERVERS close to Cong. Stephen Lynch believe the South Boston Democrat who represents Quincy in the new 8th District will run for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by John Kerry who has been nominated by President Barack Obama to serve as Secretary of State.

Last week, Lynch released a statement saying he was "giving serious consideration" to running for Kerry's Senate seat.

"I am giving serious consideration to a run for the United States Senate and am grateful for the support and encouragement I have received in recent days," Lynch said in the statement. "As we await Senator Kerry's confirmation hearings, I will continue to weigh my options and decide the best way to serve our communities."

So far, one Democrat candidate has tossed his hat in the Senate ring: Cong. Edward Markey of Malden, dean of the Bay State's congressional delegation.

Observers also think it's possible that the race for the Democratic nomination in the special U.S. Senate race could ultimately include three current Congressmen: Markey, Lynch and Michael Capuano of Somerville who represents the 7th District.

TWO POLLS are gauging support and opposition over the referendum calling for a four-year mayoral term.

One of the polls is on The Quincy Sun website:

www.thequincysun.com.

We will publish the poll's results in an upcoming column. The poll question – located at the bottom of our home page – asks "Do you believe the office of Mayor should be a 4-year term – Yes (the Mayor's term should be changed to 4 Years) or No (the current 2-year term for Mayor is best.) You can also vote no opinion.

The other poll was conducted by Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee via his constituent newsletter.

The results:

• 211 voted (as of Jan. 4) of which 43.6% or 92 votes were in favor of a 4-year term while 54.5% or 115 respondents preferred the 2-year term. Four votes or 1.9% had no opinion.

Here's what McNamee had to say about his poll:

"I think the 23-vote margin is statistically significant since it represents 11% of total poll participants. Due to the lack of scientific sample selection techniques, this poll would have a large margin of error (standard margins of error run +/- 3 to 5% with statistical sampling methods.) I do not think, however, the sample's margin of error would be greater than the 11% of those who expressed support for a two-year term."

McNAMEE

McNamee also called the sample as "somewhat representative" of the general population.

The Quincy Chamber of Commerce is proposing the 4-year mayoral term referendum on this fall's city election ballot.

If passed by voters, the city would elect its first four-year term mayor in November 2015. That term would run from January, 2016 to January, 2020 (with the next mayoral election held in November, 2019.)

How do you feel about a four-year mayoral term?

Visit The Sun's website – www.thequincysun.com – and our poll appears at the bottom right on our homepage.

Speaking of mayoral terms, did you know the mayor's term was one year before voters passed a referendum in 1916 extending the term to two years? And in the 28 years before the first two-year term, there were a total of 14 different mayors in Quincy? The longest tenure was William Shea who served four one-year terms from 1908 to 1911.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1950 postcard view of the Northway Service Station on the corner of Hancock and Hunt Streets next to North Quincy High School. The station mailed the postcard to local residents encouraging them to have their cars winterized here. In those days fresh anti-freeze was put into a car's radiator every winter. The Tydol brand name and the "Flying A" logo have been lost in the big-oil company mergers. The power car wash on the left was known as the "Washmobile" and it cost $1.50 for an exterior wash, which was not cheap considering gas was only about 12 cents a gallon 63 years ago. Automated car washes as we know them today were just coming into being. The right part of the gas station was Richard Barry's Insurance Office. After being owned for many years by the Colletta Brothers, this now the site of a D'Angelo Sandwich Shop. ### $1.5 Million Sought For Incinerator

Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa was planning to ask the City Council to approve a bond issue of nearly $3 million to finance a capital outlay program for the city of Quincy.

"With the bonded debt reduced considerably we are in a better position to undertake such improvements than we have been for some time," said the mayor.

He noted the new issue would bring Quincy's bonded indebtedness to $13,328,500.

Included in his plans were $1.5 million for an incinerator, $500,000 for a new X-ray building at City Hospital, $150,000 for a new branch library in North Quincy, and $300,000 for an enlarged gym at North Quincy High School.

Romney, Brown And The Special Senate Race

As I read letter writer Chuck Fazio's bemoaning former Mayor Frank McCauley for not really understanding why the Republican Party failed so badly in 2012, I feel like Apollo Creed coming to the aid of Rocky Balboa against Mr. T in Rocky III.

Over the last year during the Republican primary season and into the fall I disagreed right here in The Quincy Sun several times over differences between the former mayor and myself. Mayor McCauley was a big supporter of Mitt Romney but I wasn't.

McCauley is a moderate conservative guy and understands how to win and lose elections. He was a winner most of his own long distinguished career. Romney his presidential choice in my opinion was more extinguished because voters never knew who the real Romney.

Back in 1994 when he ran against Ted Kenney he ran to Kennedy's left. This past campaign, he was trying to run to Reagan's right. He lost both times not surprisingly.

McCauley and I engaged in a good discourse debating campaign principles and strategy. He is a Republican and proud of it. I am a Democrat and wish my party were less whacko liberal than it has become in the last 40 years.

Mitt Romney's loss wasn't caused by Republican wafflers; it was caused by the party's hard-right that believes compromise is a four-letter word. The Tea Party has a lot of good things to say and must be heard but no political party wins election through subtraction. Chasing voters away and lessening your base does not elections win.

When it came to ex-U.S. Senator Scott Brown both

McCauley and myself supported Brown because he was a great voice and vote for all of Massachusetts. He was no ideologue and worked well with others across the aisle.

He did a good job in his short time in the U.S. Senate and deserved re-election. However, I believe he lost the election because the national Republicans had turned themselves into the 'Party of No.'

This is not a winning strategy in a blue state like Massachusetts. Brown was neither a waffler nor turncoat, he was an effective U.S. Senator but the GOP brand name is a hard sell here in the Bay State.

I am awaiting the candidates running in the upcoming special election to finish out U.S. Sen. John F. Kerry's term sometime this spring. I supported Brown this past year. As a conservative Democrat, I am waiting to see what U.S. Rep. Stevie Lynch decides. If he is running, I have a hard choice to make between him and Brown.

However, for Massachusetts, it seems a great choice and win-win situation.

Steve Wessling, Michelle Stenberg, Dennis & Associates Honored By Maria Droste Services

The Good Shepherd's Maria Droste Services based in Quincy recently honored three individuals in recognition of their commitment to the agency and for their service to the community.

The recipients are:

Stephen Wessling, president of Wessling Architects in Quincy; David Dennis of Dennis & Associates of Quincy and Michelle Stenberg, manager of the Quincy Youth Arena.

The presentations were made by Program Director Sr. Lorraine Bernier, and Kevin Mulvey, president of the Board of Directors, during a recent reception held at the River Bay Club in Quincy.

Wessling received the Personal Commitment Award for epitomizing the "family principles" that the Good Shepherd, Maria Droste Agency holds in high esteem: a person who is devoted to their individual family as well as their community.

Wessling's talents and philanthropic generosity were recently put into play in the renovation of Saint Agatha Parish in Milton. He also is a supporter of Habitat for Humanity and My Brother's Keeper.

The Wesslings have chaired and served on the boards of numerous other local area charity events.

Receiving Maria Droste's corporate award was Dennis & Associates of Quincy. The depth of the firm's generosity is reflected in the number of agencies the company supports with their staff participation as active committee members: city fraternal organizations that include Lions, Rotary and Kiwanis; and several philanthropic organizations including the Salvation Army, Woodward School, Quincy After School Child Care, the Dianne De-Vanna Center for Building Stronger Families; Cerebral Palsy of Massachusetts and the Quincy 2000 Board.

David Dennis, president of Dennis & Associates, accepted the award in behalf of the firm.

Michelle Stenberg, a Quincy resident, was honored with the Volunteer Award in recognition of her commitment to the agency and to other local organizations. Besides Maria Droste, Stenberg is actively involved with the Kiwanis Club of Quincy, Quincy After School Child Care, The Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women and the Quincy High School Alumni Association.

Maria Droste Services offer professional counseling and holistic therapies with respect and compassion in order that each person may recognize his/her innate worth and find reconciliation within oneself and with others.

Since the agency's opening in 1992, the staff and volunteer professionals have provided critical support to individuals, couples and family groups on an adjustable fee scale based on the client's ability to pay. The sliding fee scale is made possible by the generosity of support from people in the community.

Lamb Stew Over Polenta

I recently found today's recipe for lamb in a magazine and couldn't wait to try it.

Sometimes it's hard to find lamb stew, but I tried and finally found a market that carried the kind I wanted. It had some pieces with a bone and other pieces were plain. The combination worked well with this recipe.

LAMB STEW OVER POLENTA

1 pound of lamb stew
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 garlic cloves
2 carrots (cut in large pieces)
1 medium onion (sliced)
1-2 teaspoons oregano
Salt and pepper to taste

2 cups stock (any kind)
1 cup or so of polenta
Grated cheese for topping

I didn't use potatoes because it is served with polenta. In the hot oil, sauté the onion and then the garlic. Add the lamb and the carrots, salt and pepper. After a few minutes, add the stock, and then cook covered until the lamb is tender.

While that is cooking, prepare the polenta as directed. I used the instant polenta, but any one will do.

When the lamb is done, in a platter add the polenta and then place the lamb over it. It is a wonderful entrée and the family loved it.

Gluten Free Peanut Butter Cookies

In the last couple of years, more and more articles are written about gluten free products and also recipes that are gluten free. Since some of my family members cannot have gluten, I am always looking for different recipes that are gluten free.

This one is a delicious recipe for peanut butter cookies.

GLUTEN FREE

PEANUT BUTTER COOKIES

1-cup sugar
1-cup peanut butter (I used crunchy)
1 egg

1-teaspoon vanilla
½ cup crushed peanuts

Participants should dress warmly, including footwear, and be prepared for icy conditions. Binoculars and a walking stick or ski pole are recommended.

Call 617-472-0799 after 9 a.m. Jan. 19 for recorded announcement about whether tour will be rescheduled. Even if it is a beautiful sunny day, if conditions are too icy, the tour will be rescheduled to Saturday, Feb. 2 at 9:30 a.m.

Meet in the Beechwood Knoll School parking lot, 225 Fenno St.

For more information, call 617-472-0799.

AMY CHU of Quincy (second from right), an eighth grader at St. Agatha School, won first prize for Christmas Card Art Contest hosted by The Catholic Schools Foundation of Boston. The Foundation distributes over $7,000,000 each year through its signature program, the Inner City Scholarship Fund. The Foundation will feature the student drawing on their 2012 Christmas cards. Cardinal Sean O'Malley (left) was on hand to award students with a certificate and to congratulate them on their wonderful artwork. Also present were Maureen Simmons, Principal of St. Agatha School, and George Chu, Amy's father.

Inauguration In Song Sunday At Crane Public Library

In anticipation of Inauguration Day, the musical theater troupe In Good Company will perform "The White House Chair: Presidential Campaign Songs That Changed America" Sunday, Jan. 13 at 3 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Songs rarely play a significant role during American presidential campaigns today. But for many years, they were a fascinating and important part of the election process.

"The White House Chair" includes presidential campaign songs from the time of George Washington through Dwight D. Eisenhower. The program will provide many opportunities for the audience to sing along and is appropriate for adults and children, ages six and up.

In Good Company creates original musical theater inspired by American history, and presents public performances throughout New England and school shows in the greater Boston area. Members of the ensemble were members of Revels Repertory Company through spring 2012.

The Concerts at the Crane performance series is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

With Advanced Life Science Equipment, Materials

QHS Receives $94,469 Grant To Retrofit Science Classroom

Quincy High School was recently awarded $94,469.05 in grant funding to retrofit a science classroom with advanced Life Science/Biology/Biotechnology laboratory equipment and materials.

The Biotechnical Engineering course at Quincy High School has a broad curriculum and includes content from biology, microbiology, chemistry, biochemistry, and anatomy/physiology. The course includes many lab activities with an inquiry approach meant to develop students' abilities to problem solve; work collaboratively and present work in a professional format.

The Biotechnical Engineering course will run several advanced level labs including a bacterial transformation with GFP plasmids, protein purification using high ion concentration (HIC) chromatography and a basic introduction to gel electrophoresis. The additional lab space and equipment will also allow the Biotechnical Engineering course to run annually rather than every few years and support the growing number of students that participate in the Quincy High School and Massachusetts State Science and Engineering Fairs.

The materials purchased will expand the curriculum, allowing more experiments using electrophoresis boxes and one additional experiment will allow DNA fingerprinting using restriction enzyme digests. These complex labs will give students a better understanding of how DNA samples are manipulated in order to obtain results and draw conclusions.

Much of the additional equipment will be comparable to those used by scientists in research labs and hospital clinics on a daily basis. Genetic engineering and protein manufacturing are used to solve problems ranging from drug discovery medical diagnostics to bioremediation and biodiesel. The advanced science practice students gain will make them more competitive in the college application and career readiness process.

As part of this grant initiative, Quincy High School will collaborate with Quincy College and Warner-Babcock Green Chemistry. Guest speakers will visit QHS classrooms and field trips will take students to both Quincy College Biotech labs and the Warner-Babcock Green Chemistry Headquarters in Wilmington.

Students will be given the opportunity to work directly with professionals and collegiate level biotechnology students on projects that include synthesizing an environmentally benign cleanser by degrading polylactic acid cups and dinnerware, creating a viable solar cell using recycled materials, synthesizing biodiesel fuels using household cooking oils, as well as extracting vitamin C from various fruits.

Three QHS faculty formed the project team that enabled the school to receive the funding: They are Matthew Howard, Julie Krieger and Lawrence Johnson.

Howard began teaching chemistry at Quincy High School in 2006 after graduating from the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester Mass. with a B.A. in Chemistry and a concentration in Biochemistry. In 2010 he took over teaching the biotechnical engineering class as part of the Project Lead the Way program after gaining certification by completing a summer training course at the Rochester Institute of Technology. He has also recently completed a Masters of Education program at Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy.

Krieger began teaching biology and ELL environmental science at Quincy High School in 2008 after graduating from Harvard University with a Masters in Education. Prior to Harvard, she earned her B.S. in general biology at the University of Washington in Seattle, Washington. In the summer of 2008, she worked with the Warner Babcock Institute for Green Chemistry to provide a summer science enrichment program for highly motivated 8th and 9th graders. In the summers of 2011 and 2012, she supervised the Quincy Creek to Harbor Program, a 5 week summer science institute for academically at risk students. She currently teaches advanced biology and Advanced Placement environmental science at Quincy High School.

After graduating from Harvard College with a B.S. in biology at Harvard College in 1975, Johnson became an instructor in Comparative Animal Physiology and Experimental Animal Physiology at Harvard College. Subsequently, he traveled to South and Central dye works in Ecuador, Peru, and Guatemala. Lawrence began teaching at Quincy High School in the spring of 2009 and currently teaches Life and Physical Science, ELL Biology and Horticulture, while mentoring Science students in experimental design.

North Quincy H.S. Wins First Place At Business School Case Study Competition

North Quincy High School won first place at the Bryant University "Bull Dog" Annual Harvard Business School Case Study Competition held recently in Smithfield, R.I.

Bryant University has been holding the Case Study Competition for the past 10 years. The competition allows high school students to participate in real case studies similar to those presented to Harvard Business School students for analysis.

The analysis visits many issues companies face including: losing market share, threats from competition, lack of strong management, poor sales forecasting, and not staying current in technology. SWOT analysis is used in determining companies internal Strengths and Weaknesses and external Opportunities and Threats. In addition, students also identify optimum business solutions for the company that the case study identifies.

Fifteen teams from a Tri-State Area including Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut sent their strongest business students to compete. North Quincy High, under the direction of Business/Career Tech Instructor Richard Green, sent a strong four person team comprising senior Jen Chau, junior Tom Marshall, senior Rory O'Connor and senior Lisa Yang.

The competition rules included a timed presentation using PowerPoint illustrating key elements of each team's presentation. Each team member is also required actively participate in the presentation.

North Quincy first made it to the semi-finals, and then before a stringent judging panel showed their analytical and public speaking skills. The team captured key elements in substance, providing a strong analysis and solution to the case study.

In the discussion with the judging panel they defended their positions with strong valid marketing strategies and won the panel over. According to one of the judges "the difference, provided by North, was their conviction in their solutions to the case study."

Plans To Move To More Modern Office Space Quincy CPA Firm Purchases S.S. Chamber Headquarters

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce announces that its headquarters building in Quincy has been acquired by Hurley, O'Neill & Company, P.C., a certified public accounting firm.

The purchase price was not disclosed.

The South Shore Chamber has owned the building at 36 Miller Stile Rd. since 1960.

The Chamber plans to relocate to new offices in the first half of 2013. Hurley, O'Neill & Co. will then take occupancy.

"The Chamber's clear preference was to find a buyer that would preserve the character of the building," said Peter Forman, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. "We rejected a number of bids that would have resulted in either drastic alterations or razing the building altogether."

"We are glad that the new owners are committed to maintaining and enhancing this classic building," Forman said. "They will be good stewards of the property and good neighbors. The Chamber is grateful to Mayor Tom Koch and City Councillor Brad Croall for their help in assuring that the building can continue to be used for offices under new ownership."

"We plan to move to a more modern office space that will reflect the Chamber's focus on the South Shore's dynamic future," Forman said. The Chamber has not yet announced the location for its new office.

Tom Hurley and Gene O'Neill established Hurley, O'Neill & Company in June 2000. The company is a full-service CPA firm providing accounting, auditing, income tax, and consulting services to a diverse client base.

Peter Brown of Campanelli served as the exclusive sales agent for the Chamber. Sean Kenealy of Key Realty represented the buyer.

Quincy Chamber Forms New Group

The Quincy Chamber of Commerce announces the formation of a new subgroup: The Quincy Chamber Millennials.

This new group gives 20-30 "somethings" an opportunity to network in a casual, laid-back atmosphere. The goal is to bring together professionals in this age group that want to expand their professional network and share ideas, goals, and challenges with like-minded peers.

The idea came about when Stacy Myers, Membership Development Associate for the Quincy Chamber of Commerce, along with Quincy Chamber members Ryan Barrett of E.L. Barrett and Nikki Tierney of A Healthy Balance, Inc., were brainstorming about ways to get younger professionals more involved with the Quincy Chamber.

The inaugural meeting of the Quincy Chamber Millennials will be held on Tuesday, Jan. 22 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. at Alba Restaurant, 1486 Hancock St., Quincy. Light refreshments will be provided (cash bar).

The event is free and is open to Quincy Chamber members and non-members. Register in advance by calling (617) 471-1700 or visit www.thequincychamber.com.

Koch Also Accents Economic Development, Open Space

"This is a moment discussed for decades, and meticulously planned over the last several years. It is happening now because of so many people who had the courage to make it so and the wisdom to ignore those who said it could never happen," Koch said. "I am proud to announce tonight that our private development partner, Beal/Street-Works, has secured another important investment partner that will make the first step of development a reality."

"LaSalle Investment Management, one of the industry's pre-eminent, real estate investment firms, has committed to a $56 million contribution to the construction of the residential and retail development that will be known as Merchants Row, which will anchor the full build-out of our plan. The commitment by LaSalle is another essential step forward, and yet another example of the broad national and international interest in Quincy Center's future."

Councillor Doug Gutro, the chairman of the council's downtown committee, welcomed Koch's announcement of LaSalle's commitment to the project following the mayor's 24-minute long address.

"It's incredibly encouraging to get all of the details on who the folks are that are investing in our downtown — whether it's this block or each block going forward," Gutro said. "That's a fairly substantial investment in Merchants Row and Quincy Center. I was delighted to hear the mayor say that."

Koch also announced that he's working with the state, Cong. Stephen Lynch, and the National Park Service on plans to fix the Quincy Center MBTA station. The station's 872-spot parking garage closed in July over structural concerns and has not re-opened.

"In the coming months, we will present a formal plan for the rehabilitation of the Quincy Center MBTA station, a vital asset for the downtown's future," Koch said. "We are today working closely with Lt. Gov. Timothy Murray, Cong. Lynch, the National Park Service, the Massachusetts Department of Transportation, the MBTA, and other state agencies. The plan, when unveiled in the coming months, will once again prove to be a partnership of public and private resources."

Gutro, who authored a resolve asking the MBTA for an update on the station in September, said he was excited to see what the proposal for the station entails because of the effect it could have on Quincy Center as a whole.

"I'm excited to see some of the details about the Quincy Center MBTA station and what the proposal is for that because that could be as transformative to the downtown as any of the other elements that are exclusively those of the city's," Gutro said. "The MBTA can leave a fingerprint here that will last a generation or more so I'm anxious to find out the details of that."

The mayor added that economic development would not be limited to just Quincy Center, noting that plans are in the works for projects across the city, from Quincy Point to North Quincy.

"We are poised in the coming year to see the fruition of a number of major projects in Quincy that will add to our tax base and create hundreds of new jobs," Koch said. "From major luxury developments at Marina Bay and off Burgin Parkway in South Quincy, to office development at Crown Colony Office Park, to fostering the right plan for the Fore River Shipyard, and to continuing our efforts to spur growth in Wollaston Center and North Quincy, we are indeed that city on the move in every sense of the word."

The mayor also reiterated his intent to replace the 85-year-old Sterling Middle School. As reported by The Sun, Koch toured the school in December with Treasurer Steven Grossman, Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro, Principal Christine Barrett, and Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci, among others. On Monday night Koch also said he would partner with the state to replace windows in the city's school buildings.

"We are now working to complete the preliminary process with our partners at the state School Building Authority and state Treasurer Steven Grossman that will allow us in the coming days to present to [the City Council] and the School Committee the formal Statement of Interest to replace the aging Sterling Middle School and to begin a comprehensive window replacement project, which will begin with North Quincy High School, Wollaston Elementary School, and the Merry-mount Elementary School," Koch said.

School Committee Vice Chair Barbara Isola said the city was fortunate that the process to address the aging Sterling was moving forward.

"The new Sterling — it's outstanding. That school has needed a lot of work for a lot of years," Isola said. "We're really, really extremely fortunate that that's moving forward and I think that it's going to mean a lot to that section of the city too."

Gutro said the announcement was good news for West Quincy residents who have been waiting for a replacement or renovation to their middle school at the same time the process to build the new Central Middle School played out.

"It's still unclear if it's going to be a whole new school or if it's going to be improvements so I look forward to finding out what the details of the plan are, but that's good news for the people of West Quincy and the students that have been waiting, it seems like, just as long as the folks for a new Central," Gutro said.

Isola was also pleased Koch would also seek to have windows replaced at other schools throughout the city. She pointed out windows replaced at the Montclair School over the summer made a big difference for students.

"We need that desperately so we're really pleased that the mayor has set that as a priority," Isola said. "It just makes a big difference to our students, the learning environment. If you go into the Montclair School it just has changed dramatically."

In terms of Quincy's infrastructure, Koch explained that the city is now working with the state to redesign major intersections and arteries in North Quincy, Quincy Point, and Houghs Neck.

"Working with our partners on Beacon Hill, we are moving forward this year on major intersection upgrades that will make travel safer for drivers, and more importantly for pedestrians," Koch said. "Plans for the reconstruction of the Squantum and Hancock Street intersection are reaching the final stage, as are the plans for an overhaul of the Quincy Avenue and East/West Howard street intersection. Sea Street, long one of our busiest roads, will see substantial upgrades aimed at reducing speed and improving safety for pedestrians."

Koch also announced that he intends to purchase all the streetlights in the city currently owned by National Grid; the utility company owns about 6,000 streetlights in Quincy.

"We are taking this step for two very significant reasons, one more immediate in nature the other more long term," Koch said. "In the short term, the city will be able to negotiate a lower tariff rate per streetlight, providing significant savings on an annual basis. Over the long term, the city plans in implementing a full-scale conversion LED streetlight technology that will save energy and will also reduce maintenance because of the longer lifespan of LED lights."

The mayor then shifted his focus to Quincy's parks. Koch explained the city was planning how to best utilize the $10 million it will receive from Beal/Street-

Text Of Mayor Thomas Koch's 3rd Mid-Term Address

The Honorable
Thomas P. Koch
Mid-Term Address
Jan. 7, 2013

Reverend Clergy, Congressman Lynch, members of the State Delegation, Representatives from County Government, former Mayors, members of the City Council, School Committee members, citizens of Quincy, friends all:

First, I wish to send the congratulations of our City to Ward 5 City Councillor Kirsten Hughes and her husband, Phil, on the birth of their son, John Phillip.

I would like to dedicate my remarks tonight to Peter Kenney, who is in the fight of his life. Peter served as Executive Secretary under Mayor Frank McCauley for 8 years and served on the Park and Recreation Board for more than 10 years. Peter, please know you are in our thoughts and prayers.

Tonight, we gather in one of the grandest structures in the City of Quincy, the Henry Hobson Richardson Room at the Thomas Crane Public Library. Richardson's portfolio includes some of the most iconic buildings in the Boston area, including the Trinity Church in Boston's Copley Square. Dedicated to his father in 1882 and funded through a gift from one of the most influential leaders of the granite industry, Albert Crane, the Thomas Crane Public Library has undergone three major additions and today stands as one of the finest municipal libraries in the entire country.

Taken individually, Richardson's works are masterpieces of a particular style. In a larger sense they represent one man's enduring vision for how a great City should look. Today, in 2013, this building is as beautiful, inspiring and perfectly suited for this time and place as ever.

This library is among the most utilized public facilities in our community – its visitation up more than 300 percent from a decade ago; its Sunday hours recently restored in the aftermath of a fiscal crisis, borrowing has increased and attendance at the many enriching events held here has more than doubled.

In many ways this room is a microcosm of the challenges we face today. How do we as stewards of the City in the 21st century ensure that the steps we take today are as lasting as the ones Richardson took in the 19th century? I am pleased to stand before you tonight to discuss my vision as to how we answer this important question.

My friends, the state of our City today is strong and poised to grow only stronger in the months and years ahead, because by working together in so many ways, we are building a lasting and secure future for the City of Quincy embodied in this historic building. As Boston Magazine declared just a few months ago, we are indeed a City on the move, and we must continue that work in the year ahead.

Our work in 2013 will remain focused on those areas that have guided us for these last several years – efficiency in government, rebuilding our vital infrastructure, and protecting and expanding city services for our residents.

The work ahead, and the work we have accomplished, we do together as a community. In these times, there is much talk about the dysfunction of government, that our elected leaders cannot come together for the common good, that the system is broken. In Quincy, and in this Commonwealth, I would suggest that nothing could be further from the truth.

On the contrary, we are a city on the move because we are in an unprecedented era of cooperation, due in great part to the men and women who work so very hard on behalf of our City each and every day. Council President Michael McFarland and members of this City Council, Vice Chairwoman Barbara Isola and members of the School Committee our state legislative delegation led by Majority Leader Ronald Mariano, Senator John Keenan and Representatives Bruce Ayers, Tackey Chan, and Marty Walsh, our Congressman Stephen Lynch, our new Senator Elizabeth Warren and the administration of Governor Deval Patrick. I am grateful every day to work with a group of public servants so squarely focused on the best interests of our City.

Just a few short months ago, we came together to celebrate the completion of the steeple and clock restoration at our historic First Parish Church in Quincy Center. As part of this project, new lights shined upon the steeple and a new bell rung out for the first time in decades. This restoration, beautiful on its own accord, stands as a great symbol of this community's commitment to honoring its past with great hope for its future. In just a few weeks, that restored steeple will be shining on the first phase of construction as the redevelopment of Quincy Center continues.

This is a moment discussed for decades, and meticulously planned over the last several years. It is happening now because of so many people who had the courage to make it so and the wisdom to ignore those who said it could never happen.

I am proud to announce tonight that our private development partner, Beal/Street-Works, has secured another important investment partner that will make the first step of development a reality. LaSalle Investment Management, one of the industry's preeminent real estate investment firms, has committed to a $56 million contribution to the construction of the residential and retail development that will be known as Merchants Row, which will anchor the full build-out of our plan.

This commitment by LaSalle is another essential step forward, and yet another example of the broad national and international interest in Quincy Center's future.

A generational plan like this cannot and will not happen without an extraordinary amount of cooperation at all levels of governments, and we are here today because of the work of a great number of people: Whether it be this Council's deliberation on the landmark development agreement that today stands as a national model; the necessary infrastructure improvements provided by the work of our legislative delegation; the dozens of permits issued by state and federal agencies; to the detailed review conducted by our own Planning Board. We are here today because we achieved that level of cooperation.

In the coming months, we will present a formal plan for the rehabilitation of the Quincy Center MBTA station, a vital asset for the downtown's future. We are today working closely with Lt. Governor Timothy Murray, Congressman Lynch, the National Park Service, the Massachusetts Department of Transportation, the MBTA and other state agencies. The plan, when unveiled in the coming months, will once again prove to be a partnership of public and private resources.

Our economic development efforts are not limited to downtown, and we are poised in the coming year to see the fruition of a number of major projects in Quincy that will add to our tax base and create hundreds of new jobs. From major luxury housing developments at Marina Bay and off Burgin Parkway in South Quincy, to office development at Crown Colony Office Park, to fostering the right plan for the Fore River Shipyard, and to continuing our efforts to spur growth in Wollaston Center and North Quincy, we are indeed that City on the move in every sense of the word.

Economic growth is vital for our future, but the foundation is built by a first-class public school system, clean and safe streets, outstanding public spaces and infrastructure built to handle the 21st century. These areas will continue to be the bedrock of this community, and I am proud to say that, with the support of this Council and the School Committee, there has rarely if ever been a time in our City's history where so much work has been done to improve our schools and our other public assets.

In just the last year, we finished new roofs at 10 schools, repaired and re-pointed crumbling masonry facades at another 7, completed the long-needed overhaul of the windows at the 100-year-old Montclair Elementary School and – after more than 30 years of talk – the steel is in the ground of our new Central Middle School.

Our schools are our most vital public assets, and our work is far from finished.

We are now working to complete the preliminary process with our partners at the state School Building Authority and state Treasurer Steven Grossman that will allow us in the coming days to present to this Council and the School Committee the formal Statement of Interest to replace the aging Sterling Middle School and to begin a comprehensive window replacement project, which will begin with North Quincy High School, Wollaston Elementary School and the Merrymount Elementary School.

While we make these unprecedented investments in the bricks and mortar of our school buildings, we will continue to make similar aggressive and affordable investments in the classroom. This year, we will have completed more than $1 million in technology upgrades for our high schools and middle schools, and we will continue this program with our elementary schools in the coming years. We will also be working with Superintendent DeCristofaro and the School Committee on important new investments in textbooks and other classroom needs at the heart of new common core curriculum standards.

By working together and adding teachers to our classrooms incrementally the last two years, we've maintained class sizes that meet or exceed School Committee guidelines at every grade level. Our teachers are among our most valued resources, and joined together with our administrators, principals, and support staff, we will continue to do everything possible to create the very best possible learning environment for all of our children.

These investments, while vital, must be balanced by financial stability and the protection of our taxpayers. Our administration has undertaken all of this work with that caveat in mind, and I am proud to say that because of the work of many we have created a strong foundation of financial stability in our City – even amid a historic economic crisis. We made difficult spending cuts when necessary, we created tens of millions of dollars in new efficiencies, and we worked creatively together to find funding sources that allow us to hold the bottom line for our taxpayers.

The result has been property tax increases among the lowest of any community in the Commonwealth the last four years, the second-largest reserve of property taxes left unbilled in our excess levy capacity, the elimination of a number of serious structural deficits, and the marked growth of our reserves at a time when many other cities have seen theirs depleted.

These are the principles that guide us as we undertake the most extensive public infrastructure overhaul this City has ever seen. Right now, we are continuing an unprecedented series of public works improvements, including to our underground utilities, our streets and sidewalks, our historic buildings, and our seawalls. There are neighborhoods today that have for decades pleaded for protection from perennial flooding. Those neighborhoods are seeing that relief as we speak thanks to our Capital Improvement Plan, an initiative made possible by the support of this body.

There is more. Working with our partners on Beacon Hill, we are moving forward this year on major intersection upgrades that will make travel safer for drivers, and more importantly for pedestrians. Plans for the reconstruction of the Squantum and Hancock Street intersection are reaching the final stage, as are the plans for an overhaul of the Quincy Avenue and East/West Howard Street intersection. Sea Street, long one of our busiest roads, will see substantial upgrades aimed at reducing speed and improving safety for pedestrians.

This work comes as the Neponset River Bridge, the Hancock Street Bridge, and the West Squantum Street ramps have been completed. We are now beginning a $240 million investment in a new Fore River Bridge, serving Quincy and all of the South Shore. This project has been years in the making, and we owe it in large part to the hard work and persistence of Representative Mariano for making it happen.

Our original City Hall, believed to be the oldest continuously active City Hall in America, was in disrepair and unsafe until we decided to take action. Starting this year, the building will be restored to its original stature and will once again play a vibrant role in the day-to-day function of our community. At the same time, we will also beginning the restoration of another historic City building – the former Coddington School, built in 1908 and named for one of our community's great land benefactors, William Coddington. The building was designed by the same architect who designed the famous Christian Science Church in Boston, Charles Brigham.

Again, it is important to note that this project like the others I have outlined, will not strain the City's budget because we have paid close attention to the financing. Here, we will use grants from the Community Preservation Fund. And over the course of the years, the cost of these projects will ultimately be offset by rent payments for administrative office space that will no longer be an obligation.

The same principles that guide us toward financial efficiency will guide us toward new energy efficiencies throughout the City.

As one of the largest cities to earn a certified Green Community status from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the City of Quincy is committed to reducing our energy consumption – and by extension our energy costs – by upwards of 20 percent over the next several years. I am confident we can get there, and I am grateful for the assistance of the newly formed citizens committee on environmental and energy issues, a group that is already working on ways to help us meet our goals in the coming years and beyond.

This past week I submitted a letter of intent to National Grid to purchase the more than 6,000 street lights currently lighting our city streets. We are taking this step for two very significant reasons, one more immediate in nature, the other more long term. In the short term, the City will be able to negotiate a lower tariff rate per streetlight, providing significant savings on an annual basis. Over the long term, the City plans on implementing a full-scale conversion to LED street light technology that will save energy and will also reduce maintenance because of the longer lifespan of LED lights.

We will present this Council with the proposed agreement with National Grid and the State's Department of Public Utilities, and we will be preparing a comprehensive LED conversion and maintenance plan.

And this month, the City will be accepting final proposals from firms for what will be among the largest municipal solar-power programs in the Commonwealth – installing rooftop arrays on more than a dozen schools and public buildings throughout our City. I will work with our School Committee to implement yet another public-private partnership, which will result in long-term taxpayer savings.

In much the same way as our Schools, our park system is what separates us from many other communities – with more than 300 acres of parks and playgrounds, hundreds of acres of open spaces and marshlands, and 27 miles of coastline. In difficult times, it is our Parks that can often suffer the most. While the Parks Department was subjected to serious spending cuts during the most recent crisis, our commitment to our Parks and open spaces remained steadfast, as we've added more than 40 acres to our inventory of parkland since I took office.

We have much work to do. Frederick Law Olmsted, the renowned architect of America's greatest Parks including Central Park, The Emerald Necklace in Boston, our own Merrymount and Faxon parks, and even the grounds of this historic library once said that "we want a ground to which people may easily go after their day's work is done, and where they may stroll for an hour, seeing hearing and feeling nothing of the bustle and jar of the streets, where they shall, in effect, find the City put far away from them."

This is why this year we will embark on a broad park improvement initiative that I believe will ultimately touch every neighborhood in the City. By using resources that will allow us to plan and execute major improvements with little to no financial impact on our taxpayers, we can see this plan through. Using money from the Community Preservation Fund and the Hotel/Motel Tax, we are now in the process of planning for more than $10 million of improvements to our gateways and other neighborhood parks. As you know, this funding was negotiated as part of our Quincy Center redevelopment agreement, and will not be borne by the City's general operating budget.

Because government cannot and should not do everything, I am proud to announce tonight the formation of a new nonprofit organization dedicated solely to the protection and enhancement of our beautiful open spaces. The Quincy Park Conservancy will be dedicated to the long-term sustainability of our public parks, open spaces, and urban forest. Our City forefathers in the Adams, Faxon, and Grossman families left this City a great gift of land, which today would almost certainly be worth hundreds of millions of dollars, and we have a great responsibility to preserve these parks for future generations.

We are moving forward with plans to rejuvenate the open space located behind the Kennedy Center, creating an outdoor space for our seniors to enjoy. In the coming weeks, with the support of the Council on Aging Board, we will present a full plan to this Council for these improvements with an identified funding source.

Working with the Cemetery Board of Managers and state agencies we are close to an agreement that will allow us to develop nearly 10 acres of new graves in the Pine Hill Cemetery while protecting 20 acres of wildlife habitat and wetlands. In addition, we are designing a plan to restore the historic gate and entrance to the Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

As we make this great commitment to our public spaces, we do so with the knowledge that our parks contribute so much to the quality of life in our neighborhoods. Much the same can be said about providing safe neighborhoods and dependable response times to emergencies. The vital core service of public safety will remain a priority in 2013, as we continue to add more police on the street through smart planning and efficient budgeting and provide the equipment and manpower to our Fire Department that is necessary to protect the very best first responders in the entire state.

If you or your loved one has to call our Fire or Police Department in an emergency, they will be there on average in under 3 minutes – a vital timeframe in a business where the commodity is saving lives. I am tremendously proud and thankful for the work of all of our first responders, and our commitment to them and their families is unwavering.

I stood before you when I became Mayor and stated that we could no longer afford to ignore the growing substance abuse problem that was plaguing our neighborhoods and destroying families. At the time, I said that our fight would not be easy and it would not be won overnight. We have not won the fight yet, but I could not be more proud of the work by so many people in this community who have forcefully engaged this problem.

The members of our Drug Task Force have created a statewide model for community interdiction, its work recognized further by the state with a recent $300,000 grant from the Department of Public Health to help us continue our work.

Our Quincy Police Drug Unit, now doubled in size, is continuing to increase arrests and seizures, our police are saving lives after we became the first community to equip first-responders with anti-overdose medication called NARCAN, and our educators and parents are making a real difference by talking about this problem and providing our young people with the information they need. Just a few months ago, Lt. Pat Glynn, the chief of our Drug Unit, was honored by the White House for his work. Lt. Glynn is a tremendous leader in the Quincy Police Department and in our community, and his recognition at the highest level of our government was well deserved and stands as a great symbol for all of the work done by our police and our community in this fight against substance abuse.

Our Senator, John Keenan, has taken the lead on the state level with first-of-its-kind legislation regulating the distribution of prescription painkillers, which we know are the origin of many of the addiction problems we confront today. Our District Attorney, Michael Morrissey, has made it the unbending mission of his office to keep drug dealers off the streets of Norfolk County. And our Sheriff, Michael Bellotti, has invested substantial resources in successful youth leadership programs that are keeping many of our young people engaged in the community in safe, productive ways.

We have tonight outlined an aggressive agenda for the coming year, one that I know by continuing to work together, will achieve.

As I close, I wish to take a moment to thank all of those who contribute so much to the lifeblood of our community. Our nonprofit partners – the Quincy Chamber of Commerce and its work fostering growth and collaboration in our business community; the South Shore YMCA and its state-of-the-art $30 million facility now under construction; Quincy Community Action Programs and its new Head Start building serving so many of our young people; Neighborhood Housing Services, in partnering with the City to create new and affordable housing for our veterans; Quincy College and Eastern Nazarene College providing an affordable stepping stone of further education for our young people. The youth organizations that provide the outlet for thousands of our children.

These are just a few examples of the work performed on daily basis by nonprofits in our City, and I am grateful for their work and for those too many to name.

And to those whose life's work is dedicated to this City – my staff, department heads, managers and all of our City employees, and the volunteer members of our boards and commissions – You are valued and your work is valuable, and this great community would not be in the position it finds itself today without you.

My friends, recognizing as a society that we face great challenges and knowing we live in a often-troubled world, I would like to conclude with part of a prayer from the universal Saint, St. Francis of Assisi:

Lord, make us instruments of peace Where there is hatred, let us sow love Where there is injury...

Where there is doubt... faith Where there is despair... hope Where there is darkness... light Where there is sadness... joy

Lord, grant that we may not so much to seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love

For it is in giving that we receive, and it is in pardoning, that we are pardoned.

May peace be within us. May peace be around us, and may peace be in our world.

God Bless you and God Bless the City of Quincy.

Koch: $55M In Equity Financing 'Tremendously Important Step' In Redeveloping Quincy Center

As part of his Mid-Term Address Monday evening, Mayor Tom Koch announced Street-Works Development LLC and The Beal Companies, LLC, the co-master developers of the New Quincy Center redevelopment, have secured over $55 million of equity financing required to proceed with construction of Merchants Row, the first phase of the $1.6 billion redevelopment of the New Quincy Center project.

Merchants Row is a 306-unit loft residential, retail and office development located in the heart of downtown Quincy. LaSalle Investment Management is joining Street-Works and Beal in providing the equity for Merchants Row.

"This historic redevelopment plan, and the thousands of jobs it will bring, is built on a foundation of public and private partnerships," stated Mayor Koch. "This major commitment by LaSalle Investment Management is another tremendously important step forward, and a great symbol of the broad national and international interest in Quincy Center's future."

"Merchants Row is a microcosm of what we would like to accomplish on a large scale in New Quincy Center: a compelling and well-managed immersive mixed-use environment where people can live, work and enjoy what the city has to offer," said Ken Narva, a Managing Partner of Street-Works Development. "We are bringing together market-driven private development and new public infrastructure, all connected with great streets and memorable public places to easily accessible public transportation, and all within the context of the rich historic downtown district. We are extremely grateful to Mayor Koch's unwavering dedication to this process and his work to bring this particular deal to fruition."

Scheduled for completion in mid-2014, Merchants Row is the first major block of mixed-use development and pedestrian-friendly public space being constructed within the new Quincy Center master development plan. Merchants Row consists of 306 loft units in two buildings along with more than 35,000 square feet of street retail and 24,000 square feet of office in the historic Granite Trust building.

The construction of Merchants Row will take place in conjunction with the execution of the new Adams Green public space, which will encompass the resting place of the U.S. Presidents John Adams, John Quincy Adams and their wives, and will link Merchants Row to the MBTA Red Line station in downtown Quincy.

"From our first exposure to this project, we have been impressed by the quality of the Street-Works/Beal team, the many existing amenities of Quincy, and the commitment of the City and local businesses like Quincy Mutual to the revitalization of the city," said Wade Judge, Chief Investment Officer of LaSalle Investment Management. "We are extremely pleased to be part of what we are convinced will be a successful development."

"LaSalle Investment Management is one of the most respected real estate investment companies in the world," said Stephen N. Faber, a partner at The Beal Companies. "LaSalle's investment in The Lofts at Merchants Row is unequivocal confirmation of the strength of Quincy and the New Quincy Center redevelopment."

The $1.6 billion New Quincy Center redevelopment plan is a historic private/public partnership with the City of Quincy. It calls for a new 20 square block urban mixed-use neighborhood, comprising several office buildings, approximately 700,000 square feet of anchor and street retail & food, two new hotels, 1,400 residential units, and multiple new parking garages providing 5,000 public parking spaces.

Project officials say the 1.1 million square feet of new state-of-the-art green office and medical office space will be a destination for health care, life sciences, higher education institutions, and other quality office tenants just eight miles from Boston. All permits for the 50-acre, 20-city block project are in place, infrastructure improvements are well underway, and groundbreaking will begin in mid-2013.

Cushman & Wakefield's Equity Debt and Structured Finance group arranged the joint venture.

Text Of Mayor Thomas Koch's 3rd Mid-Term Address

The Honorable
Thomas P. Koch
Mid-Term Address
Jan. 7, 2013

Reverend Clergy, Congressman Lynch, members of the State Delegation, Representatives from County Government, former Mayors, members of the City Council, School Committee members, citizens of Quincy, friends all:

First, I wish to send the congratulations of our City to Ward 5 City Councillor Kirsten Hughes and her husband, Phil, on the birth of their son, John Phillip.

I would like to dedicate my remarks tonight to Peter Kenney, who is in the fight of his life. Peter served as Executive Secretary under Mayor Frank McCauley for 8 years and served on the Park and Recreation Board for more than 10 years. Peter, please know you are in our thoughts and prayers.

Tonight, we gather in one of the grandest structures in the City of Quincy, the Henry Hobson Richardson Room at the Thomas Crane Public Library. Richardson's portfolio includes some of the most iconic buildings in the Boston area, including the Trinity Church in Boston's Copley Square. Dedicated to his father in 1882 and funded through a gift from one of the most influential leaders of the granite industry, Albert Crane, the Thomas Crane Public Library has undergone three major additions and today stands as one of the finest municipal libraries in the entire country.

Taken individually, Richardson's works are masterpieces of a particular style. In a larger sense they represent one man's enduring vision for how a great City should look. Today, in 2013, this building is as beautiful, inspiring and perfectly suited for this time and place as ever.

This library is among the most utilized public facilities in our community – its visitation up more than 300 percent from a decade ago; its Sunday hours recently restored in the aftermath of a fiscal crisis, borrowing has increased and attendance at the many enriching events held here has more than doubled.

In many ways this room is a microcosm of the challenges we face today. How do we as stewards of the City in the 21st century ensure that the steps we take today are as lasting as the ones Richardson took in the 19th century? I am pleased to stand before you tonight to discuss my vision as to how we answer this important question.

My friends, the state of our City today is strong and poised to grow only stronger in the months and years ahead, because by working together in so many ways, we are building a lasting and secure future for the City of Quincy embodied in this historic building. As Boston Magazine declared just a few months ago, we are indeed a City on the move, and we must continue that work in the year ahead.

Our work in 2013 will remain focused on those areas that have guided us for these last several years – efficiency in government, rebuilding our vital infrastructure, and protecting and expanding city services for our residents.

The work ahead, and the work we have accomplished, we do together as a community. In these times, there is much talk about the dysfunction of government, that our elected leaders cannot come together for the common good, that the system is broken. In Quincy, and in this Commonwealth, I would suggest that nothing could be further from the truth.

On the contrary, we are a city on the move because we are in an unprecedented era of cooperation, due in great part to the men and women who work so very hard on behalf of our City each and every day. Council President Michael McFarland and members of this City Council, Vice Chairwoman Barbara Isola and members of the School Committee our state legislative delegation led by Majority Leader Ronald Mariano, Senator John Keenan and Representatives Bruce Ayers, Tackey Chan, and Marty Walsh, our Congressman Stephen Lynch, our new Senator Elizabeth Warren and the administration of Governor Deval Patrick. I am grateful every day to work with a group of public servants so squarely focused on the best interests of our City.

Just a few short months ago, we came together to celebrate the completion of the steeple and clock restoration at our historic First Parish Church in Quincy Center. As part of this project, new lights shined upon the steeple and a new bell rung out for the first time in decades. This restoration, beautiful on its own accord, stands as a great symbol of this community's commitment to honoring its past with great hope for its future. In just a few weeks, that restored steeple will be shining on the first phase of construction as the redevelopment of Quincy Center continues.

This is a moment discussed for decades, and meticulously planned over the last several years. It is happening now because of so many people who had the courage to make it so and the wisdom to ignore those who said it could never happen.

I am proud to announce tonight that our private development partner, Beal/Street-Works, has secured another important investment partner that will make the first step of development a reality. LaSalle Investment Management, one of the industry's preeminent real estate investment firms, has committed to a $56 million contribution to the construction of the residential and retail development that will be known as Merchants Row, which will anchor the full build-out of our plan.

The Quincy Park Conservancy will be dedicated to the long-term sustainability of our public parks, open spaces, and urban forest. Our City forefathers in the Adams, Faxon, and Grossman families left this City a great gift of land, which today would almost certainly be worth hundreds of millions of dollars, and we have a great responsibility to preserve these parks for future generations.

We are moving forward with plans to rejuvenate the open space located behind the Kennedy Center, creating an outdoor space for our seniors to enjoy. In the coming weeks, with the support of the Council on Aging Board, we will present a full plan to this Council for these improvements with an identified funding source.

Working with the Cemetery Board of Managers and state agencies we are close to an agreement that will allow us to develop nearly 10 acres of new graves in the Pine Hill Cemetery while protecting 20 acres of wildlife habitat and wetlands. In addition, we are designing a plan to restore the historic gate and entrance to the Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

As we make this great commitment to our public spaces, we do so with the knowledge that our parks contribute so much to the quality of life in our neighborhoods. Much the same can be said about providing safe neighborhoods and dependable response times to emergencies. The vital core service of public safety will remain a priority in 2013, as we continue to add more police on the street through smart planning and efficient budgeting and provide the equipment and manpower to our Fire Department that is necessary to protect the very best first responders in the entire state.

If you or your loved one has to call our Fire or Police Department in an emergency, they will be there on average in under 3 minutes – a vital timeframe in a business where the commodity is saving lives. I am tremendously proud and thankful for the work of all of our first responders, and our commitment to them and their families is unwavering.

I stood before you when I became Mayor and stated that we could no longer afford to ignore the growing substance abuse problem that was plaguing our neighborhoods and destroying families. At the time, I said that our fight would not be easy and it would not be won overnight. We have not won the fight yet, but I could not be more proud of the work by so many people in this community who have forcefully engaged this problem.

The members of our Drug Task Force have created a statewide model for community interdiction, its work recognized further by the state with a recent $300,000 grant from the Department of Public Health to help us continue our work.

Our Quincy Police Drug Unit, now doubled in size, is continuing to increase arrests and seizures, our police are saving lives after we became the first community to equip first-responders with anti-overdose medication called NARCAN, and our educators and parents are making a real difference by talking about this problem and providing our young people with the information they need. Just a few months ago, Lt. Pat Glynn, the chief of our Drug Unit, was honored by the White House for his work. Lt. Glynn is a tremendous leader in the Quincy Police Department and in our community, and his recognition at the highest level of our government was well deserved and stands as a great symbol for all of the work done by our police and our community in this fight against substance abuse.

Our Senator, John Keenan, has taken the lead on the state level with first-of-its-kind legislation regulating the distribution of prescription painkillers, which we know are the origin of many of the addiction problems we confront today. Our District Attorney, Michael Morrissey, has made it the unbending mission of his office to keep drug dealers off the streets of Norfolk County. And our Sheriff, Michael Bellotti, has invested substantial resources in successful youth leadership programs that are keeping many of our young people engaged in the community in safe, productive ways.

We have tonight outlined an aggressive agenda for the coming year, one that I know by continuing to work together, will achieve.

As I close, I wish to take a moment to thank all of those who contribute so much to the lifeblood of our community. Our nonprofit partners – the Quincy Chamber of Commerce and its work fostering growth and collaboration in our business community; the South Shore YMCA and its state-of-the-art $30 million facility now under construction; Quincy Community Action Programs and its new Head Start building serving so many of our young people; Neighborhood Housing Services, in partnering with the City to create new and affordable housing for our veterans; Quincy College and Eastern Nazarene College providing an affordable stepping stone of further education for our young people. The youth organizations that provide the outlet for thousands of our children.

These are just a few examples of the work performed on daily basis by nonprofits in our City, and I am grateful for their work and for those too many to name.

And to those whose life's work is dedicated to this City – my staff, department heads, managers and all of our City employees, and the volunteer members of our boards and commissions – You are valued and your work is valuable, and this great community would not be in the position it finds itself today without you.

My friends, recognizing as a society that we face great challenges and knowing we live in a often-troubled world, I would like to conclude with part of a prayer from the universal Saint, St. Francis of Assisi:

*Lord, make us instruments of peace
Where there is hatred, let us sow love
Where there is injury... pardon
Where there is doubt... faith
Where there is despair... hope
Where there is darkness... light
Where there is sadness... joy*

*Lord, grant that we may not so much to seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love
For it is in giving that we receive, and it is in pardoning, that we are pardoned.*

May peace be within us. May peace be around us, and may peace be in our world.

God Bless you and God Bless the City of Quincy.

Koch: $55M In Equity Financing 'Tremendously Important Step' In Redeveloping Quincy Center

As part of his Mid-Term Address Monday evening, Mayor Tom Koch announced Street-Works Development LLC and The Beal Companies, LLC, the co-master developers of the New Quincy Center redevelopment, have secured over $55 million of equity financing required to proceed with construction of Merchants Row, the first phase of the $1.6 billion redevelopment of the New Quincy Center project.

Merchants Row is a 306-unit loft residential, retail and office development located in the heart of downtown Quincy. LaSalle Investment Management is joining Street-Works and Beal in providing the equity for Merchants Row.

"This historic redevelopment plan, and the thousands of jobs it will bring, is built on a foundation of public and private partnerships," stated Mayor Koch. "This major commitment by LaSalle Investment Management is another tremendously important step forward, and a great symbol of the broad national and international interest in Quincy Center's future."

"Merchants Row is a microcosm of what we would like to accomplish on a large scale in New Quincy Center: a compelling and well-managed immersive mixed-use environment where people can live, work and enjoy what the city has to offer," said Ken Narva, a Managing Partner of Street-Works Development. "We are bringing together market-driven private development and new public infrastructure, all connected with great streets and memorable public places to easily accessible public transportation, and all within the context of the rich historic downtown district. We are extremely grateful to Mayor Koch's unwavering dedication to this process and his work to bring this particular deal to fruition."

Scheduled for completion in mid-2014, Merchants Row is the first major block of mixed-use development and pedestrian-friendly public space being constructed within the new Quincy Center master development plan. Merchants Row consists of 306 loft units in two buildings along with more than 35,000 square feet of street retail and 24,000 square feet of office in the historic Granite Trust building.

The construction of Merchants Row will take place in conjunction with the execution of the new Adams Green public space, which will encompass the resting place of the U.S. Presidents John Adams, John Quincy Adams and their wives, and will link Merchants Row to the MBTA Red Line station in downtown Quincy.

"From our first exposure to this project, we have been impressed by the quality of the Street-Works/Beal team, the many existing amenities of Quincy, and the commitment of the City and local businesses like Quincy Mutual to the revitalization of the city," said Wade Judge, Chief Investment Officer of LaSalle Investment Management. "We are extremely pleased to be part of what

"LaSalle Investment Management is one of the most respected real estate investment companies in the world," said Stephen N. Faber, a partner at The Beal Companies. "LaSalle's investment in The Lofts at Merchants Row is unequivocal confirmation of the strength of Quincy and the New Quincy Center redevelopment."

The $1.6 billion New Quincy Center redevelopment plan is a historic private/public partnership with the City of Quincy. It calls for a new 20 square block urban mixed-use neighborhood, comprising several office buildings, approximately 700,000 square feet of anchor and street retail & food, two new hotels, 1,400 residential units, and multiple new parking garages providing 5,000 public parking spaces.

Project officials say the 1.1 million square feet of new state-of-the-art green office and medical office space will be a destination for health care, life sciences, higher education institutions, and other quality office tenants just eight miles from Boston. All permits for the 50-acre, 20-city block project are in place, infrastructure improvements are well underway, and groundbreaking will begin in mid-2013.

Cushman & Wakefield's Equity Debt and Structured Finance group arranged the joint venture.

McFarland: Council 'Eyes, Ears, Voice' Of City's Residents

the administration's I-cubed funding application for public improvements; the lengthy debate and eventual approval of Old City Hall and Coddington Hall renovations; oversight of the $25 million capital improvement projects (CIP); and reviewing Powers & Sullivan's audit of the city's accounting practices.

"This City Council puts everything on the table," McFarland said. "We put it on, we discuss it, and we make a decision, and we move on."

McFarland said going forward the council would work with city IT Director Chuck Phelan to be more tech savvy, especially when it comes to notifying residents of important meetings. To that end, he will appoint a special subcommittee at their next meeting on Jan. 22.

"We're going to find a better way to utilize the technology available to us in the City Council office - the amount of mail that goes out of our office notifying people of meetings and so forth," McFarland said. "We have the technology available to us. We're going to be working with Chuck Phelan and I'll be appointing a subcommittee at our next meeting to see how we can better utilize the technology and the staff."

He added that nothing would happen in the city without cooperation from business owners, residents, city workers, and state and federal agencies.

"None of the work in the City of Quincy would be possible without the support of healthy relationships with the business community, our state and federal partners, the city employees, the buildings and trades, and also without the support of the taxpayers of the city," McFarland said. "Together we're accomplishing and will continue to accomplish great things."

McFarland was re-elected council president following the Mayor Tom Koch's midterm address at the Richardson Room in the Thomas Crane Library. He said he was happy to be able to attend after being hospitalized during the inauguration last January.

"I'm very happy to be here tonight," McFarland said. "A year ago I was not able to be here but it's very nice to be here tonight and it feels good and I feel good."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin - who served as council president in 2010 and 2011 - nominated McFarland for his second term. The two have known each other since their days at Boston College High School.

"I first met Michael 44 years ago as we crossed the threshold to a Jesuit education wherein we learned the guiding principal of being men for others," Coughlin said. "As a new year begins I invoke that tradition as our calling as a legislative body and I am placing my full faith and confidence in this man I have known for so many years. Michael, under your leadership we will recommit ourselves to the sole purpose of government as John Adams defined it, 'the happiness and welfare of the people we are elected to serve.'"

Councillor Joe Finn seconded the nomination, praising McFarland as someone who focuses on maintaining civility at a time when it seems to be disappearing from politics.

"Too often in public life and discourse the first victim is civility," Finn said. "That is why tonight it is a great honor a gentleman who has not only effectively led the City Council for the past year but has also led in the spirit of civility and collegiality. He's directed a process and has ruled accordingly from the chair to allow debate of issues - no matter how difficult and whether he agrees or disagrees."

Two Firms Receive $155,000 In Workforce Training Grants

Two Quincy companies received nearly $155,000 in grants from the state for workforce training.

Cerebral Palsy of Massachusetts received a total of $80,240, enough to train 130 employees and hire an additional six. J. Calnan & Associates received $74,640, which should train 75 workers and create six new jobs.

The grants were announced by Gov. Deval Patrick. In total, the state awarded $6,846,496 in Workforce Training Fund grants to 87 Massachusetts companies. The grants, which support up to two years of training, will create 682 new jobs and train over 6,300 workers.

"We are focused on addressing the skills gap issue in the Commonwealth so that workers can compete in today's ever-changing jobs market," Patrick said. "The Workforce Training Fund focuses on the needs of both our businesses and workers, as Massachusetts continues to lead the nation in economic recovery."

"The Workforce Training Fund continues to provide Massachusetts companies with the right resources to train employees and build a stronger and more effective workforce," Lt. Gov. Tim Murray added. "The program is another tool in port of the council and both the state and federal legislatures - I think we're all on the same page.

"It's a question of bringing the revenues to make sure the infrastructure projects especially can move forward. But the mayor has really taken the lead and he has the best interests of the city at heart - I'm proud of him, he did a great job tonight."

Also present was Quincy's entire state delegation - Sen. John Keenan, House Majority Leader Ron Mariano, and Reps. Bruce Ayers, Tackey Chan, and Marty Walsh. Every member of Quincy's School Committee - Isola, Paul Bregoli, Kathryn Hubley, Emily Lebo, Anne Mahoney, and David McCarthy - was also there along with DeCristofaro.

Representing Norfolk County were Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey, County Commissioner John Gillis, Register of Probate Pat McDermott, and Register of Deeds William O'Donnell. Former state Treasurer Tim Cahill was also in attendance with his wife Tina, a member of the library's Board of Trustees.

"Our city forefathers in the Adams, Faxon, and Grossman families left this city with a great gift of land, which today would almost certainly be worth hundreds of millions of dollars, and we have a great responsibility to preserve these parks for future generations," Koch said.

More specifically, Koch said he would present to the City Council plans to improve the open space behind the Kennedy Center in Squantum. He added that he was close to an agreement with the state to develop 10 acres of land near West Quincy's Pine Hill Cemetery into new gravesites while keeping 20 acres protected for wildlife habitat. Simultaneously, the city is formulating a plan to restore the entrance to Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

Koch opened his address by congratulating Ward 5

Former St. Ann's Pastor Robert Deeley Boston's Newest Auxiliary Bishop

Archdiocese in the summer of 2011.

Deeley, born in Cambridge, is the son of Irish immigrants. He is the fourth of five sons; his younger brother Rev. Kevin J. Deeley is pastor of St. Michael Parish in North Andover while his older brothers are married.

After high school, Deeley attended Cardinal O'Connell Minor Seminary in Jamaica Plain. After completing his courses there, he attended Catholic University in Washington, DC and the Pontifical North American College in Rome. He was ordained in 1973 at Sacred Heart Parish in Watertown, his family's home parish. In remarks during his ordination as bishop, Deeley recalled that day nearly 40 years ago.

"Forty years ago, on the day I was ordained to the priesthood, July 14, 1973, it was a very hot day, about 95 degrees," Deeley said. "At the end of the ceremony, done in my home parish, Sacred Heart in Watertown, and, of course, without air conditioning, Cardinal Medeiros, our kindly and saintly Archbishop at the time, told me that he had never done a ceremony in such heat. I guess I get the extremes! We go from one ordination on a hot July day to a wintry blast of air on a cold January day."

He added that he was honored to have spent 40 years in the priesthood.

"My heart is full today. There is so much to take in. I have tried as I was told to listen and to participate in the ceremony. And now, in these brief words, I want to offer a word of thanks. I offer thanks to Almighty God, who has blessed me in life with abundant gifts and called me, by faith, to baptism, and to the sacred priesthood, an honor and grace I have treasured for these forty years. Today I am grateful for this call to the episcopate, to the fullness of the sacrament of priesthood, and to greater service to God's people," Deeley said.

Many high ranking officials from the church attended the ordination. Among them were Cardinal Carlo Maria Viganò, the papal nuncio or ambassador to the U.S., Cardinal William Levada, an American who served as prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith during much of Deeley's tenure in Rome, and Bishop Charles Scicluna, the recently ordained auxiliary bishop of Malta who also served in Rome with Deeley. Boston Archbishop Cardinal Sean O'Malley presided, aided by Archbishop John Nienstedt of Minnesota and Bishop Robert Evans of Rhode Island. Deeley thanked them all for their participation.

"I thank you, Archbishop Viganò, for your presence here today. You represent for us our holy and dedicated servant, Pope Benedict XVI, the principal of unity who gathers us in the Lord as Church, and shepherds us with a heart which proclaims the love of Jesus Christ with great joy," Deeley said. "I thank as well all the bishops who have come to share this day with us."

"Cardinal William Levada, I am honored you have come to be with us. You and all the bishops represent something valuable, which we know well. The communion of the Church begins with the communion of the bishops in support of one another in fidelity to the Holy Father. I thank you all for your presence. Archbishop John Nienstedt and Bishop Robert Evans have been my co-consecrators with Cardinal Sean. We journeyed to priesthood together in seminary and have celebrated with our other classmates the beginning of this 40th year anniversary. I might single out one other, Bishop Charles Scicluna, Auxiliary of Malta. He is the newest ordained, November 24, 2012, and has come the farthest."

Deeley also singled out O'Malley for his leadership of the archdiocese, adding that he was grateful for the many priests of the archdiocese; prior to working in Wollaston Deeley worked in Newton and Lexington and served in the archdiocese's tribunal.

"I thank you, Cardinal Sean, certainly for ordaining me today, and for the meaningful words of your homily, but also for the leadership you give us, as we move forward in the beautiful work of evangelization," Deeley said. "I am grateful for the priests of Boston who join us today, and to all our priests who daily bring the person of Jesus to the people they serve. I am grateful for the presence of all the other priests, my classmates and friends from different places and different ministries. It is a great ministry we are privileged to share. Please God, there will be young men among us who will come and join us in this joyful work of the Lord."

He added that he was grateful for his large extended family, some of whom came from thousands of miles away to attend the ceremony.

"Throughout my life my family has been, for me, a tremendous gift and a valued source of companionship. With my beloved parents, who are present with us in spirit, my brothers and I were blessed with a faith-filled home," Deeley said. "Though Father Kevin and I rejoice in the gift we share as brother priests, our family has expanded with the marriages of my other brothers, and the birth of my niece and nephews, and now a whole new generation of grand nieces and nephews."

"I am grateful as well today for the extended family which joins us today, cousins from Ireland, California, and many places in between. It would be hard to imagine my life without my family. It continues to be a source of great mutual blessing for all of us. Thank you for your support and your presence."

At the end of his remarks, Deeley commented on two letters he received from schoolchildren offering their congratulations on his new post. He said those messages described the message the Catholic Church preaches.

"A few days ago I found on my desk a package of letters from some school children at one of our schools, South Boston Catholic Academy. They were sent to wish me a Merry Christmas and congratulate me on my new job," Deeley said. "A number of those letters contained a similar message to that of Maxwell who wrote, 'we are praying for you. Please pray for us.'"

"I think that sums it up. That is what we are called to do for one another as church. Pray for each other. Another unsigned note stated 'Working for Jesus must be a pleasure.' Well, truth to tell, it is. What you and I must do, in addition to praying for each other is share that pleasure, which we see as the joy we find in Jesus Christ."

Council To Inquire About DPW Violations; Fine Levied By State DEP

erly or some other reason, it was a stupid thing to do but the cover up made it worse," Innis said. "Everyone involved should be punished — they've affected our health, property values and one of the most beautiful places in New England."

Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymondi said he began to address problems with the mishandling and mislabeling of waste immediately after MassDEP officials visited the yard by retraining department employees.

"We had taken some real positive steps prior to the order being issued," Raymondi said. "All of the matters that we could handle in house relatively simply, we handled."

He explained that that the hazardous waste in question was used motor oil collected from the residents. The department has stopped accepting used motor oil from residents; hazardous waste drop-off days will continue, however.

"Our handling of oil we get from city vehicles is fine. This involved the public acceptance of hazardous waste through our yard — we've discontinued that use," Raymondi said.

The order also mandates that the city install a new truck washing station for DPW vehicles. Raymondi said the department is designing the new station, which could come with a $100,000 price tag.

"Construction of a truck wash requires a significant investment of money by the city," Raymondi said.

Additionally, the city was ordered to re-grade the DPW yard itself to prevent run-off. Raymondi could not provide an estimate for that project, but said the department has retained the services of Environmental Partners to help work through the process.

"We've been working with Environmental Partners for sometime now for the yard work. They've been guiding us through the permitting process," Raymondi said. "It's a big area — we need to engineer it and do it. The truck wash is the same thing."

Ultimately, Raymondi expects all issues identified in the order — waste storage and the need for a new truck wash and re-grading — to be addressed by October so the city won't need to pay the fine.

"I have every confidence the fines mentioned in the consent order, the city won't be required to pay," Raymondi said.

ees develop the skill sets and expertise that leads to sustainable jobs," Joanne F. Goldstein, Secretary of Labor and Workforce Development, said. "We continue to partner with Massachusetts employers so they can access the Workforce Training Fund which provides them with the resources to run training programs that ensure the viability and growth of businesses in the Commonwealth and a workforce that is top notch."

The fiscal year 2012 budget established the Workforce Training Fund as a trust fund, allowing for collection and disbursement of funds as needed by businesses, rather than on an annual appropriation cycle.

"Businesses are welcome to contact us about grant workshops held across the Commonwealth to help educate businesses about this excellent resource," Nancy Snyder, President and CEO of the Executive Office of Labor and Workforce Development's Commonwealth Corporation, said. "We are delighted to see consortiums applying for grants together to fill needs that help a variety of workers."

QUINCY-NORTH QUINCY'S Savannah Flynn scores a goal – the first of her career – against Bourne Saturday night. The girls' hockey team tied Bourne, 3-3.

Quincy-North Quincy Ties Bourne In Girls' Hockey

By JEFF OHLSON

It hasn't been an easy season for the Quincy-North Quincy Girls' Hockey team (0-6-1), but there have been small improvements, game by game, and that was never more evident than in the girls' 3-3 tie with Bourne at Quincy Youth Arena on Saturday night.

Erin McGinnis was once again great in net for Q-NQ, stopping over 15 shots, and freshman forward Savannah Flynn stepped up in a big way late, scoring Q-NQ's first goal of the game – and the first of her career – with an assist by senior forward Danielle Mullaney. Quincy's coach Stephen Burgio was impressed by the freshman.

"Savannah fought hard tonight, and that was her first goal of the season. She was just out there scrapping and playing tough and she put it in. She played great all night," Burgio said.

Q-NQ also got two goals from senior forward Briana Mullaney. Danielle Mullaney assisted on the first goal while Danielle and sophomore forward Julia Donovan assisted on the second goals.

Mullaney's second goal tied the game late in the third 3-3 with a rebound after a spurt of offense by Bourne that saw Quincy's 2-1 lead shrink to at 3-2 deficit.

Quincy would have some real chances late in the game as in the 3rd period Quincy had four consecutive rebound attempts that came up empty and at one point Bourne saw two players head to the penalty box giving Quincy a 5-on-3 power play that they just couldn't convert on.

"Bourne was in a tough spot there and as much as you would like to capitalize on that situation, you gotta hand it to them for playing the way they did there and keeping their composure," said Burgio.

Although ties are not ideal for any coach, Coach Burgio is happy with the improvement he sees in his players and how hard they are working.

"Can't be happier, we're working hard in practice and we're improving in all areas. We're heading in the right direction and we were just a lucky bounce for the other team away from having a quality win here tonight. Can't complain about anything," said Burgio.

"They have come a long way. We've been practicing them hard and they have been doing everything we've asked them to. A win would have been the best, but I'm not upset with this result, we've been in every game and the scoreboard doesn't always show how hard you played. We are coming along nicely," said Burgio.

Red Raiders Boys' Hockey Blank Hanover, 2-0

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was a complete performance that a hockey coach loves. The offense attacked the net, the defense and checking were rock solid, and the junior goalie who has been the story of the early season played another exceptional game.

"That was a good one," said coach Matt Gibbons after his team went to 5-2 overall and 2-1 in the league with the win. "We had all three phases. We pressured on offense, the defense was excellent and Nolan has been unbelievable for us."

Earlier in the week, Scituate scored a power-play goal to edge the Red Raiders, 1-0 despite a 34-save effort from Greene.

Greene has been a highlight film. He gave up one goal in two games last week while making 57 saves. He has given up seven goals in seven games. He has all the physical gifts and knowledge a goalie needs. He's quick, stands up, plays the angles, has a big-time glove hand, and moves the puck cleanly to his defense. He is also in one of those zones where he sees every shot and the puck looks bigger than a frisbee.

"His confidence. That's the big thing," said Gibbons. "He gained a lot playing for the 16-and-under state championship team. When you're in the state tourney and you're the man in goal, you grow up fast."

His best came in the final seconds of the second period with North up, 1-0. Hanover's Pat Nevis stole the puck and walked in on a clean breakaway, hockey's example of a one-on-one duel. The shooter waited for Greene to move. Greene held his spot. The shooter committed first with a lightning wrist shot for the far corner from 10 feet. Greene flashed out the glove for the save and North held its lead. It was special stuff.

"I saw him leaning for the far corner, so I leaned that way too," said Greene. "In that situation, I watch his eyes and how his stick is slanted to see where he might go. After that, it's instinct."

Doherty, who did a fine job killing penalties, scored midway through the second for the 1-0 lead. He slipped out of the penalty box and picked up the puck just outside the Hanover blue line. He moved in cleanly and picked the top corner with an assist to defenseman Rudy Tryon.

"The goal was a case of being in the right spot, but Doherty is an example of a kid who kills penalties well because he plays his position and is where he is supposed to be," said Gibbons.

Cameron iced it late in the third off a two-on-one with freshman Timmy Glynn. Cameron tried to slip the puck across to Glynn, but the pass was blocked. Cameron kept going to the net, pulled back the puck and flipped a high backhand for a two-goal lead with Glynn and Brendan Brady earning assists on the play.

The defense led by the top three of Tryon, Josh Hayward and Ryan Martin were excellent again, but Gibbons was able to go six and seven deep with quality on the blue line. The shorthanded unit led by Doherty, Andrew Currie and Nick McGaughey killed six power play chances in the final two periods with smart, tough checking.

"Brady and Matt McDonald are playing a ton of minutes for us on defense and they're playing well. We take a lot of pride in our penalty-killing," said Gibbons.

North (27-23 edge in shots) ruled the first and third periods, and Greene was at his best in the second with 14 saves. Immediately before Doherty's goal, he made two difficult saves on screened slap shots. Immediately after Doherty's goal, he turned away Mitch Beard on break down the right wing and handled a rocket from the point from Jack Mahoney. Sometimes, when a goalie makes saves is as important as how many he makes.

"I knew he would play well, but if you had told me before the season he would be this good, I wouldn't have believed you," said Gibbons.

North, who is without top forward Shawn Grady (shoulder injury), didn't produce a lot of offense against Scituate. Greene and the defense kept it close. The only goal of the game came in the final seconds of a four-minute Scituate power play which the Red Raiders barely missed killing.

North is at Pembroke Saturday at 3:10 p.m.

North Quincy Runners Shine At Auerbach Meet

North Quincy runners picked up two medals and all three athletes ran excellent performances at the annual Red Auerbach freshman-sophomore meet directed by former North Quincy coach Lou Tozzi and co-sponsored by the Mass Track Coaches Association and North Quincy High.

Freshman Molly Donahue hampered by injury for several weeks sprinted to a fourth place finish in the 1,000 meters with a personal best of 3:14.9 and her first state qualifying mark.

The Bryson twins also ran excellent races in the two-mile with Emily taking 5th in 11:45 and Julia coming in 11th in 12:15.

Pressed Presidents Can't Solve Sailors

By BILL GRIFFIN

Over the past two seasons Quincy's girls basketball team has lost just one Patriot League game to a team not named Scituate. Unfortunately for the Presidents, Scituate and senior guard Kelly Martin are back with another powerhouse.

Martin scored the 1000th point of her high-school career and Scituate's zone press broke open a close game in the second half to drop Quincy, 52-38, in a Patriot League contest Friday night.

Earlier in the week, Quincy (4-4) unleashed a potent offense behind 18 points from Kayla McArdle to down Bridgewater-Raynham, 62-44 in a non-league game.

Scituate hasn't lost a league game since 2010. The Sailors are 5-0 this year and have won 29 of their last 30. They are a four-star program. Quincy was within four points in the final minute of the first half, but Scituate's scary team quickness forced turnovers off the press to open a 39-22 edge after three.

Martin had 22, including her 1000th with 6:04 left in the game.

"They have the perfect team to press with," said Quincy coach Jeff Bretsch. "They're quick and they're tall enough so that you can't throw over them. Martin is the smartest player I've coached against. She's skilled, has great court vision and has worked relentlessly on her game."

There were bright spots for Quincy. For long stretches the Presidents halfcourt man-to-man defense produced turnovers, forced difficult shots and slowed Scituate's multi-talented offense. Quincy gave up few fast breaks. Scituate hit jumpers and scored off the press, but this was no track meet.

"I liked the effort," said Bretsch. "We never stopped. The one thing I wanted was not to give up fast-break points. We didn't because the effort was good."

McArdle once again led Quincy with 13 and played terrific defense on Martin, who has committed to play at Stonehill on scholarship. Martin got at least half her points in transition and at the line. After holding Martin scoreless and forcing six misses, McArdle left the game for 48 seconds in the first period, and Martin knocked home a three. McArdle fought through endless picks, gave nothing easy and played a great game against a great player.

"Kayla is a warrior," said Bretsch. "She never stops battling. She must have fought through 30 ball screens staying with Martin. She made Kelly earn everything."

Freshman Nicole Jorgensen (6'4") played her second game since returning from injury. She had 11 and showed extended glimpses of her potential. She had 13 rebounds. She blocked shots, ran the floor well, threw great outlet passes, defended the basket, and showed her athleticism, slapping away passes on the front line of the press.

"She's progressing quickly. She has to get used to this level of varsity competition," said Bretsch. "She has to learn when to pick her spots for her shot."

Junior point guard Alyssa Lydon scored seven and played a strong floor game against a suffocating full-court press.

"Alyssa didn't give up the ball, and she penetrated to the basket well," said Bretsch.

Against Bridgewater-Raynham, Alysha Dunbar added 10 and Lydon had a fine night passing the ball with 11 assists. Quincy was aggressive offensively and it paid off with 62 points.

"That's a lot of points for us," said Bretsch. "We took the ball to the basket quite a bit. Kayla drove very well and we ended up with a good night offensively."

Scituate's Kelly Martin Scores 1,000th Career Point In Win Over Quincy

Scituate's Kelly Martin reached a milestone in her high school basketball career last Friday night at Quincy.

The senior guard scored her 1,000 point in the Sailors' 52-38 win over the Presidents.

Among those on hand congratulating her was Quincy's Brian Buckley, who coached Martin the last three years.

Coming into this season, the four-year starter has averaged 13.2 points, 6.3 assists and 4.5 rebounds per game.

Martin is a three-time Patriot league all-star and last year led her team to an undefeated regular season record of 20-0 and captured the Div 2 South Championship and a 24-1 overall record.

In her four seasons at Scituate High School her team is 67-9. She has committed to play basketball for Stonehill College as a full-scholarship player.

Kelly's mom Linda is a former basketball standout at the University of New Hampshire.

Buckley also coached Kelly's dad Peter in The Quincy Recreation Department programs and he is a graduate of Quincy High School where he was an outstanding soccer player.

"Kelly has been a starter at the point guard position for four seasons and she is like a coach on the floor. She is a tireless worker and deserves the recognition for an outstanding high school career," Buckley said.

"Whiplash" injury damages muscles, ligaments, and tendons of the shoulder, back, and neck as a result of a violent surge of energy in rear-end collisions. As the victim's mid-back flattens against the back of the seat, the discs and joints compress and the head moves backward. An abnormal S-curve develops in the cervical spine as the seat recoils forward and the head is still moving backward, creating shearing forces in the neck. As the whiplash victim's body moves forward in the seat, and the seatbelt and harness hold him or her in, the head moves forward unimpeded, and the violent forward motion of the neck strains muscles and ligaments, tears disc fibers, and forces vertebrae out of their normal positions.

Sometimes symptoms of whiplash appear right away, and sometimes they do not develop until hours, days, or weeks after the injury occurs. # North Quincy Girls Defeat Plymouth N., 60-52

By BILL GRIFFIN

Improvement is the goal of all coaches, and the numbers show well North Quincy's remarkable progress in the first three weeks of the season.

In North's first game against Quincy, the Red Raiders lost by 11. In the rematch, they won by 22. That's a turnaround of 33 points. In the season opener against Plymouth North, they lost by three. In a second meeting last week, the Red Raiders won by eight. That's a jump of 11 points.

Junior Maya Umoren was a dominant presence inside, Jane Minton played a near flawless game at guard and Haley McKay delivered her second straight gold-star performance on defense to lift the Red Raiders past Plymouth North, 60-52 in a non-league contest.

"I think a lot of the reason for the improvement is confidence," said coach Jessica Worden. "It shows in our patience and decision-making. On the fast break, we know when to go and when to pull it back out. Our guards are finding Maya and running our plays all the way through."

Umoren had 19 points and 13 rebounds after a 17-point, 12-rebound effort against Quincy. Her numbers tell only part of the story. She played terrific defense on the Eagles' top inside scoring threat Samantha Burkehead. She blocked shots, made solid outlet passes, deflected passes into the post, and showed a strikingly soft touch in heavy traffic.

"I think the big thing about Maya is she has great hands," said Worden. "The guards know if they throw the ball anywhere near her, she'll catch it and if she gets near a rebound, she grabs it."

Minton had 17 points, but like Umoren, that number tells very little about her contribution. The junior point guard ran the offense, got the ball inside with accurate bounce passes, cashed in her running lefthanded drive, and handled Plymouth North's press with poise and skill, especially in the second half.

"If Jane plays like that every game, we'll be in good shape," said Worden. "You can see her confidence grow. When she drove, she drew the defense and found the open shooter."

McKay was moved to the starting lineup against Quincy and it is no coincidence that North took a quantum leap in her first two games as a starter. She shut down Quincy's guards. She blanked the Eagles' best player Megan Walsh in the first half and allowed her just six points in the game despite giving away several inches in height. She also handled the ball cleanly, made sharp, crisp passes against the press, and knocked down six free throws in the final period to ice the victory.

"She also had a couple of jumpers which just missed," said Worden. "She's athletic, she knows what she's doing on defense, and she's willing to put in the effort."

North's ball movement was excellent. Minton, McKay, Caitlin Bulger (eight points) found the open player unselfishly around the perimeter, and Umoren and Sam McNally passed well in the interior. There is a real cohesion developing here.

"Plymouth played a zone, and we knew we couldn't dribble through it. We passed the ball well," said Worden.

Plymouth led until midway through the second period when North's man-to-man defense shut down the Eagles' offense. After the defense forced a shot-clock violation, Minton canned a three-point jumper and set up Umoren with a pretty drive-and-pass for a 20-16 North lead which the Red Raiders never surrendered.

It was 25-19 at the half. McKay and Minton each had beautiful assists in the third as the Red Raiders opened it up to 42-32 after three and Plymouth never seriously threatened in the fourth.

"Right now I like the way we're playing. Haley has definitely made a difference in the starting lineup and we're working better together as a team each game," said Worden.

High School Sports Round-Up

By BILL GRIFFIN

"It's not a question of if things will come together for us, but when," said Quincy hockey coach Tim Lewis.

The young Presidents, who have been hit hard by the flu, fell to Pembroke, 5-0 and Duxbury, 6-2 in Patriot League action last week.

Sophomore Patrick Freeman scored twice against Duxbury and sophomore goalie Ryan Higgins was terrific in goal with 58 saves. Quincy was within, 3-2 in the third period when Duxbury scored two power play goals to open up the game.

"It's in the late stages of games that our youth shows," said Lewis whose team only skates two seniors. "Duxbury is a very strong team, but we skated right with them until late in the third period."

Freeman scored his first goal in the second period on a drive from the high slot on a nice feed from freshman Jake Hallisey.

Freeman then took a good pass from sophomore Steve Ross and went the length of the rink for a breakaway goal early in the third period.

In the Pembroke game, Quincy fell behind 3-0 in the first period before rallying in the second and third to pour 28 shots on Pembroke goalie Jackson Wainwright.

"I thought we outplayed them in the second and third periods," said Lewis. "This will come together. I know it will. Once we get over this bout with the flu, we'll be good. I'm proud of our effort."

Quincy (1-6) will host

Scituate in its first scheduled home game, with the exception of the holiday tourney, Saturday at 8:10 p.m.

It will be home, sweet, home for the North Quincy boys' basketball team as well. The Red Raiders, who went 25 days between home games, lost to Whitman-Hanson, 56-47 in a Patriot League game Friday night.

North (5-2), who at the end of last week had played just two home games, fell behind 9-0 and never quite caught up to the Panthers who are always tough in their home gym.

"I think we're 1-6 down there. It's a tough place for us to shoot," said coach Kevin Barrett.

Literacy Volunteers Orientation At Library

Literacy Volunteers of Massachusetts-Quincy at the Thomas Crane Public Library provides free, one-on-one tutoring in basic reading and writing to adults on the South Shore.

Orientations were scheduled for Wednesday, Jan. 9 and Jan. 16 at 6 p.m. at the main library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Marquis McClendon had 13 and Efthim Butka played a strong game inside for the Red Raiders. Junior Anthony Green, who had a pair of dunks against W-H, continues to develop well in the pivot.

"Anthony is coming along well. Every game we see improvement," said Barrett whose club will travel to Duxbury Friday.

Scituate defeated Quincy's boys' basketball team, 74-66 in a Patriot League game Friday night. Senior Jaquan Harris led Quincy with 16 while J.T. Bain added 14. Point guard Tino Goncalves had 14 for Quincy who will host Pembroke Friday at 6:30.

North Also Downs W-H

By JEFF OHLSON

Basketball usually takes four quarters, but for the Raiders women's basketball team (6-3) the last two games have both lasted one half or at least that's how long it took North Quincy to build substantial leads.

Friday night against Whitman-Hanson the Raiders dominated 68-49 and it was Maya Umoren who lead her team from beginning to end finishing with 26 points and over 10 rebounds for her second consecutive double-double. North Quincy coach Jessica Worden had nothing but praise for Umoren.

"She's our anchor and when she's going good it makes it easier for everyone. She's been fantastic to start the season," said coach Worden.

Late in the third quarter with North Quincy up big, Umoren wouldn't let up as she secured four offensive rebounds in a row before finally putting in a basket for a hard earned two points.

Sam McNally also played well scoring 10 points for the Raiders against Whitman-Hanson. Up 54-37 at half, North Quincy cruised to victory by continuing to pour on offensive rebounds that created second and sometimes third chance points for the Raiders.

"We created a lot of extra opportunities for our players tonight and that always helps. Obviously wins like this are the ones you want, where you feel like you went out and executed the way you wanted to and things went your way," said coach Worden.

Two days before the Whitman-Hanson game, the Raiders squared off against Plymouth North and won 60-52.

North Quincy will look to extend their three-game winning streak this week. The Red Raiders traveled to Hanover Tuesday night and return home Friday evening to host Duxbury. Friday night's game begins at 6:30 p.m. at the NQHS gym.

High School Teams Give Fans Plenty To Cheer About

By BILL GRIFFIN

Are you starved for hockey? Are you weary of watching the Celtics turn into just another basketball team? Get off the couch and go watch your local high school team!

North Quincy and Quincy offer several high-quality treats. The players play hard. They are there for the love of the game. The price is right. You will see good basketball and good hockey. How can you resist?

Let's start on the North side of the city.

Boys' basketball: Kevin Barrett has a talented, polished, veteran club capable of big things. Pat (point guard) and Dan (the shooter) could offer one of the best backcourts on the South Shore. Kyle Richardson brings quickness and toughness off the bench. Marquis McClendon is the ideal swingman, dynamic in the open floor and capable of guarding the opposition's top scorer. Eftim Butka and Anthony Green give them more height than they've had in the past.

North (5-2) has lost to Arlington Catholic on an off night and at Whitman-Hanson which is a brutal road gym. They are John Adams Tourney Champions. They have beaten Quincy twice. They can play any way you want. They can run, set up in the halfcourt, press, and their man-to-man defense is the foundation of the team. They make their free throws and have experience in clutch situations.

The Red Raiders had the best record in the Patriot League last year and they are capable of a repeat performance.

Girls' basketball: North is one of the most improved teams in the area. The Red Raiders rebounded from losses to Plymouth North and Quincy with convincing rematch wins. Junior guard Haley McKay has led the surge since earning a starting spot in the second Quincy game. She is a lockdown defender capable of changing a game by frustrating high-power scorers.

Maya Umoren is a strong inside player and junior Jane Minton has grown into her role as point guard. She has a great lefty drive and delivers the ball cleanly to North's post players. The Red Raiders can go with a three-guard set with Minton, McKay and Caitlin Bulger. Camille Mahoney, Hannah Donovan and Sam McNally are solid inside. At the end of last week, they had won five of their last six games. Watch out for this team.

Hockey: If you like solid, fundamental hockey, this is your team. They backcheck, forecheck, skate their lanes and are always in position. The defense has been terrific. North has given eight goals in seven games. Junior Nolan Green has been brilliant, making a huge impact which is rare for a goalie seeing his first varsity action. Defenseman Rudy Tryon is one of the best in the league. There is depth up front and on the blue line.

Both losses (Canton, Scituate) have come on shutouts. North returned several veteran forwards and while the goal-production hasn't been what was expected so far, the Red Raiders have outshot five of seven opponents and have pressured the offensive end. The goals should come and if they do, North will be in good position to defend its Patriot League crown.

QUINCY

Boys' basketball: This might be the most interesting team in the city. Coach Dave Parry has a mix of athletic seniors like Jacquan

Harris and Tino Goncalves and a gifted sophomore class led by J.T. Bain, Colin Evans, and Drew Myers. The Presidents (4-3) have a big-time wins over Cambridge and Weymouth. They have lost on the road to a tough Scituate team and twice to North, one by an eyelash in the John Adams Tourney.

They can press, run, defend, and shoot. If the sophomores progress and mesh with the seniors, this will be a team nobody wants to play in mid-February.

Girls' basketball: There is a lot to like. Junior Kayla McArdle is a ferocious defender and an excellent two-way player. Junior Alyssa Lydon is a pure point guard. She hits the outside jumper, handles the press, distributes the ball and plays good defense. Coach Jeff Bretsch ranks her second in the league behind Scituate's Kellie Martin and he might be right.

And there is the potential of 6'4" freshman Nicole Jorgensen. She has a lot more than height. She is an excellent athlete with great hands who has a soft touch around the basket. All she needs is experience. There is also an excellent man-to-man defense and the rigorous effort it requires. It is a team well worth watching.

Hockey: The word is patience. This is a much better club than a year ago, but it has yet to translate into wins. Sophomore goalie Ryan Higgins is a centerpiece for the future. Sophomore Brian O'Callaghan, Patrick Freeman, and freshman Jake Hallisey have shown a good scoring touch. Patrick Donovan has played well up front. This is a team with legitimate varsity skills. When the Presidents put the skills together, the wins will come.

Q-NQ Swimming, Diving Teams Defeat Rockland

The Quincy/North Quincy boys and girls swimming and diving teams won their second consecutive meet, this time upending Rockland Jan. 3 at the Lincoln-Hancock Pool in Quincy.

The Q-NQ girls (4-1) earned the 86-74 win while the boys (4-1) clinched the 59-43 count.

The Q-NQ girls delivered seven wins in 12 events most notably sweeping the 100-yard freestyle field where junior Lauren Thorne (NQ) touched the wall first (1:08.86) followed by freshman Laina Frazier (Q) and junior Lauren Gambon (NQ) in second (1:18.32) and third (1:26.10), respectively. Sophomore Sabrina Rauch (Q) won the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 1:05.95 then cruised to the 5:58.95 win in the grueling 500-yard freestyle only two events later.

Sophomore captain Mike Mullaney (NQ) and freshman Mason Francoeur (Q) earned three victories in the 200-, 50- and 100-yard freestyle events. Mullaney claimed the 200 free on the legs of his 2:38.49 effort while Francoeur brought home the win in the 50 free (33.43). The pair went one-two in the 100 event with Mullaney swimming 1:09.71 followed by Francoeur at 1:21.43.

In two of the first four events, Q-NQ swept the top-three places, thanks to Mullaney and Francoeur as well as freshman Brian Rooney (Q) and junior Ben Tran (Q) who finished second (2:38.49) and third (3:20.32), respectively in the 200 freestyle. ## 24 Quincy Cyclists Raise $85,200 For Cancer Research Twenty-four Quincy residents raised nearly $85,200 to help the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge set a record $37 million for cancer research and patient care at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through the Jimmy Fund.

The residents were among the 5,234 cyclists who rode up to 190 miles over one or two days across Massachusetts in August to raise money for adult and pediatric patient care and cancer research at Dana-Farber.

The local cyclists are: Janet Bagley, Michael

Bligh, James Conley, Jeff Cotter, Tracy Cristiani, Kelley Curley, Marua Dacey, Daniel DiPaolo, Robin Franceschini, Brendan Gallagher, Thomas Herlihy, Lisa Johnson, Jon Klapman, Kieran Klehm, Elizabeth MacCune, Patrick McDermott, Laurie McDonald, Susan Mcgoldrick, Kevin Moylan, Michael O'Connor, Jeanne Owens, Jane Richards, Amy Scheffer and Ray Waldron.

This year's $37 million fundraising total is $2 million more than the PMC gave in 2011 and brings its 33-year Jimmy Fund contribution to $375 million.

The PMC, which was held Aug. 4 and 5, 2012, is the most successful single athletic fundraising event in the United States; it raises and contributes more money to charity than any other such event.

The 34th annual PMC is set for Aug. 3 and 4, 2013. Registration opens online on Jan. 3 for PMC alumni and Jan. 17 for newcomers.

For more information about the PMC, which is presented by the Boston Red Sox Foundation and New Balance, visit www.pmc.org.

2 Residents On NDA Honor Roll

Two Quincy residents are on the honor roll at Notre Dame Academy.

They are:

Kristen Fahey and Meredith Flaherty.

On Tuesday, Jan. 1, 2013, New Year's morning at 2:14 a.m., Officers Sean Kelley and Michael Eddy were dispatched to a Quincy address for a report of a disorder between sisters. Upon arrival, the Officers were met by the caller/victim, a 21-year-old female. The victim, who was crying and very upset, stated that she had an argument with her two sisters and then was assaulted. She added that she lives with her two sisters, ages 19 and 18, at this address and they were in the house at this time.

The victim stated that she went to Boston for First Night and instructed her sisters, who are both underage, not to have a party while she was gone. She stated that she has been the head of the household since 2009 when her grandmother died. The victim added that her father has been deceased for many years and her mother was a "drug addict" who lives in the Quincy Point area and has not been involved with the family over the last several years. She said that DCF had been involved in the past but not since her younger sister turned 18. The victim stated that she is the only member of the household who works, so she pays all the household bills.

The victim said she came home to find a party going on, with several youths in the house, invited by her sisters, and they were drinking alcohol, so she immediately ordered everyone to leave the house. She said that her sisters became angry and began to argue with her, which led to "a shoving match" with one sister followed by several punches initiated by the second sister/suspect #1.

The victim fell to the ground and was then kicked in the head by sister/suspect #1, who was wearing boots at the time. As the victim attempted to get up, sister/suspect #1 got on top of her, scratched her face and bit her twice, once on the left thumb and again on the left thigh. The victim was able to get up and get away from her sisters, then called "911" and waited outside for the Police to arrive.

Officer Kelley then interviewed a friend of the victim, who came to the house with her. He confirmed that after the victim told everyone to leave, "all hell broke loose," with the two sisters attacking the victim, and with sister/suspect #1 kicking, biting, and scratching the victim.

Officer Kelley then entered the house and spoke with sister/suspect #1, who said her victim/sister came home and started "being a b@#$% and telling us what to do." Sister/suspect #1 said that they got into a heated argument and began to "shove each other," so she (suspect) pushed the victim to the ground to protect her sister but denied assaulting her. When asked if she had been drinking, sister/suspect #1 said no at first but when asked about the numerous empty beer bottles in the kitchen, she stated "we only had a couple - it wasn't a party."

Officer Kelley then interviewed the other sister who was involved in the initial struggle. She said her older sister/victim came home and "yelled and screamed" at her, calling "me and my friends names." She stated that they shoved each other and it was then that sister/suspect #1 got involved. She said that she was unsure if there was any biting, kicking or scratching, but did see them punching each other.

Based on statements from all involved, Officer Kelley determined that sister/suspect #1 was the primary aggressor and was placed under arrest for "Assault and Battery and Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon (shod foot)." Photos were taken of the victim's scratch marks and bite wounds. Nice Work!

RULES OF THE ROAD: Stop and Yield Signs

A STOP sign always means "come to a complete halt" and applies to each vehicle that faces the sign. At the stop sign, drivers must stop prior to the crosswalk or stop line painted on the pavement. Drivers must yield to pedestrians or other vehicles and then proceed carefully. Just slowing down is not enough. If there are stop signs at all roadways leading into an intersection, all traffic coming to the intersection must stop. The first vehicle in the intersection with stop signs has the right of way after stopping.

When you see a YIELD sign, slow down and be prepared to stop. Let vehicles, bicyclists, and pedestrians go before you proceed.

Watch For Frozen Pipes, Ice Dams

Q: I moved this fall from my hometown in South Florida to a small town in the Northeast. I've never dealt with freezing winter temperatures and snow before. My dad told me to watch out for frozen pipes, but how do I notice when they're freezing, and what can I do to prevent it? What other problems should I watch for? — New Guy in Portland, Maine

A: The first advice I received when I moved to a Northern state was "bend your knees when you're shoveling snow." But there was a little bit more to know. Fortunately, most homes built in the past 30 years or so in the Northeast have higher-grade insulation than homes in the South. So pipes don't typically freeze at the first sign of frost the way they do in Florida. Still, you're right to be on your guard.

Here are two common winter problems to look out for:

- Frozen pipes: During long or very low-temperature freezing spells, keep a tap at the highest level of your home dripping, so that water moves through the pipes. Inspect the pipes in areas where insulation is low or nonexistent, such as crawlspaces or basements. You may need to run a hand along the pipe: if you feel an area that's especially cold, or see frost buildup on a section of pipe, it's beginning to freeze.

If the pipe is swollen or already cracked, you've got a bigger problem. To prevent this from happening, drape towels soaked in hot water over the freezing pipe. Place a bucket underneath the towels and pour hot water over the area frequently to thaw the pipes. If the pipes have cracked or burst, shut off water to that section of the house and call a plumber.

- Ice dams: These form along the eaves of a house, particularly the corners, during long cold spells. They're sometimes caused by damage or air leaks at the edge of the roof, where warm air from inside meets colder air. The bigger the ice dam, the more potential there is for roof damage to occur. If you can safely clear the dam during above-freezing temperatures, do so; otherwise, call a roofing specialist for an evaluation.

HOME TIP: Ice melt is a big help in keeping wintry walkways clear, but to prevent damage to nearby plants or lawn, be careful not to overapply it: Read the directions on how much of your selected product to use.

Homeowners Tricked Into Overpaying For Deed

Homeowners nationwide are receiving letters asking them to pay upwards of $80 to obtain a certified copy of their property deed, according to the Better Business Bureau.

What the mailings don't mention is that deeds are available from the county for a few dollars or less.

How the Scam Works:

You receive a letter in the mail in an official-looking "open immediately" envelope. It warns that you should have a certified copy of the deed to your house or condo. Getting a copy is easy; just pay the business $80 or more, and they will mail you one.

The letter is misleading. Deeds really only cost a few dollars, so the scammers are making a hefty profit.

As with most scams, the letters take several forms and the exact name, amounts and wording used change over time.

Some versions of the letters look like a bill. Others warn that an additional $35 will be tacked on to a base charge if you don't order by a set date. However, the mailing always uses an official sounding business name, including National Deed Service, Secured Document Company and Conveyance Transfer Services. These three all have a Washington DC return address and a toll-free number.

How Can I Get A Copy of My Deed?

If you are thinking about selling or refinancing your home, you will need a copy of your deed. But you don't need to pay scammers for one.

- To get a new one, call or check the website of the county clerk's office, where deeds are usually recorded.

- What you need to get it: The street address of the property. There is no fee if you request the title yourself, but there may be a small charge for copying and certification.

- How long it takes: The process takes about 10 business days in most cases.

Cerebral Palsy Of Massachusetts Honors Former CEO Tom Zukauskas

LOCAL CHILDREN recently raised $1,800 for Fr. Bill's Place and learned a valuable lesson taking shelter in cardboard boxes on a recent cold evening for three hours in front of Most Blessed Sacrament Church in Quincy. They then went to the "soup kitchen" at the church hall for soup and hot chocolate. Organizers said the children learned about their own ability to bring awareness to the plight of homelessness of youth. The children planned the exercise for more than a month. Parents were also impressed by their unselfish act.

School Officials Seeking Tighter Security Procedures

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy Public School officials will be looking to tighten up security procedures at each school after a recent Facilities and Security subcommittee meeting brought up concerns and ideas to prompt a deeper look into the security guidelines.

"After the tragedy that happened in Newtown we began to look at every aspect of our security plan," said Superintendent Dr. Richard DeCristofaro. "We have been diligent in all of our plans for security as we deal with students and have come up with a list of improvements to look at."

At last week's School Committee meeting, School Committeeman Dave McCarthy spoke about the Facilities and Security Subcommittee discussion on security procedures and changes in Quincy Public Schools.

City, Honeywell Reach $25M Settlement

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy's six-year long dispute with Honeywell International has come to a conclusion after the technology conglomerate and Attorney General Martha Coakley agreed to a settlement over claims Honeywell failed to deliver promised energy savings to the city.

Under the settlement, signed Jan. 11 and announced Tuesday morning at a press conference inside Mayor Tom Koch's office, New Jersey-based Honeywell will pay the state $4 million, most of which will likely end up in Quincy's coffers. The settlement also voids a maintenance contract between the city and Honeywell, which will save the city as much as $22 million.

Flu Claims Life Of 90-Year-Old Resident

The Massachusetts flu epidemic has claimed the life of a 90-year-old Quincy resident, the city's Health Commissioner reported Tuesday.

The flu-related confirmed death and the number of cases in Quincy that stood at 49 as of Tuesday prompted local health officials to encourage residents to get their flu vaccines by contacting their local health care providers or pharmacies.

Quincy Public Health Commissioner Andrew

Scheele said the city has seen a spike in flu cases right along with the rest of the state. He also said the city has run out of flu vaccine.

"We are definitely up from last year's numbers. I would say we are up ten fold from last year," Scheele said.

After giving out nearly 1,000 flu shots Scheele said the health department has run out of vaccines. Scheele said he has a call into the state asking for more vaccines but as of right now it could be as long as a month before they receive any.

Scheele said he is encouraging those who haven't received the flu shot yet to go to their local pharmacy or to contact their doctor. He encourages anyone who is sick to stay home until the symptoms subside, and 24 hours after a temperature has gone down.

He also reminds residents to wash their hands and to cough and sneeze into their elbow not their hand.

City Census Forms In Mail This Week

The city is mailing out some 49,000 census forms this week.

City Clerk Joseph Shea said the census information is used to generate a street-by-street listing of residents and to compile jury and voting lists.

The census information is also used for fiscal planning, to help predict school enrollments and to get federal aid and reimbursements.

According to state law, each city and town in Massachusetts must conduct an annual census separate from the federal census.

Six New Patrol Officers Join Ranks

By SCOTT JACKSON

On Monday, Quincy's six newest police officers began training at the police academy after being sworn in Friday afternoon.

Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen swore in the six new patrol officers — John P. Goggin, Robert Connell, Joseph Cox, Stephen Minukas, Colleen Paccioretti, and Sean McCormack — in front of a room full of family, friends, and police officers inside City Hall. Speaking at the swearing in, Mayor Tom Koch said each new officer had unique qualities that would improve the force as a whole.

"We're very proud of our department — we believe that the Quincy Police Department leads the state in so many ways. It's a truly dedicated and professional department, you're joining some real great people," Koch said. "Each of you bring with you a set of skills, a set of talents, and a set of gifts that will add to that great skill that we have in our department. You're also going to learn a lot from those officer who've been around for years."

Chief among those skills, according to the mayor, is the use of judgment and restraint required in situations not covered in newspapers or dramatized on television.

"There's a lot of situations that you don't read about in the paper that more often than not uses judgment and restraint by each of you individually in each of those situations. They're not like what you see on a TV program," Koch said.

Chief Paul Keenan said the six recruits made a wise choice by deciding to join Quincy's police department because of the support it gets from the community and the city's government.

"You've made a great selection — the Quincy Police is an outstanding police department and I think it's second to none in the Commonwealth. It's a well represented police department," Keenan said. "Financially, it's a good job — it's good, secure, you'll be able to provide well for your family. We've got strong support from our mayors, from our community, our citizens at-large, and also our City Council. You're walking into a good situation."

The chief said the new officers' next six months at the academy — they will train at the MBTA Police Academy on Sea Street — would be torturous. But he expects them to make it through if they work together.

"You're going to go through about six months of torture when you get to the academy. Monday will be an eye-opening experience for you," Keenan said. "If you all stick together for a group — you come on as a group, stick together as a group — you'll get through the academy and you'll have a tremendous career and I think you made a great choice."

Paccioretti, an Army veteran of 21 years who aspired to be a police officer, said she expects the academy to be difficult but knows her and her fellow recruits will be able to work in unison to pass it.

"I'm very excited — it took a lot of work to get here. It's going to be a lot more work, the academy is going to be a tough, grueling six months," said Paccioretti, a Franklin native who has lived in Quincy for 11 years. "The guys I'm coming on with, they're a great group. We've already done a lot of things together so it's going to be essential coming in as a team. We're one of the bigger units coming into the academy, we're going to get each other through it."

Minukas wanted to be a police officer since he was five because many of his family members had served before him — his mother Kathleen is a traffic supervisor with the Quincy Police Department, for example. To help his chances of realizing his dream, Minukas studied criminal justice — at Curry College before transferring to Bridgewater State — and enlisted in the Air Force.

"I have a lot of family that are police officers. A lot of my football coaches were police officers. They've always been someone I looked up to — that caliber of person," said Minukas, who is also a Quincy resident. "I went to school for criminal justice and then I joined the military to get the best status to join."

The new officers went through a vetting process led by Sgt. Jennifer Tapper, who Keenan believes was able to identify the best of the best. "We went through a big vetting process to get what we believe was the best of the best and that's a tribute to Sgt. Tapper. They do a good job getting the best of the best and congratulations; I think you're the best of best."

After the six months in the academy, the officers will take part in field training with the department for two months, according to Keenan. By September, they will be fully sworn members of the department.

With the addition of the six recruits, the Police Department now consists of 149 patrol officers, 28 sergeants, 14 lieutenants, four captains, the chief, and civilian employees. Keenan does not expect to hire more patrol officers before the fiscal year ends on June 30, but said promotions could be coming.

Neighborhood Crime Watch Meeting In Squantum Jan. 24

Quincy Police Lt. Dan Minton of the Crime Prevention Unit will address Squantum residents at a Crime Watch meeting Thursday, Jan. 24 at 7 p.m. in the library of the Squantum Elementary School on Huckins Ave.

The meeting is being coordinated by Ward 6 Councilor Brian McNamee.

All Ward 6 residents are invited to attend.

Lt. Minton will cover recent statistics he has collected for criminal activity in Squantum. He will also discuss ways to "case harden" your home to deter crime.

For example:

- Be sure all first floor windows are closed and locked
- Keep shrubbery cut back so no one can use plantings to hide behind
- Keep the exterior of homes well lit.
- Consider using a "house sitter" while away from home for extended periods of time.

• Those who are going to be away should let neighbors know.

Anyone who sees anything unusual or anyone who looks suspicious is encouraged to call the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

For more information on the meeting, call McNamee at 617-376-1356 or 617-770-0678.

School Committee Votes 6-1 For New 3-Year Teachers' Contract

By EMILY TAFT

By a 6-1 vote, the Quincy School Committee has ratified a new three-year teachers' contract that calls for a one percent raise this year and two percent raises the next two years.

The pay hike for the Quincy Public School's 800 teachers will cost $579,000. The money for the increase was approved by the School Committee during last year's budget discussions.

School Committeewoman Anne Mahoney was the only member of the school board to vote against the school budget last year and the contract ratification at the Jan. 9 School Committee meeting. Attempts to reach Mahoney for comment were unsuccessful Tuesday as The Sun went to press.

Voting in favor of the new contract were School Committee members Emily Lebo, Dave McCarthy, Kathy Hubley, Paul Bregoli, Vice Chairwomen Barbra Isola, and Mayor Tom Koch who as mayor serves on the school board.

"We've been in negotiations with a number of unions over the last several months. We've seen settlements in several areas including the police and laborers and a number of the smaller-sized unions," Koch said Tuesday.

"The QEA (Quincy Education Association) ratified the contract last Monday which then tripped it coming back to the School Committee for a final official vote by the School Committee to accept the contract. The vote was 6-1; I'm delighted it's finished," the mayor said.

"I think we had a very respectful dialogue and that's been my style from day one — everyone gets a seat at the table, let's talk about it at the table, let's be respectful of one another's needs," Koch continued. "We share all our information, all our background financially, and we came to basically the same numbers, which was the one, two and two. One percent this year, two percent in fiscal '14, and two percent in fiscal '15. I'm pleased that it's finished and look forward to resolving the rest of the contracts."

Isola said that there were many parts of the contract that she believed would benefit Quincy Public Schools as a whole.

"I thought there were items in the contract that are very good for Quincy Public Schools and the teachers," said Isola. "I voted for it to go through because I thought it was beneficial to the teachers and students. There were many specific items in the contract that will add to the quality of teaching and learning in Quincy Public Schools."

Paul Moody And The SAL: Serving Veterans

When he was younger, Paul F. Moody, Sr., thought he'd serve his country in the Navy.

The military, you might say, was in Paul's blood.

He was born into a military family, the son of the late James and Anne Moody, both Army veterans of World War II. Mom was an Army lieutenant and Dad was a specialist 4th class.

He wanted desperately to join the Navy after he graduated from North Quincy High School in 1965. But a medical condition stopped him from seeing the world and serving his country aboard a Navy ship.

So, Paul, in his own words, "did the next best thing."

He went to work at the Fore River Shipyard.

"I thought if I can't join the Navy, then I'll do the next best thing and that's work at the shipyard," Paul says. "So I went down there and got a job as an electrician. They put me to work on the ships - that's where I wanted to be."

During the next 20 years - until the yard closed in 1986 - Paul worked on some 50 ships and went out on 30 or 40 of them on sea trials.

"I enjoyed it. I saw the ocean and experienced life aboard a ship."

After the yard closed, Paul went to work for the Quincy Public Works Department. He's been a leak detection supervisor for some 20 years.

But Paul's kinship with the military was not over.

Nor was his service to helping veterans.

He had lost nine classmates in the Vietnam War.

Surely there was something more he could do.

But for some time, he thought he couldn't join a veterans' organization because he had not served in the military. Then, about 11 years ago, a co-worker at the DPW mentioned that because his parents had been in the service, he was eligible to join the Sons of the American Legion.

"Basically I joined the SAL because I wanted to be part of something that helped veterans. I decided to check it out and see if I liked it. It's how I got involved and then one thing led to another. You start doing things like fundraisers and you really get into it."

"We started to visit the hospitals and thanking the veterans for their service."

Moody was soon the SAL's chaplain and then became commander, a leadership position he's held the last four years. Membership is about 58 today and the Sons are always looking for new members.

"The only requirement is that a parent or a grandparent was in the service and honorably discharged," he points out.

Son Beams

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

FLAGS FOR VETERANS Island at Fort Square, Quincy, honors more than 100 living and deceased veterans. The project is coordinated by Paul F. Moody, Sr. (right), commander of the Sons of the American Legion Squadron 294, Morrisette American Legion Post; with the help of others including his wife, Karen (left).

The Sons assist veterans in a myriad of ways. They host a dinner for disabled and hospitalized veterans. "We give them a meal and dessert and there's dancing and a dj. We also visit veterans in the VA hospitals and do karaoke."

"We bring cookies, popcorn and soda. They love to see us coming," he says.

Around the holidays, they also visit the nursing homes. "We give a Christmas card to everyone and slide a $5 bill to every one of them just to be sure they get something for Christmas," he says.

They've also hosted a St. Patrick's Day dinner the past few years.

"It's been a tremendous success. It's just a fundraiser and all the money goes back to the veterans. Everything we do goes right back to the veterans. We send donations to different organizations and veterans hospitals, too."

Then, on Veterans' Day 2010, Paul had a vision.

A vision for a traffic island decorated with American Flags, each one representing a veteran - living, deceased, killed in combat or still serving.

"The SAL had been invited down to Cohasset that has a Field of Flags called a Healing Field. And I said, 'That's something Quincy should have. So we were sitting at a meeting and Ray Cattaneo (Morrisette Legion Post member and former Park director) was there. We approached Ray and we told him we were looking for an island to build Flags for Veterans."

"He called me up and he said, 'We have the island at Fort Square. Take a look at it.'

"I said, 'It looks big,' but once you get the flags on there it won't look so big anymore."

The first year - Veterans Day 2010 - there were 10 flags. And then it grew. And grew. And it continues to grow today.

By Memorial Day 2011, there were 17 flags. Veterans Day, 2011, 20 flags. And then last year it really mushroomed.

"We had 60 flags for Memorial Day and 100 for Veterans Day. We're still going," Moody says. "We've got 15 flags ordered and I know we'll have at least 30 new flags on the island by Memorial Day. Probably more."

Moody is quick to acknowledge the help and support that has made the Flags for Veterans Island at Fort Square near Pleasant Street in Quincy a success. He's grateful for the Quincy High School Class of 1966 that has "stepped up to the plate immensely and they keep finding more veterans for flags."

AMERICAN FLAGS - each one representing a serviceman or woman who served in the military, including those killed in combat or are still in the Armed Services - decorate Flags for Veterans Island at Fort Square last November for Veterans' Day. Quincy Sun Photos/Robert Bosworth

The QHS Class of 1966 has donated about 35 flags to date. The flags represent classmates who served in the military, including some who died in combat.

Moody says another major supporter is Mayor Thomas Koch.

"When we started, Tommy Koch came down and I said, 'we're going to have a collection and we're going to put a flag pole up. The mayor took over the flag pole. He said, 'The flag pole is on me.'"

Moody also credits the work of others who have made the community service project such a success, including his wife, Karen, and Adjutant Stephen Fowles.

Flags cost $30 and it's a one-time fee. Once the flag is purchased, it will be displayed several times of year - generally from the second week of May until Independence Day and again in October until after Veterans' Day.

There are other markers and memorials on the island, including two signs recognizing the Flags for Veterans and two memorial benches.

The flags serve as a patriotic reminder of those who have served this country preserving freedom. They are a sight to behold - any time of day - as a sea of red, white and blue flutter in the breeze.

"The flags are in honor of our veterans and veterans' families. It's something that we wanted to do more so than something for ourselves. It's for the community. We wanted the people of Quincy to see and the people of Quincy are fantastic when it comes to supporting veterans."

The project has exceeded Moody's expectations.

"Oh yeah, definitely. I expected it would take at least five years to fill the island with flags, not three."

But don't think the island has a flag capacity.

"We're going to keep putting flags on the island even it means we have to stand in the street with the podium (to conduct our observances). We'll make sure the island is covered with flags," Paul vows.

Moody says he hopes those who visit the island recognize the flags represent veterans.

"When we're on that island people go by and honk their horns and people stop and talk to us. They tell us this is great, this is beautiful."

"That gives us a sense of satisfaction and all the guys who are with me feel the same way. They thought it would basically be for the SAL itself but it's really for the people of Quincy. They just can't believe how things have turned out."

When Moody addresses the gatherings on Memorial Day and Veterans' Day at the Flags for Veterans Island, he always ends with this thought: "freedom is not free."

"That's what these flags truly represent," he says. That's the one thing that I've always thought of. You have to realize that if you didn't have people who went into the service, you wouldn't be here today."

"These veterans are paying with their lives. That's why it's not free."

LUNT STREET. NORFOLK DOWNS, MASS.

THIS IS A 1920's postcard view of Lunt Street in Norfolk Downs looking towards Billings Road. Postcards like this one rarely show any social activity other than the photographer's car, which was sort of like a trademark. This one is unusual as there are several people on both

READERS FORUM

Track 'Saga' Not Over Yet

The late as well as great Daniel Patrick Moynihan has been attributed as saying that "(e)veryone is entitled to his own opinion, but not his own facts."

For recent examples of the violation of this sage statement, all one has to do is look to the variously flawed criticisms lodged by a Quincy Sun reader against "New Track, New Beginning," a Sun Readers' Forum letter published on Nov. 29, 2012.

Among other significant issues, the Nov. 29 letter addressed the importance of both abiding by both the rule of law as well as respecting the rights of individuals.

The letter's critic, however, twice attacked the letter in ways that demonstrated an often deeply flawed understanding of events, applicable laws, germane court rulings as well as all offered up all manner of arguable misrepresentations.

Rather than addressing the critic's many flawed comments, it would be most insightful to respond to his final comment: "The (Fax-on, ed.) track saga ended long ago. It's time to move on."

In point of fact, nothing could be further from the truth.

In recent weeks, both the Patriot Ledger and the Boston Globe have reported that the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection ("MassDEP") has formally sanctioned the City of Quincy for improperly — if not also illegally — storing hazardous materials at the site of the track during its construction as well spilling some of these hazardous materials into an abutting wetland.

More importantly, Mass-DEP also cited the City of Quincy for constructing the track and related necessary infrastructure without both-ering to secure necessary approvals.

On just the last point alone, imagine what would happen to a private party or company who so undertook a 7-figure construction project? Typical sanctions for building most anything without a building permit include significant fines as well as that often any such unpermitted construction must be leveled to the ground.

Further troubling is that MassDEP's sanctions were handed down earlier last October, but only recently have they become public knowledge via investigative reporting by both the Globe and the Ledger.

With all respect due the Koch Administration, events clearly smack of a cover-up and the City Council will soon be holding committee hearings to review matters.

Additional new problems include that the track's infield cannot be used for football games. The key reason is that all manner of manhole covers and drains along the sides of field render the field non-regulation in size.

Further, the MassDEP sanctions include the ordering of additional as well as costly engineering work that could result in even further additional construction expenses on the track.

One cannot help but wonder what's next.

For example, the public has no idea as to just what the track has cost to date. The Koch Administration has recently cited a $1.14mm figure, however, this figure fails to include all manner of project expenses incurred, much less those recently ordered by MassDEP. Even so, enough valid information exists to suggest that the final, all-inclusive cost of the new track at Faxon Field will likely run closer to $2mm than the touted $1.14mm.

In the meanwhile, "(t)he (Fax-on, ed.) track saga..." actually looks to be far from over.

Wants Action On Pedestrian Safety

Last year, at least 92 pedestrians were struck by vehicles in Quincy. A cluster of pedestrians were struck at the intersection of Granite and Hancock Streets. After Quincy Center is revitalized, those who will be attracted to the area may join the list.

Brian Palmucci, chairman of the City Council's public safety committee, has been enjoined to determine the causes of these accidents. While information has been gathered, no apparent action has been taken. Good ideas and petitions go to die in legislative committees.

The police department has held educational sessions. Presumably those ten attendees do cross the street in Quincy Center. The Police Chief delivered an editorial of warning in this newspaper. Those who read The Quincy Sun have been warned.

I wrote a letter to Public Works Commissioner Raymond suggesting that the sidewalk entrances to crosswalks be painted yellow and that senior crossing signs be placed at each end of pedestrian walkways at senior facilities. The response was dead silence.

A petition to the legislature requesting the state wide implementation of traffic safety cameras, worded by Representative Ayer and signed by senior residents at Fenno House, was sent to the Representative. No action taken.

When the election cycle comes around this fall, the politicians must come out of their ivory towers and face the voters.

At that time the Councilors, the Mayor, and other candidates will visit senior and other facilities seeking votes. Voters should ask for their commitment to taking action on these matters. Mr. Mayor, the buck stops with you.

Squantum Seen For Nuclear Plant

Quincy Atty. George Flavin, who was an associate member of the state's Department of Public Utilities, predicted that Boston Edison would build a nuclear power plant on its land in Squantum.

Boston Edison bought the old Victory plant for the express purpose of building a multi-million dollar generating plant. Flavin said he expected that Edison would generate with nuclear fuel, "once that source of power was perfected."

To date Edison had done nothing with the large tract of land it owned, except allowing a small portion to be used by Boston Harbor Marina.

GRANITE RAILWAY SHRINE PROPOSED

Rep. Joseph Brett filed legislation to establish an historic shrine in West Quincy, at the site of the nation's first commercial railway.

The Granite Rail incline would be annexed to the MDC's Blue Hills Reservation for the purpose of maintaining it as an historic site.

The leader of the filing of the legislation was Charles Eliot, II, grandson of the president of Harvard. Eliot was active in the Bunker Hill Monument Association that in 1825 raised the fund to build the monument out of Quincy granite.

BELLOTTI ANNOUNCES KARATE LESSONS

Lt. Governor Francis Bellotti announced that he arranged for Karate courses for women who were afraid of the "Boston Strangler."

Bellotti, who was a Karate enthusiast, urged all those women who could to take the free lessons in self-defense. The lessons, offered by the Mattson Academy, were scheduled for the Victory Rd. Armory in Dorchester.

Wollaston Garden Club Winterizes Intersection Planters

The Wollaston Garden Club and the Quincy Park Department have joined forces since 2009 planting and maintaining the intersection planters at five different sites throughout the city.

The garden club has purchased all the plant material and been responsible for plant selection, plant trouble-shooting and winterization of planters at each site. The Park Department has added annuals for summer interest and been responsible for fertilizing and watering the planters during the summer.

Gardening in containers in New England is a real challenge. The garden club's Civic Beautification chairperson, Jo Costello says "how difficult plant selection has been in meeting site and climate requirements - our container plants must survive cold, windy, dry winters, and hot, dry summers.

"At all times of the year, well-drained containers need moisture. It has been 'trial and error' in selecting xeriscape plants that will survive these difficult conditions, but we have found juniper, agave, sedum, nepeta, and heuchera do best. We are always testing new plant material."

During December each year, before the first frost, garden club volunteers use an anti-desiccant spray on the shrubs to protect them from drying winds (winter burn), frozen ground, and to help them maintain moisture. Planters are filled with evergreens branches to protect the plants further and provide winter interest. Each winter decorative branch material (red twig dogwood or birch) is used and this year spray painted grape vine was added as an embellishment.

In early spring all the evergreen material is removed and the soil is amended and fertilizer added.

Club president, Jan Clifford said she "is proud of what a dedicated garden club civic beautification committee can do to improve how our city looks."

Founded in 1927, The Wollaston Garden Club is committed to civic beautification and conservation.

WOLLASTON GARDEN CLUB Civic Beautification committee members, Pete Horsford, Jo Costello and Pat Artis are part of a crew of garden club volunteers who each December winterize 13 intersection planters around the city with fresh greens and decorative vines and branch material. ### Ruth Greene Wins Snowblower In Bank Of Canton Giveaway

The Bank of Canton announces Ruth Greene of Quincy was the winner of a Toro® snowblower in the Bank of Canton's Good Cheerlings Holiday Giveaway at its Quincy branch at 60 Mayor Thomas McGrath Highway.

Area residents had the chance to win a Toro® snowblower during the annual giveaway, which brought holiday cheer to the community.

"Good Cheerlings" has been an annual promotion at Bank of Canton for two decades, and was open to the public throughout the month of December. Winners did not need to be customers of the bank, but merely to visit the Bank of Canton branch in Quincy or its other four branches.

A Toro® snowblower was awarded to one winner drawn from each of the five Bank of Canton branches.

"The holiday season is an ideal time to thank our customers and others in the community who support our bank year-round," said Bank of Canton President Stephen P. Costello. "I'm sure none of our winners will be disappointed if the snowblowers aren't put to use this year, but they will be well prepared to deal with whatever snow may come our way this winter season."

SET FOR LIFE

Even if you are choosing white gold for a diamond ring, consider the benefits of selecting platinum for the setting. While white gold is composed of 75 percent or less of precious metal, platinum is usually 95 percent pure. Unlike white gold, which is typically plated with rhodium (a member of the platinum group) to give it a lustrous white finish, platinum possesses an inherent white luster that will never wear off. Platinum also possesses superb strength and durability, which are characteristics to look for when selecting a material that will hold a precious diamond firmly in place, particularly in prong settings. Platinum also does not tarnish and is the preferred metal to show white diamonds to their best advantage.

Platinum is a truly luxurious metal. It has become the new symbol of love and promise. You are cordially invited to view all that we have to offer at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center where you will find our platinum jewelry is vibrant and pure. Call us at 617-773-3636. ## Ellie's Easy Mini Cheesecakes

My granddaughter Ellie who is only 11 years old was so excited to see me recently, to tell me about a great dessert that she had made all by herself.

It is easy mini cheesecakes and easy enough for her to follow. They can be topped with fresh sliced fruit, pie filling, sugared pecans, toasted coconut or shaved chocolate.

EASY MINI CHEESECAKE

1 dozen vanilla wafers
½ cup sugar
2-8 ounce packages cream cheese

1- teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

Line muffin tins with foil liners. Place a vanilla wafer in each liner. In a mixing bowl, combine cream cheese, vanilla and sugar; beat until well blended. Beat in eggs and mix thoroughly. Pour cream cheese mixture over the wafers, filling each liner about ¾ full. Bake for 25 minutes.

Top with any topping mentioned above. I used my favorite topping-freshly whipped cream.

The Problem With The Republicans

Sal Giarratani's letter in the Jan. 10 Sun is interesting.

He has a cute way with words. He wishes his party were less whacko liberal, but what can you do? He takes issue with me when I say that it is time for the Republican wafflers to get lost and then says that Romney lost because the voters didn't know who he really was.

To quote Sal: "Back in 1994 when he (Romney) ran against Ted Kennedy he ran to Kennedy's left. This past campaign he was trying to run to Reagan's right. He lost both times."

So which is it?

The problem with the Republicans is that they try to appease everybody and please nobody. When they finally dig in their heels, they get labelled The Party of No.

On the other hand, there is nothing democratic about the Democrats. Either you march in lockstep with the leadership, or they replace you.

I didn't expect Scott Brown to be an ideologue when he went to Washington. It would have been nice, however, if he had waited awhile before falling into Barney Frank's arms.

If he thought the Democrats who abused him and then threw him out as fast as possible were going to vote for him, he was wrong. If the GOP brand is that tough a sell here in MA, then maybe Scott should have stayed home.

Instead, Senator Wishy-Washy not only teed off his base, he got trounced by a nobody of questionable ancestry. America is now on the cusp of a Constitutional crisis.

Barack Hussein Obama is throwing around executive orders as if he were Hugo Chavez and Mohammed Morsi all wrapped up in one. He intends to gut the Constitution, starting with the 2nd Amendment, and will do so with the advice of his gun-running Attorney General and ATF.

Instead of upholding and protecting the US Constitution as he swore to do, he is bordering on treason and I haven't heard a peep out of the Republicans.

Maybe Frank McCauley can tell me where they are.

Didn't Have All His Facts

Follow-up to a previous opinion.

Don't you just hate it when you shoot your mouth off in public and then some kindly dignified person shows up at your house and graciously tells you why you're wrong!

Well, I guess if I'm big enough to voice my opinion in public then I had better be big enough to admit when I had my facts wrong.

Thank you, Mayor McCauley for the time you invested to bring to my attention the facts that I didn't have when I opined about the sale of elementary schools in the 1980s last week.

I didn't realize how little the school population had grown and really thought that we were heading back to the school census of the 1970s. I was way off and my facts were not current regarding the subject.

I do still feel that the city should keep Central, Sterling and the High School for city use, even if it means leasing them to private entities until we need them for other purposes.

Thanks Mayor McCauley, you are a city treasure.

Quincy Medical Center Focus: Delivering The Best Care

Making QMC A Community Pillar For Health Care Is CEO Daniel Knell's Vision

By EMILY TAFT

With a new Maternity Unit in sight, Quincy Medical Center is looking to continue expanding in every aspect of the hospital in years to come.

Quincy Medical Center President Daniel Knell has done a lot with the hospital since he arrived over a year and a half ago.

"We are ready to begin the Surgical Suite renovation and Maternity Unit construction projects, pending approval from the Department of Public Health on our Determination of Need application," said Knell. "We are bringing to Quincy those high end, high quality services that people were leaving the community for in the past. We are a lower cost provider, so by doing that we can give people high quality service here at a cheaper price."

Knell said he expects to get the final word on the approval of the Maternity Unit by Feb. 13th, which will allow the hospital to move forward with the rest of the plans.

For financial reasons, the maternity ward closed in 1998 and Knell said he decided to bring it back because there is a need for it in Quincy and the surrounding communities.

"Maternity is never a big cash winner, it's a service that the community needs, and I think deserves. But when institutions struggle sometimes it is one of the decisions they make to stay above their costs," said Knell. "There are 2,000 births in our general area that either go into Boston or leave the area to have their babies and to not have the service readily available for folks in our community is just inappropriate."

Quincy Medical Center is ranked in the top 10 percent in the nation in general

SINCE BECOMING Quincy Medical Center President 18 months ago, Daniel Knell has focused on a number of priorities, including renovating patient rooms. surgery. They are a five star award winner in cardiac and orthopedics, they are an A rated hospital from Leap Frog, they have over 400 doctors and growing, and with the appointment of Knell a year and a half ago they have a very highly qualified and experienced president.

Knell has worked in many facets of the hospital world, working his way up from a housekeeper, to EMT to nurse and then eventually becoming a C.E.O and president.

"I grew up in the hospital that's all I know," said Knell. "I enjoy working with the teams here, and I can tell you the people here are fantastic. Even when this hospital was struggling before Steward (Medical Group) got here, when they were struggling financially, the people here, the associates, the employees, gave great care. They took great pride in delivering high quality care, even without the resources that we've brought to them, so now with the resources the care has got even better."

Since last year, Knell has helped to open the orthopedic unit, bring in robotic surgery to do total knee and partial knee replacements and total hip replacements, along with construct a new entranceway, which will allow for valet parking, and many other plans for the future of QMC.

Vanessa Landeverde, Aina Curran Honored For Anti-Bullying Leadership

Two Atlantic Middle School eighth grade students – Vanessa Landeverde and Aina Curran – were recently recognized by the Quincy School Committee for their peer leadership skills and work with reducing bullying in the school.

The pair received awards for their peer leadership at Atlantic Middle School and in the greater Quincy community at a recent school committee meeting.

The two students were nominated by their guidance counselors because they have been part of the driving force of many different things that go on at the school on a regular basis.

"Aina and Vanessa have proven themselves over and over as enthusiastic learners. They are active participants in the classroom as well as extracurricular activities. They demonstrate kind and considerate behavior and show the utmost respect to staff and their peers," said Atlantic Middle School Principal Maureen Mac-

Neil.

"These young ladies have been described by their teachers and classmates in words such as kind, helpful, fun to be with, and someone who never makes me feel bad about myself. These girls are true leaders and understand the importance of helping others, kindness and demonstrating how to be open and accepting of all. If these young ladies are any indication of what the future holds I believe we are in very good hands."

City, Honeywell Reach $25 Million Settlement

reached a settlement on the city's behalf with Honeywell. It's a settlement that is worth some $25 million dollars. It's a $4 million cash settlement and [an] approximately $21 to $22 million voidance of the maintenance contract," said. "It's a great day for the taxpayers and the City of Quincy. From day one, that was what drove me on this issue was to make right for the taxpayers and the residents of our city."

The total value of the contract between Honeywell and Quincy was about $32 million. About $6 million of that contract was for equipment such as boilers that has been installed.

"We do have equipment in our buildings that was bought and paid for. There's boilers, there's electronic equipment, there's unit vents - there's all kind of equipment that was purchased as part of it," Koch said. "There's a value to that equipment that is in the buildings."

Under the contract, Honeywell was to be solely responsible for maintaining that equipment. Because that portion of the agreement was voided, the mayor expects to realize significant savings.

"Instead of a proprietary situation dealing with the Honeywell Corporation, we as a city can competitively bid maintenance for our maintenance for our buildings and our boilers. These companies would be certified to work on this equipment...which will allow us to save an awful lot of money," Koch said.

While Honeywell has agreed to pay $4 million to the state, Koch expects that Quincy will receive most of that money. After receiving it, he will go before the City Council with a spending plan, part of which includes making buildings more energy efficient.

"A portion of it will be put aside for our buildings - continued work on our energy area, continued improvements to our buildings for savings. As I talked about last week we're going into a very aggressive program, not only saving energy but dealing with the cost of energy with the solar program we're recommending," Koch said, referring to his plans to install solar panels on a dozen or more city buildings announced during his midterm address. "We'll be doing some great things with some of the moneys made available through the settlement."

The City Council, particularly Councillor Doug Gutro, have questioned the administration over the Honeywell agreement in the past. Koch said he would be happy to provide as much information as he can now that the attorney general's investigation led to a settlement.

"I'm sure the council would like to have an update at some point. We'll be happy to provide an update as best we can with the information we're allowed to provide," Koch said. "My guess is when we go to the council with the recommendation on the moneys that issue will come up. Whether there will be a subsequent meeting scheduled before an appropriate committee before the council, whether they talk about it generally at a regular council meeting, that will be their call."

But data on actual cost savings will not be available, even after the settlement was acceded to. City Solicitor Jim Timmins said Honeywell did not install necessary computer programs to calculate that because of the protracted nature of the dispute.

"Honeywell didn't generate any energy savings data. During the course of this dispute, discussion, between Honeywell and the city there were a lot of things that were put on hold. One of the things that we did (put on hold) was the computer component of this, which is where all the data would have been generated [and] compiled," Timmins said. "That was all kind of put on hold and not fully implemented. There is some data that the city would be able to release, but it won't be the type of data you're talking about, because we have obviously been monitoring what goes on in buildings."

The original contract with Honeywell was signed in May of 2007 under then-Mayor William Phelan and was supposed to help reduce Quincy's energy consumption in public buildings, thus driving down cost. Koch took office the following January, and shortly thereafter began to look into the agreement signed by his predecessor.

"From day one I thought the city had problems with the contract. In our first year in 2008 we began to experience issues and problems - at that point we were just learning what had been agreed to and we were just learning what the financial implications were from the city," Koch said.

Citing the settlement agreement, Timmins said the city could not discuss the particular concerns the mayor referenced.

Koch's administration began investigating the Honeywell program in March of 2008, before turning to the state investigator general's office in February 2009. By early 2010, the IG's office referred the case to Coakley's office. Peter Carr, an attorney contracted by the city to assist in the matter, said Honeywell's resources made the case trickier to navigate.

"The city was dogged in its position and Honeywell was dogged in its position. They had significant legal resources they put into this case to either defend or refute what they city was putting forward," Carr said. "If you want to get to the end, you really got to want to get to the end."

The contract was procured under Chapter 25A of Massachusetts General Law, which provides an exception to public bidding laws for programs intended to reduce government energy consumption. In a statement, Coakley said compliance with the statute is necessary to protect both residents and the environment.

"Strict compliance with this statute is important not only to conserve energy and protect the environment, but also to ensure that taxpayer money is well spent," Coakley said. "This settlement brings millions of dollars back to the City of Quincy."

Former Cong. William Delahunt, a Quincy resident who has provided pro bono assistance to the city over the dispute, said the settlement ends the controversy and shows that Koch's concerns were real.

"Having read and watched this controversy continue for some period of time, it's really the end of that saga," Delahunt said. "It demonstrates that the mayor's concerns were on target, were accurate, and that the attorney general shared in those concerns."

Council Votes 8-1 For 27 New Downtown Liquor Licenses

By SCOTT JACKSON

Mayor Tom Koch said Tuesday he is thrilled that the City Council's ordinance committee gave a favorable recommendation to a home rule petition asking to more than double the number of liquor licenses in Quincy Center.

The ordinance committee voted 8-1 in favor of the petition Monday and its likely that the council will give final approval during its meeting next Tuesday, Jan. 22. The petition asks Legislature to grant Quincy a total of 27 new licenses to be used in the downtown district - there are currently 23 licensed establishments in the area. Koch told The Sun the licenses are crucial to luring in new restaurants to the downtown, and expects Quincy's delegation at the State House to help pass it.

"I'm thrilled. This was contemplated from day one, that we'd be dealing with this at some point - now is the time. I've had conversations with our legislative delegation, they're eagerly awaiting it and they will usher it through at Beacon Hill. I appreciate the council's swift action, I think it's appropriate," Koch said. "I think the greatest analogy on this when some people [are] concerned about adding liquor licenses was the North End. The North End, I think everybody would suggest is an area of restaurants and the North End has some 91 liquor licenses for those restaurants."

"What makes it so crucial to us is, as we are negotiating with restaurants, they want to know they have the ability to apply for a license."

Zoe Strassell Inspires Family, Friends To Pay It Forward

Seventh Grader Focused On Helping Charities

By EMILY TAFT

For 13-year-old Squantum resident Zoe Strassell, being a teenage girl isn't about cell phones, fancy shoes, and designer clothes but about helping local charities and teaching those around her to pay it forward.

"Girls my age and boys my age tend to be addicted to cell phones, and I still like to text, but they tend to use their time on things that won't really matter later on. In the end it's not going to matter. Someday I am going to look back on my life and I am going to be proud of myself for the way I used my time," said Strassell. "These eight years of my life have been dedicated to giving back. I will always be giving back, and I want to someday, if I have children, instill that upon them. My main goal is to inspire other people, just like I was inspired when I was younger. One person can really make a difference."

Strassell, who is a seventh grader at The Woodward School, has been giving back to local charities since she was five years old making and selling bracelets to raise money for charity.

"I always knew that there was someone out there that needed help. I always had an appreciation for what I have and going to school and going to kindergarten is when I realized that everyone's situation is different.

ZOE STRASSELL

It gives me a good feeling to help people, even now when I am older; every year it makes me feel even better," said Strassell. "In a way it makes me sad to think that there are little kids, and even families out there that can't afford to do Christmas, or birthdays or whatever else they might celebrate."

Strassell's idea grew from selling bracelets to sitting in front of City Hall at eight years old selling lemonade and cookies to raise money for St. Jude's Hospital and Cystic Fibrosis, and then she read an idea in a magazine about hosting a party for charity.

"In fifth grade I was reading a magazine that had this idea and it said to host a party for a charity. I went up to my mom and said this is a great idea, so we modified it a little bit, the magazine said to donate $5 for every guest, but we decided it would be better if we donated toys instead," said Strassell. "The winter of fifth grade we had our first holiday party, it was a huge success, so we decided we were going to have another one in the spring, that was also a huge success. We have done the same thing in the winter and spring since then. Our normal donations in the winter goes to Toys for Tots, and in the summer we have mainly had our parties for Birthday Wishes, which is an organization that donates toys for boys and girls who can't afford to have birthday parties."

This coming spring Strassell said they might be donating toys to somewhere more local, the Quincy Head Start program.

"I went in there once and it blew me away how big and new it was," said Strassell. "It looks like a place that would be good to donate to."

During the winter fundraiser they watch a holiday movie, and in the spring there is a theme. Past themes include watching the movie Freaky Friday with a Chinese Theater theme and a Hollywood Theme while they watched Hollywood Tower of Terror. Strassell said she isn't sure what this spring's theme will be but she hopes to have a plan for it by the end of the month. Each event collects over 75 unwrapped toys for boys and girls of various ages, and Strassell said that every year the number of people in attendance grows, and includes over 50 family, friends, and siblings of friends.

Giving back, and paying it forward, is something that Strassell grew up learning from her family.

"I think she just observed our family doing this, you learn by example," said mom Meredith McEwen. "We have always said pay it forward. Anytime somebody does something nice for you, you have to do something nice for somebody else. Nowadays kids can be spoiled with their North Faces, and their fancy shoes, but it's not about that."

Strassell said that she plans on continuing giving back for the rest of her life and that the movie night fundraiser will be something she holds for many years to come. Strassell said she hopes to help many other local charities in the future and maybe even open up the lemonade stand again to raise money for the MSPCA (Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals) or ASPCA (American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals).

"She has a huge heart and she inspires so many people," said grandmother Joan McEwen in a letter to The Sun. "She does all of this on her own and she never looks for praise. With so many kids just always wanting more, here is a kid who just wants to give back and 'pay it forward' and really gets it."

New Teachers' Contract Ratified

The $579,000 will come from the reserve section of the budget, which was calculated into the budget during the budget building process last year.

After eight months of negotiations with the Quincy Education Association both sides were able to narrow down the issues and come out with a contract that is following suit with other unions across the city, according to QEA President Allison Cox.

"We got some nice language changes for our members in this contract," said Cox. "It's a respectful and reasonable settlement, the same as other union contracts throughout the city."

The three-year contract includes an increase in prep time for elementary school teachers and some professional development opportunities among other things.

"The school committee was concerned about the increase in professional development hours for the elementary school teachers in particular," said School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro. "They were concerned about the elementary school teachers' schedule with the recent reduction in the budget and how it affects their prep time. We worked out a plan that the elementary staff will have one block of prep time during the day to prepare for their kids."

Before the approval of the contract, elementary school teachers were going two or three days a week without prep time. The new contract will allow for elementary school teachers to have a block of prep time available for them each day.

Also included in the contract is an incentive called Masters +45, which will allow teachers to further their education and prepare for new common core lessons.

"We had a very in-depth and frank conversation about professional development. Professional development is obviously important to our members, so we took the opportunity to have a thorough discussion about it," said Cox. "We have the addition of the Masters +45 which opens up a new salary lane for our members and is another incentive to them to continue their educations."

DeCristofaro said that the addition of the Masters +45 will help to prepare teachers for the new common core and allows for another professional growth option for teachers.

"We felt strongly about adding an incentive for teachers to prepare them for the common core that is coming," said DeCristofaro. "From my perspective we dealt with the negotiations in a very respectful manner and I look forward to implementing the contract together."

School Officials Seek Tighter Security Procedures

to primarily talk with all the folks that are involved in protecting our schools," said McCarthy. "The purpose of the meeting was to review security concerns at individual schools and system wide as a whole."

McCarthy said that some concerns that were raised during the subcommittee meeting were issues with classroom door locks, emergency plans during unstructured times such as lunch and assemblies, repositioning security cameras to get a better view at front door entrances, and identification of workers who travel between schools, such as maintenance, IT substitutes and students teachers.

"We are going to look really hard at our visitor control procedures and make sure we have something in there that not only people can be familiar with, but something that stands out," said McCarthy. "We're going to try to get the protocol out to teachers to relay what they should do if they are ever in a situation and that the security agenda in the schools is going to tighten up and that folks are going to have to work with us."

During the subcommittee meeting, School Committeeman Paul Bregoli brought up concerns about both high schools main entrances being unlocked. Bregoli suggested having the security officers at each school visibly screen each visitor before they enter the building would be an idea to think about. Both high schools have their front doors open during school hours, and visitors have to check in with security as soon as they enter.

"Mr. Bregoli was concerned a little bit about the doors being unlocked during the day, even with the security folks there at North Quincy and Quincy," said McCarthy. "We've streamlined the entrances and exits at both high schools, but Mr. Bregoli brought up a good point even at the high school levels we might want to look at the doors and go to an access code system that's there all the time."

According to DeCristofaro, principals met with their staff to gather any specific concerns they might have. All concerns were then combined with the master list of School Improvement Plan Maintenance items for each school. The list will then be looked over at the next Facilities and Security subcommittee meeting where they will prioritize each item and their costs, which DeCristofaro said they hope to do next month.

"It's a concern that we are going to have to watch forever," said McCarthy. "We have a good team, and we are way ahead of it here in Quincy we've discussed it for a number of years and every time you think you have all the answers there is another question that comes up."

Council Votes 8-1 For 27 New Downtown Liquor Licenses

"This isn't automatic for anybody. Each individual still has to go through the process with the License Board. But it allows the project to move forward and I'm just thrilled."

During the ordinance committee's meeting, Street-Works co-founder Richard Heapes emphasized the necessity of having liquor licenses available as the developer looks to secure loans to pay for the $60 million or so of the Merchants Row price tag that LaSalle Investment Management won't be fronting. Heapes' company wants to secure a loan in a few months, and needs 50 percent of retail space leased for that to happen.

"We want to close that loan in the spring - April or May. They want us to have 50 percent of the retail leased. How much of the retail do you think I can lease between now and then that is small shops? Have you seen a lot of small shops opening up in downtown Quincy these days? No, what you have seen is pretty successful, healthy restaurants," Heapes said. "I'm not going to say we're scrambling because we're talking to all kinds of tenants."

"But in order to get the debt, meet the 50 percent requirement we're going to need some restaurants. There are not a lot of licenses hanging out there that I could snap my fingers and have tomorrow."

Councillor Doug Gutro, chairman of the council's downtown committee who formerly represented Ward 5, supported the petition. He said it was long understood that bringing new restaurants downtown would require new liquor licenses, dating back to community meetings Koch had early on in his tenure.

"Much of what was discussed was the wider sidewalks, the street trees, the cafes, the restaurants - 99 percent of restaurants have some sort kind of beer and wine or liquor license," Gutro said, referring to those community meetings. "The concept that this is new, novel, or different over the past two, four, six, or eight years is not one, as chairman of the downtown committee now and in the past as someone who has represented Quincy Center really since the inception (of downtown plans) under two administrations, this is not a groundbreaking request to me. It was an anticipated one."

"When it was discussed way back, even in the prior administration, in all likelihood it was going to be a much greater cluster, we hoped, of restaurants in the city, and this was part of what would come with it."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin, the ordinance committee's chairman, called the petition another building block - along with other steps such as the approval of the LDA with Street-Works or rezoning Quincy Center - in the process of creating the newer, better, downtown as envisioned by the council and others.

"The birth of a new downtown is a very complex and labor intensive gestation. There are many building blocks that have been involved," Coughlin said. "This is another building block. To get to the point that we have envisioned, to get to the point worked so assiduously to get to - I don't think we can be successful unless we incorporate all of these building blocks into the vision we have for the city going forward."

The lone opposition vote was cast by Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee. He said he supports the downtown project as a whole, but felt the council was approving the petition too quickly with too little input from the community.

"I wish the Patriots could move the ball like we're moving the ball tonight. We've gone from the one-yard line to the Legislature," McNamee said. "As far as I'm concerned, we need to hear from the public. There should be a public hearing on this. There has to be public input. We seem to have really fast forwarded the sequencing tonight and I object to it and I'm not going to vote for any increase in the number of liquor licenses until I listen to the public."

Paul Moody Selected For Henry W. Bosworth Award

at a reception at the Quincy Sons of Italy Social Center in March.

The award – formerly The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year – was renamed in memory of Quincy Sun founder and longtime publisher Henry Bosworth three years ago.

Moody, age 66, is the 29th individual to be recognized with the Bosworth-Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year Award since it was established in 1985 to recognize outstanding community service.

Moody, who has served as commander of the SAL 294 Squadron for four years, was nominated by members of the Squadron who noted his various good deeds helping veterans, youth and other worthy causes for many years.

"I am shocked to get this award," Moody said after being informed of his selection by Sun Publisher Robert Bosworth. "This is quite an honor and I owe a lot of it to my wife, Karen, who has helped so much with the Flags for Veterans Island. I am very pleased to be receiving this award."

Bosworth congratulated Moody on his selection.

"Paul Moody took a vision for the Flags for Veterans Island and created a patriotic and heart-warming tribute to our veterans in a span of just a few years," Bosworth said. "But Paul's support and service to veterans began long before that island took shape. He's also been a dedicated volunteer to other worthy causes, including youth and charitable organizations."

"The Quincy Sun salutes Paul Moody on his selection."

Bosworth also praised the other citizens who were nominated for the award and extended appreciation to the judges who helped make the final selection.

"Being nominated for the Henry Bosworth Citizen ship Award is an honor in and of itself. The list of this year's nominees underscore the fact that the City of Quincy is home to many civic-minded citizens who serve this community with outstanding service."

"The Sun also wishes to acknowledge our readers who took the time to submit nominations. The award would not be possible without them," Bosworth said.

Serving as judges were: Henry (Hank) Bradley, 2001 recipient of the Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year; Bette Campbell, director, Quincy Access TV; Betty DeCristofaro, immediate past recipient, Henry Bosworth Award; and Maralin Manning, director of Business Development, Quincy Chamber of Commerce.

Moody joined the Sons of the American Legion, Morrisette Post 294 Squadron, 11 years ago. He served as the Squadron's chaplain for six years before becoming commander four years ago.

The SAL has been very active under Moody's leadership. The membership conducts fundraising for veterans, host and serve dinner for veterans at the Morrisette Legion Post on Liberty Street and visit shut-in-veterans during the holidays.

They also visit the Brockton VA Hospital and sing karaoke and entertain the hospitalized veterans with games. During Christmas, the SAL provides meals for veterans.

But perhaps the signature event for the SAL is hosting Memorial Day and Veterans' Day observances at the Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square, Quincy. The island is decorated with large American flags – each one representing memorials to veterans, deceased veterans, servicemen and women killed in combat or military personnel still serving in the armed forces.

Moody and the SAL initiated the island project as a tribute to veterans a few years ago with 10 flags and it has grown steadily since. By this Memorial Day, Moody expects the number of flags to reach or exceed 130.

"The island started with 10 flags for parents of SAL members," Moody says. "And now it's just mushroomed."

Moody joined the Sons of the American Legion after a co-worker at the Department of Public Works where he is the leak detection supervisor told him about the group. Moody's parents, the late James and Anne Moody, were both Army veterans of World War II.

"I just wanted to be a member and I ended up being the chaplain first. After about six years as chaplain, I became the commander."

He's been the commander ever since.

But Moody's community service began well before his SAL days.

In his youth, he played baseball and basketball for the Koch Club and later coached baseball when his boys were young. He also helped form the North Quincy Young People's Association – a group of softball players who wanted to raise money for Children's Hospital.

He was active for many years with the Boy Scouts Troop #38 Sacred Heart Church, serving as a scout master for four years.

"It was a lot fun with the kids taking them camping. We faithfully went to Camp Massasoit and camped once a month all year round – even in the winter," Moody says.

He's also been an active member of the Quincy City Club for more than 30 years. The club supports charitable activities including clothing drives and fundraising for the less fortunate.

Moody has also served as an assistant coach for the North Quincy Apaches in the Quincy Youth Football League.

"I just love helping people, especially the kids,"

Moody says when asked about his volunteerism and community service. "Now, it's helping the veterans and I'll do anything for veterans. There's nothing I wouldn't step up to the plate for."

Moody is a product of the Quincy Public School system. He attended the Quincy Elementary School, Atlantic Middle School and graduated from North Quincy High School in 1965.

He also attended the Coyne Electrical School in Boston where he learned to become an electrician.

He worked as an electrical foreman for General Dynamics at the Fore River Shipyard for 20 years until the yard closed in 1986.

He has been employed by the City of Quincy's Department of Public Works as a leak detection supervisor for 22 years.

Moody and his wife Karen will celebrate their 45th wedding anniversary on June 29 this year. They have two sons, Paul Jr. and his wife Debra of Hanover and son Michael. Paul Jr. is a Quincy fireman and Michael works in the City of Quincy Traffic and Parking Department.

They also have three grandchildren: Gavin, Caroline and Aiden.

The final 10 were brought in front of the school to decide who was the school champion and a shot at entering the Massachusetts State Geography Bee being held this April.

After the nervousness went away and further competition, sixth grader, Nick Hewer was crowned the champion and Klei Hamzallari was the runner-up.

lari was the runner-up.

Nick took the next step – a written test. If he scores in the top 100 in the state, he will be entered in the state bee with a chance to win a trip to the national bee in Washington D.C.

Good luck to Nick - the school is rooting for him!

Keynote Speaker Dr. Wayne Westcott's Message To Quincy College Graduates:

'Showing Up Is Not Sufficient To Become Proficient'

Here is the text of the Quincy College Commence Address given by Professor Wayne Westcott to graduates at the college's winter commencement Jan. 5 at the Quincy Marriott Hotel.

Mayor Koch, members of the City Council, Representative Chan, members of the School Committee, Chairman Grindlay, members of the Board of Governors, President Tsaffaras, administration, faculty, staff, families, friends, and most importantly, graduates.

Thank you most sincerely for the privilege of being your commencement speaker. I am truly honored to be a faculty member in the Department of Natural and Health Sciences at Quincy College under the excellent leadership of Dean Corina, and I am very enthusiastic about sharing a few thoughts with you on this special graduation day. Please rest assured that my comments will be brief.

First, let me congratulate all graduates on completing one of the most important challenges that you have ever undertaken, namely, earning a college degree in the academic area that you have so thoughtfully selected. In short, you have been successful. It has been said that 90 percent of success is simply showing up. However, I definitely do not agree with this analysis. When I enrolled in engineering at Penn State University, a large number of freshmen students showed up at the orientation meeting. I distinctly remember the Dean of the College of Engineering telling us to look at the person on our left and the person on our right, because only one of us (one of three) would make it to graduation. He was correct, and I was not among the 33 percent of this freshman class who graduated with an engineering degree. More on that later. However, the point is that simply showing up is not sufficient to become proficient in your field of study. As you well know, graduating from Quincy College requires sincere commitment, serious study, and hard work. You deserve high commendation for finishing what you started, and for successfully completing all of your college degree requirements.

Please let me share four recommendations that may be helpful in your future endeavors, academically or professionally. All of these recommendations begin with the letter R, to make them easy to remember. The first recommendation is Right Decisions. You will undoubtedly be faced with many career-related decisions during the next several months and years. My advice is to first consult with one or more of your family, friends, or associates whose experience and expertise can be instructive in your decision-making process. Sometimes, people who know you well have a more objective perspective than you do on what would be your best course of action.

For example, during my freshman year at Penn State, my track coach observed that I was much more enthusiastic about physical activity than I was about engineering. One day, he suggested that I should consider switching my major from engineering to physical education, now known as Exercise Science. Although I have the highest respect for engineers, deep down I knew that this was not the most appropriate career for me. The next day, after receiving my parents' blessing, I changed my academic program of study from engineering to physical education. Seven years later, I was blessed to become a full-time faculty member and assistant track coach at Penn State University. I am most thankful for a coach who told me what I needed to know, and for parents who confirmed the wisdom of his advice. They encouraged me to make the right decision, at the right time, to pursue the right professional career, based on my real interests and abilities. Don't let other people make your decisions for you, but do consider consulting with key individuals, including your former professors at Quincy College, when facing major life choices.

My second recommendation is Responsibility. Once you make a decision, accept the responsibility that comes with this new territory. In other words, after you make the right choice, do the right thing. Give your very best effort to every aspect of your new endeavor. Be responsible to yourself, as well as to others, and you will almost always experience reinforcing results.

Although I loved my physical education major program at Penn State, I was very unsettled about doing my student teaching requirement. The terrifying thoughts of a tough master teacher and unruly high school boys caused me to put off my student teaching experience until my very last semester. Truth be told, I actually considered dropping out of college to avoid student teaching altogether. Fortunately, I finally found the fortitude to face this fearful phase of my teacher preparation. As anticipated, my master teacher appeared to be a larger than life combination of Arnold Schwarzenegger and Attila the Hun. However, as I did my best to perform my practice teaching and coaching responsibilities, I found this to be far and away the most meaningful and enjoyable experience of my entire college career. By the way, I still keep in touch with that excellent master teacher who seemed so big, strong, and scary when we first met, which brings me to my next recommendation.

My third recommendation is Relationships. While Right Decisions and Responsibility are critically important components of a fulfilling life, Relationships are absolutely essential. Based on my observations, men don't typically do as well at relationships as women do. For example, if my wife tells one of her friends that she will call her, she means within a couple of days. If I tell one of my friends that I will call him, I mean within a couple of years. Clearly, it takes time and effort to develop relationships, but as you age you will learn that there are few things in life more meaningful or reinforcing than good relationships. Never let your academic or professional pursuits, as important as they are, take away from your personal relationships. Always put relationships with family and friends first, and even consider doing the same with your professors.

There is no way that our Exercise Science professors will remember what grade each of our students attained on mid-term tests and final exams. But, I guarantee that we will remember each Exercise Science student. We will remember our relationships as teachers and learners. We will remember each student's interest, attitude, and effort in the Exercise Science classes and during the practical training experiences. It will be exactly the same for the Exercise Science program graduates. They will not remember our mid-term tests and final exams. But I guarantee that they will remember us. For better or for worse, they will remember our interest, attitude, and effort as their Exercise Science professors.

We will remember the things that really count: personalities more than papers; life qualities more than lectures. These are the essential characteristics of relationships. As you leave Quincy College, please don't leave your relationships behind. Do your best to keep connected with your close classmates and associates. And as you begin the next chapter of your life, please place a high priority on developing meaningful relationships with those who are traveling on the same road, academically or professionally, as well as those who help you on your way, especially your family. It will definitely make your journey more enjoyable, and your destination more rewarding.

Although my original commencement address ended here, President Tsaffaras graciously invited me to include a few comments on physical fitness. Of course, I am most pleased to do this.

Therefore, my fourth and final recommendation, Resistance Exercise, is intended to help you enjoy a high level of personal health throughout your lifetime. You may be unaware that unless you perform regular resistance exercise, you average a 5-pound reduction in muscle tissue and a 10-percent reduction in bone mass every decade of your adult life. These closely-related degenerative processes lead to sarcopenia and osteopenia, as well as to a multitude of other serious health problems. Because muscles function as the engines of our bodies, less muscle means fewer calories burned and more calories stored as fat every day. Consider that a pound of untrained muscle uses about 6 calories a day for tissue maintenance, but that a pound of strength trained muscle uses up to 9 calories a day for tissue maintenance. This is a very large difference (50 percent more calories burned every day for every pound of muscle in your body).

A 20-minute session of resistance exercise may use 150 calories during your workout. But your body will use more than 100 extra calories a day for three full days following each strength workout for protein synthesis and muscle development. In other words, just 20 minutes of resistance exercise, twice a week, can burn more than 1000 extra calories every week. This is a most efficient means for losing fat, while concurrently building muscle and bone for a stronger musculoskeletal system. President Tsaffaras knows how well regular resistance exercise can work. After one year of training in the Quincy College Exercise Program, he added 12 pounds of muscle. On the other side of the coin, after one year of training in the Quincy College Exercise Program, one of our professors lost 24 pounds of fat.

If you already are the right body weight and look great, consider another important reason to do strength training. Your muscles produce hormone-like substances called myokines that have a positive influence on every tissue, organ, and system in your body. Consequently, strong muscles have a major impact on your personal health, as well as on your physical fitness. So, do your best to set aside 20 minutes, twice a week, to perform a few highly beneficial resistance exercises.

To recap, my four recommendations for a healthy and reinforcing life are: (1) Right Decisions; (2) Responsibility; (3) Relationships; and (4) Resistance Exercise.

Thanks for listening. Congratulations on your well-deserved graduation from Quincy College. May God bless you, and everything that you do.

North Quincy Battles But Bows To Duxbury

By JEFF OHLSON

From pregame warm ups on, it was clear that Duxbury had an advantage over North Quincy, and just about any other high school team, in the sheer size of their team. It was an advantage that the Dragons would ride to a 48-31 victory.

In the first quarter of the game, the Red Raiders did everything to keep up with Duxbury and succeeded as they went into the second quarter with a lead of 13-11. Maya Umoren did most of the heavy lifting for the Raiders in the first and had a good game overall with 10 points and 10 rebounds. Unfortunately for Umoren though, foul trouble early would keep her from playing a majority of the second quarter and Duxbury's size would take over.

"We played them really tough in the first, and I was proud of the team," said North Quincy coach Jessica Worden. "They are a really good team, really good, and we were right there with them."

In the second quarter, it would unravel for the Raiders though as Duxbury center Michela North, who stands in at 6'2", took over, scoring 12 points in the quarter and finishing with 18 points for the game. Overall, the Dragons outscored the Raiders 17-2 in the second quarter, giving Duxbury a 13-point lead heading into the second half with the score 28-15 in favor of the Dragons.

"North is a special player and really Duxbury has a lot of great players and that's what makes them so tough," Worden said. "They have a lot of height and they play smart, so to stick around with them you have to play a high level all game."

"Michela North is a very talented player though and she is going to give every team she faces fits."

The third quarter was better for North Quincy as the offense finally started clicking. However, Duxbury continued to roll down low as North and teammates Bridget Quilty, and Catherine Harrison, who are both also over 6'0" tall, continued to make life for the Raiders hard. The Raiders guard play would step up in a big way though to keep the game close as Jane Minton hit a three-pointer to bring the game back to a 10 point deficit and Sam McNally poured in four points towards the end of the quarter for North. Minton finished the game with nine points for the Raiders and four rebounds.

In the fourth quarter, Duxbury pulled away a little further and never gave the Raiders a chance to climb back into the game. The game was a tough one for North Quincy but it also showed that they have the talent to hang around with great teams if they can stay out of foul trouble and keep key players on the floor.

"We had three players with three fouls each in the first...that's really killer and you can't expect to play your best when you're in foul trouble from the start. I saw a lot of good things tonight and I saw some things we have to work on. We just got to prepare for Tuesday now," Worden added.

North Quincy played home to Scituate Tuesday night and will host Quincy Friday night at 5 p.m. They play at Rockland next Monday night (Jan. 21) -game time TBA.

SAFER SLEDDING

Sledding in snow evokes romantic images of children having fun. While that is certainly the case, parents should not dismiss the fact that many kids are traveling headfirst at high rates of speed on slippery slopes. With this in mind, it must be pointed out that the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission reports that, according to the most recent year for which sledding injury data is available, sledding, snow tubing, and tobogganing were responsible for 74,000 injuries treated in U.S. hospital emergency rooms. To avoid bone fractures and injuries to the head, neck, and spine, chiropractors encourage parents to supervise sledding activity whenever possible. About 71% of unsupervised sledding outings end in injury compared to 29% when adults are present.

At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we are cautioning parents to take safety precautions more seriously. If you or your children are flying down a hill, why not put a helmet on? Winter sports like skating, skiing, and sledding may cause painful muscle strains or tears if you're not in shape. The doctor of chiropractic is an effective source of preventative and wellness care. We're currently accepting new patients and welcome your call at 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Snow sleds can easily reach speeds of 20-25 mph, which is reason enough for sledders to wear helmets.

Red Raiders Hammer Hanover

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was a night when everyone came to the party.

The usual names made an appearance for North Quincy. Marquis McClendon and Pat Gould supplied energy with nose-to-nose defense from the opening tap. McClendon scored 14 and passed the ball unselfishly out of his slashing moves to the basket. Gould added 13 and played a spotless game at point guard.

And there were some new names among the guests. Senior Aaron Anderson knocked home seven three-pointers and junior Greg Clarke played a strong inside game to lift the Red Raiders past Hanover, 86-45 in a Patriot League game at North Quincy last week.

"Our energy on defense set the tone and when we do that, we break out for good chances at the offensive end," said coach Kevin Barrett after his team played its first home game in 25 days.

The Red Raiders continued to display impressive depth in an 85-46 decision over Duxbury Friday night. McClendon (23), Efthim Butka (15 points, eight rebounds) and Pat Gould (11 points, eight assists) led North who boosted its record to 7-2, 4-1 in the Patriot League.

Against Hanover, North was up 19-11 after one, 54-23 at the half and had it to 75-27 midway through the third as the entire roster of 13 played and 11 of them scored.

Anderson was a show. He entered one of the zones where the rim looks larger than the ocean. He sat in the corner, his mates found him and he buried them. He made seven of his first eight before fatigue set in and he missed a couple. In the second and third periods, he could have stepped out onto Hancock Street and made one.

"I dove for loose ball and after that, I just went off," said Anderson who finished with 21 points. "I never had a night like this before. The rim looked so big. My coaches and teammates just said to me: Get it and let it go. At the end, my legs just got tired. I thank my teammates for getting me the ball."

"He can shoot the ball. That won't be the last time you'll see him taking and making threes," said Barrett.

Clarke, a 6'1" forward, had 11 points, six rebounds, blocked out, and defended the basket. Sophomore Matt Gerakis (five) drilled a three in the final period and supplied quality play off the bench.

"Greg defends the post well and does a lot of the dirty work for us. Matt is an energy guy and he played well tonight," said Barrett.

Starting center Anthony Green (6'7") continues to progress. He had six points, six blocks and several intimidations. He was at the start and on the end of the most memorable play of the night with 5:20 left in the third. He cleared a rebound off the defensive boards and pushed the ball to Pat Gould. Gould drove the ball down the right wing, drew the defense, and slowed the tempo for an instant. Green ran the floor, sliced through the lane, and finished Gould's bounce pass with a big-time dunk.

"Every day in practice, every game, we see more improvement," said Barrett.

McClendon was terrific defensively. Despite giving away six inches, he held Hanover's top scorer Sean McNally to four points in the first half when the game was decided. More impressively, he gave up at least three drives to the basket to set up Anderson in the corner. There are many senior starters who would have taken the chance to pad their scoring average, but McClendon passed the ball to his open teammate.

"Marquis has to be our defensive stopper for us to go anywhere, and he's the consummate team player," said Barrett.

The coach was also happy with his depth. Vinny Tran (four), Butka (four), Matt Donovan (two) and Dan Gould (two) all scored. The only negative of the night was Dan Gould sprained an ankle late in the first quarter.

"We tell the kids to always be ready for an opportunity. The kids who work hard in practice, but do not usually play a lot were ready tonight," said Barrett.

Defense was the key again against Duxbury as North held its second straight opponent under 50 points. The Red Raiders cashed in the chances created by the defense for a 20-point lead after one and cruised in for the victory.

"We got off to a real good start. Our defense produced good shots for our offense and we took advantage," said Barrett.

The big win also gave North a chance to again showcase its depth. Senior Kevin Pillone scored 10 points in the fourth period, including a pair of three-point jumpers. Kyle Richardson had five assists. Green and Clarke played another strong game inside. Anderson also played well filling in for the injured Dan Gould (ankle) who may return this week.

"It's nice to see our depth. We don't see much of a drop off when we go deep in our roster," said Barrett. "The kids have had an opportunity to play and they've shown what they can do."

North hosts Quincy Friday at 6:30. The two rivals have played twice this year and North has won both, including the championship game of the John Adams Tournament.

Quincy Boys Post Hoop Wins Over Pembroke, Hingham

By BILL GRIFFIN

When a team scores 136 points in two games and the major theme is still its defense, the team is playing good basketball.

Senior point guard Tino Goncalves took over the game from the opening tap and Quincy held Pembroke to five points in the first half to cap a successful week of Patriot League basketball with a 67-23 victory Friday night.

Earlier last week, Peter Cedrone spearheaded a terrific defensive job on Hingham star center Eddie Bowler to lift the Presidents past the Harbormen, 69-62.

"I was very happy with the defense in the two games," said coach Dave Parry. "You can see in the effort that the kids have bought in to what we want. We won our opener this year, but I wasn't happy because our defense wasn't good. You can't win giving up that many points. We talked about it and since then it's kept improving."

Parry substituted freely

against Pembroke. The starting unit only played the first quarter and the first two minutes of the third period. Quincy didn't press after the opening minute, but the Presidents did play strong halfcourt defense. They mixed a man-to-man with a variety of zones, but the one constant was effort. They played hard on the defensive end.

"I told them not to worry about what happens offensively, but I never want them to lay back on defense because you develop bad habits. Tonight, the effort was there all night," added Parry.

And the ball moved. In the first period, Goncalves figured in 16 of Quincy's 18 points with two buckets and six assists. For the first half as they built a 31-5 lead, the Presidents had 10 assists in 15 baskets. It's called being unselfish.

"This is the most unselfish team I've ever been around," said Parry. "Sometimes we make the extra pass when we should just take the shot, but I can live with that. The ball moves and everyone is happy. Tino has had three or four games with double-digit assists and he loves it."

All 12 players on the roster played. 11 of them scored. Junior Brendan Cunningham led the way with 14 while Zach Aglugub had 10 and Jaquan Harris added eight. Jalen Green (7), James Lam (6), Johnny Marsinelli (5), Colin Evans (4), Goncalves (4), Cedrone (4), Drew Myers (3) and J.T. Bain (2) also cracked the scoring column.

"It's good to see everyone play because all the kids work hard in practice to make us better," said Parry.

Marsinelli had a terrific game. He had three steals, put up his five points in the second period, and played tough man-to-man defense.

"Johnny is the best on-the-ball defender we have," said Parry. "Tino and Jaquan hate going up against him in practice, but he makes them better. He always finds a way to get his hands on the ball."

The Pembroke win lifted Quincy, who was in the midst of a three-game in five-day stretch, to 6-3 at the end of last week. Parry likes his team's position nearing the midpoint of the season.

"It's progressed the way we hoped, especially with our sophomores," he said. "They're not shell-shocked any more. They know they belong."

The defense was the key against Hingham as well.

Cedrone, a two-way standout in football, used his strength against the taller Bowler, moved the Hingham center off his spot close to the basket, and held him to four points and three rebounds. He received plenty of help from Goncalves and Harris who denied any easy entry passes into the post.

"It was a team defensive effort," said Parry. "Tino and Jaquan had good pressure on the ball and made it hard to get it inside."

Evans, just a sophomore, had 18 against Hingham while Harris added 14 and Goncalves had 13 assists.

"You can't hide Evans anymore. Everyone knows he can shoot," said Parry.

In a non-league game played Sunday, Bridgewater-Raynham defeated Quincy, 62-40. Harris and Cunningham led Quincy with nine points apiece. The loss drops the Presidents to 6-4 (3-2 in the Patriot League).

Quincy is at North Quincy Friday at 6:30.

Red Raiders Ice Whitman-Hanson, 6-3

By BILL GRIFFIN

For two periods, it seemed like a familiar story for North Quincy. The Red Raiders controlled the play, swarmed the offensive end, and poured good shots on the net. Unfortunately, all the effort did not show on the scoreboard.

Then came the explosion.

Senior winger Nick McGaughey scored two game-changing goals and North broke through four times in the third period to down Whitman-Hanson, 6-3 for a satisfying Patriot League victory at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena last week.

"That's the most complete game we've played in two years," said coach Matt Gibbons. "The kids made plays and passed the puck very well. There wasn't a lot of talk between periods, just keep doing what you're doing."

In a game played Saturday, North gained a 1-1 tie with Pembroke thanks to sensational 42-save effort from junior goalie Nolan Greene. North finished the week with a 6-2-1 record.

North ruled the Whitman-Hanson game from the start. The Red Raiders had a 16-5 edge in shots in the first period, but the Panthers connected on two quick scores for a 2-0 lead, before a Robbie Cameron (one goal, three assists) score from close range cut it to 2-1 after one.

"We had good chances. We were doing things like making chip passes up the boards for good shots, but their goalie was hot," said Gibbons.

Andrew Currie (two goals) connected on the first shift of the second period to knot the score at 2-2 and the Red Raiders kept pressing the goal. This was nothing new for the Red Raiders. North has outshot six of eight opponents, sometimes by large margins, without scoring goals in bunches. The score stayed tied at 2-2 entering the third and, once again, it seemed like North should be up by three or four.

"We created the chances. We just had a hard time burying the goals," said Gibbons.

Enter McGaughey. McGaughey, who is one of the hardest workers on a hard-working team, scored on a rebound for a 3-2 lead. After W-H tied it at 3-3, McGaughey responded with another goal from close range for a 4-3 lead and North was on its way.

"He may be the most mentally-tough player I've been around," said Gibbons. "Usually he wins the battles on the boards and sets up his linemates, so it was good to see him get a couple of goals."

Defenseman Rudy Tryon, who has a cannon from the point, connected on a deflected slap shot for 5-3 lead with an assist to Ryan Martin.

Currie closed out the scoring with a beautiful move for his seventh goal of the year. He split the defense, created a breakaway and finished cleanly for a 6-3 lead which held up until the end.

It was the latest in a string of strong third periods for the Red Raiders. They scored four in the third to put away Quincy. After King Philip drew within 2-1 in the final of the holiday tourney, North's checking limited KP to two shots over the final 11 minutes. North dominated the game protecting a 1-0 lead against Hanover in the third. Against W-H, they finished strongly again.

"I feel if we're within a goal going into the third we have a good chance," said Gibbons. "I think our conditioning is a reason. We work hard on that. We also rotate three lines. That depth helps in the third period."

It was North's second straight strong effort without top forward Shawn Grady who has an injured shoulder. The whole team has responded, but Cameron in particular has been excellent. The junior forward moved up to the first line and has two goals and three assists in two games.

"The whole team has stepped up without Shawn," said Gibbons. "They know how good Shawn is and they lifted their games and played consistently well. Cameron is a skilled player. He can score and he has a hard shot. He's starting to find the range at just the right time."

In the Pembroke game, North fell behind 1-0 before John Ross McEvilly drove home a rebound on the power play in the second period. Brendan Brady and Brendan Cox drew assists on the play for the Red Raiders.

"Actually, we were fortunate to get the tie," said Gibbons. "Pembroke was the strongest team we've played this year. They have big, physical forwards and they controlled the action."

Pembroke had a 43-16 edge in shots on goal. Greene was once again the story of the game. Not only did he make 42 saves, several of them were on golden scoring chances.

"They were 42 tough saves," said Gibbons. "I knew he'd be good, but this is ridiculous. He's locked in and he's been unbelievable for us."

North is at first-place Duxbury Saturday.

Quincy, North Quincy School Sports Round Up

By BILL GRIFFIN

Good things begin with good defense.

Quincy's girls basketball team proved this true by using its pressure defense in the second period to break open a close game and defeat Pembroke, 45-27 in a Patriot League contestgame Friday night.

"Our defense was solid," said coach Jeff Bretsch. "It was a close game for most of the first half, but our press forced mistakes and we were able to open it up to 13 at the half."

Freshman Nicole Jorgensen had 10, Courtney Ryan added nine and Kayla McArdle chipped in with 8.

Earlier in the week, Hingham defeated Quincy, 51-43 despite balanced scoring from the Presidents who placed three players in double figures.

McArdle led the way with 13 while Alyssa Lydon chipped in with 12. Ryan added 11.

Senior Maryssa Dwyer supplied a defensive spark off the bench in both games for Quincy. In the Pembroke game, she was a key player in the pressure defense which produced good scoring chances for Quincy's offense.

"Our press let us get points in transition and that helped. Maryssa has become a sparkplug with her energy off the bench," said Bretsch.

Against Hingham, Quincy fell behind early, but once again the press led by Dwyer and Ryan put the Presidents back in the game. Quincy cut it to five at the half and the Presidents were tied entering the fourth period.

"Early we had some good looks at shots against their zone, but we couldn't knock them down," said Bretsch. "When our press started to work, we were able to top score off of it."

The two teams battled evenly through the fourth until Hingham's star Haleigh Welch hit a three-pointer for a five-point lead for the Harbormen with 4:00 left.

Quincy (5-5) is at North Quincy Friday at 5:00. North and Quincy have already played twice this year. Each side has won a game.

Maya Umoren had a terrific night with 17 points and 27 rebounds, but Hanover edged the North Quincy girls basketball team, 57-

By BILL GRIFFIN

For half the game, it seemed like it would finally be Quincy's night.

The Presidents' checking was sure, the defense was sturdy, sophomore Ryan Higgins was in control in net, and Quincy was up, 1-0, on a beautiful goal by Patrick Freeman.

However, Scituate exploded for four goals in a span of eight minutes and dropped Quincy, 5-1 in a Patriot League contest played at the Quincy Youth Hockey Ice Arena Saturday night.

"For a period and the first five minutes of the second period, we played a good hockey game," said coach Tim Lewis. "Then we had a setback, and another setback. One thing we've talked about all year is being resilient, bouncing back from bad moments. It's still something we have to work on."

It was the second time last week that the Presidents were tantalizingly close to a quality Patriot League win. Earlier, Quincy played once-beaten Silver Lake to a standoff before falling, 5-4, on a goal in the final three minutes.

The first period was dead even. Higgins was sharp on a breakaway and a Scituate power play, but Quincy (1-8) had its opportunities as well. The first line of Freeman, Jake Hallisey and Mike Pugsley forechecked, swarmed around the Scituate end and created a series of chances. Freeman hit the crossbar with an acrobatic one-handed backhand while killing a penalty.

"Our first line has been a strong point all year for us," said Lewis.

The first ended 0-0 and Quincy grabbed the lead five minutes into the second on a terrific passing play. Pugsley sent Hallisey and Freeman away on a 2-on-1 with a perfect feed. Hallisey waited on the left wing for just the right moment to make the pass and slid it across to Freeman who hit the open side for a 1-0 lead. Freeman goal was his fifth in three games.

Higgins followed the score with a fine save on a screened slap shot by Tucker Clessau, but Scituate had found its groove. Clessau, Chris DeAngelo, Mike Hasset, and Josh Beck scored before the period ended to give the Sailors a 4-1 lead. Take away those eight minutes and it's an even game.

"Until we can string together three periods of quality hockey, we're going to have trouble. We haven't been able to do that yet," said Lewis.

Higgins, who had 30 saves, kept it close in the third. He stopped two clean breakaways, but Beck scored for the Sailors with 12:33 left for a 5-1 lead which held up until the end.

"Higgins has seen a lot of rubber and he's been good for us all year," said Lewis.

The versatile Ryan Harty, who has played forward, defense, the power play and killed penalties, had an excellent game for the Presidents. Captain Chris Andrews, the only senior to skate Saturday for the young Presidents, returned from injury and played well.

"Ryan Harty was very consistent. Every coach would like a player like him," said Lewis. "We missed Chris' leadership. He played a strong game to-night."

Hallisey and Freeman each scored twice in the Silver Lake game while Higgins turned aside 28 shots. After falling behind, 2-0, Quincy took control of the game with three straight goals. Hallisey scored on a power play for 3-2 advantage. The teams traded goals until Silver Lake notched the game-winner with just over 3:00 left.

"It's going to happen. We are going to break out. Sooner or later a bounce of the puck is going to go our way," said Lewis.

Hallisey scored on two accurate shots on the power play while Freeman drove to the net for his two scores. Pugsley had three assists for the game.

"Freeman just refuses to be denied. He worked hard for his goals," said Lewis.

Quincy hosts Hanover Saturday at 8:10.

North finished 14-4-3 last fall and qualified for the state tournament for the 13th time in 18 years.

The 200-yard freestyle relay eclipsed its own record but the Quincy/North Quincy boys swimming and diving team (4-3, 1-3) still slipped to Patriot League opponent Scituate, 84-77, Jan. 10 at the Lincoln-Hancock Pool. The QNQ girls (5-2, 2-2) suffered the 95-83 loss after leading the visitors by one point with five events remaining.

For the second time this season, the 200 free relay unit of sophomores Randall Kwong (NQ), and Mike Mullaney (NQ), senior Emmitt Harrow (NQ) and junior Elio Daci (Q) established the new Quincy school standard (1:43.71) undercutting their previous mark of 1:45.06 set December 20, 2012. QNQ swam from behind all meet long until they crept to within five points, 63-68, thanks to junior captain Elio Daci, who fronted a first, fourth and fifth QNQ effort in the 200-yard backstroke. Daci swam 1:06.66, followed by junior Jack Fisher (Q) at 1:28.75 and senior Ed Tang (NQ) at 1:56.60. QNQ's other most balanced attack came in the 50 free where Kwong finished first at 24.16 followed by Harrow and Mullaney, a sophomore captain, who placed third (26.32) and fourth (27.54), respectively.

The lead changed four times before the final 95-83 outcome in the girls meet. QNQ led by one point as late as the seventh event on the strength of a one-two-five performance in the 100-yard freestyle when sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) clocked a state and sectional-qualifying time of 57.63 for first followed by senior Kat O'Connor (NQ) and Sarah Tran (NQ), who tied for second (1:03.40) and finished fifth (1:05.59), respectively.

O'Driscoll also qualified for states and south sectionals in the 200 freestyle where she placed first (2:03.69). Sabrina Rauch's (Q) event-winning time of 1:06.12 in the 100 butterfly earned her spots among the state and south sectional fields as well.

The sophomore also withstood mounting Scituate pressure to win the 200-yard individual medley where she swam 2:27.20.

QCAP Receives $10,000 Fuel Assistance Grant

Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. has received a $10,000 grant from the National Grid Foundation to help Quincy families with heating assistance this winter.

The funding is part of an $80,000 grant that will be distributed through the United Way Family Fund which helps struggling families across Eastern Massachusetts make ends meet by assisting basic needs such as heating, food and housing.

Quincy Community

Action's Fuel Assistance Program helps struggling residents in Quincy and the surrounding communities supplement heating costs for the months of November through April. QCAP's Fuel Assistance Program also offers a range of services that help people save money on energy expenses, from paying a portion of their annual winter heating costs to help with home weatherization improvements that improve efficiency and lower household heating costs.

"This funding comes at a critical time for our clients," said Beth Ann Strollo, QCAP's executive director. "For families who qualify for federal fuel assistance, in many cases, it is simply not enough to get them through the winter."

"We are extremely grateful to National Grid for recognizing this urgent need. Their support will help families stay warm this season."

Families in need of heating assistance should call Mass211 helpline (dial 211) to be directed to their closest community resource.

On Saturday, Jan. 5, at approximately 11:30 a.m., Officer Ryan Donnelly was dispatched to a Quincy Point address to investigate a past breaking and entering incident. Upon arrival, the Officer met with the caller, who stated that her father's home had been broken into. The caller stated that her father passed away a week earlier and family members met this morning. When they entered the house, they could see that the home was ransacked and there were items missing from the home.

The caller directed Officer Donnelly to a window on the left side of the house that had the screen cut and the window forced open. Officer Donnelly was shown a black watch cap that did not belong in the house, so he tagged it for evidence. The Officer observed a blue glove with candle wax on it on the first floor. The Officer was directed to the basement where there was a hammer and tire iron, which appeared to have been used to force open a liquor cabinet.

During the inspection of the house, Officer Donnelly noticed that there was candle wax all over the house and candles that were in various stages of being burnt. The caller stated that there were numerous items missing from the home such as sterling silver cigarette cases, 14 old bottles of liquor, two large jugs of pennies worth approximately $100, four Hummel's from the 1930s, and one gold $1 coin. The caller told the Officer that there may be other items that were taken but due to the state of the house after the offense it would take time to determine if other items were stolen.

While in one of the rooms, Officer Donnelly noticed that there was damage to two cabinets in the basement and damage to two cabinets in the rear first floor bedroom where the glove was recovered. These cabinets were damaged by the suspect during the crime.

A Job Well Done

By QUINCY POLICE LT. DAN MINTON

As the Officer was securing the evidence in his cruiser, he was approached by a male who said that he may be able to provide the name of a suspect. The witness said that he was staying in his girlfriend's apartment down the street last night when a male friend of his girlfriend came to the apartment at about 1 a.m. with a large green, full duffel bag. The witness said he could hear that the items inside sounded like bottles, adding that he could see one of the bottles was an old liquor bottle with a long slender neck. The witness gave the name of the suspect and said that he was last seen walking north on Washington Street.

Quincy Police Communications gave out the name and description of the suspect walking with a green duffel bag to Officers in the area. Officer Donnelly added that the suspect could have candle wax on him due to the use of candles during the incident.

After a search of the area, Officer Jamie Karvelis located the suspect near the main library in Quincy Square. Officer Donnelly arrived on scene to advise the suspect of his Miranda Rights. The suspect confessed that he "dumped" the stolen items somewhere but he did not know where, then said he did not want to talk anymore. During the interview, the Officers noted that there was candle wax (same color) on the suspect's shoe, similar to that found in the house. There was additional wax on the suspect's sweatshirt too. The suspect had the green duffel bag, which contained a bag with a large amount of pennies in it. The suspect was then placed under arrest and transported to the Quincy Police Station by Officer Karvelis. A gold coin with the same wax was found in a plastic case in the suspect's jeans pocket during a property search.

The suspect, a 25-year-old homeless person, was charged with "Breaking and Entering in the Nighttime, Receiving Stolen Property, and Destruction of Property over $250."

A few days later, on Tuesday Jan. 8, at approximately 3:30 p.m., Officers Ryan Donnelly and Stephen Cleary were dispatched to Stop N' Shop on Southern Artery for a male shoplifting. The officers met with security, who were detaining the suspect — yes the same suspect arrested above! High bail was sought due to the fact that the suspect has defaulted in court three times. He has also been arraigned eight times with six open cases in the past six months. Nice Work!

SQUANTUM BREAKS: Recent breaks have occurred during the day in Squantum. The Quincy Police Department encourages citizens to report any suspicious walkers or motor vehicles in the area. Anyone with information on past incidents as well as leads on suspects should contact the Quincy Police Department at 617-479-1212.

RULES OF THE ROAD: INTERSECTIONS

Intersections are where two or more roadways meet. Traffic flow at intersections is often controlled by signals, signs, and/or pavement markings.

Some roads have multiple turning lanes. While on these roads, you should follow the applicable road signs or markings. Intersections are very important to the flow and safety of traffic. It is illegal to block an intersection with your vehicle. When driving through an intersection, you must obey all signs or traffic signals.

You may only enter an intersection or drive across a crosswalk if there is enough room for you to drive through safely. Blocking the paths of other vehicles or pedestrians in an intersection or a crosswalk is dangerous. This causes traffic jams and violates traffic laws.

Many motor vehicle crashes are caused by improper turns. Take the following steps to turn safely.

1. Plan for the turn. Do not turn suddenly.
2. Signal your turn at least 100 feet before making the turn. On a highway, signal at least 500 feet before a turn. It is best to signal before you apply the brakes, so you make your intentions known to the other drivers and pedestrians.
3. Reduce your speed as you prepare to turn.
4. Check your mirrors for traffic behind you and check the blind spot on your turning side.
5. Give the right-of-way when appropriate.
6. Complete the turn carefully, making sure you turn into the proper lane.

Fighting Medicare Fraud

By RAY HURD

Acting Regional Administrator
Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services,
Boston Regional Office

Recently, while sitting at home on a Sunday afternoon, I received an email from a concerned friend asking about a potential Medicare scam. Their mother had received a call from someone claiming to be from Medicare who was offering to provide some free medical equipment. All that was needed to complete the transaction was a Medicare number. I quickly replied that the phone call was indeed a scam because no one from Medicare would ever call and ask you to provide your Medicare number.

Health care fraud is a serious problem affecting communities across the country. It has many faces and criminals are becoming more sophisticated in their efforts to scam the system. Although it is rare, some of the most troubling cases involve medical professionals – the same individuals with whom we entrust our care. The vast majority of providers are honest; however, the very small percentage that are not can cost taxpayers billions of dollars and put beneficiaries' health and well-being at risk. Health care fraud drives up costs for everyone in the system and endangers the future of programs more than 100 million Americans depend on every day.

Maintaining the integrity of the Medicare program is a top priority for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS). With our law enforcement partners, we have put in place a set of comprehensive measures to fight fraud and abuse and our efforts are paying off. In 2011, together, we recovered a record $4.1 billion in taxpayer dollars.

Providers and suppliers who want to participate in Medicare must now pass a tougher set of screening procedures. High risk categories of providers and suppliers receive additional scrutiny before they're able to bill Medicare, Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP). CMS also has new authority to suspend payments during fraud investigations.

Those individuals who commit fraud face tougher rules

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You're eager to take on that new opportunity opening up as January gives way to February. Now all you need to do is resist quitting too early. Do your best to stay with it.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Doff a bit of that careful, conservative outlook and let your brave Bovine self take a chance on meeting that new challenge. You could be surprised at how well you do.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You might not want to return to the more serious tasks facing you. But you know it's what you must do. Cheer up. Something more pleasant soon will occupy your time.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) As you dutifully tidy up your end-of-the-month tasks, your fun self emerges to urge you to do something special: A trip (or a cruise, maybe?) could be just what you need.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Your achievements are admirable as you close out the month with a roar. Now you can treat yourself to some well-earned time off for fun with family or friends. (Or both!)

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Be sure you know the facts before you assume someone is holding back on your project. Try to open your mind before you give someone a piece of it.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) You might feel comfortable in your familiar surroundings, but it might be time to venture into something new. There's a challenge out there that's just right for you.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your love of things that are new gets a big boost as you encounter a situation that opens up new and exciting vistas. How far you go with it depends on you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) That recent workplace shift might not seem to be paying off as you expected. But be patient. There are changes coming that could make a big difference.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) While few can match the Goat's fiscal wizardry, you still need to be wary in your dealings. There might be a problem you should know about sooner rather than later.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Easy does it when it comes to love and all the other good things in life. Don't try to force them to develop on your schedule. Best to let it happen naturally.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A surprise decision by someone you trust causes some stormy moments. But a frank discussion explains everything, and helps save a cherished relationship.

BORN THIS WEEK: Sometimes you forget to take care of yourself, because you're so busy caring for others. But you wouldn't have it any other way.

Fighting Medicare Fraud

and sentences. New penalties for individuals engaging in Medicare fraud and abuse reflect the seriousness of the crimes with sentences between 20 and 50 percent longer for the biggest offenses. From 2008 to 2011, there has been a 75 percent increase in individuals charged with criminal health care fraud.

CMS has also implemented a new Fraud Prevention System that uses predictive modeling technology, similar to the technology that credit card companies use to flag suspicious activity, to review medical claims before they are paid.

Here are a few ways you can guard your benefits and join us in the fight against fraud:

- Guard your Medicare number. Do not share it with anyone other than your doctor or other Medicare-approved health care provider.
- Don't give credit card or other financial information to anyone calling saying he or she represents Medicare. Medicare will never call and ask for your bank accounts or credit card numbers, and we also never ask people for their Social Security or Medicare numbers in a blind call.
- Never use another person's Medicare card or allow anyone else to use yours.
- Beware of suspicious activities. Do not allow anyone except your doctor or other Medicare-approved provider to review your medical records or recommend services.
- Never let anyone give you "free" equipment or supplies in exchange for your Medicare number.
- Review your Medicare Summary Notice thoroughly to ensure you received each service listed and all the details are correct.
- Report any and all suspicions of fraud by calling 1-800-HHS-TIPS or 1-800-MEDICARE.

A funeral Mass for Michelle (Perry) Theberge, 49, of Quincy, an interior designer and active leader in Girl Scouts, will be celebrated today (Thursday) at 10 a.m. in St. John's Church, Quincy Center.

Aunt of Richard Brennan of Plymouth and Madison, Collette, Laurel, and Frederick Simpson, III of Concord, New Hampshire.

She will also be sadly missed by her mother-in-law, Fernande and husband George Doiron of Jay, ME as well as her sister-in-law Gisele and husband Maurice Guerette of Auburn, ME and sister-in-law Pauline and husband Todd Taylor of Lewiston, ME.

lege where she earned her degree in Interior Design. Her interior design career included employment at Business Interiors, Adner-Woodman Design, BayBanks, and Putnam Investments, as well as numerous kitchens and living rooms throughout the South Shore.

Quincy Medical Center Focus: Delivering The Best Care

"We're going to continue to build the service lines that we do at Quincy. We are going to continue our community outreach services; we're going to continue to build the health care infrastructure in our region," said Knell.

"We're going to expand our suites, and make newer, larger, and more accommodating O.R. suites. We're going to be re-doing our PACU areas, our surgical recovery areas; we're going to be expanding our medical floor services to reach into specialized service lines.

"Overall, what I want to do is make this hospital a community pillar for health care. If we can keep local healthcare local, and that's the plan, high quality care where you live, we can have a better impact on people's bottom line, on their out of pocket expenses, and we can do it at higher quality, that's our goal."

The hospital has advanced in the technology in many different areas allowing for better patient care. Some additions include a smart IV pump that eliminates any chance of error in calculating drug dosages, along with the new addition of Electronic Medical Re-

QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER President Daniel Knell has focused on many changes to the hospital including robotic surgeries and the future addition of a Maternity Ward. cords, which give the hospital the ability to look at the patient's physician's notes allowing them to treat that patient appropriately. The biggest success technology wise for the hospital so far has been the addition of the robotic surgery, which has helped QMC become the first hospital in the state to do robotically-assisted total knee replacement and total hip replacement.

"The technology piece is fantastic, I don't know of another word to use," said Knell. "We're building a lot of technology into our system here. I think we are actually ahead of the curve when we look at the other hospitals that have been established in the region. I can say I think we are ahead of the curve as we our rebuilding this hospital and taking it forward. We're doing it in a manner that we can lead the charge on technology."

Knell said that the hope is that residents in Quincy and the surrounding communities will choose QMC for their needs.

"There is a difference in the hospitals. I tell people all the time if you're going to have a liver transplant, don't come here we don't do it, go to Boston that's what they're great at. If you're going to have high-end Neurosurgery, go to Boston," said Knell. "But if you're going to have open heart surgery, Saint Elizabeth's does that. We have one of the best open heart surgeons in the region in Steward system in Saint Elizabeth's."

"We have doctors here at Quincy Medical Center that can do the joint replacements, the general surgeries, the cancers, the lung surgeries, the Gyn services, and the difference here it is very personalized service, all of our rooms are private, which you don't get in most hospitals."

"We have the ability, because of our size and the staff that we have, to know who everybody is, you're not a number. You're not the 47th patient in the surgery list, you're Mr. Jones or Mrs. Smith, and we know who you are and you know who we are."

"Someone from my team will come visit you every day you're here and make sure we're doing a good job so we can offer high quality personalized service that you can't get in other areas."

For Knell that personalized service is something he even stresses to his leadership staff by sending them out to visit patient's rooms, and even he goes out to visit and talk with patients.

"Not only do I visit patients, I require my entire leadership team to visit patients in this hospital every day. So that way we know what's happening," said Knell. "We visit patients on every floor, we're all assigned our own rooms. I go because first off, I've been a patient in the hospital, I've seen the good side and the bad side, and I've worked in every aspect of healthcare in the hospital."

"I want to make sure our patients are getting the best experience possible, and the only way I can do that is to go sit down with them and ask them. The end goal is to deliver the best care to the patient, and to ensure that we give great quality care."

Delegation Cool To Governor's Tax Hike Plan

By SCOTT JACKSON

Members of Quincy's delegation on Beacon Hill have some reservations over Gov. Deval Patrick's plan to raise the income tax rate and cut the sales tax.

The governor outlined the new tax plan during his State of the Commonwealth Address. It calls for increasing the state's income tax from 5.25 percent from 6.25 percent – the increase would be used to pay for his proposed education initiatives. The plan would double the personal exemptions in the tax code and eliminate 45 exemptions and deductions, including ones for college tuition, dependents under 12, MBTA passes, and the deduction for employee contributions to Social Security. Among the deductions and exemptions retained are ones for rent, student loan interest, and employee contributions for health insurance.

The plan would cut the sales tax from 6.25 percent to 4.5 percent, and all sales tax revenue would be reserved for public works projects,

450% Increase From 2011 776 Motorists Cited For Failing To Yield At Crosswalks

In an effort stop a spike in pedestrian accidents across the city, Quincy Police issued 776 citations to drivers for failing to yield at crosswalks in 2012, a 450 percent increase from 2011.

That was one of the many statistics presented to the City Council's Public Safety Committee as they examined how and why '98 pedestrians were struck in Quincy last year, compared to 71 in 2011 and 49 in 2010.

The presentation included a Traffic Department review of 85 of the 98 pedestrian accidents. The analysis found that the apparent overriding contribution causing 27 of those accidents, nearly one-third of those sampled, was a motorist turning left or right. More than a quarter of the accidents, 23 of them, were caused by pedestrians

42-Year Career In Education Ends In June

Frank Santoro Retiring As Quincy High Principal

By SCOTT JACKSON

When he was a student at North Quincy High School in the 1960s, Quincy High Principal Frank Santoro worked during the summer for the Recreation Department. That experience inspired him to a career in education – a career that will be coming to an end in June.

"When I was in high school at North Quincy High, class of '67, I got involved with working with the Quincy Recreation Department. I was able to be the summer park instructor at the Elm Street Playground. As a result of that experience I decided working with children is the way I wanted to go," said Santoro, who turns 64 in April.

Now, 42 years after beginning his career Santoro is ready for retirement. He planned to announce his intentions Wednesday.

David Morales' Message At 17th Annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast

'Believe In The Promise Of This Country'

By EMILY TAFT

At Monday's 17th annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast, keynote speaker David Morales advised the approximately 200 people in attendance to have faith in God, embrace and nurture their families, take risks, believe in the promise of the United States, and value and promote education.

"I want to share with you today pieces of advice that others have given me over my career. The first one is this, have faith in God, and in him all things are possible. Number two, embrace and nurture your family, whether your social circle is large or small your family will always be there when you need someone the most," Morales, the Senior Vice President of Public Policy and Strategic Solutions at Steward Health Care System said.

"Number three, take risks, like your parents, and like many of our forefathers did and Martin Luther King, don't forget that without risks there are no rewards in life. Number four, believe in the promise of this country, the United States of America. This is the greatest country on this planet but we must all contribute and work in order to preserve and protect our freedom, and the civil liberties that we all enjoy. And finally, value and promote education. Education is the greatest equalizer of our society and the most important tool for our advancement in our country."

Norfolk County District Attorney Michael Morrissey, who was also the emcee of the breakfast, and state Rep. Tackey Chan recommended Morales as this year's keynote speaker.

"David was instrumental in some of the new health care laws and in fact wrote many of them. But more importantly David is someone who we've got to work with and know over the years. At the age of 12 his family came from Puerto Rico. David was Spanish speaking, and I asked him how he learned to speak English, and he said

QHA Begins Interviews For New Executive Director

By KRIS KALABOKAS

The process of finding a new executive director continues for the Quincy Housing Authority.

After months of advertising and publicizing for the spot, a total of 18 applications have been received and given a preliminary review. Of those applications, three to five will be selected for further evaluation according to QHA commissioners.

Commissioner Thomas Lynn raised concerns over degree requirements and called to "accept the applications which were presented without a degree" as a formality to protect the board from liability, despite listing a bachelor's degree as a necessary requirement for the position in the original job listing.

While state regulations do not call for housing authority directors to possess a four-year degree, Lynn said he would make some calls "to protect the board from claims of corruption and to keep the process transparent."

"Conceivably, if there was that kind of an issue raised, you might need to go back and open up the process again, readvertise it...and go through the process," said consultant Doug Williamson, who clarified that extensive work experience could be substituted for a degree, while advanced education and scholarship could be used in lieu of satisfactory experience in the affordable housing field.

"You've got to make sure you ask the same questions of all the candidates, and give them the same amount of time to interview, make sure that all the interviews are done in the same setting, under the same scenarios, and also that we don't provide for leading follow-up questions that might suggest a bias in the process," said Williamson of the upcoming interviews scheduled for Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning of this week.

Board members are scheduled to gather late Wednesday evening to select candidates to be given full, face-to-face interviews. Interviewees will be compensated for any travel expenses incurred during this time.

After all motions involving the search for a new executive director were finalized, a call was made to close the family waiting list, which offers two to three bedroom units to qualified applicants.

"It's been open for a year and it will be closed for three or four years before we need to open it again," said current Executive Director Joseph MacRitchie. "We now have 1,900 names on the waiting list...if we continue to accept applications it would be years and years and years before people have a hope of being reached."

MacRitchie hopes to see the list closed by Feb. 28, pending DHCD (Department of Housing and Community Development) approval.

Last month's motion to award Interstate Ford Truck Sales $42,584 for the sale of two Transit Connect vehicles was rescinded due to a six-month delivery waiting period according to Mac-

Ritchie. "[The dealership] wasn't able to meet our needs," he said.

The vehicles will instead be purchased from Ashley Ford for a total cost of $43,316, despite a $732 price increase. The board anticipates immediate delivery.

Last Wednesday's board meeting came to a close with a motion to certify and sign the Lead Based Paint Certification, which ensures all QHA owned and managed properties have been properly deleaded.

"All of the units were deleaded a number of years ago; we have deleaded certifications," said MacRitchie, who noted that all new tenants are notified as part of the lease-signing process.

Governor Meets With Officials During City Visit

Patrick Calls Downtown Project 'Exciting Model'

By EMILY TAFT

Governor Deval Patrick visited Quincy Wednesday for a presentation on the $1.6 billion Quincy Center Redevelopment Project.

"It's an exciting model, it's a great partnership between the city and the Legislature and the administration and private industry," said Patrick. "It's about growth and opportunity, which is what we have to be about in every community across the Commonwealth. There are different models to get there, but we've all got to agree on the goals and here in Quincy we have. We will continue to partner with cities and towns to make the kinds of investments that create jobs and spur economic development, here in Quincy and across the Commonwealth."

Mayor Thomas Koch, House Majority Leader Ronald Mariano, Sen. John Keenan and state Representatives Bruce Ayers and Tackey Chan joined Patrick, along with other city and state officials, on the ninth floor of the Granite Trust Company Building.

"First of all, on behalf of the city I want to welcome the Governor back. I want to say right from the get go you have been nothing short of phenomenal on this," said Koch. "This is truly an example of government com-

Manet Community Health Awarded $125,000 Grant

Manet Community Health Center with four practices in Quincy and one in Hull has received a $125,000 grant from the Partnership for Community Health.

The grant will be used to fund initiatives that will help prepare the CHC for patient centered medical home, state payment reform and federal health reform requirements.

"Community health centers are a cornerstone of an accessible, high-quality, and cost-effective health care delivery system, particularly for the underserved," said Gary L. Gottlieb, MD, President and CEO, Partners HealthCare. "The Partnership for Community Health is a crucial initiative that will support the state's community health centers for years come in serving the needs of patients across the Commonwealth."

"This first round of grants will help CHCs prepare for the changes that health reform has brought, while allowing them to continue delivering their innovative care to the more than 800,000 patients they serve statewide," said the League's President and CEO James W. Hunt, Jr.

After the first round of grants, Manet Community Health Center will be eligible to apply for grants through a competitive application process.

The New Track: Quincy's Next Great Venue

It's hard to imagine right now – in the dead of winter – but in a few short months the new running track at Faxon Field will become a beehive of activity.

And for track and field enthusiasts throughout the city – notably Quincy Track Club Director Geoff Hennessy – the new track finally means a new permanent home. A facility right on par with some of the city's other park and playground jewels such as Adams Field, Mitchell/McCoy softball diamond, Lincoln-Hancock School Pool and Veterans Memorial Stadium.

"The track means we are a legitimate program," says the 56-year-old Hennessy who got his first coaching job in track at Sterling Middle School when he was 19. "We're a major sport like any other sport. Every sport (in this city) has a great venue. We're not the odd-man out."

"We're hosting south sectionals at Lincoln-Hancock School Pool, we're having state tournaments at the stadium, state tournaments at Adams Field. . . The Quincy Youth Arena has stuff going on."

"Now, we do too."

Hennessy has championed track as a sport for local youth perhaps more than any other individual in the city. He proudly notes that 28 members of the Quincy Track Club have gone on to become All Americans in college.

Before Joe Dudek was touted for college football's Heisman Trophy by Sports Illustrated and before Karen Cashman won an Olympic bronze medal in short-track speedskating in 1994, they cut their athletic teeth as Quincy Track Clubbers.

"I just try to convince kids that kids get scholarships in track. Kids go places in track. Kids travel the world with track. We can do something for you. If you're good, we're going to take you places," Hennessy says.

The new track is a far cry from Cavanaugh Field, a practice field located near Atlantic Middle School that has seen better days and hopefully a face-lift sometime soon. Cavanaugh Field was pressed into service for several long years as a track facility after the track at Veterans' Memorial Stadium was eliminated due to renovations at the football stadium.

"We were embarrassed to run at Cavanaugh," Hennessy recalls. "There are weeds everywhere. There's grass growing on the track. But we still produced and now we're going to produce even more."

"We actually had a Track Club from another town that didn't want to come to Quincy and run because of the conditions at Cavanaugh. They told us we would have to go to their town."

That was then and the past doesn't matter now. What is important is that the future is bright for the city's track community.

In fact, Hennessy said he would not be surprised to see the number of local kids doing track double from 1,000 to 2,000 this year.

"There are about 1,000 kids in Quincy who run track between the middle school and high schools. I think it could increase to 1,500 or 2,000. It's hard to say. The middle school programs are as close to maxing out as you can get. I don't know how many more kids you could have. My focus is that we organize the facility in such a way that it makes sense and that we get done in less than two hours."

Besides the track athletes, the facility will generate interest from Special Olympics, Senior Olympics, recreational joggers and the South Shore YMCA.

The city could also become an epicenter of track and field events and activities from throughout the state and region.

"I can tell you because we went through all the state track coaches and state track officials associations – they know about it. They mentioned they drove by it one day and said 'we can't believe how great it looks,'" Hennessy says.

Any one who has followed the track issue in Quincy knows locating a new facility was a political football with as many twists and turns as a pole vaulter. The siting issue in particular became a lightning rod and spilled into several election cycles.

Hennessy, who was consulted extensively on the track including its design, features and location, believes the venue belongs where it is today at Faxon Field near the intersection of Coddington Street and Southern Artery.

"I like the location because people can go by it and they can say 'what's going on there? Oh, that's the track club or a high school track meet. It creates interest. It's a safe location. It gets curiosity up and that promotes what we do."

"People can go by Adams Field and they'll see a baseball game. You can go by Veterans Memorial Stadium and see a football or soccer game. Now people can go by the track and see a track meet."

"If we were up at Pageant Field, it's just a bunch of woods. No one can see what's going on up there. Do people feel safe running up at Pageant at night?

Definitely not.

"You're going to feel safe running on a track across from a police station, aren't you? Not to mention that during daylight savings time, there won't be a darkness issue. You can run until 10 p.m. at night. It's fantastic. I like it for the intimacy. And anyone who's making an issue out of car fumes is just clutching for straws. I never thought of that as an issue."

Hennessy says he is grateful that city officials – notably Mayor Thomas Koch and Park Director Kristen Powers and others – reached out for his input on the track.

"They spoke to me, they got my input because in some towns that doesn't happen and sometimes things get screwed up."

He remembers traveling to Cranston, R.I. to survey their new track. It became a model for Quincy's new facility.

"I was completely sold. I said to myself, 'this is going to be fantastic.'"

Hennessy admits he had his doubts a new track would be built in Quincy.

"I did have my doubts because there are people who don't care about the kids and have personal agendas. To me, is that your legacy? 'I stopped a track.' Are you kidding me? But I have to say Tom Koch, Kristen Powers and Jim Timmins were optimistic so I tried to stay optimistic. We just had so many setbacks over the years for so many reasons."

"People ask me and I tell them it's just like the Quincy High School project. It's going to go from one place to another place to another place and finally it will get done and everybody will get exhausted and then everyone will forget why we fought in the first place."

It's now time to think of the new track as a community asset and one that serves one constituency: the kids.

"The new track is like a squeaky new toy," Hennessy says. "You just feel better about it. Just think about the new Quincy High School. It picked up the whole spirit of the school. You can't help but be proud of the new track."

"You can't help but be proud of the new track at Faxon Field. It's a community asset. It's a plus. We think fitness is important. We think facilities are important."

"It means that the community cares about its kids."

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1924 real photo postcard view of East Squantum Street in Atlantic looking west. Botolph Street is just out of view on the right and Sharon Road is on the left. In the 1920's, Quincy was the fastest growing city in Massachusetts and the Atlantic section was leading the way. More building permits were issued for new houses here and in Wollaston than in all the other sections of the city combined. Notice that the roadway was not yet paved and automobiles were pretty scarce in this workingman's neighborhood. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Quincy's Changing For The Better

Growing up in Boston with extended family across the Neponset Bridge in Quincy, I can still envision the City of Quincy back in the 50s and 60s. It was the smaller city my family took me to from the big city I lived in. Back then, Quincy looked like South Boston and Dorchester. Much has changed over the years. Quincy is now a major urban area south of Boston. The population has changed demographically and increased in size to a near 100 thousand population. Its factories which employed many long gone and today many travel across the bridge on a daily basis to Boston for work but are happy at the end of the day going back south and home to Quincy.

Quincy's large public school system is one of the best in the entire south region. Its many neighborhoods are thriving and its diversity growing constantly. It has become its own hub attracting folks to come and enjoy what Quincy has to offer all.

Much of this positive growth came with the vision of many of its political leaders over the past 60 years. Many of its mayors, especially starting with visionary James McIntyre who took Quincy out of the 19th century and into the future starting during the 50s. Under his leadership, the MBTA extended the Red Line into the city. Under him, the city created the State Street South Complex. Under him, the city started energizing again. The past was gone and the future was ours for the taking. Over the years, many good mayors have continued that positive vision of growth. The city's newest, Mayor Tom Koch reminds me of McIntyre. He has a vision of Quincy being a 21st century example of urban life and growth.

Back when I moved into Quincy, I would laugh at that sign on Hancock Street by Coleman's which read: "Welcome to Quincy: Shopperstown USA" but Quincy at that time was anything but.

In the last quarter-century, I saw first-hand the hand of Jim McIntyre still invisibly at work in the hands of other mayors who understood what he meant to Quincy. Mayor Tom Koch has his vision and plows forward. His critics call him names. He moves forward. His plans for the new Downtown are step by step closer to reality. Downtown Quincy was once dead not that long ago. It is no longer. If Koch has his way, it will never be a dead zone again. New housing. New retail. New businesses. New restaurants. New everything. It is all both back to the future and never back to the future again. Hancock Street if things work as they should will never be an urban dead end again. People will come if something is offered. The City of Quincy can continue to grow not so much bigger as better. It will be a community proud to call home and proud to be a part of in the near future as it was in the past.

I am sure some 60 years ago long before they named the City Hall Mall after him, McIntyre had many critics too. I applaud Mayor Tommy Koch for his persevering on with his vision making Quincy a better place than when he found it at his birth.

Happy New Year Quincy and many more of them.

Don't Ban All Guns

Do you really want to live in a country where all guns are banned?

I don't think so.

The Founding Fathers knew too well that without armed citizens your country is weak and open to takeover by your own government. We are slowly on that road. Give up your right to bear arms and you are a sitting duck.

I do not own a gun but I thank God my friends and neighbors are armed. If things don't get better soon you bet your sweet life I will do what it takes to protect myself and my family.

And don't forget 9/11, the planes were taken over by men with box cutters - almost 3,000 dead. And the government building in Oklahoma City was blown up with fertilizer. Should we ban box cutters and fertilizer?

Let's not forget salt and sugar.

Five-Foot Snow Drifts Cripple City

A northeast blizzard hit the region with winds of more than 40 miles per hour, creating five-foot snow drifts.

Both Squantum and Houghs Neck were cut off as high tides swept over the causeway and Sea St. at the Willows. Civil Defense set up an evacuation center at the Atherton Hough School in case high tides required the relocation of families living in low-lying areas.

Schools, courts and stores were all closed. Post Office Supt. Frank Anselmo called off all mail deliveries, except for Quincy Center.

MERGER CREATES NEW ELECTRIC CO.

Seven regional electric companies, including the Quincy Electric Company, formally merged this week, creating the Massachusetts Electric Company.

Richard Parsons, vice president of the Quincy office, said that the final approval was given by the Department of Public Utilities and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

JUDGE TOURS SOUTHERN ARTERY SITE

Judge Edmund Dewing toured the Southern Artery site of a proposed $1 million bowling alley that was recently approved by the Board of Appeals.

Rep. Joseph Brett brought suit against the Bard of Appeals, claiming they exceeded their authority. He said that the city council zoned the land to protect the residential area and the use as a bowling alley would be detrimental.

On site for the tour were the judge, Brett, City Solicitor Douglas Randall and attorneys for the owners of the land, the Faxon Trust.

QUINCY-ISMS

The eelers came equipped with axes to cut through the ice and spears to snare the eels who were in the creek semi-hibernation. A good eeler could fill his burlap bag with 50 pounds of eels... Blood donors included, from the Quincy Fire Department; Matthew Mullen, Carl Valenti, Anthony Malvesti, and Charles Arienti; from the Koch Club; Marjorie Page, Chanel Levasseur and Frank Caporale... Rev. Thomas Daily spoke to the North Quincy K or C on his work in Peru. He was the former curate at St. Ann's who worked with the Society of St. James the Apostle in Peru... Herb Fontaine of WJDA was the disc jockey for the record hop, sponsored by the NQHS junior class... By a vote of 153-2, Bethany Church members adopted the constitution of the United Church of Christ. Rev. John Banks reported that of the 584 Congregational churches in the state, Bethany ranked number five in terms of giving... The S.S. Mt. Vernon Victory left the shipyard for two days of sea trials, traveling to Bethlehem Steel's Hoboken, N.J. yard. It was the eighth 46,000-deadweight ton tanker built at Fore River... James Kelley moderated the Montclair Men's Club's forum of South Shore transportation that featured representatives Joseph Brett and James McIntyre... The newly formed Quincy point Youth Commission met at the Ruggles St. home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Beston... Mayor Della Chiesa requested D.P.W. Commissioner Charles Herbert to draw up plans to replace the pedestrian bridge over the New Haven Railroad tracks at Warren Ave... Holly Grazioso and Alice Helfrich were presented the Marion Award in ceremonies at St. John's for members of Girl Scout troops 36 and 37... Purchasing agent Thomas Morrissey was asked to price a new fire engine for Squantum... Roger Forbush was elected treasurer at the annual meeting of the Adams Shore Community Church E.U.B... Weather prevented Rev. Thomas Tierney from attending President Kennedy's inaugural parade. He helped organize President Eisenhower's inaugural parade. He did attend the annual banquet of the Quincy Firefighters' Association at the Morrisette Post. Tierney was the department's Catholic chaplain with Rev. Chester Porteus of Christ Church the Protestant chaplain. ## 7-Year-Old Mia Pecevich Featured In Music Video Honoring Newtown Victims

By EMILY TAFT

For seven-year-old Quincy resident Mia Pecevich being a part of a music video to remember the victims of the Newtown tragedy was something she jumped at the chance to do.

"My mom was telling me about it and I really liked the idea of it," said Pecevich. "It is just really sad what happened and I thought it would be really fun to be a part of this."

As a way to honor the lives lost during the Sandy Hook Elementary School tragedy local filmmakers joined forces with a local songwriter and Berklee College of Music alumni Justin Cohen to make a music video titled "26 Angels." The hope is that the video will raise money to help construct and design a memorial park on the land where the elementary school now stands.

Pecevich's mom Carolyn heard about the video from the casting director and after talking with her daughter she decided to let them know she was interested in participating.

The video shoot was held on Dec. 26th at the Andover High School J. Everett Collins Center for Performing Arts. Pecevich along with the other 19 children, all under 12-years old, from around New England, spent a six hour day, singing and shooting different scenes of the video.

Each child participating in the video was given an angel, one of the 20 children that lost their lives during the Dec. 14th shooting. Pecevich was given Josephine Gay a seven-year-old who loved peanut butter and tasting cupcakes.

"We went on the computer and researched her," said Pecevich. "She likes to taste cupcakes, and she likes spoons full of peanut butter, she likes the Baltimore Ravens, and she likes swimming and playing on her iPad."

Pecevich made a poster representing Gay and everything she enjoyed during her life, and sang the chorus in the video with the other 19 kids.

"First we had to make a poster and then we went on stage to sing the song," said Pecevich. "We sang the chorus which was, 'Cause your still here, and we all gained an angel.'"

Pecevich and her mom both hope to visit the memorial park when it is finished and said that it is an honor knowing they were able to help the families heal by helping to build the park.

"We are proud and honored to have been a part of such a wonderful tribute," said Carolyn. "It's a great cause, and we were happy to help create the park."

For Pecevich, who is a second grader at Quincy Catholic Academy, and her mom, the tragedy hit close to home.

"I think that story totally touched so many people because it was so sad, and I think it was a way of giving back. I am really proud she did it. It is a great cause," said Carolyn. "They were just amazing, it was really touching for everyone that was there."

The video has over 17,000 views and has raised over $900 since its release earlier this month. For more information or to donate visit <https://presskit.to/26angels/home>.

Alex Galligan-Kuntupis Winner Of Rogers Jewelry LEGO Watch

Jeff Bertman of Rogers Jewelry in Quincy Center recently donated a unique "LEGO" watch for participants in the Quincy Recreation Department vacation week LEGO program.

After seeing an announcement of the vacation week LEGO program in The Quincy Sun, Bertman contacted the Recreation Department and thought the youngsters in the program would have a great appreciation of the watch as fans of the popular children's activity.

During the week as each session of different children participated in the program, the watch was on display and each child had their name placed in a raffle box.

At the end of the week, a parent pulled the lucky name and Alex Galligan-Kuntupis, a first grade student at the Atherton Hough School, was the lucky winner.

Recreation Director Barry Welch thanked Rogers Jewelry and Bertman "for the kind gesture that was a wonderful and special addition to our program. We are indebted to you for your sense of community."

Tracy's Sweet Potato, Bean Soup

On New Year's Eve, my daughter Suzie and son-in-law Anthony had an open house and of course I ended up with a couple of recipes.

One of her friends, Tracy, gave me a delicious recipe for sweet potato soup.

And those who enjoy sweet potatoes will love this soup.

SWEET POTATO SOUP

- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 3 medium sized sweet potatoes (cubed)
- 5 shallots (chopped finely)
- 1 teaspoon sage

- 1 quart chicken, vegetable or beef stock
- 3 scallions (cut up in pieces)
- salt and pepper

- 1 can coconut milk
- 1 can cannellini beans

In the hot oil, sauté the shallots, scallions, sage and the sweet potatoes and let simmer until vegetables become tender (about 10 minutes).

Add the chicken broth, the beans and the coconut milk. Stir and blend well and cook covered on low until done. (about 35-40 minutes).

Gutro Seeks Honeywell Energy Use Data

By SCOTT JACKSON

Councillor Doug Gutro will continue to press the administration to release data on energy use in buildings where Honeywell equipment was installed.

In 2007 Quincy and the New Jersey-based energy conglomerate reached an agreement to install water meters and $32 million worth of energy efficient equipment in the city. In 2008, Mayor Tom Koch launched an investigation into the deal, which was signed by his predecessor William Phelan.

The state took up the investigation, and focused on whether or not the installation of water meters qualifies as a energy savings measure in accordance to a state law that allows communities to bypass open bidding requirements for energy savings projects. Last week it was announced that all parties agreed to a $26 million settlement – $4 million in cash and the voidance of a maintenance contract worth up to $22 million. Gutro applauded Koch for pursuing the case.

"I think you have to congratulate the mayor for pursuing some of the contractual ambiguities that weren't fully disclosed when the council cast its vote," Gutro said. "Clearly the water metering aspect was the central element of the settlement and removing the city from the maintenance agreement was another key issue that the mayor pursued."

Gutro wants the administration to release data on energy usage at the buildings where equipment was installed. He said no reasons for keeping that data private were included in the settlement.

"I think the settlement language also makes it clear that there was no compelling reason to withhold the energy performance data," Gutro said.

At a press conference last week announcing the settlement, City Solicitor Jim Timmins explained that the data couldn't be released because Honeywell never installed the necessary software. But Gutro said the city could've used other systems, such as Portfolio Manager, a free online program available through the federal Energy Star program.

"There are two systems, and there may well be more, that you can use to measure energy management – not just in public buildings but in any building," Gutro said. "One is Portfolio Manager."

The system requires a user to input certain information about the building, including zip code, total floor space, percentage of space heated or cooled, the presence of cooking facilities, and number of computers. A similar system is available through the state.

"You plug it in this month, you install the equipment, you get your energy bill, you plug in that month – apples to apples measurement as to whether the equipment installed – the boiler, the lighting – impacted energy use," Gutro said.

But Gutro believes the city is already using the Portfolio Manager system. Five schools – Lincoln-Hancock and Snug Harbor elementary schools, Sterling Middle School, and both high schools were given Energy Star status in 2008, the year after Honeywell equipment was installed. The rating means that each building is more energy efficient than at least 75 percent of similar buildings, and to achieve it the data must input into the Portfolio Manager system.

"Data for these schools had to be input into that system before Honeywell installation and post Honeywell installation," Gutro said.

He said that proves the city has access to the information and the taxpayers who are on the hook for the cost of the equipment would be happy to know that energy was saved in five buildings as a result.

"Not only [is it] doable but [it] was done and the measurements exist for five buildings and it's public information," Gutro said. "That is a good news story for taxpayers. In those five buildings we've seen substantial, top tier, energy improvements in five school in the City of Quincy as a result of the Honeywell installation."

Additionally, he would like to see the information on the remaining buildings – 35 of them – where Honeywell equipment was installed, to judge how well the equipment has performed.

Gutro introduced a resolve last January asking the administration to provide energy usage data for the buildings where new equipment was installed. The resolve remains in the finance and oversight committees, and Gutro may bring it up as a committee report at an upcoming meeting. Or he could hold a meeting of the downtown and economic growth committee or the education committee, both of which he chairs.

"I don't know what it's going to yield. Maybe it will say that Honeywell's equipment on the whole didn't live up to expectations – it might well say that," Gutro said. "It might say that the equipment installed achieved the proposed energy savings. That does not negate the good work the mayor did to achieve the settlement around those narrow issues."

"But we still have a responsibility to be accountable, to collect the data, and wherever the chips fall on this assess the effectiveness of at least the energy efficiency equipment in public buildings."

Meet With Business Owners Before Merchants Row Project Gets Underway

Street-Works, Suffolk Constructon Vow 'Good Neighbors'

Representatives from Street-Works and Suffolk Construction vowed to be good neighbors as they briefed business owners and residents on the Merchants Row project at a special meeting of the City Council's downtown committee.

"We want to be a good neighbor, a part of the community," Suffolk Construction Vice President Ed Janus told the crowd. "We want to see everything safe and clean just like everyone in the room wants to."

Janus, who is overseeing the $120 million construction project, used the meeting to explain how construction would proceed. He said delivery trucks carrying supplies to the site would travel up Burgin Parkway from the highway to Hannon Parkway/Revere Road, before turning onto the Ryan Parkway/Chestnut Street to get dropped off on site. The trucks will be scheduled to run at off-peak hours, and no staging will take place on the streets.

"A majority of construction traffic is going to be coming in by 6:30 in the morning and then leaving shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon," Janus said. "There will be no staging of large trucks on the streets, it will be written into all the exhibits that any of the companies that are going to be bringing in planks or steel will have to get a marshaling yard with city approval."

constructed in the wedge-shaped parcel bounded by Hancock and Chestnut Streets and Cottage Avenue, though some buildings in the block won't be torn down and will remain open. The site will be closed in mid-February and construction will start in March. Two new buildings will be constructed as a result; the five-story Granite Trust Lofts will be completed in the spring of 2014 and the 15-story Kilroy will be finished by September 2014.

Jimmy Liang, who owns three restaurants downtown including one next to the construction site, asked Janus how Suffolk and the developer would work to mitigate the impact of dirt kicked up from the site. The project site will be enveloped in hay bales and screened fences to keep debris in, and Janus said his company would help neighbors out if needed.

"If we're causing your windows to get ruddier than usual we'll certainly help with that," Janus said. "We plan on running a very clean site, a very neat sit, we work a lot in urban downtown areas and understand how important it is."

"Any kind of project, unless you're in the middle of a green field, there are going to be some impacts and there are going to be some unintended consequences despite the best planning of professionals," added Steve Chrusciel, Street-Works' director of construction services. "If we're causing a problem we're going to fix it."

The construction site is currently home to a 76-car parking lot. When the lot closes, about half the cars will be moved to the Hancock Lot and the other half to the Quincy Mutual Lot. Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci suggested that the city open the entrance to the Hancock Lot on Revere Road. Chrusciel said he would support doing that, if the city felt it was a good idea.

Councillor Doug Gutro, the committee chairman, said after the meeting that he appreciated how accessible Street-Works and Suffolk construction were in agreeing to it. He also said the concerns raised at the meeting were same ones business owners have had for him in the past.

"The questions that we heard that night are consistent with the ones I hear on the phone. Whether it's the dust, whether it's the parking, the length of disruption, the noise, the traffic flow," Gutro said. "They just want to survive long enough to thrive. If we can demonstrate during this construction process that none of the existing businesses have been adversely impacted beyond what is reasonable then that bodes well for the rest of the construction project."

776 Motorists Cited For Failing To Yield At Crosswalks

darting into the street. Eleven accidents were caused by a motorist backing out of a driveway or parking spot and 10 were caused by a motorist not paying attention to a pedestrian in a crosswalk.

The use of headphones or cellphones led to three such accidents, three more were alcohol related, and another three were classified as intentional. Two accidents occurred when one motorist stopped for a pedestrian but the driver in the next lane did not stop, striking the pedestrian. Another accident happened when a driver got out of the car and ran herself over, and two more accidents were classified as other causes.

"We tried to come up with some categories that may make some sense, not only from an opinion leader standpoint but also from a legislative standpoint," Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymondi explained when he presented the analysis. "We get requests on occasion to put signs up and take signs down, no right turn on red, things like that, and I think when you deliberate these matters perhaps you need to take these statistics in mind."

The analysis also broke down 83 accidents by when they happened. The largest number, 31, took place during business hours - 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. During the evening commute, 4 to 7 p.m., 23 pedestrians were struck. Between 7 p.m. and midnight 13 accidents took place, 10 happened between midnight and 6 a.m., and six were between 6 and 9 a.m. Thursday and Friday were the busiest days for accidents, with 17 a piece, and Tuesday was the least busy day, with just seven accidents.

The average pedestrian hit was 46 years old, and the average driver was 48. About half the accidents sampled took place in a crosswalk, 40 compared to 37. Only one-third of accidents happened at a traffic signal.

Raymondi also explained some of the efforts taken during the 2012 construction season to improve signage and striping on Quincy streets. The city repainted 425 crosswalks totaling about 21 miles; more than 94 miles of white and yellow lines were also painted. The city replaced 337 signs, installed 137 new ones, repaired 15, relocated four signs, and removed 18.

Police Chief Paul Keenan also appeared before the committee to explain how his department was responding to the increased pedestrian accidents. The department's officers were told to step up traffic enforcement, resulting in an increase in citations for failing to yield at a crosswalk from 170 in 2011 to 776 in 2012. The overall number of citations increased from 10,098 in 2010 and 9,414 in 2011 to 12,953 last year.

"The officers were given mandates basically to be out there and do more traffic enforcement," Keenan said. "Where we recognized the problem early on, we've stressed with our officers you need to be vigilant, you need to go out there, you need to do selective enforcement. If you see it, write it."

Councillor Doug Gutro said that it was contradictory for both the number of citations and the number of pedestrian accidents to increase and that it meant the problem would be more difficult to solve.

"You would expect a diminishing of pedestrian accidents based on such an extraordinary number of citations issued. And yet we've seen the exact opposite, which is incredible, which I think leads to the fact that we do need to look at some of the other issues. We do need to look at the engineering. We do need to look at the technology. We do need to look at education," Gutro said.

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci, the committee chairman, called the numbers Keenan presented 'jaw-dropping.'

"Jaw-dropping is the only word I can think of," Palmucci said. "Both the number of accidents involving pedestrians essentially doubling and then the number of citations that were written. What Councillor Gutro is saying is exactly right. I shudder to think what would happen if we weren't doing the increased enforcement."

Given the increase in citations issued to drivers, Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest asked the chief what happens to pedestrians when they're found to be at fault, like in cases of jaywalking. Keenan said the police lack the ability to crackdown on jaywalking.

"People ask me all the time about a jaywalking ordinance and enforcing jaywalking and it's not as simple as it seems. Number one I think it's a dollar fine. Number two they don't have to identify themselves - there's nothing that says a pedestrian has to identify themselves. And number three it would be very cumbersome for the Quincy Police to be out there enforcing that," Keenan said. "It's basically like a law that has no teeth."

Keenan also talked about the city's public safety awareness programs. The mayor's office produced a pedestrian safety show on Quincy Access Television, and Lt. Dan Minton and Sgt. Richard Tapper produced another show on QATV. Minton also produced an infomercial for QATV and hosted a community meeting at the Atlantic Community Center.

School Committee Vice Chairwoman Barbara Isola, Committeewoman Kathy Hubley - chair of the subcommittee on health, transportation, and safety - and Michael Draicchio, the school department's director of safety, security, and transportation all attended the meeting. Isola said schools constantly drive home safety messages in the classroom.

"Our teachers are constantly addressing it, particularly at the elementary level, but also at middle school and high school," Isola said. "We have walking routes, we have bus routes that everyone knows about. We review how our students are to walk, they're instructed what route to take."

Gutro credited the schools for doing a good of keeping their children safe. He noted that few, if any, pedestrians under 25 were struck by vehicles last year.

"In any city, pick up and drop off at any school is a place that's just a haven for potential pedestrian accidents every single day," Gutro said. "The fact that none of them impacted anyone under 25 tells me that not only institutionally from the top down - the superintendent, the School Committee, and the PTOs, and principals - but the crossing guards, the parents, and the teachers, and the students themselves in the City of Quincy I think is extraordinary."

Palmucci suggested that schools should be heavily involved in any education campaign, relating to pedestrian safety or otherwise. He cited his own experience getting his father to quit smoking after hearing about tobacco's effects on health in school.

"I think that the little folks in our community sometimes are the best teachers and not just the best learners," Palmucci said. "I remember when I was in elementary school and learning about the ill effects of smoking and tobacco and my parents smoked at that time. Once I had that knowledge I was a thorn in their side and my father finally quit smoking because he was sick of listening to me talk about it.

"Our learners can also be teachers and that's something we shouldn't forget when we're talking about any type of public education program related to pedestrian safety. Those guys can be great thorns in their parents' side and certainly help out the city."

Palmucci has signaled a desire to host at least two more meetings dedicated to pedestrian safety. The committee requested that more detailed analysis, including the weather reports for days when pedestrians were struck and a list of all streets where the accidents occurred.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

MAINTAINING FOCUS

More than a century ago, many subscribed to the "focal infection theory," the notion that an infection in one small area of the body could lead to subsequent infection and ill health elsewhere in the body. This theory was particularly popular in the field of oral medicine, as the connection between dental infection and disease led to the extraction of an extremely high number of teeth. As crude as the methodology may have been back then, the theory that oral infection can spread via the blood to other parts of the body has been upheld by modern scientific investigation. Studies showing links between gum disease and heart disease, preterm births, and certain inflammatory conditions are good reasons to seek treatment.

Developing good dental health habits is the best way to prevent tooth decay and gum disease. The best news is we can usually fix a problem before it starts when you schedule your checkup with your dentist at least once a year. We are currently accepting new patients and welcome you to call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. Call us today! We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. HORIZONS FOR HOMELESS CHILDREN

Crane Library Director Harry Williams Retiring

By EMILY TAFT

After two years as the director of the Thomas Crane Library, Harry Williams, III, will retire on Jan. 31st from a profession that he has been in for 41 years.

"I was just ready," said Williams. "I have been working since I was fourteen, and in the Library profession for forty-one years, but I realized that there are other ways to live. Many people have questions about my decision, myself included. I was thrilled to be selected for this magnificent opportunity, and I expected to be here for many years. This was like my dream to get this position at this library but I decided that I don't want to stay so long that my performance declines and I am unable to be the director the library deserves."

Williams, who is 65, will celebrate his retirement on Jan 28th at the Richardson building in the main library from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. On Feb. 1st Megan Allen, who is the assistant director, will become the acting director until the library board is able to find a replacement for Williams, who is the 12th director the library has had.

Williams said that there were a couple of events in his life recently that helped him realize it was time to retire.

"Two recent experiences shook up my feelings and my thinking. My best friend and his wife joined my wife and me to visit a dear friend who is dying in Florida. I had always lived by the idea that I had plenty of time, and that trip made me realize that there was no more taking for granted a limitless supply of time to get around to unfulfilled dreams and ambitions," said Williams. "Then my wife and I spent a week in rural Arkansas, attending a family reunion and experiencing life at a more leisurely pace. That kind of knocked me off dead center and allowed me to see I could have a whole different life."

Williams said that he plans to do a lot of reading once he retires, along with taking walks with his wife, Jody, writing books, and maybe even narrating audio books.

"Working in a library is like working in a candy store," Williams said. "You can't eat the inventory; you have to be there to provide it to your customers. It is so ironic when people say they are jealous of librarians who get to read books all day, since reading is almost a guilty pleasure when there is so much on the 'to-do' list. I use to get so jealous of these people that would rent out a bunch of books and I couldn't do that, now I can."

Williams said he is confident the library is in good hands; not only because of Allen but also because of all the support they receive from the Quincy community.

"The support here has been dynamite," said Williams. "Sometimes it makes me wonder if I am crazy to leave, but I know it is going to be left in wonderful hands."

Delegation Cool To Tax Hike Plan

including transportation and school buildings. The state's gas tax would also be pegged to inflation moving forward. According to the Patrick administration, his proposal would decrease the tax burden – sales and income taxes – on individuals making less than $37,523 while increasing the burden on everyone else.

Members of Quincy's delegation were concerned about how the plan would affect the funding of public works projects. Rep. Tackey Chan noted that since Massachusetts doesn't tax essential items – clothing costing under $175 and food – sales tax revenues could wax and wane with economy.

"Massachusetts is a non-essential goods sales tax state," Chan said. "Sales of other items are subject to the rise and fall of the economy."

As proof, Chan pointed out that the Legislature voted in the early 2000s to dedicate a portion of sales tax revenue – one percent of the total value of each purchase, currently 16 percent of all sales tax revenue – to the MBTA. In 2008 when the recession began, sales tax revenue fell, contributing to the MBTA's current financial woes.

"We need to know how will this plan address the ebbs and flows of the economy," Chan said.

House Majority Leader Ron Mariano echoed those concerns, pointing out that the city has benefited greatly in recent years from the state's school building fund. He wants to know how the new plan will impact future projects, like a pending proposal to renovate or replace Sterling Middle School.

"Quincy has been very lucky. We have a new Quincy High School. We renovated Point Webster, built a new elementary school at Clifford Marshall and the new Central," Mariano said. "Now there's a proposal for Sterling – how does this plan affect the moneys available?"

He did add that the cut in the sales tax would benefit residents because that tax is regressive in nature, meaning that people with lower incomes tend to pay a greater share of their income towards the tax than wealthier individuals.

"I thought it was very creative. Everyone talks about the regressive nature of the sales tax – this fixes it," Mariano said.

Rep. Bruce Ayers vowed that the members of the delegation would fight to make sure Quincy's needs are met during the budget process.

"I know the delegation is going to be working with the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee to address the city's needs," Ayers said.

Sen. John Keenan said he would be hesitant to support raising the income tax, adding that more analysis is necessary.

"I want to see what lowering the sales tax will do, what raising the income tax will do, and how netting that out with a higher exemption will do," Keenan said. "We need to look at the whole picture."

Both the House and Senate are expected to put forward their own budget proposals for FY14, which starts July 1, this spring. Chan said there's no guarantee that either branch of the Legislature would even vote on the governor's proposal, but he anticipates a vigorous debate going forward on exactly how new transportation projects would be funded.

"There will be counter-proposals coming from the House and the Senate as the budget process nears," Chan said. "Everyone wants a strong transportation system, but how do we fund it?"

Downtown Project 'Exciting Model'

ing together at all levels and making something happen. This truly is something; this is thousands of jobs, transforming the heart of the city, and creating some beautiful public spaces, and obviously bringing in new real estate taxes, which is a good thing as well. It's a project on the move, we've been at it for six years since I took office, and we've made great progress."

Patrick viewed a model of downtown Quincy and the changes that are planned to take place during the redevelopment project. Throughout the discussion Patrick asked a number of questions about the 3.5 million square foot project such as where certain buildings were going to be, what was going to be added, how long they plan for it to all take, and how many jobs will be created.

"As this thing starts to move, late February early March, we will be underway with what is called Block 4, Merchants Row. That's an early phase that we're all supportive of. It will accrue a lot of housing units and some new merchants," said Koch. "I think working together we can build quite a project down here not only replacing the (Quincy Center MBTA) station but also building and creating a wonderful environment for additional government slash private office spaces. From construction alone are 4,100 jobs, 25 percent of which will be for Quincy residents. The total package is around 11,000 (jobs)."

During his visit Patrick also discussed the issues of gun control and mental health funding along with his thoughts on raising income taxes.

"First of all, we filed again many proposals we've made in the past around gun safety, we've added some clarifying language around these multi-round magazines, which is an issue whose seriousness was raised again in the context of the Newtown (CT) massacre. We've also announced some new steps, further steps we are going to take in the area of supporting mental health services that will be reflected in the budget I file next week," said Patrick.

"We have to be about growth we have to be about opportunity. We've got a really good strategy and have for six years now, to invest in education and innovation and infrastructure, and it is making a difference. But if we want to accelerate that growth and expand opportunity we are going to have to step up our investments."

"I think they (the people of the Commonwealth) are going to see changes that are about dedicating our investments to really target around those things that will strategically assure us growth. They are going to see a greater level of competitiveness and fairness in the distribution of that and their going to see a solution that is not just about the here and now but about a generations to come," the governor added.

Frank Santoro Stepping Down As QHS Principal

day night to the School Committee – a body that he once served on, including a stint as vice chairman.

"This is my 42nd year of being involved in public education. I started in the City of Boston in 1972 and spent 10 years there teaching and then went over to Brookline Public Schools for 17 years, teaching as well as being in the administration," he explained. "Quincy has always been my home. I served on the School Committee for eight years in Quincy while I was teaching in Brookline and spent these 13 years now as principal at Central and then as principal at Quincy High.

"After 42 years I felt I owed it to my family – especially my wife Linda – that I spend some time at home. I've given it a lot of thought; it's not something I want to do. I helped in the design of Quincy High School and I wanted to spend at least a few years here to see how it would work. I thoroughly enjoy what I'm doing, but I think it's time to start spending some time at home and doing some things with my wife for the remainder of my time."

Santoro's upcoming retirement means that once again one of the city's high schools will have a new principal; North Quincy High's Robert Shaw was hired in the fall to replace Earl Metzler, who left his post over the summer to become a superintendent in New Hampshire.

Santoro believes his biggest contribution to Quincy High since he became principal in 2005 was helping to design the new, state-of-the-art school building. The building cost $126 million and has now been open for three years. He wanted to make sure the schools' three main subject areas – the arts, the humanities, and science, math, and technology – were interconnected and not separated like the old school was with the vocational programs in a different building.

"Quincy High School is probably unique in its conceptual design because it's designed to be very interdisciplinary versus the traditional departmental structure. The 21st century is demanding schools to do things in a different way, sort of a paradigm shift, so that teams become the norm as we train kids for college and the work experiences," Santoro said. "Being able to show kids that there are connections between subjects is a completely different way of doing things. I think the design of this building is done correctly so we can prepare our kids for the 21st century.

"We tried to design a building where show kids that there are connections between subject areas by placing them in those wings. And it's working quite well; we've won two national awards for the design."

Those awards were for outstanding design in vocational/industrial arts and for the best design concept in the Northeast Region from the Council of Education Facilities Planners International. The school is under consideration for a third award for incorporating green energy practices.

Santoro's contributions aren't limited to the design of the building, however.

He is proud to have overseen the implementation of professional learning community teams. Those teams, made up of teachers and counselors, meet throughout the school day to tackle more than a dozen projects each year. The wide variety of projects include identifying ways to help freshmen write better, coming up with better strategies to have students work as groups, better use of classroom websites, creating a more accessible guide for parents, and utilizing videos as teaching tools, also known as QuincyTube.

"Teams of teachers are now solving school wide problems and having a voice in their school," Santoro said of the initiative.

As principal he has also worked to engage students and parents so their concerns can be heard. The school has quarterly assemblies led by the student council, where proposals are written and then reviewed by Santoro and Assistant Principal Ellen Murray. Santoro also took the unorthodox step of giving the student council president an office close to his; Santoro could not think of any other schools that do so.

"There are quarterly assemblies that are run by our student council representatives for each grade. They create the agendas, kids are allowed to write proposals and they are entertained by myself and the assistant principal," Santoro said. "The president of the student council has his own office in this administrative wing."

"It's very important having kids have a voice in their own building, as well as parents. So now we have the teachers with their teams, the voices of the student council, as well as parents having an active parent advisory council are three big initiatives that make people feel as though it's their high school."

The construction of the new school presented challenges for Quincy High's staff and students. In the latter stages of the project, the school was spread out across three different buildings, and Santoro thought it would be chaotic. But he was pleasantly surprised by how well students and staff rose to the meet the challenge.

"We were actually in three different buildings during the construction as it phased. When half of the high school was finished we were actually in the old building, a wing of the new high school, and Coddington Hall," Santoro said. "I thought it would be a major problem, however, the students and the staff handled it quite well. The students were very mature – they had to actually leave and go outside to get to the Coddington building, even during inclement weather during the winter."

"They handled it very maturely, almost as if it was a mini college campus. I was very thankful and appreciative of the way teachers and our students were able to handle the moving, handle the transition from period to period and we came through pretty successfully."

Santoro's tenure at QHS also saw a large turnover among teachers. He estimates that nearly half of the school's current faculty, 70 out of 150 teachers, started working at the school within the last five or six years. He said bringing in the new teachers hasn't been an issue for the school, because the department heads have helped the new teachers get acclimated.

Santoro remembers fondly his time at Central Middle School, where he was principal from 1999 to 2005. Like he did at Quincy High, Santoro put together teams of teachers to help solve issues that arose and to give them a voice in the school's affairs.

"I tried to do similar things at Central where teaching teams would have a great impact on what they did on a daily basis. I remember that each of the teaching teams met on a weekly basis and planned so they felt as though they had a voice in their own structure," he said. "The students were exceptional, working with kids and seeing them – just like here – made that a very special place as well."

"We have a school system where we have five middle schools that I'm sure are doing the same thing. But I was very impressed with the teachers and the students for their accomplishments."

At Central Santoro faced challenges because of the building's age, similar to the ones he faced in the old high school building. Those problems were underscored when a fire broke out at Central's library, but the school was able to reopen quickly.

"It was an old building and I faced similar things in our old high school as I did at the Central Middle School complex. There were days where the heat wasn't the best it could be," Santoro said. "I actually had a fire at the library when I was there. I don't think we lost too many days either, people came together and made sure that it was safe after the fire."

Like Quincy High, Central is going to be replaced. Santoro has fielded inquiries from Central Principal Jennifer Fay-Beers regarding the construction. Fay-Beers was Santoro's assistant principal at Central.

When he began his career in Boston Santoro taught a variety of subjects – mostly math but also art and reading – to students in grades five and up. After his ten-year stint in Boston, he moved to Brookline for 17 years, and spent several years of his time there as an assistant principal. He credits two of the principals he worked under in Brookline for teaching him how to be an administrator.

"I didn't know I wanted to be a principal until my experience in Brookline. Being an assistant principal under multiple principals in Brookline assisted me in thinking about becoming an administrator," Santoro said. "Barbara Shea was a principal in Brookline who taught me many things about being a good administrator. Joseph McKeige in Brookline is also a person I attribute learning many things to."

Santoro credits three of Quincy's superintendents for helping his development. There is Jack Osterman, who ran the school system while Santoro was on the School Committee in the 1980s, Eugene Creedon, who hired him to be principal at Central, and current Supt. Richard DeCristofaro.

"I owe a lot to our superintendents," he said. "All three of them have been great assets to lead me in a correct direction."

Serving on the School Committee for those eight years, and as stint as president of Quincy's citywide Parent Teacher Organization (PTO), helped Santoro learn the ropes of being principal.

"Being on the School Committee, in Quincy especially, I was familiar with the way things operated here. I was also the president of the citywide PTO at one time when my children were in school, and that experience really helped in what I do. Knowing how the school system operates and a principal's role is very beneficial," he said.

Being principal at a high school and being principal at a middle school is a study in contrasts, according to Santoro. Those differences are bigger than the size of the schools; while at Central, he was active in super-

LIKE A DIAMOND IN THE SKY

If a recently declassified report can be believed, Russian scientists claim that a meteorite crater in Siberia is awash in "trillions of carats" of diamonds. Whether or not the assertion can be believed, the idea of a meteorite crashing to earth and creating diamonds gives us something to think about concerning why diamonds are so special. These so-called "impact diamonds" help demonstrate what kind of enormous pressure and heat are necessary to create the hardest natural substance on earth. As carbon deposits are pressurized under enormous heat below the earth's surface, they form the substance that has the potential to create such sparkle. In the case of impact diamonds, they may actually emanate from the heavens above.

Diamonds are the perfect accessory for any outfit; you will radiate a timeless elegance. vising teachers but at QHS he a larger support staff to assist him.

"There is a big difference, not just in size. The difference is in the middle school, you tend to have a lot more to do with the supervision of teachers," Santoro said. "When you become a principal in a high school, you're dependent on other people - department heads, deans. You have additional resources at the high school level to help you."

Santoro misses being a classroom teacher after spending more than a decade as a principal, and sits in on classes when his schedule allows.

"I do like to walk around when I can. I do like to get into classrooms and listen to the discussions and take part in those discussions and I do miss teaching," Santoro said. "From time to time I might try to get into a math class and do a little lesson."

Since he started teaching in 1972, education has changed greatly. Santoro thinks the advent of standardized testing in the form of the MCAS was the biggest change, because of how it affected what is taught in classrooms. He believes the state's Common Core State Standards Initiative and new teacher evaluation methods will present similar challenges in upcoming years.

"Now that students are required to pass the MCAS test is probably the biggest change because now teachers have to focus on the requirements of that test so the children are successful in each of the grades," Santoro said. "We now have the new core curriculum and the new assessments that are about to happen in the next few years. That too will be a major adjustment and change because it changes everything down the line right into the classroom."

Technology has greatly improved over the course of Santoro's career. The new Quincy High, for example, has interactive whiteboards, which give instructors the ability to better incorporate the internet in the classroom.

"Technology in our high school is second to none and has really changed the way teachers can bring classroom instruction right into the classroom from the outside world. Every one of our classrooms here have an interactive whiteboard that allows them to use the internet and do many teaching things that teachers were not able to do in the past," Santoro said.

He believes technology will continue to evolve, and students may one day need their own tablet computers as they prepare for the new testing requirements.

"I see that each child is going to need an iPad of some sort in the future, especially as they take on the new testing challenges," Santoro said. "I see that coming down the road as technology is very fast and within five years we'll be seeing things that we don't see today."

Santoro has deep connections to the community. He lives in Wollaston with his wife Linda, who once worked for The Quincy Sun. His parents, Rosario and Bernadette, still live in Wollaston as well. He has two brothers - Charles, a Quincy Police lieutenant, and Paul. He has two children including Michael, who is a teacher at Point Webster.

"I'm happy he has chosen this field," Santoro said of his son. "He's been in multiple fields but decided that teaching is for him. He's finding the love for children as I did and I'm happy to see it."

Santoro also has a daughter, Lori Scott. She has two sons Joey and Andrew. Joey is a freshman at Quincy High and his grandfather couldn't be happier to be his principal.

"I love it; I'm hoping he loves it. I try to keep away from him as much as possible not to embarrass him or get in his way, his independence," Santoro said. "I think he's happy as well as me. We're enjoying the stay together."

Santoro also remains active in North Quincy High's community, particularly the school's basketball hall of fame. But his allegiance now lies with the Presidents when the two schools face off.

"I was very involved and still am involved in the North Quincy High School Basketball Hall of Fame. I was a member of the basketball team then at North," Santoro said. "I truly admire that high school (North); I love that high school. But when it comes to athletic competition, I've become blue and white."

Santoro's last day on the job will be June 30 and he hopes to assist in the transition process for whoever his successor is. But he won't truly feel retired until the new school year starts.

"I see myself on Labor Day of this coming fall having a void because since I was child I've been going to school the day after Labor Day," Santoro said. "For 60 years I've been going to school the day after Labor Day."

Once retired, Santoro said he is going to miss being able to interact with students and the sense of community with the school's faculty.

"I thoroughly enjoy students. Interacting students, watching them accomplish the things that they do. I'll probably miss that," Santoro said. "I'll miss the camaraderie of teachers and administrators in the building."

On the other hand, he is not going to miss the job's long hours. Santoro arrives each day around 6:15 a.m. before school, and stays as late as 9 p.m. to attend games, plays, and other after school activities.

"Being a high school principal and doing the job correctly keeps you here many nights during the course of the week. I could be busy five or six nights during the course of the week because you need to be able to participate in or see the things that are going on beyond the school day to truly appreciate what's happening in your building. I feel guilty about being away from home all that time," Santoro said. "I'm not going to miss the many nights I had to be here, however I also enjoyed watching the things that took place at night time."

PRINCIPAL FRANK SANTORO stands next to Quincy High's "Pony" statue and the trophy the school won for defeating North Quincy in the Thanksgiving football game in November. The statue, formally "Appeal to the Great Spirit," is a replica of an equestrian statue by Cyrus Dallin and symbolizes Quincy High's academic pride and excellence. The statue has been in the high school since 1922, although the first replica broke and needed to be replaced.

Santoro might not be stepping away from education entirely. There is a chance he could work in consulting or helping educators develop.

"I'm not quite sure if I want to leave education all together, in terms of doing something whether it be in a consulting role or professional development. I really haven't made up my mind yet, I need some time to think about," Santoro said.

Santoro is sure about one thing - he and Linda plan on traveling more once his retirement begins. It's just a matter of deciding where to go.

"We've left it open to experience things we haven't been able to do, whether it be local or within the country or even abroad. We're leaving that all open," Santoro said. "I'm sure around Labor Day of this year I'll be somewhere to keep me busy."

John Hancock Birthday Plunge Makes A Big Splash

By KRIS KALABOKAS

Chilly temperatures and brisk winds weren't enough to stop Ward 2 Councilor Brad Croall from running into the icy cold waters of Wollaston Beach last Saturday in celebration of the 7th annual John Hancock Birthday Plunge.

"I'm psyching myself up," he said as he waited with roughly three dozen other "plungers" to get his feet wet.

The event was presented by the Quincy Beaches and Coastal Commission, Friends of Wollaston Beach, and the Department of Conservation and Recreation. The day's proceeds will benefit Interfaith Social Services; an organization which provides food, shelter, clothing, and counseling to those in need, regardless of religious affiliation.

"I don't think there really is much preparation," said Croall, who "plunged" in last year's event. "It's an in and out type of deal."

Before participants took their brave dunk, the Quincy Police Scuba Unit suited up and entered the water as a precautionary measure. An ambulance was also present in case of emergency.

"They say acceptance is the key to all my problems," said Croall as he readied himself for his nippy dive. "The remote starter on my car will be going with the heat blasting."

Chickie Abdallah, treasurer of the Quincy Beaches and Coastal Commission and event organizer, performed the ceremonial toe dunk, signaling the "plungers" to prepare for their frozen fate.

Anticipation grew as everyone counted down from ten in unison. John Hancock himself, who graced the crowd with a rare birthday appearance, joined in the chant.

Suddenly, they were off!

Because of low tide, participants had to jog quite a distance to reach the water's edge. Most waded out waist-deep, and hastily returned to shore to dry up and wrap themselves in blankets and warm sweats.

"I'm glad I brought a towel today," said first time "plunger" Noel DiBona of Quincy, who decided to take part on a moment's notice. "I was a last call. I didn't know about the event until two days ago."

DiBona's advice? "Make sure you have a great exit strategy," he said. "Have the clothes ready...the car heated up and ready to go!"

Despite a good friend calling him "crazy," DiBona said he didn't regret his decision at all. "I would do it again. Great cause."

Croall praised Interfaith Social Services and what they do for the less fortunate of Quincy. "At the end of the day you've done some good things for a great cause," he said.

"Spinal stenosis" is a condition caused by a narrowing in the vertebral canal or vertebral foramina of the spine that leads to compression of either the spinal cord or the nerve roots that exit the spinal cord. As a result, patients most often experience pain and numbness in their extremities, usually the legs and feet. This condition is usually seen in men and women over the age of 50, particularly among those who perform intensive manual labor. The most common cause of this disorder is degenerative disease of the spine. Chiropractic treatment can help by manipulating the spine in a way that leads to decompression, which restores the natural flow of blood and nervous system impulses within the spine.

Your nervous system controls and coordinates all functions throughout the body. The adjustments performed by us at FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC decrease nerve interference in the spinal nerves, thus allowing your full potential to be expressed. This will maximize your healing ability and improve your function. Our care is effective, safe and gentle for the entire family. ## McEvilly's Equalizer With 34 Seconds Left Earns NQ Point

By BILL GRIFFIN

The parking lot was filled an hour before faceoff. The bleachers overflowed and fans ringed the ice two and three deep. Red and black balloons, blue and white balloons fluttered in the cold breeze.

It was North Quincy vs. Quincy hockey and it was a treat.

John Ross McEvilly drove home the tying goal with 34 seconds left as North scored twice in the final ten minutes to earn a 2-2 tie in a Patriot League contest against Quincy who dominated the hockey game for almost the entire evening.

Almost.

"Quincy High wanted it more than we did," said North coach Matt Gibbons whose club entered the game at 6-2-1 for the season. "They outworked us and won the one-on-one battles. The good thing is we didn't stop working and we came back."

"I thought we dominated the game for most of the game," said Quincy coach Tim Lewis whose club had a 37-25 edge in shots on goal. The Presidents started the evening at 1-8 and came seconds away from an upset win which could well have opened up the whole season for this young, talented club which is so close to breaking out with a fistful of wins.

Quincy held a 2-0 lead entering the third on goals by Patrick Freeman and Jake Hallisey. The most dramatic moments came after Brendan Brady drove home a slap shot from the point with an assist to Rudy Tryon to bring North within 2-1 with 9:37 left. Five seconds later, North was on the power play. Mike Pugsley, Free-

McEvelly's Equalizer Earns Point For North Quincy

All season Lewis has talked about resiliency and stringing together three periods of good hockey. The Presidents had shown resiliency, fighting back from a rough patch of a goal and two penalties. They were within 40 seconds of the three quality periods and a season-defining win, but North does not give in and North does not go away easily.

"I said to my assistant if we kill this penalty, we'll win the game. I couldn't be prouder of my kids' effort," said Lewis.

With the goalie pulled for an extra skater, Robbie Cameron broke in off the left wing, fired a hard drive and McEvelly slammed home the rebound. McEvelly scored the tying goal against Pembroke and had to leave the Quincy game briefly in the third with an injury, but when the Red Raiders needed a big play, he made it.

"The difference in the third period was we worked harder," said Gibbons whose club will likely be without top forward Shawn Grady for the rest of the season. "Every goal we get from now on has to come from hard work. We need more offense especially from players like McEvelly and Cameron. They need to put a couple in the net to build up their confidence."

Hallisey scored with 7:26 left in the first on a low drive from just inside the faceoff circle with assists to Mike Pugsley and Steven Ross. Patrick Freeman upped it to 2-0 with 7:00 remaining in the second when he circled the net and slipped home a backhander. Mike Pugsley and Patrick Donovan drew assists on the play.

"Hallisey may be the most skilled player on either team. He is an excellent hockey player," said Gibbons.

Higgins, supported by the defense of Matt Kozlowski, Matt Davis, Ross, Jimmy Brennick, Ryan Harty and Brandon Beal, was excellent in net for Quincy. Junior Nolan Greene, once again, was in another world for North. Coming off a 42-save effort against Pembroke, he made 35 saves. He made 20 in the second period. In the first period, he stopped two wide-open blasts from the slot and two clean breakaways, the final one a robbery of Freeman with a quicksilver glove stop as the period ended.

McEvelly and Brady deserve the headlines for the comeback, but without Green, two goals would not have been enough for North. He may well be the MVP of the league at the midway point of the season.

"He was unbelievable again. One night, I'd like to see us get some offense so that we don't have to rely on him so much," said Gibbons.

"He saved them," said Lewis.

There are good ties and bad ties. Good ties leave at least a measure of accomplishment. Bad ties leave an empty, wasted feeling. Interestingly, both coaches looked on the outcome as a good tie.

"It was good because we played well in the third. We didn't give up and got a point which puts us closer to the tournament which is where we want to be," said Gibbons.

"It was a good tie because we showed the resilience I've been talking about and we did put together three good period. We didn't turn the corner, but we did turn a corner," said Lewis.

Just another night of Quincy vs. North Quincy hockey.

NORTH QUINCY junior Jane Minton (10) dribbles as she's guarded by Quincy senior Maryssa Dwyer (20). Minton led the Red Raiders with 17 points, including six foul shots in the final 14 seconds, to secure a 55-46 win over the Presidents last Friday night at North Quincy High.

Minton's 'Money' As Red Raiders Down Presidents

By BILL GRIFFIN

Jane Minton plays this little mind game when she shoots her daily dose of 50 free throws. She thinks back to last year's Quincy game when North lost by two. She remembers the foul shots she missed. She thinks about another chance. It's a close game, the gym is packed, the crowd is roaring. She steps to the line. She imagines all this. She wants to finish practice, but before she does, she shoots ten more. Just to be sure.

The mind game came true. Minton swished six foul shots in the final 14 seconds to stop a spirited Quincy comeback and lift the Red Raiders to a 55-46 Patriot League decision Friday night in a physical contest before a large, loud crowd at the North Quincy High gym.

"I play that imaginary game when I shoot all the time," said Minton who had 17 points, seven assists and was the one stable force in an uneven, physical game which often had more contact than a rugby match. "I play last year's game over in my mind, and hope I'd get another chance."

The win lifts North to 7-5 and gives the Red Raiders their second win in three tries against Quincy (6-6) this year after dropping nine straight to the Presidents.

"That meant a lot; especially to the seniors. We wanted the game for them," said Minton who is a junior.

North's three-guard set and inside standout Maya Umoren (19 points, 17 rebounds) maintained a lead in the 10-point range for most of the game. However freshman center Nicole Jorgensen (16 of her 20 in the second half) and a patchwork press unit of Maryssa Dwyer, Colleen Andrews, Courtney Ryan and Kayla McArdle (16 last night, 33 in her last two games) scrapped back into it and Quincy cut it to 49-46 on a Jorgensen offensive rebound with 0:14 left.

Enter Minton and those 50 free throws she takes every day. She knocked home two off a technical foul. She hit four more with all the ease of someone shooting them by herself in her driveway on a July evening and North had its win over its archrival.

"She's money," joked coach Jessica Worden. "I had all the confidence in world in her except she was shooting them before more fans than she's ever seen in her life."

The Umoren-Jorgensen match in the middle was the central theme of the evening. When Jorgensen (19 rebounds) was in foul trouble in the first half, North attacked with Umoren. When Umoren went out with her fourth foul late in the third, the Presidents poured it inside to Jorgensen. When they were each in the game, it was a battle of power close to the basket.

"Maya played with a lot of confidence tonight. She was very quick to the boards," said Worden.

"I was proud of Nicole," said coach Jeff Bretsch. "This was a game against North with a lot of pressure and she competed. She didn't shrink from it, she was aggressive out there against a very good player. She brought us back in the game."

North's three-guard set of Minton, Caitlin Bulger (8) and Haley McKay (six) moved the ball well, set up open shots and controlled the flow of the game for most of the contest. McKay also delivered another one of her lockdown defensive efforts which has energized North's season. Since McKay was inserted in the starting lineup in the second Quincy game, North is 5-2. It is not a coincidence.

"Haley can change a game with her defense. I thought our guards were

North Quincy Edges Quincy In Another Hoop Classic

By BILL GRIFFIN

The scoreboard read that North Quincy defeated Quincy, 79-74, but the real winner was the game of basketball.

Let's start with North. Let's put the Red Raiders in an 18-point hole in the first half. Begin with their brilliant senior Marquis McClendon who scored 18 of his 24 points in the first half to keep his team from being driven out of the building. Add in Aaron Anderson who nailed five three-pointers in less than five minutes in the third period and is shooting the ball like an alien being dropped in from another planet. Mix in Kyle Richardson, the smallest player on his team, who cashed the offensive rebound which decided the game. Finish with Patrick Gould who is now shooting free throws like Larry Bird.

Now it's Quincy turn. Let's start with seven three-pointers in the first half which built an early 18-point lead. Add in two terrific seniors, Jaquan Harris and Tino Goncalves, making jumpers, slashing to the hoop, playing desperately for their first basketball win ever against North. Mix in an enormously gifted sophomore class who grew up in front of the overflow, howling crowd and accounted for 40 points. Finish with the pride in playing in a basketball game which will not soon be forgotten.

"We've had some great ones with Quincy, but I'm not sure I can remember one that was any better," said North coach Kevin Barrett after his club went to 9-2 on the season and posted its 11th straight win over the Presidents including a three-game sweep this season. North Quincy's seniors finished undefeated against Quincy in varsity basketball.

"That was the best basketball game I've seen in a long time," said Quincy

(7-5) coach Dave Parry. "I could not be prouder of my team. I told them after the game that they were down now, but when they watched the film, they would realize they had been part of a great basketball game."

The game turned to North in the final 2:30. Anderson, who two weeks ago was hoping just to get into games, is now winning them. He stepped up out of his golden spot in the right corner and swished a three to give the Red Raiders a 73-70 lead, their first lead since 2-0 in the opening 20 seconds. Halfway through the season, he is the story of the year.

"He didn't play in a couple of games and he said it didn't matter as long as we won. I've seen him shoot in practice and I'm not surprised," said Richardson of his teammate who has hit 18

Q-NQ Girls' Hockey Edges St. Joe's For First Win

By BILL GRIFFIN

The first win is always the sweetest.

A year of hard work and effort paid off for the Quincy-North Quincy girls hockey team as they rallied for two goals in the final five minutes to edge St. Joseph's, 5-4 Friday for their first victory of the season.

Julia Donovan scored the tying goal with 5:00 left and Leah Ryan scored the game-winner with 2:02 showing on the clock to set off a wild celebration.

"I was shocked," smiled captain Kennedy Harding who had a goal in the victory. "I was on the ice with Meg White when the game ended. We looked at each other and we couldn't believe it. We got back to the locker room and everyone just shouted: We won!"

In other action last week, Quincy-North (1-9-1) lost a narrow 4-3 decision to Hanover and fell to Norwell, 8-1 at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena Saturday night.

Against St. Joseph's, Donovan was outstanding in the final minutes. After tying the game, she moved out of her zone, flew down the left side, and put a hard shot on goal. Ryan was in perfect position to drive home the rebound for the game-winner.

"I was ecstatic for the kids," said coach Steve Burzio. "They had worked so hard and come so close because that it was great to see them win one. If ever a team deserved it, it was this one."

Donovan and Ryan each scored twice in the victory while Harding, who has done a fine job since moving from forward to defense, added a singleton.

Quincy-North played a strong game in a one-goal loss to Hanover. Meg White, Loren Miller and Savannah Flynn scored goals. Danielle Mullaney added a pair of assists while Brianna Mullaney and Katie White had single assists.

Against Norwell, Madison Hally flipped home a backhand rebound for Quincy-North's goal with 11:26 left in the second. Brianna Mullaney and Rebecca Mahan earned assists on the play.

Despite only scoring once, Quincy-North put good pressure on the Norwell goal. In the second period, Meg White had a testing slap shot from the point. Danielle Mullaney, Brianna Mullaney, Ryan and Colleen Bellotti all created good chances.

The shorthanded unit of Danielle Mullaney, Meg and Katie White, and Flynn did a good job killing a penalty late in the second period.

Ryan and Brianna Mullaney each had clean breaks and testing shots on goal late in the third period.

Freshman Caitlin Doolley, who had never previously played goalie, stepped up with fine work in net for Quincy-North.

Red Raiders Tie Duxbury

By BILL GRIFFIN

They had, in the words of their coach, every excuse to lose.

North Quincy was coming off an exhausting tie with archrival Quincy. The Red Raiders were on the road against first-place Duxbury. They were without top forwards Shawn Grady and Nick McGaughey for the entire game. Mike Finn and James Doherty went out with injuries during the game. Duxbury was flying. North was down by a goal with 22 seconds left in the game.

The Red Raiders didn't make excuses, they played tough hockey. For the second straight game, they battled back in the final minute to earn a tie which was a tribute to their character as much as to their ability.

Junior Andrew Currie made a beautiful finish after Rudy Tryon and Robbie Cameron did the hard work to set him up for a goal with 22 seconds left to give North an important 1-1 tie with Duxbury in a Patriot League game at The Bog in Kingston Saturday afternoon.

Against Quincy, it was a John Ross McEvilly goal with 34 seconds left. Against Duxbury, it was Currie.

"We could have had excuses, but we showed a lot of mental toughness the whole game and especially in the third period," said North coach Matt Gibbons.

Cameron started the tying play with hard work to keep the puck in the zone. Duxbury was set for a breakout which probably would have ended the game. Cameron pinched in, passed the puck to Tryon who chipped it in front of the goal. It hit a skate and bounced in the air to Currie.

Because Cameron and Tryon had caught Duxbury breaking out of its zone, Currie had time to settle the puck and drive home the game-tying goal.

"Rudy and Robbie did the work. Andrew knew the situation, kept his head and got a great shot," said Gibbons.

It was a big tie for North. The Red Raiders were 6-2-3 at the end of the week and in second place alone, three points behind Duxbury with a game in hand on the Dragons. They are also within five points of qualifying for the tourney which is what they have been aiming for all season.

"It's good. We're still in range of Duxbury and we're closer to the tourney. A finish like last year would be great," said Gibbons whose team lost only one of its final ten games last winter.

Duxbury controlled the early part of the first period, but North responded with tough checking and a physical game against the fast-skating Dragons to take back the flow of the game late in the first and in the second period.

"They are so fast, you have to play physical to slow them down," said Gibbons. "We have to play physical to win. In the first two periods against Quincy we weren't physical enough. In the third, we were and we tied the game."

Junior Nolan Greene made two huge saves to keep North close early in the third. Cameron was robbed on a great chance with five minutes left, but North kept digging and pressing until Currie connected for the equalizer.

North's defense, especially Tryon and Brendan Brady, was terrific. Freshman Timmy Glynn, Cameron and McEvilly played strong games up front.

"Rudy and Brendan did a great job clearing them out from in front of the net," said Gibbons. "Timmy Glynn is working and working, and that first goal is going to come soon."

Gibbons has a time line he likes his team to follow moving towards the tourney. He also stresses keeping an even keel and the same focus on every game, even if the opponent is Quincy.

"We have 15 points in 11 games and that's fine," he said. "I want us to bring the same focus and intensity to every game. I think that helped us against Duxbury. We didn't have any letdown from the Quincy game."

North hosts Silver Lake in an important league game Saturday at 6:40 p.m.

Quincy/North Quincy Swimming, Diving Defeats Silver Lake

The Quincy/North Quincy girls swimming and diving team (7-2, 4-2) won all 11 events en route to the 86-66 victory over visiting Patriot League foe Silver Lake Regional Jan. 17 at the Lincoln-Hancock pool in Quincy.

The QNQ boys squad placed first in eight of 11 events for their 83-76 triumphant decision which lifted their record to 5-4 overall and 2-4 in the conference.

Senior Emmitt Harrow (NQ) swam a season-best clip of 25.59 in the 50 free. In the longer freestyle events, sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ) earned a pair of victories, clocking 2:10.03 in the 200 free then swimming 6:00.59 in the 500 free. Junior captain Elio Daci (Q) swept the 200 individual medley (2:28.54) and 100 butterfly (1:07.19) events.

The QNQ girls placed one-two in five events including the 200 freestyle where sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) out touched classmate Sabrina Rauch (Q), finishing in both South Sectional and State qualifying times of 2:03.78 and 2:04.57, respectively. Rauch also won the 100 butterfly (1:07.22) ahead of the 1:17.31 mark of freshman Grace Anderson (NQ), who also captured second in the 50 free (31.22) where senior captain Kat O'Connor (NQ) touched the wall first (27.93). O'Connor won twice the distance, swimming 1:00.72. Sophomore Evelyn Scuzzarella (NQ) swept both the 500 freestyle (6:24.50) and 100 backstroke (1:18.78) bolstered by the second-place performances of freshman Emily Suslowicz (Q) in the 500 free (7:19.78) and senior Leslie David (Q) in the 100 back (1:24.25).

QNQ hosts Norwell today (Thursday) at the Lincoln-Hancock Pool in Quincy. Meet starts at 3:45 p.m.

In other recent competition, Sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) bested her own school record to lead the Quincy/North Quincy girls swimming and diving team (6-2, 3-2) to the 86-72 victory over Patriot League competitor Pembroke in Duxbury.

The QNQ boys (4-4, 1-4) fell to the hosts by a slim margin of 87-79.

O'Driscoll's mark of 1:02.52 in the 100-yard butterfly was nearly two seconds faster than her previous record established Dec. 18, 2012. In addition to the fly, the sophomore won the 100 backstroke clocking 1:12.59. QNQ's duo of sophomore Sabrina Rauch (Q) and senior Kat O'Connor (NQ) swept the meet's sprint freestyle events. Rauch earned first in the 50 freestyle (27.40) followed by O'Connor's silver effort of 28.50 then the pair swam 58.53 and 1:03.02, for first and second respectively in the 100 free. Sophomore Evelyn Scuzzarella (NQ) paced the field in both the 200 individual medley relay (2:50.15) as well as the 500 free (6:30.49).

In the boys meet, junior Elio Daci (Q) swam 2:28.57 to win the 200 individual medley, and his 1:07.11 effort in the 100 back merited him second-place honors. Sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ) earned first in the 50 free (24.67) and second in the 100 fly (1:03.29).

Presidents Fall To Hanover

By BILL GRIFFIN

From the opening faceoff, it was clear this would not be a game for goals and clean scoring chances. On both sides, the checking was tight, the goaltending was good, and the defense was solid.

Hanover's Craig Methot scored a power play goal early in the third period and Drew Caldwell added an empty-netter in the final seconds to lift the Indians past Quincy, 3-1 in a Patriot League contest played at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena Saturday night.

"It was a pretty even game in terms of shots on net, but we didn't get the momentum that I thought would carry over from the North Quincy game (2-2 tie Wednesday night)," said Quincy coach Tim Lewis whose team fell to 1-9-1. "I was hoping for more energy. I thought our intensity could have been better."

The two battled tied at 1-1 into the final period when Caldwell moved in along the left wing and scored an unassisted goal to the short side. Quincy's shorthanded unit has been excellent all year, but Hanover solved it for what proved to be the game winner.

"We're usually good at killing penalties. We lost too many one-on-one battles," said Lewis.

Ironically, the third period was Quincy's best of the night. The Presidents attacked the net for 12 shots and had three great chances immediately after Hanover went up, 2-1. Junior forward Patrick Donovan broke in cleanly and had a drive ticketed for the top corner, but Hanover's goalie, Elijah Marciello barely tipped it aside with his glove. Brian O'Callaghan rifled the rebound off the post.

Minutes later, Marciello made the save of the night. Jake Hallisey and Patrick Freeman worked a perfect two-on-one. Hallisey slipped the puck across to Freeman who had the open corner in front of him, but somehow Marciello flashed out his skate to turn it aside.

Hallisey and Steve Ross had testing slap shots in the final minutes, but couldn't dent the Hanover goal for the equalizer. Caldwell's empty-net goal in the final seconds ended it at 3-1.

"We didn't roll over after they went ahead, but we have to capitalize on those chances," said Lewis.

on goal. One of Higgins' best was early in a scoreless first period when he made a glove save off Caldwell who broke in a clean breakaway.

The defense led by Ryan Harty and Brandon Beal was solid all night and the forwards backchecked and skated their lanes to limit Hanover to five shots in the first period.

Hanover started the scoring five minutes into the second period after Higgins made two fine saves from close range. Caldwell lifted home the second rebound for a 1-0 lead.

After O'Callaghan, Hallisey and Matt Davis had excellent chances on the power play, Freeman tied it with 4:07 left in the second on his seventh goal in five games. Hallisey made a fine move circling the net, dropped a perfect feed across the crease and Freeman put it in the open side.

"Without Freeman and a couple of others, we'd be in trouble offensively," said Lewis.

Donovan, O'Callaghan, Davis and Matt Kozlowski killed a penalty in the final minute of the second to keep the score tied at 1-1 entering the third.

aware of the whole court all night," said Worden.

North led 11-7 after one, 24-15 at the half, and 39-29 after three before Quincy made its closing run. The Presidents were banged up. Starting point guard Alyssa Lydon limped around on a bad knee. Alysha Dunbar went out with an injury and McArdle was hobbling for most of the fourth period. Bretsch kept searching for a combination which would work and he found it in his press unit which not only hounded North in the backcourt, but trapped well in the frontcourt court as well.

"Their press was excellent. It gave us a lot of trouble all over the floor," said Worden.

"I think we played a little jittery in the first half and it hurt us offensively," said Bretsch. "We got in a hole and it was hard to get out. The press unit did a good job, but we just fell a little short."

Earlier this week, North stunned powerful Scituate, 57-43 thanks to a terrific job by McKay on the Sailors' 1000-point scorer Kelly Martin. Martin had 17, but several were after the game was decided.

"We used a box-and-one with Haley chasing her and I think it frustrated Kelly," said Worden.

Umoren had another huge game with 21 points and 22 rebounds.

"She gets off her shot quickly and she makes her free throws," said Worden. "She's able to maintain a soft touch on her shot despite taking a lot of contact."

Bulger went 3-3 from three-point land and added 14 while Minton and Camille Mullaney had seven each for the Red Raiders.

North is at Hingham Friday.

Quincy stopped Silver Lake, 46-35 with another sound defensive effort earlier in the week. Andrews did an excellent job filling in for Lydon who missed the game with a knee injury.

"It's not easy to replace a floor general, but Colleen was confident and handled the ball very well. Our offense was fluid and she deserves credit for it," said Bretsch.

The defense was solid from start to finish and held the Lakers in the 20's until the final minutes of the game.

MAYA UMOREN takes the ball to the net for two of her 19 points for North Quincy. She also grabbed 17 rebounds for the Red Raiders.

McArdle had 17 while Dunbar had three three-pointers for nine points.

"It was Kayla's best offensive game of the year," said Bretsch. "I could see it to be more of an offensive threat for us."

threes in four games since taking over for the injured Dan Gould.

After a North stop, Richardson (13 points and relentless defense) dug out an offensive rebound which had slipped to the floor, whirled to the basket without hesitation, and banked it home for a 75-70 lead with 1:05 left.

"He has a knack for the ball. In practice, whenever the ball goes to the floor, he gets it," said Barrett.

"I just wanted to go up strong. If it got blocked, it got blocked," said Richardson who is 5'7".

Pat Gould, who was 15-16 from the line in Tuesday's win over Scituate, then knocked in two free throws for a 77-71 lead with 0:22 left which finished it.

"There is nobody I would rather have shooting a free throw for me," said Barrett.

Quincy entered on fire. In the first, Harris (15) hit a three and got to the bucket four times. Goncalves (17) drained a two threes and sliced to the basket for three hoops in the first half. Sophomore Colin Evans (18) canned two more threes to end the first. The Presidents looked like they might score a 100. They were up 24-9 after one and 27-9 early in the second.

It had the look of a blow-out, but North is too smart, too experienced for that. The Red Raiders knew that an 18-point play was unlikely, so they chipped away, played it possession-by-possession and narrowed it to 37-26 at the half. McClendon, who loves the big games and the bright lights, knocked home three threes and sliced to the basket for two drives. The two teams combined for 10 threes at the half and 20 for the game.

"We've been in too many tough situations to panic. We knew we had to play it one possession at a time," said Richardson.

"What we do is simple. We had to rebound and play better defense," said Barrett.

It got better and better in the second half. For North, Anderson (18) had his five threes, Efthim Butka (12) worked the inside and Gould (13) ran the show amid the noise and hit a three to cut it to 65-64 early in the fourth. For Quincy, J.T. Bain (9) spun, twisted and turned inside for four hoops, Evans hit his jumpers and flashed along the baseline for layups, and Goncalves broke the press and set up baskets with passes off his flying drives to the basket. Quincy was so good that, even with Anderson's five threes, the Presidents only lost four points off their halftime lead and were up 57-50 after three.

In the fourth, as the pressure grew, as the crowd roared and roared, as each possession took on more meaning, the quality of the basketball kept rising until a McClendon jumper tied it at 70-70 to set up the closing drama. It was a rare thing to see.

"It was like two heavyweight fighters. Each team kept giving its best shot," said Barrett.

"To beat North, we have to be perfect. Tonight, we almost were," said Parry.

Finally, the night was a tribute to the quality of basketball being played in the city. The boys game was a classic. The girls game was decided in the final 14 seconds. The cumulative record of the four teams is 29-18. All four are at .500 or above. If you love basketball, Quincy is the place to be.

Earlier in the week, Pat Gould scored a career-high 28 and North stopped Scituate, 67-49 in a key Patriot League Fischer Division game which ended a three-game run in which the Red Raiders' average margin of victory was 33 points despite being without the injured Dan Gould.

"We've been wanting Pat to look more to score and he did. He took his outside shot, but what he did best was get to the basket," said Barrett.

McClendon had 11, Butler added 10 while Anderson and center Anthony Green had eight each.

It was Scituate's first loss in the division and the third straight game North held an opponent under 50 points.

"We got 32 minutes of defensive energy and that's what we need," said Barrett.

Goncalves had 17 points and 12 assists as Quincy dropped Silver Lake, 76-64 last week. Evans had 14 points and 11 rebounds while Bain had 14 points and 10 rebounds.

Evans and Bain lead the gifted sophomore class which has developed well under varsity pressure and offers a bright future.

"It's hard to believe how far the sophomores have come since the beginning of the year," said Parry. "I've told them it will get harder especially in the second half when teams adjust to them, but they've responded and gotten better and better."

10 Tips for Safe Walking In Snow And Ice

Falls account for more than one million injuries in the U.S. annually.

There are four types of walking accidents with the most common is the slip and fall. That's the type of fall that happens when you fall due to snow or ice on the ground.

"Every winter the hazards of driving in snow and icy conditions are noted, but rarely noted are the hazards of walking on snow and ice," said Martin B. Tirado, CAE, Executive Director of the Snow & Ice Management Association. "Slipping and falling while walking accounts for a large number of winter-related injuries and can have an impact on the quality of life for the injured person."

SIMA, the national nonprofit organization representing the snow removal industry, has some tips on safe winter walking.

TIP #1: Wear proper footwear. Proper footwear should place the entire foot on the surface of the ground and have visible treads. Avoid a smooth sole and opt for a heavy treaded shoe with a flat bottom.

TIP #2: Accessorize to see and be seen. Wear sunglasses so that you can see in the reflective light of the snow. Wear a bright coat or scarf so that drivers can easily see you.

TIP #3: Plan ahead. While walking on snow or ice on sidewalks or in parking lots, walk consciously. Instead of looking down, look up and see where your feet will move next to anticipate ice or an uneven surface. Occasionally scan from left to right to ensure you are not in the way of vehicles or other hazards.

TIP #4: Make sure you can hear. While seeing the environment is important, you also want to be sure you can hear approaching traffic and other noises. Avoid listening to music or engaging in conversation that may prevent you from hearing oncoming traffic or snow removal equipment.

TIP #5: Anticipate ice. Be weary of thin sheets of ice that may appear as wet pavement (black ice). Often ice will appear in the morning, in shady spots or where the sun shines during the day and melted snow refreezes at night.

TIP #6: Walk steps slowly. When walking down steps, be sure to grip handrails firmly and plant your feet securely on each step.

TIP #7: Enter a building carefully. When you get to your destination such as school, work, shopping center, etc., be sure to look at the floor as you enter the building. The floor may be wet with melted snow and ice.

TIP #8: Be careful when you shift your weight. When stepping off a curb or getting into a car, be careful since shifting your weight may cause an imbalance and result in a fall.

TIP #9: Avoid taking shortcuts. Shortcuts are a good idea if you are in a hurry, but may be a bad idea if there is snow and ice on the ground. A shortcut path may be treacherous because it is likely to be located where snow and ice removal is not possible.

TIP #10: Look up. Be careful about what you walk under. Injuries also can result from falling snow/ice as it blows, melts, or breaks away from awnings, buildings, etc.

Following these tips will help ensure that you survive the snow and ice season safely.

On Friday, Jan. 11, at approximately 2:27 p.m., Officers' Paul Holland, Jim Menz, Ryan Donnelly and Officer John O'Donnell, working a detail nearby, responded to St. Mary's Cemetery for a report of a man with a rifle.

Upon arrival, Officer Holland observed two males in the cemetery. Officer Holland approached the two males cautiously and then obtained their identification. One of the males stated that he was the caller. The second male was dressed head to toe in camouflage, including pants, jacket and hat. Under the jacket, he was wearing a T-shirt that had POLICE printed across the chest and back. Officer Holland observed what appeared to be a long-range rifle with a tripod attached and a target approximately 15 feet away. This male, who said the rifle was his, was immediately detained and placed into handcuffs for safety.

LT. DAN MINTON

The caller was holding a bouquet of roses, which he stated he had intended to place on the grave of his mother in the cemetery. He stated that he came across the suspect, lying behind the rifle, pointing it at a target. The caller stated that he stayed in his vehicle and called the police. He added that he was in fear and disturbed by the incident. As the caller awaited the Police, the suspect walked towards him. The caller, fearing an attack, exited his vehicle, and pushed the suspect against the hood of his car and held him until the Police arrived.

The rifle appeared to be a .50 caliber sniper rifle with a laser scope. It was attached to an air tank and had air valves to contain high pressure. It had a tripod to assist in long range shooting. It was modified to be a Pre-charged Pneumatic Rifle. When asked about the rifle, the suspect stated that he would "charge" the rifle with carbon dioxide, and then hit the lever, which would expel a bullet from the rifle. This rifle was designed to shoot .50 caliber Muzzle loaded Bullets. Several "Mag Express" .50 caliber bullets were found alongside the rifle.

Officer Holland also noted that the suspect had a vehicle in the cemetery. Looking through the windows, the Officer could see two air rifles and an air pistol. There were also several air canisters with unknown gases in them. The Quincy Fire Department arrived on scene and determined that the canisters were not dangerous. Lieutenant Bob Gillan arrived on scene with his K-9 partner Ronan and determined that there were no explosives in the suspects' vehicle.

After Officer Menz read the suspect his Miranda Rights, Officer Holland questioned the suspect, who stated that he did not possess a Firearms Identification Card or a License to Carry permit, which was confirmed by Quincy Police Communications. At this time, the suspect was searched for more weapons. In his front pocket was a pill bottle from Stop and Shop without a label. The bottle contained ten 20 mg pills and nine 30 mg pills, identified through their marking as an Amphetamine and Dextroamphetamine (generic Adderall). The suspect said that the pills belonged to him and his wife, but could not provide a prescription. He also stated that the prescription was from Walgreens, yet the bottle stated Stop and Shop.

When asked about the weapons, the suspect stated he was "just shooting at a target." He stated that he made the rifle from a traditional .50 caliber rifle, using instructions he found on the Internet. The suspect said that he was familiar with the area because he grew up on Dayton St. From where the suspect had been laying with his rifle to the area where the target was located, the Officer projected that the suspect's former residence was directly over the target. It appeared that one .50 caliber round had been shot through the target.

The suspect, a 33-year-old Weymouth resident, was arrested and charged with, "Disturbing the Peace, Possession of Class B Drug, Illegal Possession of Ammunition Components and Carrying a Dangerous Weapon."

Nice Work!

NICE WORK goes out to Sergeant Joe Lencki, who was working detail at Adams St. and Alrick Rd. He observed a possible suspect from a breaking and entering earlier in the day on Albertina Rd. The suspect, upon seeing the Sergeant approach, dropped a duffel bag and fled over a fence. Sergeant Lencki gave chase as he informed the dispatcher he was in foot pursuit. The suspect jumped over fences and cut through yards attempting to lose the Sergeant.

The suspect, realizing that he wasn't going to escape the efforts of the Sergeant, went behind a house on Connell St., kicked the door in and attempted to hide. Sergeant Lencki directed responding Officers to surround the house. Once there were sufficient personnel, including a K-9 unit, the suspect was apprehended hiding in a closet.

The suspect, a 28-year-old Quincy resident with an extensive criminal record, was charged with numerous offenses including the breaking and entering into two dwellings. He spent most of the last decade in prison for breaking and entering as well as the theft of a firearm.

RULES OF THE ROAD:

SIGNALING/USE OF DIRECTIONALS

When you are driving on a roadway, other drivers expect you to follow the roadway, unless you show otherwise. This is why you must use signals whenever you make any move in traffic.

Your use of signals alerts pedestrians and motorists of your intention to turn and gives them time to react. Regardless of the kind of vehicle you are driving, you must use signals. If the electronic signals on your vehicle are not working, you must roll your driver's window down and use hand signals. Signals should be made through the driver's side window.

Slowing = left arm straight down.

You must signal in certain situations:

Changing lanes

Turning at an intersection or into a driveway

Pulling away from a curb

Pulling over to the side of the road

Entering or exiting an expressway or a freeway

Once you have completed your move, you must turn your signal off. Any time you want to turn, merge, join traffic from a stopped position, or change lanes, you must:

Check your mirrors for traffic behind you and check your blind spot on the side you are moving or turning towards.

Signal your intent to move.

Make your move.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You might feel bolder as each new success falls into place. But caution is still advised through the end of the week. Until then, a step-by-step approach is best.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) That cooperation you request could come at too high a price. Since few can beat the Bovine at being clever and resourceful, why not see what you can do on your own?

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Aspects favor a quieter time spent getting closer to the people who are especially important to you. There's always much more to learn and appreciate about each other.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The concerned Crab will act to resolve workplace misunderstandings before they get out of hand and cause more-serious problems. Co-workers rally to support your efforts.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) What the Big Cat might see as a disturbing act of disloyalty might just be a failure of communication on both sides. Take time for mediation rather than confrontation.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Be more patient with those who seem unwilling to accept your version of what's right. The fact is, there's a lot more to learn on all sides of this issue.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) It should be easier to assess the facts you'll need to make an important decision. But don't commit if you still have doubts. There could be more you need to know.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your excitement level remains high as you continue working on that new project. Expect some setbacks. But on the whole, all will move pretty much on schedule.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) It might be wise to be more prudent with expenses right now. But your financial situation should soon clear up, and you could be back shopping, happily as ever.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) You might prefer sticking with your current schedule. But some newly emerging information could persuade you to consider a change. Keep an open mind.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You might want to reject a suggested change. But it could be wise to go with the flow, at least for a while. You can always return to your first plan if you like.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You're bolstered by both the practical and poetic sides of your nature as you maneuver through some unsettled emotional situations. Things ease up by week's end.

BORN THIS WEEK: People reach out to your generosity and wisdom, and consider you a trusted and treasured friend.

Joan Kavanaugh

Remembered For Her Devotion To Church, Family, Friends, Community

Hundreds filled St. Mary's Church, West Quincy on Saturday, Jan. 19, to honor and bid farewell to Quincy resident Joan (Holbrow) Kavanaugh.

St. Mary's pastor, Rev. David Callahan who officiated at the Mass of the Christian Burial, described Joan's devotion to St. Mary's Church, her family, her friends and her community.

Joan's life centered on her family: Howard, her husband of 51 years, her daughters and their husbands, Donna and Brian Dennehey, Weymouth, and Carolyn and Steve O'Neil, Reading, and her sons and their wives, John and Carolyn, Chicago and Navy LCDR and Dr. Michael and Roberta of San Diego.

In his tribute to his mother, John recounted Joan's extraordinary impact on all the people she encountered; how her family and church always came first and her door was always open to everyone. Joan's ten-year-old granddaughter Jill O'Neil also spoke and lovingly recalled the precious times that she and all Joan's grandchildren spent with her Nana.

Joan leaves eight grandchildren, Patrick and Tim Dennehey of Weymouth, Christopher and Ryan Kavanaugh of Chicago; Nick and Jill O'Neil of Reading, Grace and Maggie Kavanaugh of San Diego.

A 40-year parishioner at St. Mary's Church, Joan loved working with the Liturgy Committee and, despite her illness, continued her work with converts and beautifying the church even into January. In mid-December, she helped the committee install the Nativity Scene and decorate St. Mary's altar for Christmas.

In addition, Joan had been an active parishioner and member of the liturgy group at St. Ann's Church, Wollaston.

Over the years, Joan also developed close friendships with her card and bowling club and was active in both until just a week before her death.

Joan, the daughter of the late Willmore and Marguerite (Callahan) Holbrow, was born in Boston and raised in Dorchester and Squantum. She leaves two sisters, Mary Long of Hingham and Laura Griffin of Milton, her brother, Willmore Holbrow of Diamond Bar, CA, and many devoted nieces and nephews. She was the sister of the late Frederick Holbrow of Braintree.

Over the years, she worked at AT&T, Fulham Brothers, and Marr Scaffolding Co., all of Boston but devoted most of her time to her family and her business skills to her family's flower shop, F.W. Holbrows of Boston, Dorchester and Quincy. She graduated from St. Joseph Academy, Roxbury and the former Boston Clerical School.

Burial was in St. Mary's Cemetery, West Quincy.

MLK Message: 'Believe In The Promise Of This Country'

GERMANTOWN AFTERSCHOOL STUDENTS in grades 3, 4, and 5 performed a poem titled "Martin Luther King, Jr. Had a Dream." Quincy Sun Photos/Emily Taft that he spent nine months in an immersion program," said Morrissey. "We know him now as someone who works for Steward Health Care. Steward Health Care may not mean much to people but, having a community hospital here in the city of Quincy is very important for people, especially as you get older. Having that kind of resource in this community for our young and for our old is a critical piece of the community fabric that we want to maintain."

For Morales, Martin Luther King's message rings true in his own life, growing up in Puerto Rico and moving to Lynn in 1986 with his family.

"For me, observing and celebrating today, Martin Luther King Jr. Day, is the same as celebrating the efforts of my parents, and thanking God that I live in a country that celebrates faith, family, work ethic, and embraces people like me, from a different background," said Morales. "The story of how I arrived in Massachusetts is probably similar to that of many of you in this room. I was fortunate to be born to parents that always put family first and always wanted more for their children. Early on my parents struggled to give us the opportunities that eluded them but worked incessantly to give us a better life."

Morales spoke of the challenges he faced as an immigrant coming to the country and not speaking English and the admiration he has for his parents, now as a parent himself.

"I spent my first year in bilingual education separated from other students and made to feel like an outcast. It was during my first months in the U.S. that I really understood, for the first time in my life, how really poor my family was," said Morales. "While I spent those early years feeling like an outcast, I could not imagine how it must have been for my parents. As a father of two now, I am honored and grateful for the selfless choices my parents made for me. Similar to many parents and individuals in this room my parents had the courage to follow their conviction and work hard to help me and my brothers and sister do much better."

Morales urged the audience to think of the people in their lives that have helped and pushed them to be a better person.

"Most of you in this room share some variation of my story. Maybe it wasn't a parent, maybe it was a mentor, a teacher, or a neighbor, regardless, someone in all of our lives pushed us or inspired us to succeed or made sacrifices to help all of us improve our lives," said Morales. "As you celebrate today's event and enjoy your day off from work, or school, be sure think about those that have made sacrifices for you, and those who have helped you to be a better person and have given you a better chance at an opportunity."

Mayor Thomas Koch, School Committee member Emily Lebo, Councilor Doug Gutro and several police officers attended the breakfast. John Ireland, vice president of operations for the South Shore YMCA, opened up the ceremony, thanked everyone for coming and said that Martin Luther King's life represented striving for equality among the American people.

"Most holidays are about celebrating," said Ireland. "This one is about challenge."

Father Tamiru Atraga of St. Bridget's in Abington offered the blessings, while the entertainment was offered by the Germantown afterschool student's grades 1-5 performing a dance to Alicia Keys' 'Girl on Fire,' and students in grades 3, 4, and 5 performing a poem titled "Martin Luther King Had a Dream."

North Quincy High School graduate Samantha Tan sang "Lift Every Voice and Sing," saying that the song is a message to all the children in her generation.

"This is a message that MLK had for our generation," said Tan. "This is a message for all the children that were called to shape the world, to fight for love and peace, to destroy world hunger, to stand and sing for justice."

Parents Ask Board To Put Locks On All Classroom Doors

Tighter Security Measures Sought In Aftermath Of Newtown Tragedy

By EMILY TAFT

Over 20 parents stood behind Jan Robinson as she spoke to the school committee on Jan. 23rd asking members to take additional steps to keep the children of the Quincy Public School system safe by putting locks on all individual classroom doors.

"I'm the parent of a first grade student in Quincy at a school that has no locks on the individual doors. In light of recent events in Newtown, CT the safety of our children at school is at the forefront of the minds of all of us parents," said Robinson. "It is apparent that additional steps must be taken to keep our children safe. I know that my daughter's administrators and teachers as well as the Quincy Police Department and the Quincy Public School Security Department take our children's safety very seriously.

"Recently it has come to our attention that some of the schools in Quincy lack locks on individual classroom doors. Once a perpetrator is in a school, like in Newtown, CT the only defense a child has is a lock on the door, getting out of site, followed by the human shield of his or her teacher. Quincy should give our teachers all the tools necessary to help protect our children. While locks may not be a perfect solution to a tragedy such as Newtown, this simple deterrent may have saved many children's lives there."

Although Robinson was the only one to speak during open forum, she told the school committee members a story a friend had told her about their child saying she would just lock the class-

Petition Passes City Council 8-0 Vote

20 MPH Speed Limit Sought On City's Residential Streets

By SCOTT JACKSON

Speed limits on Quincy's residential streets could be cut to 20 miles per hour as the result of a home rule petition passed by an 8-0 vote of the City Council.

The petition, which needs to be approved by the Legislature, would enable the city to lower the speed limit in densely populated neighborhoods - defined as portions of streets with houses closer than 100 feet on average for more than an eighth of a mile - from 30 to 20 miles per hour.

The council passed a similar petition in May of 2011, and it was sent to the Legislature after Mayor Tom Koch signed it. The Legislature failed to approve the petition before its session expired at the end of 2012, and Ward 3 Kevin Coughlin Councillor reintroduced the measure at the behest of Sen. John Keenan.

"I think it's somewhat coincidental but timely when this body has been talking most recently about safety for pedestrians and bicyclists throughout the city that we once again undertake this effort to adopt in the City of Quincy what I think is a more reasonable and rational speed limit for densely populated neighborhoods," Coughlin said.

He explained that analysis by federal agencies showed that speeds over 20 miles per hour increase the risk of bodily harm to pe-

Lynch Supports Ban On Assault Weapons; Seeks $ For Downtown

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Cong. Stephen Lynch, Quincy's representative in the new 8th District, said he supports banning military-type assault weapons and high-capacity magazines and applauded the Pentagon's decision to remove remaining restrictions allowing women to serve in combat.

The seven-term Congressman and South Boston Democrat also commented on other local and national topics - including the new Quincy Center development project - during a recent interview with The Quincy Sun. Lynch was also expected to announce his decision about a bid for the U.S.

In the aftermath of the tragic shooting at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, CT, last month, Lynch said he supports initiatives introduced by President Barack Obama to crack down on assault weapons.

"I think the President has come up with a set of initiatives that I support. He's talked about reinstituting the assault weapons ban. I agree. That did not destroy the Second Amendment by having that in. It lapsed and I would support reinstituting

Seven New Firefighters Sworn-In At City Hall Ceremony

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy's seven newest firefighters were sworn in Friday at City Hall before a standing-room only crowd of family, friends, and city and Fire Department officials.

The new firefighters — David Britt, Stephen Kelley, Timothy Kennedy, Mark Paolucci, Eric Eleey, Edward Hamilton, and Scott O'Hare — were sworn in by Assistant City Clerk Maureen Hallsen. They began their careers as firefighters Monday at the Boston Fire Academy on Moon Island.

Mayor Tom Koch said that when they finish their time at the academy, they will be joining an excellent department.

"I know you still have to go through the academy, but you'll be joining the ranks of an outstanding Fire Department with some great leadership," Koch said. "It's an outstanding department, you do a good job. Not only are you there every day answering calls — you never know what the call necessarily is — but you are also very active in the community on a regular basis."

The mayor added that he was happy to bring in new firefighters after Quincy had gone through tight budget years earlier in his tenure.

"Today is a day for to celebrate for each of you. All your families are very happy, as they should be. And we're very happy. We've gone through some very difficult budget years. We have stabilized but it wasn't long ago we were laying people off," Koch said. "This is a great day — hiring people — and everybody is happy."

The new firefighters are all veterans. Fire Chief Joseph Barron said he was pleased the new recruits would have a chance to serve the city after serving the nation.

"It is a rewarding career, an excellent department — the best department in the country for my money. These gentlemen are going to be an excellent addition. They went through a lengthy vetting process to get here today. They've all served their country and served it well and I'm very pleased to have them come in and serve this community," Barron said.

Two of the new firefighters are following in their fathers' footsteps. Paolucci's father Steve is an active duty firefighter in the department, and his uncle John DiPietro is a retired captain. O'Hare's father Peter is a retired lieutenant, and the son's lifelong goal was to be a firefighter — he enlisted in the Air Force to help make that goal a reality.

"It's been a lifelong thing for me. It was why I joined the military in the first place was in hopes of someday getting on the Fire Department. It's just been a dream for me and it's working out now," Scott O'Hare said. "It's a great day for me, my family, and my friends."

But Lt. O'Hare didn't tell his son about what lies ahead at the fire academy, because he wants him to experience it on his own.

"He kind of wants me to experience it for myself," Scott O'Hare said. "He's going to let me go through it and learn along the way."

Eleey looked up to firefighters when he was growing up in Quincy. While serving as a corpsman in the Navy, he decided to become a firefighter to help serve his hometown.

"As a little kid growing up I always admired firefighters. Then after joining the service I thought being a firefighter was the best way I could help out my community and the city I grew up in," Eleey said. "It feels amazing [being here] — having my family here, other firefighters, and just seeing all the camaraderie."

The seven new firefighters will spend 14 weeks training at the fire academy. Barron said the academy would provide extensive training in all areas of firefighting.

"They're going to be training with the City of Boston out on Moon Island, which is close proximately so that's a big plus. They'll cover every aspect of firefighting whether it's venting a building, searching it for occupants, operating hose lines to extinguish," Barron said. "They touch on aspects of building construction which are pertinent to the fire service. They then have a large component of fire science and hazardous materials so when they're finished they're trained to the operational levels of hazardous material mitigation."

Following the academy, the new recruits will be probationary firefighters for one year. They must pass a state certification test and a swimming test mandated by the city.

In addition to the seven recruits sworn in on Friday, the city will hire Edward Chaisson and Michael Griffith as firefighters. Both of them are in the military and currently deployed, and they will be sworn in once they return from duty. The Fire Department now has 197 personnel in its ranks, including Chaisson and Griffith, which is the maximum amount budgeted for.

THE HEALING GEMSTONE

Amethyst, the birthstone for February, is associated with passion as well as healing. Symbolizing light energy, quartz crystal is one of the most sacred stones of ancient cultures. In particular, the purple crystalline quartz known as amethyst has long been used by healers to focus energy. As part of their stock in trade, healers often wear several pieces of jewelry (most notably necklaces) with amethysts set in silver. While the person in need of healing holds an amethyst, the healer places another amethyst on the area of the body in need of healing. This beautiful purple gemstone is most often used to treat respiratory problems. Amethysts are also used to focus sunlight in the home to promote cleanliness and positivity.

The deep purple color of amethyst has been known for centuries as the color of royalty and is even part of the British Crown Jewels. ## Cahill Case Could Be Resolved Feb. 5

The status of corruption charges pending against former Treasurer Tim Cahill could be resolved next Tuesday.

Brad Bailey, an attorney for Cahill, said both sides would have an update for Judge Christine Roach at the upcoming hearing, scheduled for 2 p.m. on Feb. 5 inside the Suffolk County Superior Courthouse.

"Both sides will let Judge Roach know about the status of the case," Bailey said. "We certainly will have something to report."

This will be the second status hearing on the Cahill case – the first one took place Jan. 4. A second hearing was supposed to take place Jan. 25, but that was bumped to Feb. 5 because of a scheduling conflict with the court.

Cahill, a Quincy resident and former city councilor, was charged with two counts of conspiracy regarding Lottery ads that ran in 2010. Prosecutors allege the ads were intended to bolster Cahill's ultimately unsuccessful campaign for governor. Cahill has maintained that the ads were needed to protect the Lottery's integrity from Republican Governors Association attack ads. Cahill wasn't mentioned by name and his voice and likeness were not used in the ads.

On Dec. 12 a mistrial was declared on charges against Cahill. Judge Christine Roach declared a mistrial on Dec. 12, after the jury failed to reach a unanimous verdict on the charges.

Kelly New QHA Board Commissioner

By SCOTT JACKSON

Former Ward 1 Councilor Leo Kelly's appointment to the Quincy Housing Authority's Board of Commissioners was approved by an 8-0 vote of the City Council Tuesday night.

Kelly worked for the Housing Authority as a project manager until his retirement 15 years ago. He served on the council prior to working there, and returned to it in 2003. He left the council after deciding not to run in 2009 and serves as the chairman of the city's Beaches and Coastal Commission. His successor on the council, Ward 1 Councilor Margaret Laforest, praised him for his commitment to the environment, affordable housing, and the city.

"Leo's commitment to the environment is unparalleled and he continues to serve us on the Beaches and Coastal Commission. He has also been a tireless advocate for affordable housing for Quincy residents," Laforest said. "He has a lifelong commitment to service in Quincy and it has been tough shoes to fill. Leo has been a long-term mentor to me and I am thankful for his friendship. I am grateful for his commitment to Ward 1 and the City of Quincy."

Councillor Doug Gutro,

who served on the council with Kelly, said he was a mentor who would bring perspective, experience, and stability to the board.

"Leo, in my judgment, is an icon in the City of Quincy. He has been a mentor and a good friend of mine. He's done all that Councilor Laforest said and more," Gutro said. "He's an honest man. He's a hard worker. He's reasonable. He builds bridges not walls. He'll bring perspective, experience, and stability to the Housing Authority."

Councillor Joe Finn, who chairs the council's housing committee, praised Mayor Tom Koch for nominating Kelly. He said Kelly was a great advocate for affordable housing and families.

"I'm willing to say when I disagree with something the mayor does, I'd like to take the opportunity to affirm what he's doing in this instance," Finn said. "As chair of the housing committee, I can not think of a single greater advocate for affordable housing in the City of Quincy than Leo. Not just simply that, but the work in relations to the needs ordinary working families here in the city face – he always, while serving on the council, was an advocate for all those issues."

Kelly thanked the mayor for appointing him and the council for confirming the appointment.

"It's with great pleasure that I serve on the Housing Authority Board of Commissioners. Like I told Danny – Danny's a commissioner, and I'm a commissioner," Kelly quipped, referring to his former colleague on the council and current Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymond.

Kelly's appointment was effective immediately and his term expires in February 2017. He said he was ready to start his new job immediately.

"They meet tomorrow (Wednesday) at four o'clock, the housing authority does, and I intend to make that meeting and get going with the business of doing some work on there. I appreciate, again, very, very much your kind words and all your votes," Kelly said.

Arbitrator Upholds Firing Of Police Officer

By SCOTT JACKSON

An independent arbitrator has denied a grievance filed against the city on behalf of a fired Quincy Police officer.

Officer Joseph McGunigle was fired by Police Chief Paul Keenan in June following an independent hearing. Before being fired, McGunigle's firearms license was revoked by the chief after McGunigle was alleged to have visited the police station while under a month-long suspension that arose from a long-running dispute with McGunigle's Houghs Neck neighbors.

In his ruling dated Sunday arbitrator Philip Dunn found Keenan had just cause to terminate McGunigle because of the revocation of the gun license.

"The city has for decades has required that police officers in Quincy maintain a valid license to carry (LTC) as a condition of continuing employment. The chief revoked the grievant's (McGunigle's) LTC, the grievant appealed to the District Court, and the court affirmed the chief's revocation action. Given these circumstances, the city had just cause to terminate the grievant's employment, without consideration of the other cited bases for termination. The grievance is denied," Dunn wrote in his decision.

The Quincy Police Patrol Officers' Association filed the grievance. They argued in part that police officers are allowed under state to carry a weapon on the job, even if they don't have a firearms permit, at the discretion of the police chief. Dunn dismissed that argument in his decision, saying it lacked common sense.

"This argument defies common sense. There is no rational reason that Chief Keenan would determine that Officer McGunigle is not suitable to carry a firearm under the state standards, but would turn around and authorize him to carry a weapon under a statute that provides the chief discretion to issue weapons to police officers under his command," Dunn wrote.

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows – a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized... or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get: > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required > A mortgage with a competitive rate > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity – most likely once-in-a-lifetime – for first-time homebuyers. Is that you...or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

Lynch Senate Bid Appears Imminent

Today - Thursday - is "Decision Day" for Cong. Stephen Lynch.

Quincy's new representative in Congress will likely announce his decision about a bid for John Kerry's vacated U.S. Senate seat. On Tuesday, Kerry was confirmed by the Senate as President Obama's new Secretary of State.

During a visit to The Sun last Friday, the South Boston Democrat said he was coming to a decision but he wouldn't make it public until after Kerry's nomination had been confirmed.

So while official word would have to wait until today, Lynch certainly sounded like a candidate gearing up for a bid to fill Kerry's unexpired Senate term. And he may be the only Democrat to challenge Cong. Ed Markey - the only candidate officially in the race so far as of this writing - for their party's nomination.

"Mr. Markey has cleared the field (from potential Democratic contenders). I think there are a lot of people who are interested but when they come in with a $40 million Super Political Action Committee (to help finance Markey's campaign) everyone else has pretty much resigned themselves to the fact that they can't win it," Lynch said.

But the South Boston Democrat isn't one of them.

"I still think there is a path to victory and that we can get there. It's an uphill path to victory." He pauses and then adds:

"I would rather have an election than a selection and I think the people of Massachusetts have shown their willingness to really think about that and think about how they are best represented.

"I just think that we could appeal to that sense of fairness on their part and also they might look at my candidacy as being something that reflects better the concerns that they have in their daily lives."

Lynch would be the second Democrat to officially announce a bid to fill the remainder of Kerry's Senate term that expires in 2014. Primary day for the Special Senate Election is Tuesday, April 30. The final election is set for Tuesday, June 25. The winner of the special election would be eligible to run for a full six-year term next year.

A Lynch-Markey primary battle would be a heavyweight bout - two incumbent Congressmen vying for the same Senate seat. And the general election could be a biggie, too, if a well-known, well-financed Republican gets in the race, too, such as former Sen. Scott Brown. But some political observers think Brown - who was unseated by Elizabeth Warren last November - may opt to run for governor next year.

So while Lynch wouldn't give us a yes or no answer on his Senate decision, he certainly sounded like he'll be off and running soon.

He acknowledged the disparity between Markey's campaign war chest and his own. To date, Markey has about $3 million in his own account and will benefit from millions more in Super Political Action Committee funds. Lynch has about $800,000 in his campaign account.

"I think I have to concede that I will be outspent but my goal is not to purchase this seat. My goal is to earn it," said Lynch, who grew up in public housing in South Boston and later worked as an iron worker at the Fore River shipyard before it closed.

"I'm going to have to have more people out there working for me and do it in a much more grass-roots fashion than simply getting on TV and bombarding my opponent with ads. I'm not going to win that way and I'm not going to run my campaign that way.

"I think I will have enough money to run a competent campaign," Lynch continued. "I will get my message out and try to use every opportunity to get my message out. I can promise you that we will be outspent considerably in this campaign but I have seen folks spend an awful amount of money on campaigns - tens of millions of dollars - and lose. That could happen again here.

"I will be outspent but I won't be outworked," he vows.

Party politics may also be a factor in a Lynch-Markey nomination showdown.

"Ed is more liberal than I am and I do believe my positions are moderate. But again, I think it goes to what the people want. Right now we have a system in Washington where the Democrats - God Bless them - go out and find the most liberal left-wing candidate we can possibly send and we send them to Washington.

"The Republicans - God Bless them - they look for the most right wing, conservative person that they can send and they send them to Washington.

"And then we all step back and scratch our heads - why can't these folks get along? The fact of the matter is you need some people down there with common sense. I consider myself a common-sense Democrat. I consider myself a moderate and there's not a whole lot of that going on in Washington because of the primary system.

"But given my experience and my temperament and my ability to bring folks together, I can help us work through some of these problems."

Lynch said the era of extreme partisan politics must end.

"I just don't think stomping your feet and sticking to your extreme positions is the way forward for this country. We have some serious, serious problems to grapple with and we are playing this same game where the Democrats run over and kick the other guy in the shins and they'll run over and kick us in the shins. That's not going to get us anywhere.

"We have to grow up and we take this much more seriously. There may have been a time in our nation's history when we could afford that crap but we can't afford that anymore. We need to buckle down and get serious about this."

Lynch certainly has a life story that could resonate with many voters - especially those who are working more and more for seemingly less and less.

He grew up in public housing with five sisters and mom and dad "all jammed up into a little apartment in the Old Colony Housing Projects in South Boston.

"We struggled. All the families were struggling at that time. My dad says there were times in our family's history that we had to save up to be poor."

Lynch became an iron worker like his father and when his little sisters became old enough to attend school full-time, his mom got a job at the post office to help support the family, too.

"I know what it is like to struggle. Ironworking is a very tough industry, physically and economically. You're always working yourself out of a job."

After he and his dad were both laid off in the late 1970s, Lynch went to work in a steel mill in Indiana to help support his family back home in Boston.

"I know what it is to stand in an unemployment line. I know what it is to struggle in during a tough economy. I was a welder at the Quincy shipyard until that place closed down because what I believe was foreign pressure and bad trade agreements made it profitable for companies to move their work off-shore.

"I worked at the General Motors facility up in Framingham and I saw what happened when GM made a corporate decision to close U.S. plants and then shortly thereafter they opened three plants in Mexico just over the border. I saw what that type of decision did to Framingham and Natick not to mention the 2,300 autoworkers who were there.

"If I were elected, I wouldn't look at public housing as a program, I'd look at it as my home. I wouldn't look at trade agreements simply as government policy, I'd look at it as someone who has seen communities such as Quincy and Framingham and Natick struggle mightily to recover from bad trade agreements that left them at a competitive disadvantage to other countries and to other communities that were being exploited for low-cost labor.

"I'd look at those things a lot differently than the average person in the U.S. Senate. I think the U.S. Senate has become a very elite club. Some of my critics have said I wouldn't fit in the U.S. Senate and I think they are absolutely right but I don't think that's a bad thing at all.

"I think at least one person there should have strapped on a pair of work boots and had an experience in their life that is similar to the people that they represent.

"I think all of those things could weigh in to the decision on the part of the people of Massachusetts as to who would best represent their interests and would be best represent what they are going through."

The first decision - the one Lynch will make about being a candidate for U.S. Senate - comes today.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS AN October 1921 real photo postcard showing St. Mary's Hall at 265 Willard Street in West Quincy. The occasion was to celebrate the acquisition and re-opening of the hall by Rev. William O'Connor, pastor of St. Mary's Church on Crescent Street. Built in 1899, the hall had previously been owned by the St. Mary's Temperance Society that was founded in 1875 by a group of St. Mary's parishioners. The society's purpose was to administer various methods of dealing with the problems created by the vice of intemperance. This was their third building on this site; the first two were destroyed by fire. The society was active for over 40 years, but after World War I their membership dropped and they could no longer maintain the property. Then, in accordance with their constitution, the property reverted to the pastor of St. Mary's parish. Fr. O'Connor refurbished the building and the hall was used for all sorts of activities by the church for many years. To help maintain the property, they leased a portion of the building for over 30 years to The Cosgrove Bros. Inc., manufacturers of women's lingerie. Cosgrove had over 75 employees here before they closed in the late 1950's. Others then owned the building until 1984 when it was purchased by its present owner, Frank and Yogi Trainor's Commonwealth Building Inc., a construction contracting company. The company has substantially remodeled and modernized this building inside and out so that it hardly resembles this old picture. Note that in the center left of the picture, over the tree tops, you can see the grout piles of the Swingles and Granite Rail quarries. ### Over 10,000 Apply For Jobs At GD Shipyard

More than 10,500 men applied for work at the soon-to-be reopened Fore River Shipyard during a four-day application period at the State Division of Employment Security office at 160 Parkway.

The Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics, the new owner of the shipyard, announced it would be hiring several hundred workers initially for the reopening of the yard, which was expected in two weeks.

The Bethlehem Steel Co. ceased operating the shipyard on Dec. 31 and sold it to General Dynamics. Many of those in the employment line had worked at the yard before and expected improved conditions under the new owner.

"I hear it's a progressive company," said James Moses of Hyde Park, who had worked as a welder at the yard for 11 years before being laid off in December.

Meanwhile, the Fore River Metal Trades Council opened an office at 23 Chestnut St. in a drive to organize the workers, who had been represented by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers under Bethlehem.

WORLD'S FAIR EXHIBIT

City Historian William C. Edwards was making a cost study of a proposal to sponsor a Quincy historical exhibit at the New York World's Fair, which was scheduled to open in April.

The proposal was made by Rep. Joseph E. Brett and would include a replica of one of the cars that was used on the first commercial railroad in West Quincy.

RAPID TRANSIT OPPOSED

Felix C. Favorite, executive secretary of the Quincy Home and Property Owners Association, said his board of directors had voted to oppose an extension of the Boston rapid transit system to Quincy.

Reasonable estimates were that the MTA deficit would add at least $6 to the Quincy tax rate, he said, "an unjustified amount for homeowners to pay for the transportation of less than three percent of the population of Quincy."

The Four Chaplains Observance Feb. 3

This is the story of four Army chaplains aboard the troopship S.S. Dorchester going overseas in January of 1943 with 904 men onboard and chaplains Rev. Fox, Goode, Poling, Washington.

The Dorchester was a slow ship in the convoy and in the morning of Feb. 3rd she was hit by a torpedo from a German sub U-456. Soldiers were in a panic until the four chaplains could calm them down and hand out life jackets to those who didn't have one until they were all gone.

That's when the four chaplains gave their own jackets to those who forgot them.

A survivor looking back saw the chaplains holding hands as the ship went down.

By a vote of Congress on Jan. 18, 1961, a special medal of heroism was posthumously awarded to the Four Chaplains. Feb. 3rd became Four Chaplains Observance Day.

This is the ideal of brotherhood.

This is what the chaplains gave us and we are proud to call them heroes.

8th Grader Alexander Cox Cast In Production Of 'Oliver'

By EMILY TAFT

For Central Middle School eighth grader Alexander Cox being a part of different theatre companies has allowed him to become more of an open and outgoing young man.

"Theatre has really boosted my confidence and made me more open with who I am," said Cox. "It made me, me and I hope my story really inspires someone to really do something they want to try because it might make them a lot happier."

Cox, a 13-year-old North Quincy resident, has performed in a handful of musicals. His most recent, Oliver! started on Jan. 25th at the Wheelock Family Theatre Company in Boston and runs through Feb. 24th. Cox plays the role of one of Fagin's kids, singing in at least four different songs, and performing in three scenes in the musical.

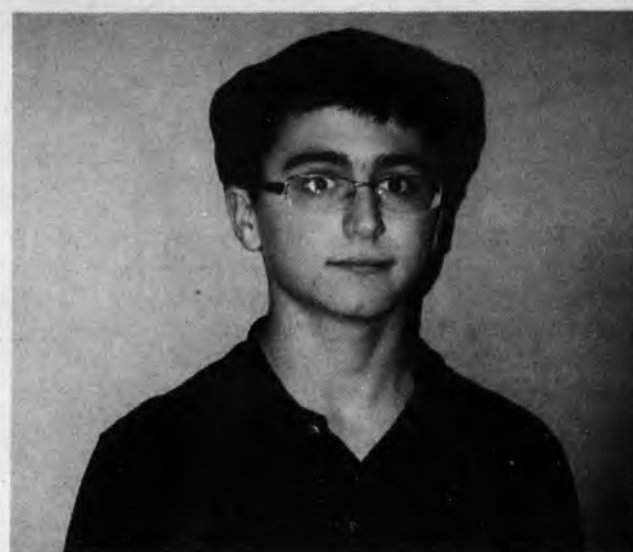

As one of Fagin's kids, Cox is a part of a group of six children who learn to pick pocket along with other criminal activities in exchange for a roof over their heads.

Cox's musical theatre career started when he joined the Squantum School Players three years ago. He then joined the South Shore School of Theatre after seeing an advertisement in a program of a play he attended.

"I did a tiny bit of shows in elementary school but then the summer before fifth grade was when I started my first summer with South Shore School of Theatre and it just started escalating from there," said Cox. "I went and saw Quincy High School's production of Seussical (The Musical), which in the program I saw an advertisement for South Shore School of Theatre. Through that I got really interested in theatre, I have done three shows with them."

Since he was 10-years old Cox has performed in musicals such as Bye Bye Birdie, Children of Eden, Music Man, Grease and The Jungle Book. He said that he doesn't necessarily go for the big roles, but has had some in the past, which surprised him.

"Jungle Book, at Central Middle School, was an interesting show because I played Mowgli and I was very surprised to get that role," said Cox. "Mowgli is typically played by one of the younger people in the cast, and I was one of the older people. I always try to get the bigger role but if I don't get them I don't mind because more often then not it's still a really fun experience."

'THEATRE HAS REALLY boosted my confidence,' says 13-year-old Alexander Cox of North Quincy who is cast in Wheelock Family Theatre Company's production of Oliver.

ALEXANDER COX portrayed Abel in the South Shore School of Theatre's production of "Children of Eden" last August.

Cox said that there are challenging parts to both the performance and preparation aspect of being in a musical.

"Memorizing of the lines and the auditioning are the two most difficult parts of preparing for a show. Auditioning is nerve racking and the preparation that goes into it is a lot different at each audition. Performing in front of a large group is a lot different then performing in front of a small group," said Cox.

"With the performance aspect of it I would have to say staying in character is the hardest part, especially in comedic shows and not laughing when you're not supposed to laugh is sometimes really hard. The most fun part of being a part of a show is tech week onward. Tech week is the week right before the show where we basically have rehearsals every night and we run the show in costume and everything. That's where you see the whole show come together with all the lights, the sound, the set, the costumes, and the orchestra."

Cox is a busy 13-year-old, not only does he perform in musicals throughout the year, but he also is a black belt in Tae Kwon Do, knows how to play the Viola, Alto Saxophone and the Baritone Saxophone, and fund-raises for different animal organizations, which he says is his true passion.

"I feel like most of this is a hobby, and animals is where I am heading for work," said Cox. "I love animals, they have been my obsession since I was very little. I would like to work in animal behavior. Ultimately I would like to be a zoologist but performing is something I would always like to be a part of. It is a really fun thing to be a part of and the people are very accepting and easy to get along with."

'A Raisin In The Sun' At ENC Feb. 14-16

The Eastern Nazarene College Theatre Department will present its production of "A Raisin in the Sun" at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 14-16 at the Cove Fine Arts Center on the college's main Quincy campus.

First presented on Broadway in 1959 – and later turned into a feature film starring Sidney Poitier – Lorraine Hansberry's "A Raisin in the Sun" recounts the story of the Youngers, an African American family seeking to escape from their South Side Chicago apartment and achieve the American Dream amid the tension and upheaval of the Civil Rights Movement.

Director Tara Brooke Watkins said "A Raisin in the Sun" marks ENC's first theater production to address the black experience in America.

"Half of ENC's theater majors are African American, as is a significant portion of the college's overall student population," she said, noting that February is African American History Month. "And just like the characters in the play are not fully aware of their African heritage, the cast was not fully aware of the historical struggle of black Americans. It has been a teaching opportunity for all of us from the moment of the first rehearsal."

To offer a fresh take on the production, ENC will present the play in a "black box format," whereby the audience is seated on the stage along with the actors.

"The crux of the play hinges on whether this family will be able to move out of their cramped apartment," Watkins said. "The black box format will bring the audience right into that tiny apartment, bringing awareness to the family's plight in a whole new way."

Each performance will also be followed by conversations between the audience and the actors.

Eastern Nazarene College is located at 23 E. Elm Ave. in Quincy. Tickets for A Raisin in the Sun are $10 general admission, $8 students and seniors, $5 children 12 and under. Seating is limited and advance tickets are recommended. For tickets or more information, call the ENC box office at 617-745-3715 or visit www.brownpapertickets.com.

Tracy's Zucchini Chowder

I can always count on getting a recipe while visiting a friend or a relative—this time it was at my daughter Suzie's house when her friend Tracy gave me this delicious chowder recipe made with zucchini.

When I made it, I substituted the evaporated milk it called for, and instead used coconut creamer.

ZUCCHINI CHOWDER

2 medium sized zucchini (sliced)
1 medium onion (chopped)
2 tablespoons fresh parsley
1 teaspoon basil
1/3 cup butter
1/3 cup flour
salt and pepper
3 cups chicken stock with 1 teaspoon of better-than-bouillon)

1 teaspoon lemon juice
1-14 ounce can diced tomatoes
1/2 cup corn
1 small carton coconut creamer (or 1-12 ounce can evaporated milk)

In the melted butter, sauté the onion, parsley, basil and zucchini until vegetables are tender. Stir in the flour gradually, and the salt and pepper. Add the chicken stock, lemon juice, and slowly bring it to a boil. Cool, and then stir for two minutes.

Now add the tomatoes, milk and corn. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat, cover and simmer for five-seven minutes).

P.S. If you do not have better-than-bouillon, use one or two bouillon cubes.

Apple, Raisin, Date Sugarless Cookie

I am always looking for something new and different and if I am baking, it's good sometimes to use less sugar than some recipes call for.

I found an old recipe that I had made without sugar and what I like most about this cookie, is that no sugar substitute is used either. I find these substitutes extremely bitter when used for baking.

These cookies are strictly natural with fruits as its sweetener, and can be made ahead of time. Kept in the refrigerator, they can be enjoyed anytime and guaranteed to satisfy your sweet tooth while not adding lots of calories.

APPLE, RAISIN DATES COOKIE
1 cup raisins

1/2 cup chopped apples
1/2 cup dates (chopped)
1 cup water
1/2 cup butter or margarine
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup oats
2 beaten eggs
3/4 cup chopped walnuts or pecans nuts (unsalted peanuts can also be used)

Boil the raisins, apples and dates in the water for three minutes on low heat. Add the butter or margarine and cool slightly. Add remaining ingredients, mix well, and refrigerate for an hour.

On a greased cookie sheet, drop by spoonfuls and bake in a 350-degree oven for 10-12 minutes. Cool on cake rack.

Garden Club Welcomes Community To 'Hosta & Companion Planting' Program

The community is invited to attend the Wollaston Garden Club's up-coming monthly programs.

The program for Thursday, Feb. 21 at 12:30 p.m. at Wollaston Congregational Church Social Hall, 48 Winthrop Ave. in Quincy, is on "Hosta and Companion Plantings."

This program will be conducted by Chuck Doughty and Sue DuBrava, co-owners of Cochato Nursery in Holbrook, who will present a power point presentation and lecture discussing the many strategies for integrating hosta into our landscape designs.

Garden club members have long recognized the value of planting hostas in our own garden beds. This program is designed to give a deeper understanding of how to choose the right hosta with the right shrub, or companion plant; and how to translate that information to our own gardens.

Programs for the rest of the garden club season are held either during the day or evening on a rotating basis on the third Thursday of the month.

Get introduced to "garden club" by attending a meeting. Founded 85 years ago, the garden club presently has 119 members, including men and women gardeners of all ages, abilities and interests, from novice to master gardener.

More information about each program can be found on the garden club's web site: www.wollastongardenclub.org.

Other upcoming programs are:

School Committee Urged To Bring Back Media Specialists

By EMILY TAFT

Over 30 concerned parents of students in the Quincy Public School System urged school committee members at its Jan. 23rd meeting to work hard and be creative to include in next year's budget funds for media specialists in the schools.

"As a parent, we have invested time and resources in developing and updating computer labs, funding software programs, and working collaboratively with staff to bring technology to the classrooms. Long hours have been spent checking out and re-shelving books," said Shelly Andrews, a parent of a seventh grader and a junior in high school.

"To maximize our investment in our children's success we must insist that the City of Quincy provide the necessary professional staff for all of the learning spaces within our schools. Therefore, we petition the Quincy School Committee, Mayor Thomas P. Koch, Vice Chairwoman Mrs. Barbara Isola, and Dr. Richard DeCristofaro, Superintendent of Schools, to restore funding for media specialists for all Quincy Public Schools for the school year 2013-2014.

"We request that avenues be explored to obtain and dedicate funding for media specialist positions for the current academic year."

The Citywide Parent Council Organization organized the presentation and submitted in a petition with over 1,500 signatures from parents, grandparents, and residents of Quincy.

"I expected support for media specialists at the recent school committee meeting after meeting with a few of the parents from the Citywide PTO a couple of weeks ago," said School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro said. "There is a media specialist in both high schools, and with the new teacher contracts for next year, we built in a plan for elementary library support next year, which will allow classrooms at least 20 minutes per week to be able to go to the library.

"We will be looking at the media specialist position in all schools along with any opportunities we may have very closely," he said.

Parents walked up to the podium during open forum of last Wednesday's meeting asking school committee members to get creative and bring money back into the budget so their children will have access to their school libraries along with access to a media specialist.

The school committee cut the funding of media specialists in elementary and middle schools during budget cuts in 2011. Since the cuts parents have been volunteering at their children's respective schools to allow for the libraries to be open at least once a week.

"Our children need media centers staffed by licensed media specialists who will collaborate with classroom teachers to develop strategies to meet the goals and objectives of common core standards in Massachusetts frameworks," said Corrina Lund, a parent of a second grader at Beechwood Knoll School. "We have media centers, we have the resources, we have the books, we have the computers, but do not have a trained educator to make those physical resources accessible to the children I think is really a shame."

Dara Gurwitch, a father of two boys who attend the Bernazzani Elementary School, provided statistics indicating media specialists in libraries results in students having higher reading levels, higher grades, and even higher MCAS scores.

"Across the United States research has shown that students in schools with good libraries, learn more, get better grades, and score higher on standardized test scores than their peers in schools without libraries," said Gurwitch. "There have been more than 60 studies in over 22 different states all confirming this link between student achievement and the presence of school libraries staffed with qualified school library media specialists."

Diane Hill, a mother of a fourth grader at Lincoln Hancock, said that the school's library has over 17,000 books but is only able to be open one and a half days a week.

"I'd like to open with a quote from a librarian named Eleanor Crumble-hulme who said, 'Cutting libraries during a recession is like cutting hospitals during a plague,'" said Hill. "Today, Lincoln Hancock's library is staffed one and a half days a week by parent volunteers. This allows approximately 20 classes of students, which is over 400 students, to withdraw books weekly.

"Because of the lack of staffing to check in and re-shelve books, children that do get to the library are allowed only one book a week. Since September our parents have checked out over 4,000 books for our students, average class time in the library is 15 minutes. For many of our children this is the only library experience they will have."

John Segale, a parent of a fifth grader at Sterling Middle School, shared a story of an experience at his elementary school library when he was a kid.

"Like most boys my age I was crazy about dinosaurs, cavemen, anything to do with the prehistoric world, this was my passion. I was also beginning to show some interest in and aptitude for the fine arts, painting and drawing," said Segale. "I remember one afternoon when I went to my school library and the librarian called me over to her desk, she told me that the library had recently received a new book and she wanted me to be the first one in the school to check it out.

"I remember the feeling I had knowing that someone, not a parent or relative, but some adult had shown an interest in me and knew my likes and dislikes. Someone who didn't have to be paying attention to me. That feeling is one of the few totally positive memories I have from my elementary school years.

"That's the kind of thing that I am afraid the children of Quincy are missing out on. What kind of memories will our children have 30 years from now? Abandon libraries and stacks of books gathering dust, or someone who will instill in them a love of reading and a love of learning. I urge you all please find some way to get the librarians back in our schools."

After the presentation, school committee member Emily Lebo moved the topic into the Teaching and Learning Subcommittee meeting for further discussion. Many members of the school committee expressed their gratitude to the parents who spoke for keeping the presentation on topic and respectful.

"I want to thank all the parents that came out tonight. It is very helpful for us to be able to do our jobs by having the parents of the city come out and speak to us, whether they're parents, grandparents, citizens of the city because I do really believe the foundation of our city is in education," said school committee member Anne Mahoney. "It is helpful for us, because when we are making these decisions we're making them on behalf of them, and when they come out and speak to us we're able to really understand where our cuts, when we have to make them, are hitting in our schools and how it's impacting families."

said that the topic of media specialists has always been at the forefront of conversations between school committee members.

"I thought this open forum was very helpful. The organization of the parents and the issues that were addressed were just so meaningful to all of us, and as Mrs. Mahoney said when we sit down to do our budget, when we make policy we're doing it on behalf of the parents who have entrusted us with this very important job," said Isola. "I want everyone to know this has been an issue that has never been forgotten by the committee. Each time we discuss it, either in Teaching and Learning or in Budget, these issues have always been at the forefront."

Parents: Locks On All Classroom Doors

room door if a "bad guy" were to enter her school.

"A friend of mine, whose child is in the Quincy Public School system, told her mother that if a bad guy came into her school she would lock the door. With tears in her eyes the mother did not know how to tell her daughter that there were no locks on her classroom doors," said Robinson.

"I ask the school committee what should that mother have told her daughter. I respectfully request that this necessary security measure, locks on individual classroom doors, be implemented immediately. If a tragedy were to occur we do not want to play the 'what if' game with our children's lives.

"As written online by the Associated Press, regarding the Newtown tragedy, one father, Vinny Alvarez, took a moment to thank his third grade daughter's teacher Courtney Martin, who protected the class from the rampaging gunmen by locking her classroom door. We are asking for the same security measures for all our children in Quincy. Time, even seconds is the best defense we can give our children."

Mayor Thomas Koch, the chairman of the school committee, said that they are always looking for ways to improve upon security at schools.

"We are constantly looking at new ways, we're constantly looking at updating, and we're in the process of installing all kinds of new electronic and camera equipment in places," said Koch. "I just wanted to let people know we don't wait for things to react; we're constantly looking at all those issues and it's attributed to the leadership team. We're not lax about any of this. There is always a new twist in the world that we have to deal with and the school system is very well prepared and will continue to look at new ways of doing things."

School Committee member Dave McCarthy, chairman of the Facilities and Security subcommittee, said that the school committee, along with security personnel, would be discussing the many concerns brought to the attention of the committee at the next Facilities and Security Subcommittee meeting on Feb. 5th.

"I'd like to remind everyone we have a Feb. 5th Facilities and Security meeting, at 5 p.m. where we are going to discuss some facility issues and security issues," said McCarthy.

"In regards to tonight I would like to move the classroom lock issue into the facilities and security subcommittee along with a little more extensive conversation on main lobbies," McCarthy added.

Three Quincy Students Join Governor's Day Of Service

A Patriot, a Bruin, our Governor, a Celtic rookie, three Quincy eighth grade students along with 300 other eighth grade Massachusetts students (representing the Commonwealth's 351 cities and towns) convened Saturday for a day of service as part of the annual Project 351.

Launched during Governor Deval Patrick's inaugural in 2010, Project 351 is dedicated to celebrating youth leadership, inspiring the ethic of service, and recognizing the legacy of Martin Luther King, Jr.

"Anyone can be great because anyone can serve," Martin Luther King, Jr. once said. On a bitterly cold Saturday in January, hundreds of Massachusetts grade 8 students turned those words into meaningful action in memory of Dr. King and to ease the suffering of Massachusetts neighbors who are homeless and/or hungry of all ages.

The three Quincy middle school students who were selected by Project 351 to be 2013 Ambassadors are:

Noor Al-Saad of Broad Meadows Middle, Ronoldi Molina of Point Webster Middle and Minhthu Nguyen of Sterling Middle.

"Project 351 is designed to inspire, challenge and motivate our next generation of leaders to give back and make a significant impact in the community," Gov. Patrick said.

Nearly 300 grade 8 Ambassadors joined with Gov. Patrick, Boston Celtic Jared Sullinger, Boston Bruin Andrew Ference, New England Patriot Nate Solder at several Boston work sites to serve needy Massachusetts neighbors at The Pine Street Inn, at The Greater Boston Food Bank, at Cradles to Crayons, at the Hennigan Elementary School and at Amory Street Housing Development.

Shoulder to shoulder, in one day of service, the 3 pro-athletes, the Governor and the 300 fourteen year-olds from Project 351:

- baked 35 apple pies from scratch
- packaged hundreds of personal hygiene kits for the homeless
- painted walls
- created over 600 birthday cards for Pine Street Inn clients who otherwise would have a birthday go unnoticed
- sorted and packed and readied for immediate delivery 5000 pounds of frozen meats
- packed hundreds of nutritious foods into "Friday backpacks" for needy preschool children to take home on Fridays to ensure there would be nutritious foods at home on the weekend.

They also painted canvases, assembled care packages and crafted fleece blankets and scarves for the residents of the Amory Street Housing Development, which caters to the elderly and disabled.

The students also attended a Project 351 Town meeting forum with Governor Patrick at the State House on the morning of January 26th to launch their year of service and celebrate the 'Class of 2013' and to dedicate their service in memory of the 'Legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'

Student 351 Ambassadors serve for a full calendar year and participate in various community service and leadership programs throughout their time as ambassadors.

New Rice Road Sewer Line Installation In Summer

By SCOTT JACKSON

The city is expected to install a new sewer line under Rice Road this summer and repave the street in 2014.

At a recent City Council meeting, Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymond said the plan was to replace the sewer last summer. Those plans, however, were put on hold so engineers could look at the soil under the sewer to see if the line would need added support.

"We've replaced the gas line; we've replaced the water main line. In the aftermath of that we had every intention of resurfacing Rice Road in the summer of 2012," Raymond said. "We began to realize the structure of the sewer line and some of the manholes we're being compromised. So we didn't follow through on those plans. We binded the road up for the convenience of the residential community there and we sought the expertise of a geotechnical engineer."

That engineer came back with a report showing that the sewer line would require pilings underneath. Raymond appeared before the council to request $18,000 be transferred from the sewer rehab fund into a sewer contractual account to pay Braintree-based Veitas and Veitas Engineers to design the support system; the council approved the request by an 8-0 vote.

"Engineering came back indicating that the line is so compromised that we should pile it. That's the purpose of this report - to proceed to go forward," Raymond said. "This particular design for the piling will coincide with the design by the city. I have every intention, depending on the quickness of the city contracts and purchasing and all of that, we're hoping in the next two months this will be ready to bid and we're hoping in the summer that this will be constructed with completion at the end of 2013."

It's likely that Rice Road won't be repaved until 2014 because there needs to be enough time for the dirt on top of the sewer line to compact down after installation is completed. Raymond said the new piling system could help the numerous backups reported in the area.

"The compromising of this line might have had something to do with the numerous sewer backups," Raymond said. "The shoring up of that line should make a difference with minor drainage issues, sewer backup issues. We're not indicating it's a panacea...but this will definitely help."

20 MPH Speed Limit Sought On Residential Streets

destrians and bicyclists. In locations where the reduced speed limit exists, injuries and deaths were reduced by more than half.

"There's a lot of traffic studies out there, there's information from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration that buttresses the argument that speeds over 20 miles per hour in neighborhoods such as the ones that I'm talking about that are densely populated and we have a lot of vulnerable pedestrians and bicyclists and young children and elderly folks who perhaps take a little bit longer in crossing streets need greater protection," Coughlin said. "Where 20 miles per hour speed zones have been introduced and enforced has been shown that casualties have fallen by 60 percent."

Even if approved by the Legislature, the city would not be able to reduce the speed limit on state highways - Route 3A, which includes parts of Washington Street, Southern Artery, and Quincy Shore Drive, and Route 53, which includes Quincy Avenue.

Council OKs Statement Of Interest For New Sterling

The city is one step closer to repairing or replacing Sterling Middle School and installing new windows at three other schools after declaring interest to the state.

In an 8-0 vote, the City Council approved a statement of interest to build a new Sterling Middle School, or renovate the 85-year old building. Separate statements of interests were approved 8-0 to install new windows at North Quincy High and the Merrymount and Wollaston elementary schools. The School Committee approved the same statements Jan. 9. The city is now waiting for the Massachusetts School Building Authority to review the city's statements.

"We can work and we will do it ASAP to get these in immediately then we just wait and see and hopefully are invited into the School Building Authority pipeline in June or July - it could even be September," school Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro said. "After that there are a series of steps that we need to follow that you'll be apprised of each and every step that we take from there."

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci, who represents the neighborhoods served by Sterling, explained that the 85-year old school has not had any significant work done to it and credited divine intervention and the school's maintenance staff for keeping the school running for last couple decades.

"Sterling Middle School was built in 1926-1927. It has not received any substantial upgrades or improvements to the infrastructure or to the interior or exterior structures," Palmucci said. "The glaring need is there for this school to be improved, whether it be reconstructed in entirety or just reconstructed from within. The fact that it's still standing at all is a testament to the maintenance staff at that school and I understand it's been like that for decades - what's keeping it together is divine intervention."

Palmucci added: "This is an investment in our future. We're not committing any moneys here but this is the first step in what I hope will be an investment in the community. It's about creating a space that encourages and reflects the talents of our teachers, our staffs, and most importantly our young learners."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin said Sterling has been a pressing issue since he, along with Councillors Doug Gutro and Joe Finn, first came into office and thanked the administration for now focusing on the school.

"Those of us like Councillor Gutro, Councillor Finn, and myself that have been around here for 12 years recall what I like to call the three-legged stool. We we're looking at Quincy High School, Central Middle School, and Sterling," Coughlin said. "We obviously accomplished Quincy High, we are accomplishing Central Middle School and I think it speaks well of this administration that we are finally focusing our attention on what we thought was going to be accomplished many years ago."

There was no estimate provided for the cost of replacing or renovating Sterling. But the Building Department's Walter MacDonald put a preliminary price tag of $2.8 million for the windows at North Quincy, $600,000 for the Merrymount School's windows, and $580,000 for the Wollaston School's windows. If accepted into the MSBA program, the city would be reimbursed for part of those costs.

Jaimie Gordon Wins Individual Category; Kathy Hubley Second And Matt Donatelle Third

Coop's Bar & Grille Top Chili For 3rd Straight Year

Coop's Bar & Grille successfully defended its title as having the best restaurant chili in Quincy Saturday, when the Washington St. restaurant took home its third consecutive trophy from the annual "Chili Bowl" chili cook-off.

The event, sponsored by Hough's Neck Congregational Church, attracted several hundred people, who sampled 20 different chili recipes from both restaurants and individual chefs and then voted on their favorites. First place in the individual category went to Jaime Gordon. Second place went Quincy School Committee Member Kathy Hubley, while Matt Donatelle claimed the third prize medal. All of this year's individual winners are from Quincy.

"Once again, we had a great turnout for the Chili Bowl," said Jennifer Logue, one of the event's organizers. "Everyone commented on just how great all of the entries were."

That made for an extremely close race when the ballots were counted. "This year's tally was so close, just three votes separated the first and third place winners in the individual category," Logue said.

In addition to the chili cook-off, the event also featured hot dogs, snacks and a bake sale.

Mayoral Roast To Launch Quincy Park Conservancy

The new Quincy Park Conservancy will host their inaugural event Thursday evening, Feb. 7 at the Granite Links Ballroom.

The organization's first fundraiser will be a roast of Mayor Thomas Koch in honor of the Mayor's 50th birthday. Tickets are $25 and should be purchased in advance.

The evening will feature a series of guest "roasters", a few surprise celebrity guests, and a sit-down meal in the function facility. The event will run from 6:30 pm to 11 p.m.

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti will emcee the event. Tickets can be purchased by emailing info@quincyparkconservancy.org.

The Quincy Park Conservancy is a new 501(c)(3) organization formed to advocate for the protection of Quincy's parks and open spaces. The non-profit hopes to work in concert with the mayor, the park and recreation board, and other organizations to protect and enhance the city's valuable open space and park areas.

Members of the organization include William Delahunt, Lisa McBirney, Attorney David Mahoney, Helen Murphy, Kristen Powers, Bill Geary, Betty Georgaklis, Louise Grabowski, Francine Wright, Linda Bowes, and David Murphy.

"We are thrilled that Mayor Koch is allowing some fun at his expense for such a great cause," Sheriff Bellotti said. "The park system has always been an important part of the Mayor's life and his support of this new organization will help improve the quality of the parks and open space in Quincy for years to come. I encourage folks to join us to celebrate the Mayor's 50th birthday and have a few laughs."

Mayor Koch served as the city's Executive Director of Park, Forestry and Cemetery Departments for 13 years before becoming mayor. His father, Richard Koch, served as the City's first Park Director.

"The mission of the Quincy Park Conservancy is near and dear to my heart," said Mayor Koch. "I appreciate the willingness of citizen volunteers to lend their time and talents to help improve our great city and its open areas. I'm looking forward to working with the Conservancy to accomplish great things in the future."

The organization has a website at quincyparkconservancy.org and can be found on Facebook.

Lynch: Quincy Center Needs Major Infrastructure Projects

the assault weapon ban. I also agree with his decision to ban these high-capacity 30 round magazines. I think if the core the Second Amendment is self-protection, you don't need 30-round clips."

Lynch also said background checks for those seeking gun permits need to be improved.

"I also think we need to do a better job with background checks and even if the states that had them on the books really didn't facilitate them very well. I think a background check system that actually asks the questions about any psychologically impaired individuals in the home where the weapon might be present that's a pertinent thing that we never really asked that question before. Now we see from Newtown the consequences.

"The questions need to be asked and the background checks need to be facilitated so that we have the ability to prevent the weapons from getting in the wrong hands.

"It would make it less likely that another tragedy like Newtown would happen. It would reduce the likelihood that something like this would happen."

Lynch welcomed the decision by the Pentagon last week to lift the ban on women in combat roles and thus allow a fully inclusive military. He said women have already been serving in combat and removing the complete ban "is a good thing."

"I've been to Iraq 14 times and I've been to Afghanistan nine times and to be perfectly honest we've had women in combat at least for the last 10 or 11 years that I've been traveling to the Middle East.

"The new paradigm of warfare – there are no front lines – so women have been in combat in Iraq and Afghanistan for 10 years and have been doing exemplary work."

Lynch noted the story of Illinois Cong. Tammy Duckworth, a disabled combat veteran of the Iraq War and the first disabled woman to be elected to the U.S. House of Representatives.

"I happened to be visiting Walter Reed Medical Hospital back in 2004 when she arrived. She had been flying a Black Hawk helicopter when an insurgent in Anbar Province (Iraq) shot a rocket propelled grenade through the floor of her aircraft. It severed both her legs. One above and one below the knee. She is now a member of Congress.

"Tammy Duckworth is a combat veteran and she is an American hero. There are a lot of women who want to serve in combat and I think it's a good thing that we removed the complete ban but again – just as it has always been – the military has a responsibility to put the best people in the best spots.

"Sometimes the best spot for a woman might be in intelligence, it might be support staff. Sometimes it might be combat and they should be given that opportunity if they want it."

Lynch was also asked about Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's testimony before a House Panel regarding the fatal attack on the U.S. Consulate in Benghazi, Libya last fall. Clinton defended her handling of the Sept. 11 attack on the diplomatic compound that killed four Americans while accepting full responsibility for the tragic incident.

Asked if he was satisfied with Clinton's testimony, Lynch replied:

"I accept her testimony. I thought (Clinton) was very strong. I also think she was very human in terms of her response to the deaths because she is responsible for the 700,000 folks at the State Department. She has been in my memory the most active Secretary of State that we have ever had and I think one of our best.

"I spent a lot of time in the Middle East and it's a pretty tough environment for the State Department to operate. I think my Republican friends were trying to lay more blame at her doorstep than she deserved. That's politics and she handled that pretty well."

He was also asked what lesson can be learned from the attack.

"I think the takeaway is we have to remember that those same Republicans who attacked her voted to cut a billion dollars from the Embassy Security Program and you can't have it both ways. You can't vote to cut funding for security at Embassies and Consulates on one day and then blame the Secretary of State for not having done enough on security at Embassies and Consulates. That's what those folks were doing (during her testimony). It was the height of hypocrisy.

"I've been to a lot of the Embassies from Yemen to Afghanistan to Iraq, been to places like Gaza on the West Bank, Pakistan, we have some dangerous neighborhoods there. North Africa, Morocco, Tunisia, and we've had to scramble to re-order our priorities.

"I just left Yemen and you get about 2,400 Al-Qaeda running across Yemen and you've got maybe 7,000 members of the Yemeni military trying to catch them. Our facilities are at risk there so we had a whole reconstruction project where we built out the perimeter walls and created a new security system in response to that.

"We have to take a good hard look at our Embassies around the world, especially in those hot spots and think hard about how we can better protect those people that we send into harm's way."

Lynch was among six Bay State Congressmen who voted in favor of legislation to eliminate the nation's statutory borrowing limit – or debt ceiling – until May. In explaining his vote, Lynch said:

"It's a 90-day extension. The debt limit is a long-term issue that's going to be with us for a while. We didn't create this problem overnight and we're not going to solve it overnight. There are two other short-term issues that are related to the debt ceiling. One is sequestration where they're going to cut $1.2 trillion from the budget over the next 10 years and we have to solve that. For every dollar we spend, we're borrowing 42 cents so we can't keep doing that.

"What the Republicans did is they re-ordered the three crisis that are coming up. One is sequestration which is budget cuts. One is funding the government to prevent a government shut down. The third is the debt limit. The first two are more short-term problems that we have to deal with immediately. The last one, the debt limit, is related to those other two but it is much more long-term. The Republicans wanted to reorder the sequence in which these crisis arrive and how we deal with it.

"They put a gimmick in where if we don't come up with a budget we suspend our pay. It's a gimmick. The Constitution doesn't allow us to cut pay but they can delay me getting a paycheck.

"I understand that. All in all, I don't oppose delaying that for 90 days if they want to use that time productively to come up with a better solution. That's why I voted for it."

"What's better? Allow us to default right away or allow us 90 more days to come up with a better solution. I think the answer was 90 days."

Lynch was also asked if the American public is taxed enough and if Washington has a spending problem or a revenue problem.

"I think it's a little bit of both. I think you're going to have to have some new revenue especially those who can afford it the most." For example, he noted "we have a tax situation involving carried interest where hedge fund managers and private equity firms are able to classify their earnings as carried interest and are taxed at a much lower rate – 15 percent. That's not fair – that's income and it should be taxed.

"There are some folks who have carved out exceptions to the tax code and they are getting relief that they really don't deserve. Some of these big oil companies – Mobil Exxon the most profitable business on the planet – and we're giving them tax breaks and tax exemptions in addition to drilling opportunities and land rights on public land? They don't need it.

"We need to look at the tax code, simplify it, and eliminate a lot of these loop holes that corporations have lobbied for over decades and obtained. We have to ask them to start paying what they should be paying.

"We have to start doing things smarter, too. We have to start squeezing some of the waste, fraud and abuse out of some of these government programs and that's gotta happen. We need some more revenue but we also need to stop spending like we are."

Lynch, who is Catholic, also explained his pro-life position on abortion.

"I'm a Catholic. My position has been that my beliefs do not require me to attack Roe v. Wade and I have not. Roe v. Wade is the law of the land and I understand that. I have taken a position that the best way under the Constitutional framework to prevent an increase in abortions is through education, counseling, to reduce the number of unwanted pregnancies.

"That's something that I think that the pro-choice and the pro-life community can actually work together on. I don't see these attacks on Roe v. Wade as the part of any solution. I don't think attacking Roe v. Wade reduces the number of abortions. I think it may change the location from a clinical setting to one that is much more dangerous for women in crisis. I never felt that my beliefs require me to attack Roe v. Wade and so I have not done so and I have no intention to do so."

Locally, Lynch continues to work with Mayor Thomas Koch, city councillors and Quincy's State House delegation on the new Quincy Center project. He said he would advocate for federal money to help finance infrastructure improvements in the area, including a new Quincy Center T station and garage.

"We are continuing to work with Mayor Thomas Koch and Rep. Ron Mariano and our state delegation and the city council. Infrastructure is going to be key to that project. The Quincy T stop, the garage, we're going to have to do some major infrastructure projects so fortunately (former Cong.) Bill Delahunt brought me in on these five or six years ago so I knew that this was coming up and it was important for him so he plugged me in."

Asked if there is federal money available to fund infrastructure projects, he replied, "That's what we do. We haven't done a transportation bill in a while. We did a two-year bill and it was really a stop-gap bill. Now I think Republicans and Democrats realize that we need to do a full six-year bill, that's what we typically do – and it has larger projects in it.

"I'm hoping we might get a good strong federal investment in the future of the Quincy Center as part of that. We might have to do it in phases but fortunately the way Street-Works and Mayor Koch have designed this project it actually works that way. As we build out different phases of this project we also can phase in the different planning, engineering and construction of some of this infrastructure."

The congressman's office announced Monday that a Constituents' Office was expected to open this week in Quincy Center at 1245 Hancock St., Suite 16.

Lynch voted against The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Obama-care) when it passed the House of Representatives on March 25, 2010, because he did not believe it would achieve real reform. In a private meeting with President Obama at the White House prior to the vote, Congressman Lynch told the president that he could not support the bill, but if it passed would not vote to repeal it, and work to improve it.

Today, Lynch said he and the President are on the same page: the legislation needs fixing.

"Instead of repealing it – which is the Tea Party position – we need to put some fixes in to make sure this thing works. It's going to be hard work and take a lot of years. Far after President Obama's term has ended we'll still be struggling with this."

Larry, Doble Streets Parking, Traffic Issues Topic At Community Meeting Feb. 7

Ward 4 City Councilor Brian Palmucci will host a community meeting to discuss a traffic and parking is-ssues in the Larry Street and Doble Street area Thursday, Feb. 7 at 6 p.m. at City Hall, second floor.

At the request of area residents, Palmucci has asked the city's traffic engineer to study a proposal to close off the streets during peak traffic time. The traffic engineer will be on hand to discuss his findings and recommendations relative to that request.

The public is welcome and encouraged to attend to provide their input on the subject.

"This area has been a long time cut through to avoid highway traffic. This is an issue that we constantly struggle with in West Quincy," Palmucci said.

"This meeting is a good opportunity for residents in the area to join the discussion and express their opinion on potential solutions to be implemented by the city," he added.

For more information, call Palmucci at (617) 834-3945 email bpalmucci@quincyma.gov.

High School Sports Round-up

By BILL GRIFFIN

The combination of senior forward Maya Umoren and a deep, talented backcourt proved to a winning one for North Quincy's girls basketball team.

Umoren had 14 points and 15 rebounds and freshman guard Marissa McGue played a key role off the bench to lift the Red Raiders to an exciting 50-48 come-from-behind victory over Hingham in a Patriot League contest Friday.

The win lifts North to 8-6 and moves the Red Raiders within two games of qualifying for the state tourney.

Earlier in the week, Rockland edged North, 37-33 in a non-league game.

Hingham held a three-point halftime lead before North played a strong third quarter to open up a nine-point edge.

"In the first half, they were double and triple-teaming Maya and it was hard to get the ball into her," said North coach Jessica

Other Sports On Pages 16-22

Worden. "They have fast guards and they put a lot of pressure on us trying to bring the ball up."

The Harbormen worked to keep the ball away from North's point guard Jane Minton. Caitlin Bulger and Haley McKay helped handling the press and moving the ball inside to Umoren during the third-period rally.

"Caitlin and Haley handled the pressure well. Haley played another excellent defensive game," said Worden.

When Hingham drew close in the fourth, Worden used McGue off the bench and the freshman stepped right in with good defense, two steals and a three-point jumper.

"She gave us a spark when we needed it," said Worden.

North has run the three-guard set well all year.

Against Hingham, not only did Minton, McKay and Bulger move the ball well, they combined for 25 points. Bulger had nine while McKay and Minton had eight apiece.

A slow start hurt North in its non-leaguer against Rockland. The Red Raiders only had 11 points at the half before Minton played a strong second half to lead the Red Raiders back within range.

Minton and Camille Mullaney each had 10. Bulger chipped in with six.

The Hingham win was important because it came in the middle of four straight road games for North. The Red Raiders are at Middleboro Friday.

Quincy Contenders For Division Crown

Presidents Hand W-H First League Loss, 56-55

By BILL GRIFFIN

With less than a minute left in the game and Quincy tied with a team that had yet to lose a game in the state of Massachusetts, sophomore James Lam knocked the ball loose near his own basket, point guard Tino Goncalves picked it up and flew away on a fast break.

There was one problem. He was by himself. The only players in the neighborhood were from Whitman-Hanson. It was a one-on-four break. Goncalves was on his own. It was a moment which tested basketball intelligence as much as basketball ability.

Goncalves went from full speed to an instant stop. He kissed home a short jumper softer than air and then added two clinching free throws in the final seconds to make a terrific defensive effort worthwhile and give Quincy a 56-55 comeback win over Whitman-Hanson in a Patriot League Keenan Division showdown Friday night.

It was an important win. Entering the game, the Panthers were 12-1, 6-0 in the division with their only loss coming to Mount Vernon, Georgia. Quincy (8-5, 5-2) drew to within one game of W-H with the victory. A Quincy loss, and the division would likely have been gone.

"We're contenders," smiled Quincy coach Dave Parry.

Very few point guards make the play Goncalves made. If he goes to the bucket, the shot is blocked. If he throws a pass, there is nobody on his team to catch it. If he misses a long jump shot, there is no rebound. If he lowers his shoulder and drives the lane, it's a charge. If he pulls the ball out, W-H sets up its defense. He had one good choice. He picked the only play he could make and he made it for a 54-52 lead with 0:50 left in the game.

"Whenever I'm on the break I look for colors. I didn't see any blue and whites, all I saw was black-and-orange," he said. "Coach always tells me to use the jump stop because it gives me more options. I used it and I trusted my shot. I work on that play every day in practice."

Goncalves swished the two finishing free throws with 0:04 showing. Between his winning bucket and the two free throws, Whitman-Hanson, as in 12-1 Whitman-Hanson, had four offensive possessions. They had no good looks. There were no drives, no open jumpers, no clear threes, not an inch to maneuver against Quincy's defense. Lam earns four stars for his work on W-H star guard Brian Feeney, but when the game was there to be decided, Quincy's Team Defense gave nothing.

"This was a breakout game from James. Feeney is a great player and James played him as tough as you can play him," said Parry.

Quincy won it in the fourth quarter. W-H led at every stop: 17-8 after one, 32-24 at the half and 41-38 after three. Except for a brief two-point Quincy lead late in Jacquan Harris (11) flashed in the open court for seven in the fourth and sophomore Drew Myers (11) drained two cold-blooded threes.

At the core of it all was the defense. Parry switched from an early zone to a man-to-man. The Presidents made Feeney work to advance the ball all night and in the fourth, Lam took over with powerful halfcourt defense.

"Feeney is so good. We had to try to wear him out," said Parry who saw the Panthers twice during Quincy's idle week between North and W-H. "We had to stop his penetration because when he gets into the paint, he dishes out for threes and they don't miss their threes. Tino played him well, and James stepped up in the fourth. Myers? Not bad for a sophomore."

The Panthers' biggest lead was 13, and their edge was in the 6-8 point range for most of the night. Quincy stayed close on some fine passing from Goncalves (13 assists) who set up Lam for five layups, nine tough inside points from sophomore J.T. Bain, and a defense which never let the game get away. Smooth senior Dondre James had 18 and Feeney added 15 for W-H.

"These kids always play on an even keel and I think that helped us tonight. You can't tell if we're winning or losing. They just stay steady," said Parry.

W-H was the latest in a series of prime-time wins for Quincy who has beaten Weymouth, Cambridge and Hingham. Before the season, Parry talked about the winning feeling that had carried over from football with Harris, Lam, Peter Ce-drone and Jaquan Harris. There was also last year's 23-1 freshman team who lost only to Catholic Memorial at Catholic Memorial.

"These kids are winners. They know how to close out games. It's the hardest thing to teach in sports," added Parry whose team is at Hingham Friday.

When it was over, one of the W-H assistant coaches reached over to Parry and said, "Your kids played great. You deserved it." That they did.

North Quincy Battles Hingham But Bows In OT

NORTH QUINCY GUARD Patrick Gould (#10) drives past Hingham forward Joe Spaziani (15) for two of his 16 points against the Harbormen Friday night. Gould made the basket and was fouled making a three point play but the Red Raiders bowed in overtime, 75-70.

KYLE RICHARDSON (12) scores two of his 11 points with 12.7 seconds left in the game to put North Quincy up by three. Hingham tied the game with 3.7 seconds left and went on to win the game in overtime 75-70.

Strong Games By McClendon, Green

Red Raiders Bounced By Harbormen In OT

By JEFF OHLSON

On Friday night North Quincy (10-4) and Hingham had one of the more memorable games anyone will see this season when Hingham beat the Raiders in overtime 75-70. Marquis McClendon shined for North in the loss but the 3-point prowess of Hingham was too much for the Raiders to handle by the end of the game.

Early in the game both teams played sloppy basketball, and the score reflected it as Hingham lead North Quincy 18-10. The Raiders stayed in the game on great defensive play by junior Anthony Green, who is listed as a towering 6'7".

Green had six blocks and eight rebounds in the game and was a force to be reckoned with in the paint all game for North Quincy. At one point late in the second quarter Green rejected back to back shot attempts by Hingham before coming up with the ball.

North Quincy coach Kevin Barrett has talked about Green's potential for the Raiders now and going forward.

"His size is obviously a huge advantage for him and us. He comes to play and he works hard in practice, he does the right things. When we get him going he's going to be a presence that other teams will have to deal with and hopefully it makes the way the run their offense hard knowing he's in the paint," Barrett said.

Green wasn't the only player who played big for North Quincy as Senior Marquis McClendon had a monster game, dropping 28 points to go with five rebounds. McClendon single-handedly kept Hingham on their toes in the fourth quarter when he drew three fouls for six free throws, sinking all but one, finishing the quarter with nine points.

McClendon battled all game for North, playing all but a few minutes due to the Raiders having a limited Dan Gould because of injuries. Gould had only two points, which is well shy of his season average of close to 20 a game. Dan's brother Pat Gould wasn't limited by anything and played very well for the Raiders dropping 16 points to go with six assists.

The Raiders, if anything, played tough all night in what was a grueling up-tempo game from start to finish against a lengthy Hingham team that was absolutely deadly from 3-point range all night. As good as Hingham was shooting though, the Raiders matched them with guts and grit scoring 18 points in the third quarter and 21 in the third quarter to take a 49-46 lead going into the fourth.

The fourth quarter would be one of the more interesting and exciting quarters that a basketball fan will see all season as both teams battled back and forth until the very end.

With 33 seconds to go, North Quincy's Kyle Richardson took a pass from Dan Gould and sank a three pointer that gave North a 66-63 lead. The home crowd was roaring and the Raider bench jumped up in excitement. Coach Barrett yelled to his players to try and keep emotions down as 33 seconds seems like a short amount of time, but in basketball it can be an eternity.

North Quincy got back on defense and the Cougars set up their offense and passed the ball around the perimeter. Each pass was well defended by North as the Raiders were trying not to allow a 3-point attempt to tie the game. The shot clock clicked down to six seconds and Hingham's point guard threw a desperation shot that arched high into the air. North Quincy's bench, the Raider fans and the players on the court all watched the shot falling towards the hoop, all hoping that it wouldn't find the bottom of the net, but it did and with 3.3 seconds left on the game clock a game that North had all but won was now tied.

North Quincy inbounded the ball and tried a full court heave but came up empty and the game went into overtime.

In overtime, Hingham took over from outside, throwing down consecutive three pointers to jump out to a six point lead. The Raiders kept plugging away though and brought the game within two with about a minute left in overtime before Coach Barrett called a time out to draw up a play for his team.

North came out of the time out and ran their play which resulted in an open 3-point attempt to win the game, one which came up short but was rebounded by the Raiders and thrown out to the perimeter for a second attempt which also missed.

Hingham rebounded the ball and North Quincy fouled to make the Cougars hit their free throws. Hingham would bring the game to a 75-70 score before time ran out on the game and the Raiders.

The loss was not one to feel badly about as North Quincy played as tough of a game as anyone could have asked for. The Raiders entertained Pembroke Tuesday and host Middleborough Friday night at 6:30.

PLAYING THE ANGLES

Anyone who uses a handheld device regularly runs the risk of developing shoulder and neck pain related to the angle at which the palmtop computer, e-book, or mobile device is viewed. As the neck muscles work with the small bones at the top of the spine (cervical vertebrae) to hold the head in place, tilting the head too far forward will likely lead to strain. As a result, holding a tablet computer too low in the lap can lead to muscle, nerve, tendon, ligament, and spinal-disc injury. Research shows that by simply changing the angle at which the handheld device is viewed, users can reduce neck strain and potential injury. The chiropractor can help diagnose and treat such overuse/postural injuries.

During the initial visit, we will take a health history and perform a physical examination, with a special emphasis on the spine. Other examinations or test such as x-rays may also be performed. Then, if chiropractic treatment is considered appropriate, a treatment plan will be developed. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we do not include medication or surgery in our treatment program. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment and let us help you feel better and live a life free of pain. We offer computerized spinal scans. It would be wise to take a moment and appreciate exactly how good North Quincy's basketball team has been over the past two years.

At the end of last week, the Red Raiders were 10-3 and 25-6 over the past two seasons. Last week, they clinched their second straight tourney berth with a 72-63 win over Arlington Catholic with nearly a month left in the season.

They trailed Scituate by a game in the race for first place in the Fisher Division of the Patriot League. Without their top scorer Dan Gould (ankle injury), they reeled off five straight wins. The first three were by an average of 33 points. In each of the three games North held its opponent under 50 points. Three of the wins in the streak were quality victories over Scituate, Quincy, and Arlington Catholic.

This has been an exceptional run. Perhaps the Arlington Catholic win best illustrates how tough they are. Earlier in the season, North lost at home to AC by four when the Red Raiders did not bring their trademark defensive energy until the final five minutes. This was something the Red Raiders remembered well when they traveled to Arlington for a rematch last week.

"I think we all had it circled on our collective calendars," said coach Kevin Barrett. "We looked forward to another chance. I didn't have to say much to the players."

But it would not be easy. First of all, AC is good. Second, the game was on the road. Payback in a cozy, home gym is one thing. Payback on the road in a gym which is a throwback to the days when cement walls and wooden stages served as out-of-bounds markers is a different, more severe challenge. "It was one of the old, shoe-box gyms," said Barrett.

North responded by breaking open a tight game in the fourth period with a 36-point explosion. Aaron Anderson, who filled in for Gould and has become the story of the season, had 18 including four threes which gave him 22 in five games. All his teammates knew he could shoot, but what has also been impressive is the development of his overall game.

"He's always been a good shooter, but we've stressed to him that he needs to be a good defender and ball-handler. He's come a long way," said Barrett.

North's depth has allowed Dan Gould the luxury of healing fully and waiting until he is 100 per cent before returning.

"One player can't replace someone like Dan. Everyone has to step up," said Barrett. "We want him firing on all pistons for the stretch run and the tourney," said Barrett.

Junior forward Eftim Butka added 10 points and eight rebounds against AC. Butka has been a quiet, steady contributor during North's streak. He had a couple of key buckets late in the third period in North's comeback win in the third Quincy game and gives the Red Raiders a dependable presence close to the bucket.

"We've challenged him to get 10 points and 10 rebounds each game," said Barrett. "He's capable of it and he's fortunate to have teammates unselfish enough to get him the ball."

Kyle Richardson and Pat Gould (11 points) contributed to the fourth-quarter surge. Once again, North made its free throws when it mattered. Good teams will have leads in the fourth quarter. Good teams will be fouled. Good teams must make their free throws. North was 11-12 in the fourth against AC. Gould was 15-16 against Scituate. Free throws put away the second Quincy game. Gould finished the third Quincy game with two free throws.

"On the road against Arlington Catholic, in a unique gym, it's tough to make the clutch free throws. The kids deserve a lot of credit," said Barrett.

The core of North's success is its halfcourt man-to-man defense. Few play it any better. Not only do the Red Raiders commit to the effort and responsibility of one-on-one, nose-to-nose defense, they are at their best when they help each other. If someone gets beat, there is always support.

"We stress the goal is to stop the other team from scoring, not just stopping your own man," said Barrett.

Quincy-North Quincy Swimming, Diving Splits With Norwell

The Quincy/North Quincy boys squad (6-4) won its second consecutive meet, defeating Norwell, 77-65, Jan. 24 at the Lincoln-Hancock Pool in Quincy. Despite a late surge, the QNQ girls team (7-3) fell to the visitors, 94-85.

Sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ) turned in a pair of season-low times, swimming 54.38 in the 100-yard freestyle after his 23.91 effort for half the distance. Kwong teamed with sophomore captain Mike Mullaney (NQ), junior captain Elio Daci (Q) and senior Emmitt Harrow (NQ) for a 1:44.44 victorious time in the 200-yard free relay that nipped the second-place Norwell team by 27 one-hundredths of a second, giving QNQ an insurmountable 68-41 advantage at that point. Also contributing individual wins for the boys today were Diego Espinola (NQ) in the 200-yard individual medley (3:32.03) and Bailey Brann (Q) in the 100-yard breaststroke (1:33.37).

Norwell led by a meet-high 20 points after the fifth event until sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) won her second individual race, the 100 butterfly (1:02.91). O'Driscoll had previously placed first in the 200 free (2:08.25), and teamed up with junior Sarah Tran (NQ), senior captain Kat O'Connor (NQ) and sophomore Sabrina Rauch (Q) for the victorious, state-qualifying, 200 freestyle relay (1:50.75). QNQ's 400 free relay squad of O'Connor, Evelyn Scuzzarella (NQ), Rauch and O'Driscoll also clinched the meet's final event, another state-qualifying cut of 4:00.88 in the 400 free relay.

3 Quincy Students Complete WPI Research Projects

Three Quincy students at Worcester Polytechnic Institute (WPI) recently completed an intense, hands-on research project.

Jefferson Lee, a junior majoring in mechanical engineering, completed a project in Cape Town. The project was titled Rooftop Gardening and Social Development in the Central Business District of Cape Town.

Adam Moreschi, a junior majoring in management engineering, also completed a project in Cape Town. The project was titled Supporting Community Development and Reblocking in Joe Slovo Park.

Mary Schwartz, a junior majoring in chemical engineering, completed a project in Costa Rica. The project was titled Investigating the Potential of Plantation Pocho as a Lumber Source in Samara, Costa Rica.

Quincy Resident Named ECAC N.E. Div. III Player Of The Week Hoop Honors For Siobhan Carnell

Another day, another women's basketball honor for Keene State College's Siobhan Carnell.

On Jan. 23, the senior forward from Quincy was named the ECAC New England Division III player of the week.

Carnell averaged 27 points and eight rebounds per game to power Keene State to a 2-0 mark this past week. She connected on 65.5 percent (19-for-29) of her attempts from the floor, in addition to sinking each of her 16 shots from the charity stripe.

Carnell dropped in 20 points and pulled in eight rebounds to lift the Owls to their first Little East win of the season at Plymouth State on Jan. 15. Four days later, she poured in a season-high 34 points, on 12-for-17 from the field, as Keene State earned a key conference win against UMass Dartmouth. Carnell was also a force on the other end of the court with six defensive boards and two blocks against the Corsairs.

Carnell was previously named the Little East Conference player of the week, selected to the D3hoops.com team of the week and picked to the NEWBA honor roll.

In a 69-48 loss to the University of Massachusetts-Boston, Carnell, the reigning LEC and ECAC New England player of the week, scored over 20 points for the fifth straight game, finishing with 20 points and six rebounds for the Owls.

After a slow start by both teams, The Beacons opened up a seven point lead 21-14 on a three-pointer by junior Andrea Suffredini (Milford, Mass.)

The Owls came right back, running off nine straight points to go up 23-21 on a follow-up by sophomore Christian Wojtas (Amherst, N.H.) at the 5:45 mark.

Trailing 29-25 in the closing minutes of the half, freshman Brianna Curran (Fairfield, Conn.) hit one of three free throws and after grabbing an offensive rebound Carnell hit a lay-up to get Keene State within one point (29-28) at the break. Carnell scored 13 of her 20 points in the first half.

SIOBHAN CARNELL scored a season-high 34 points against UMass-Dartmouth that helped the Quincy resident earn ECAC New England Division III player of the week honors.

QUINCY'S TINO GONCALVES

Alyssa Lydon, Jane Minton, Pat Gould, Tino Goncalves Key Teams' Success

Quincy, North Showcasing Special Point Guards

By BILL GRIFFIN

Point guard requires the widest range of skills of any position in basketball and it rivals a quarterback in football for importance to a team.

It tests athleticism, passing, shooting, ball-handling, defense, poise, intelligence and unselfishness. If you don't have a point guard, it's like having the fanciest car in the showroom, but no key to start the ignition. A point guard makes the engine run.

North Quincy and Quincy showcase four all-league caliber point guards. Quincy has Alyssa Lydon and Tino Goncalves. North relies on Jane Minton and Pat Gould. Each has his or her own style and skills, but they have one thing in common. They are vital to their team's success.

ALYSSA LYDON: When coach Jeff Bretsch is asked about what a point guard must do, he mentions that she needs to be aware of her team, she must be in control and able to deliver the ball to the right players in the right spots at the right time. Lydon, a junior, has faced two very different challenges as leader in two seasons. Last year, she was a sophomore on a team of seniors who were coming off a 17-4 season and went to the sectional finals. This year, she leads a more inexperienced club. She has handled both roles well.

"It is very hard for a sophomore to be the field general on a team of seniors," said Bretsch. "She handled it well because she has a kind of humble confidence and the other girls responded. This year, she has newer players to work with."

Lydon is a pure point guard. Look up the definition of point guard in the dictionary and there should be a picture of her. She can get to the basket, but she is at her best delivering the ball from the perimeter, making her jumpers and playing good defense. She knows where her mates want the ball and she delivers it. She has developed an uncanny chemistry with freshman center Nicole Jorgensen in a short time. Her 21-point, seven-assist game earlier this year against North completely controlled the floor. Film it, save it, use it to teach others.

"To beat Quincy, you have to deny Lydon," said an opposing coach.

"She's a classic point guard," said

Bretsch. "She loves to pass the ball. That's what she loves most about the game. She is so unselfish. This year, we would like her to shoot more, but she is a pass-first player to a fault."

Every coach agrees that a primary responsibility of a point guard is to take care of the ball. On the high-school level, a full-court press can be devastating. The point guard must be able to handle the pressure. Against the suffocating Scituate press, Lydon was brilliant. Team turnovers were a problem for Quincy, but Lydon did not give up the ball. Not once. Not for four quarters.

"Talk about all the skills you want, but if a point guard can't protect the ball, you don't have anything," said Bretsch.

TINO GONCALVES: Goncalves is an Athlete. He is beyond quick and he sees everything. He is a natural scorer. He has easy three-point range and can get to the bucket whenever he wants. For three years, the senior has scored for Quincy, but this year he is undergoing a fascinating transition into a pass-first point guard. He started the year with three 20-plus point games. In the last three weeks, he has been in double-digits in assists four times. There is a shift here. As Quincy's gifted sophomore class matures, he is shooting less and passing more.

"It goes to confidence in his teammates," said coach Dave Parry. "For three years we needed him to score. This year it's different. It's human nature to be more willing to make the pass if the shooters are making the shots. This year, the more he passes, the more we finish the play for him."

Because he is such a great athlete, he can throw passes about which most point guards can only dream. An example is the one-handed, line-drive pass on the fast break directly off the dribble. Most high school guards need to pick up their dribble, control the ball, and then pass it. Goncalves can fire it without hesitation at full speed. In one quarter against Pembroke, he threw one of these bullets at full throttle, two lookaway beauties, but he also had two solid, fundamental, chest-high passes to shooters coming off picks. He makes the hard and the routine pass.

"The other thing shooting less has done is free him to play better defense," said Parry. "One thing a point guard must do is play good defense. You don't want the opposing guard to get into the paint either. Tino's on-the-ball defense has improved."

JANE MINTON: When North coach Jessica Worden talks about what is required of a point guard, decision-making is high on the list. One of Minton's main jobs is to make post passes inside to North's superb inside player Maya Umoren, who has had three monster games in the last two weeks. Minton can drive, draw the defense and dish the pass. She throws a great, easy-to-catch bounce pass. She also has the touch to lob an over-the-top pass if the defense fronts Umoren. And she has the basketball IQ to know when Umoren is surrounded and move the ball back around the perimeter.

"She makes excellent decisions," said Worden. "Not only in the set offense, but also on the fast break. She has to decide when to push the ball and when to hold back and run our set offense. She's grown in her confidence it shows in her decisions."

Minton has a strong drive to her left which she finishes with a nice touch on a running jump shot. It usually means a bucket or a trip to the foul line. She shoots well from the perimeter. She makes her free throws. She also deals with the press well. At North, point guards don't dribble through a press. Minton handles it with crisp bounce passes to Haley McKay and Caitlin Bulger. The trio's checkerboard passing handled Scituate's press which shreds most opponents.

"We don't want anyone to try to dribble through the press," said Worden. "They are taught to make short passes, and move to the open spot to receive the next pass. Jane directs us and she gives us confidence under pressure."

Minton can score. She had 21 against Hanover and averages over 11 points per game. She scores well because it fulfills the best job description of a point guard: She gives her team what it needs.

"She's very unselfish," said Worden, "but this year I've asked her to look for her shot more because we need her scoring from her. I know that's not what you normally expect from a point guard, but it's what we need and Jane has given it to us."

PAT GOULD: Coach Kevin Barrett sees

a point guard as an extension of the coach on the floor. One thing Gould does so well is control the tempo of the game. The Red Raiders can run when their defense produces stops and opportunities, but North also has the shooting and inside scoring to play a halfcourt game. The Red Raiders need a point guard who knows when to run and when not to run.

"Pat has a high basketball intelligence," said Barrett. "He understands the game. He knows what the pace should be and he knows where the ball should go."

Obviously, a point guard must be unselfish. Any player who worries about his points first needs to find another position. It is a greater sacrifice for Gould than most because he has the shot and drive to easily score 15-18 per game if he looked for his chances first. With his brother Dan, North's leading scorer sidelined, he poured in 28 in a win against Scituate.

"Pat is unselfish to a fault," said Barrett. "He has a great outside shot, and honestly, there are times when I wish he would take it more. But he's more concerned with distributing the ball to his teammates."

Gould is quick, handles the press well and makes his free throws which is crucial at the end of close games. He can get to the basket, but he is at his best when running the offense, swinging the ball around the perimeter and into the post players with crisp, accurate passes.

In three quarters against Hanover, he set up Marquis McClendon for three hoops on a bounce pass for a layup, a perfect chest-high feed for a jumper off a screen and a interior pass off an offensive rebound. He had three steals, one off his relentless man-to-man defense and another which stopped a 2-on-0 Hanover break.

Gould filled the lane on the fast break for two hoops and two free throws. He played turnover-free basketball and passed up at least three open threes for closer looks for his teammates. Finally, he drove, drew the whole defense to the right wing and slipped a soft, easy-to-handle feed across the lane to a slashing Anthony Green for a loud dunk.

If anyone was looking for a sample on how to play the position, Gould's effort would serve just fine.

Boys' Ice Hockey

Quincy Defeats Everett, Falls To Whitman-Hanson

By BILL GRIFFIN

If ever a game symbolized a team's season, the Whitman-Hanson game was a symbol of Quincy's hockey season.

The Presidents trailed by three entering the third period, but they came roaring back. Patrick Freeman scored. Jake Hallisey scored. Quincy was within one. There were over 11 minutes left. The Presidents were controlling the play. Something big was about to happen.

Then a mistake stopped the comeback. The Panthers Jake Bowen converted a goalmouth feed and W-H survived a furious Quincy finish for a 4-2 Patriot League victory at the Quincy Youth Arena Saturday night.

"We didn't quit and that's good, but we gave away a goal by missing a coverage and that stopped us," said Quincy coach Tim Lewis after his team slipped to 2-10-1 on the season.

Earlier last week, Quincy's played excellent two-way hockey in a 3-0 non-league win over Everett.

W-H had grabbed a 3-0 lead with a three-goal second period, but Quincy fought back and poured 17 shots on goal in the final period. Freeman started it with his tenth goal in seven games. Hallisey drove the original shot on net and Freeman pounded home the rebound on a low drive from the slot with 13:47 left in the game.

"Freeman has a scorer's touch," said Lewis.

After W-H goalie Ryan Smalls robbed Hallisey and Patrick Donovan on a close-in drive, Hallisey cut it to 3-2 with 11:37 left. Freeman outhustled a defender along the right wing, fired on a blast on Smalls and Hallisey had the open side for the rebound and the goal to make it a one-goal game.

Countless times this season, most recently with a two-goal lead on North in the third period, Quincy has been on the threshold of breaking through against a quality Patriot League opponent and Saturday night had the right feel to it. The Presidents had controlled the game (34-19 in shots), they were hot, but Bowen's goal stopped it.

"It's frustrating because we are so much better than our record shows," said Lewis whose team skated only one senior Saturday night.

Even after Bowen's goal, Quincy buzzed the net and tested Smalls who was terrific. He robbed Brian O'Callaghan with a glove save, turned aside a Freeman blast with a pad stop, handled a Hallisey deflection, and stopped a Chris Andrews' drive from the slot.

"Their goalie was very sharp all night," said Lewis.

The Presidents had 10 shots on goal in the first and most were serious threats. Smalls stopped O'Callaghan, Donovan, Hallisey, and Freeman on excellent chances. O'Callaghan rifled one off the crossbar in the closing seconds of the period. Freeman hit a post in the second period.

Chris Boussey scored twice and Bowen added a singleton as W-H connected three times in the second for a 3-0 lead.

"The second period was as poor a period as we've played this season," said Lewis.

Jimmy Brennick and Brandon Beal had strong games on defense. The first line of Mike Pugsley, Hallisey and Freeman dominated the offensive zone with skating and excellent scoring chances.

"Brennick has been very good the last handful of games and Freeman and Hallisey give us good efforts every game," said Lewis.

Quincy broke a 10-game winless streak against Everett and the Presidents did it with style, completely controlling the game as evidenced by a 49-8 edge in shots on goal.

"We really needed it," said Lewis. "We had to make something like this happen, and we played a solid game. We not only had a lot of chances, we had great chances. The Everett goalie can play on the college level. Along with Nolan Greene (North Quincy), he's the best goalie we've played against all year."

Quincy prevented any frustration from setting in by scoring with 4:50 left in the first. Defenseman Matt Davis started the play and freshman Jo Jo McArdle put a hard shot on goal. O'Callaghan was in the perfect spot to drive home the rebound for a 1-0 lead.

Despite Quincy's relentless attack on the Everett net, it stood at 1-0 until midway through the third when the Presidents connected on a power play. Donovan fed Freeman in the slot and Freeman buried the pass for a 2-0 edge. Hallisey drew an assist on the play.

Freeman ended it with eight seconds left. Mike Pugsley made a pinpoint feed and Freeman drove it home to make the final, 3-0.

"I was happy with the way we dealt with a hot goalie. We didn't get frustrated. We just kept attacking," said Lewis.

Brennick had a solid, consistent game. McArdle was effective and aggressive up front for the Presidents.

"McArdle is a tough player who is coming into his own," said Lewis.

Quincy hosts Pembroke Saturday at 8:10.

North Quincy Skates To 2-2 Tie With Silver Lake

By BILL GRIFFIN

There have been no easy rides for North Quincy.

There have been no five or six-goal romps. The scoring burst has yet to happen. Every night is a hockey grinder, a tie, a one-goal verdict. Each pass, each shot, each check has meaning and importance. It is the kind of hockey that can wear down a club.

There was more hockey on the edge against Silver Lake. The Lakers rallied for two scores in the final 12 minutes to balance two picture-perfect goals by Andrew Currie and tie North, 2-2 in a Patriot League contest at the Quincy Youth Arena Saturday night.

"This kind of hockey can put pressure on a team, but that's no excuse," said North coach Matt Gibbons. "That what the league is like. They're are going to be close games. There aren't many blowouts."

The tie was good news for the tourney and bad news for the league. North ended the week at 7-3-4 overall and 4-1-4 in the league. The Red Raiders need just two more points to qualify for the tourney. However, they missed a great chance to move up in the league. They are tied with Silver Lake (5-2-2), three points behind first-place Duxbury.

"One of our goals is to win the league and this tie hurts us," said Gibbons.

Earlier last week, North defeated Brockton, 1-0 and lost to Shawsheen, 1-0 in non-league games. In the last seven games, North has scored seven goals and allowed seven goals. They have won one, tied four and lost one. For the season, North has had four games decided by two goals, three by one goal, and has tied four. Everything has been hard work. There has been little room to breathe.

"Frustrating," was Gibbons' description. "Offensively, we need a couple of people to step up. Currie has been great, but we need a few others."

This tie stung. There was no good feeling like scoring in the final 40 seconds to tie Quincy and Duxbury. There was no sense that goalie Nolan Greene might have stolen them a point like Quincy or Pembroke. North was up by two goals late in the game. They controlled the game, posting a 33-19 edge in shots. North could have easily been up by four or five. Passes jumped over sticks, deflections trickled just wide, slap shots found the pads of Lakers' goalie Alex Crone.

"We outplayed them," said Gibbons. "We can't seem to get a bounce, but a team has to make its own bounces."

Currie, who scored all of North's three goals last week, connected twice in the second period.

He took a nice feed up the left wing from Brendan Cox. He held the puck, froze the goalie, and hit the far corner for a 1-0 lead with 12:01 left. With just over three minutes left in the period, Cox made another precise pass and Currie found the top corner from just inside the left faceoff circle. Robbie Cameron also drew an assist on the play.

"Both goals were on tape-to-tape passes. Beautiful plays," said Gibbons.

The third period has been North's period all season and the two-goal lead looked just fine. However, Ryan Hurley flipped home a rebound on the power play to cut it to 2-1 with 11:22 left. Hurley tied it with 1:20 remaining on another rebound, this one from a shot directly off a faceoff to the left of Greene.

"On the first goal, we had two or three chances to clear and on the second, we lost a man we should have covered," said Gibbons.

"We have no excuse. When we're up by two goals in the third period, we have to win the game."

North played through adversity. The Red Raiders lost Pat Verhault and Martin Blake to injuries from an already-depleted forward line. Rudy Tryon (a stand-out all-around game), Sean Farnham, Verhault, Brendan Brady, John Ross McEvilly, and Currie all forced good chances which just missed connecting.

"We have to start converting," said Gibbons.

In the Brockton game, Greene turned aside 29 shots and Currie scored the only goal with eight seconds left in the second period.

Tryon started the scoring play with a low, hard drive from the point. Cox deflected the shot, Currie pounced on the rebound and buried it for the only goal Greene would need.

Greene, who has given up more than two goals in a game just once this year (a 6-3 win over Whitman-Hanson) was brilliant again. He received plenty of support from his reliable defense and forwards who skated their lanes and made the checks all night.

"The defense and goaltending have been unbelievable from the beginning of the season," said Gibbons. "Tom Sullivan works with our defense and he does a great job. They make the simple plays and they avoid mistakes."

Tryon has been the leader with his booming shots and tough cleanouts in front of his net. Brady, Josh Hayward, Ryan Martin, Matt McDonald, and Matt Monahan have led a unit which has given just 17 goals through 14 games.

"The forwards have been excellent as well defensively. They've back checked well all year," said Gibbons.

Shawsheen scored its goal on the power play in the second period for the 1-0 win. Greene was sharp again with 23 stops.

Currie, Tryon and Cameron all had fine chances. North created its opportunities, but the Red Raiders couldn't find the range for the equalizer as they did late in the game against Quincy and Duxbury.

"We had good chances, but we're missing our spots. I'd like to see us do a better job with rebounds," said Gibbons. "We're tinkering with the lines, and I think we'll break out. Currie has some big goals for us. We need more from our other forwards."

North is at Scituate Saturday.

mances from freshman center Nicole Jorgensen.

Friday, the Presidents held the lead into final 35 seconds before falling to Whitman-Hanson, 41-36. Jorgensen had 23 points, 14 rebounds and five blocks for Quincy who also received a strong game from junior point guard Alyssa Lydon who handed out six assists.

The Presidents are 6-8 and need to win four of their last six games to qualify for the tourney.

Earlier in the week, Quincy was within one point with less than three minutes left when Brockton went on a 5-0 spurt for a 62-58 decision.

Jorgensen had 14 points, 15 rebounds and six blocks which gave her 37 points, 29 rebounds, and 11 blocks for the two games last week. Toss in 20 points and 19 rebounds from the North game and you have a pretty good month for most centers.

Junior Kayla McArdle was brilliant for the Presidents, scoring 15 of her 22 points in the second half to keep Quincy close. McArdle has stepped up and been more aggressive on offense over the past two weeks. The Brockton game capped a three-game run in which she scored 55 points.

Quincy hosts Hingham Friday.

The Quincy-North Quincy girls hockey team played well in three games last week.

Saturday, Martha's Vineyard scored a goal late in the third period to tie Quincy-North, 3-3.

St. Joseph's edged Quincy-North, 1-0, while Boston Latin defeated Quincy-North, 7-2.

Against Martha's Vineyard, Brianna Mullaney scored twice and Kennedy Harding added a single goal.

In the St. Joe's game, Quincy-North dominated the contest with 30 shots on goal, but could not break through. Leah Ryan, Julia Donovan and Madison Hally attacked the net and produced a series of scoring chances. Brianna Mullaney and Donovan had strong games on defense. Senior Erin McGuinness returned in goal after a two-game absence and was excellent against both St. Joseph's and Martha's Vineyard.

In the Latin contest, Kelly Donahue scored on a breakaway and Donovan added the second goal. Ryan had an assist on Donovan's goal.

Freshman Caitlin Dooley played another good game in net for Quincy-North who hosts Latin in a rematch Saturday at 6:40.

Replacing Water Pipe Broken In Freeze

By SAMANTHA MAZZOTTA

Q: During the last cold snap, the cold water pipe leading to my garage's utility sink froze and broke. Fortunately, there was no water damage. Is it possible to fix the pipe myself? -- Chet in Springfield, Mass.

A: Depending on the location of the pipe break, repairing it can be fairly straightforward. The good thing is that it's a nonessential fixture -- unlike, say, pipes leading to the kitchen or bathroom -- and so you have the choice of either fixing it right away or shutting off water to that section of the pipe run until the weather gets warmer.

A broken pipe needs to be replaced. It can be patched, but those quick fixes break down in short period of time.

For the repair, you'll need a pipe cutter, a length of replacement pipe of the same diameter and material as the original pipe, sandpaper or steel wool, and a round wire brush. If you plan to solder the replacement, you'll need a handheld propane torch, flux (a paste that helps solder spread evenly) and pipe solder.

If you don't want to solder, or can't do it safely, you'll need to buy two compression fittings, one for each side of the replacement pipe. Cutting and preparing the pipe is the same. Ultimate Handyman has a short video detailing how to use compression fittings here: http://www.youtube.com/watch?feature=player\_embedded&v=9c5LWFLM4.

Make sure the water supply to the pipe is turned off. Mark the pipe on both sides of the break. Fit the adjustable pipe cutter around the first mark, tighten, and rotate the tool around the pipe three or four times to achieve a smooth, straight cut. Repeat on the other side. You may need to finish the cut with a few swipes of a hacksaw, but the pipe section should detach pretty cleanly.

Take the section to the home-improvement store to find the correct replacement pipe and fittings.

Use the round wire brush, sandpaper or steel wool to scrub away metal burrs left by the cut and to smooth the pipe ends. Next, test the fittings to make sure both the remaining and replacement pipe will fit. The connections should be pretty tight even without flux and solder.

Apply flux to the ends of the pipe using a small brush to spread it evenly, about 1 inch along the pipe. Slide the pipe into the fittings, twisting to spread the flux more, then slide the replacement pipe and fittings into place on the pipe run.

Uncoil about 9 inches of solder. Bend the first 2 inches at a 90-degree angle, which gives you more control. Light the propane torch and briefly heat both sides of the first fitting, about 5 seconds each side, so that the fitting heats evenly. To see if the fitting is heated correctly, touch the bent end of the solder to the fitting; if the solder melts, it's go time.

Working quickly, insert a half-inch or more of solder into the joint between the fitting and the pipe. The heated fitting will melt the solder and draw it into the joint so that just a thin bead is still visible. (This may take a couple of tries if it's your first time.) Being careful not to burn yourself, use a rag to quickly wipe away excess solder.

Complete soldering all the joints and let the pipes cool completely. Then, open the tap on the utility sink and slowly turn on the water supply, monitoring the new section for leaks around the fittings. If a leak is evident you'll need to disconnect everything and redo it.

HOME TIP: Propane torches should be used only in well-ventilated areas. Keep flammable items away from the torch.

Agent Sam Rounseville Talks About Local Real Estate Market

Quincy Profiled On 'Chronicle' Tonight

Quincy will be profiled on Channel 5's "Chronicle" program tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 5.

Here is a description of the program from Channel 5:

"You've heard of Southie Pride. Well, Quincy's got its own positive attitude. Thanks to John Adams and John Quincy Adams it can claim to be The City of Presidents. And it also looms large in American pop culture as the birthplace of road food icons Howard Johnson's and Dunkin' Donuts, not to mention the punk rock band Dropkick Murphys.

"But this South Shore city isn't resting on its laurels. Ted Reinstein found homemade pasta that rivals the North End and a 65-foot Sushi bar. And he tells us about a groundbreaking redevelopment project that will change the face of the city forever."

Among those appearing on the segment is Red Door Real Estate agent Sam Rounseville who was chosen to talk about the real estate market in Quincy. A camera crew came to Red Door's Sea Street office to interview Rounseville on the local market before shooting on location in Houghs Neck, Squantum and Marina Bay.

Since Quincy is blessed with some of the most beautiful coastlines on the South Shore, Rounseville focused on waterfront properties. The interview includes information on the average sale price of a home in Quincy versus the sale price of a home on the water.

Viewers will be able to get a glimpse into the local real estate market as well as all that Quincy has to offer including the downtown redevelopment and local attractions.

On Friday, Jan. 18 at approximately 8:55 P.M., Officers Dan Francis and Dan Parisi and Sgt. Jim McNeil were dispatched to Grossman Street on a call of domestic violence. After arriving on scene, Sgt. McNeil spoke with the female victim, who was outside the apartment building. She said that she called "911" because "he beat the S@#$ out of me again," referring to her on again/off again boyfriend who lives in the same building but not in her apartment.

The victim was crying and appeared to be very upset. She said that the suspect had been drinking alcohol all day and they began to argue about the fact he thought she was receiving phone calls from other men. She stated that the suspect kicked her in the back (while he was wearing shoes) three times, then grabbed and twisted her left forearm before slamming her into a wall, causing a laceration to her left elbow.

The Officers knocked on the suspect's door numerous times but there was no response. Dispatchers attempted to reach the suspect by telephone but there was no answer. Sgt. McNeil had probable cause to believe that the suspect had just committed a violent and arrestable offense, so he requested that K-9 Officer Paul Foley respond to the location too.

Officers Francis and Parisi made a final verbal notice to the suspect that they were coming if he didn't open the door. When there was no response, the Officers forced the door in. After searching his apartment with negative results, Officer Foley and his K-9 partner, Rex, entered the building to search the basement.

As Officer Foley entered the basement, he was unable to locate a light switch, so other than the use of his flashlight, there was complete darkness. The Officer yelled standard K-9 warnings loud and strong three separate times – "Quincy Police K-9, you are under arrest, surrender now or my Police dog will find you and bite you." The Officers waited in silence for several seconds for a response but heard nothing.

By QUINCY POLICE LT. DAN MINTON

Based on the available information – namely that the Officers were searching for a violent felonious suspect who could be armed, was actively evading and resisting arrest, could harm the Officers as they entered a dark un-searched basement, that the suspect did not respond to warnings to surrender, that there were no other safer options to apprehend the suspect, that a trained K-9 team was on scene – Officer Foley un-hooked Rex's leash and commanded him to enter the dark basement and begin searching.

Approximately 30 seconds later, Officer Foley heard Rex barking and scratching. Through his training and experience, the K-9 Officer knew that this was an indication that Rex has located a barricaded suspect but was not able to get to him. Officer Foley entered the basement stairs just far enough to illuminate the area where Rex was. At this time, the suspect emerged from behind a large unattached wooden door, pushing it at Rex at least five separate times, hitting Rex on his head and body. Rex however, was undeterred and kept charging at the suspect. During this time, Officer Foley was yelling at the suspect to stop hitting the dog but he didn't listen. With his gun drawn at the suspect, Officer Foley moved in, pulled Rex back away from the swinging door and commanded the suspect to drop the door and surrender.

The suspect dropped the door and then went after Officer Foley, but was subdued by Sgt. McNeil and Officers Francis and Parisi, who were situated behind Officer Foley. Once the suspect was apprehended and brought to the street, the Officers saw that the suspect had dog bite injuries to his right hand and forearm. An ambulance was requested to the scene to treat the suspect, who did not require hospitalization.

As the suspect was placed in the rear seat of the cruiser, Officer Foley detected a strong odor of an alcoholic beverage on his breath. He was unsteady on his feet, slurred his speech and his eyes appeared sleepy, glassy and blood shot. The suspect, a 55-year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon (shod foot), Domestic Assault and Battery, Resisting Arrest, Interfering with a Police dog and Assault and Battery on a Police dog (animal cruelty)." The left side of Rex's mouth was swollen as a result of this incident but he did not require medical treatment. Although the victim declined an emergency protection order, she did go by ambulance to Quincy Medical Center to be treated for her injuries. Nice Work!

RULES OF THE ROAD

Intersections are where two or more roadways meet. Traffic flow at intersections is often controlled by signals, signs, and/or pavement markings. Intersections are very important to the flow and safety of traffic. It is illegal to block an intersection with your vehicle. When driving through an intersection, you must obey all signs or traffic signals. You may only enter an intersection or drive across a crosswalk if there is enough room for you to drive through safely. Blocking the paths of other vehicles or pedestrians in an intersection or a crosswalk is dangerous.

SCAM?

A resident informed me that he received a telephone call from a person with a foreign accent, stating that he was from Medicare. The caller said that he needed to send out a new Medicare card and needed the resident's name, address and bank information. This is a form of phishing – seeking out personal information under a ruse. The resident hung up on the caller. As always, never give out personal information.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) It could be risky to push for a project you believe in but others are wary of. Never mind. If you trust your facts, follow your courageous Aries heart and go with it.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your enthusiasm sparks renewed interest in a workplace project that once seemed headed for deletion. Support from supervisors helps you make all necessary changes.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A colleague might be a bit too contrary when your ideas are being discussed in the workplace. A demand for an explanation could produce some surprises all around.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Try to avoid distractions at a time when maintaining stability in a fluid situation is essential. There'll be time enough later for the Moon Child to enjoy some well-earned fun and games.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Stop wasting energy licking your wounded pride. Instead, put the lessons you learned from that upsetting experience to good use in an upcoming opportunity.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You love being busy. But try not to make more work for yourself than you need to. Get help so that you don't wind up tackling tasks that are better left to others.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Your usually balanced way of assessing situations could be compromised by some so-called new facts.

Check them out before making any shift in judgment. SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You might feel angry over an unexpected shift in attitude by someone you trusted. But this could soon turn in your favor as more surprising facts come out.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Love rules everywhere for all amorous Archers, single or attached. It's also a good time to restore friendships that might have frayed over the years.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) It's not always easy for the proud Goat to forgive past slights. But clearing the air could help establish a better climate for that important upcoming venture.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Good news: Your skillful handling of a recent matter has won admiration from someone who could be influential in any upcoming decisions involving you. PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You continue to welcome new friends into the widening circle of people whom you hold dear. One of those newcomers soon might have something special to tell you.

BORN THIS WEEK: You love nature and inspire others to follow your example of concern for the planet's well-being.

PRESIDENT BARACK OBAMA delivers his Second Inaugural Address after being sworn in during a public ceremony on the steps of the U.S. Capitol Jan. 21.

Presidential Inauguration An 'Unforgettable Experience'

Editor's Note: The following account was written by James (J.J.) O'Donnell, son of Norfolk County Register of Deeds William O'Donnell. J.J., a sophomore at Norwood High School, his dad and brother Billy attended the second inauguration of President Barack Obama Jan. 21. Here are some of J.J.'s reflections from that experience.

By J.J. O'DONNELL

On Sunday, Jan. 20, my dad, my brother Billy and I loaded up the car and headed to the airport. I could not wait until we landed in Washington, D.C. I did not know what to expect for my first Inauguration. I knew I was very lucky to go though. It was going to be a very historic day and a fun experience.

In our history class at my high school, we are studying the past presidencies and how our government functions. I was excited to see the different buildings that make our government function.

Also, I couldn't wait to see all the historic buildings in D.C. When our plane was landing I could already see some of these buildings: the Capitol, Washington Monument, the Lincoln Memorial and the Pentagon. Unfortunately, the worst part of the trip came right when we landed, watching the Pats game. Despite the outcome of the Pats game, I knew we were still going to have a lot of fun on this trip.

We started bright and early on Monday morning, Jan. 21st. We grabbed a huge breakfast and headed out of the hotel. Large crowds of people were flocking from their hotels. A big word of thanks and appreciation to Cong. Stephen Lynch who got us Inauguration tickets.

We pushed through the crowds and arrived at our ticket entrance. There was a mob of people waiting to get in. The security was very tight. When we were waiting in line, I could see the secret service people on rooftops with their binoculars and guns.

After waiting for about an hour we had finally gotten through security. But this would not be the only line we would have to wait in. After going two steps every 10 minutes we had finally got through another security checkpoint. We had finally got through another security checkpoint. We were finally in!

We settled down and waited for the President. I couldn't believe all the people. When I looked back the people were packed all the way back to the Washington Monument.

Finally, President Obama's name was announced and everyone began to chant and scream. After being inaugurated by the Supreme Court Chief Justice he began his speech. It was an awesome experience to witness my first inaugural speech.

But I think a bigger cheer from the crowd came when Beyonce's name was introduced. This was the first time I heard Beyonce sing live. The day was far from over when the inaugural ceremonies had finished.

We walked around the city seeing all of the different buildings. We saw the Supreme Court, the Library of Congress, the White House and the National Archives. After waiting in yet another line, we had gotten into the parade. The parade was very entertaining.

My favorite band was the U.S. Marine Corp band. I also liked watching the horses go by in the parade. My father was excited to see the Boston College Screaming Eagles band.

After the parade we went to a reception for the Massachusetts Democratic Party. I enjoyed talking to the state rep Bruce Ayers about wrestling. Mr. Ayers said that he used to wrestle a few pounds ago.

The waiters at the party knew where to deliver the food. The waiter kept coming with hamburger sliders, scallops and other kinds of good food.

After being up since 6:30 in the morning, it was time to head back to the hotel. I know the Inauguration of President Obama is an experience that I will never forget.

ARTHUR TOBIN holds a copy of The Quincy Sun dated Feb. 9, 1978 – the week that the Blizzard of 1978 hit. Tobin was Quincy's mayor for just one month when the Blizzard of '78 struck 35 years ago this week (Feb. 6 and 7.) The storm dropped 27 inches of snow, flooded coastal neighborhoods including Houghs Neck and Squantum and caused millions of dollars in property damage. Tobin has a framed copy of the lead photo from that week's Quincy Sun at his house. That photo and others from the Blizzard appear on Pages 12-16.

Former Mayor Tobin, Others Remember The 'Storm Of The Century' 35 Years Later Quincy Weathered The Blizzard Of '78

By SCOTT JACKSON

A month after taking office in January 1978, Arthur Tobin found himself the mayor of a city under more than two feet of snow and swamped by coastal flooding after the infamous Blizzard of '78 blindsided Quincy.

"I woke up the mayor of a blizzard," Tobin, now the clerk magistrate at the Francis X. Bellotti Courthouse, said days before the storm's 35th anniversary.

Broad Meadows Marsh Restoration Nearly Complete

By SCOTT JACKSON

After more than a decade of planning, restoration work at the Broad Meadows Marsh is nearing completion.

The marsh was a bustling estuary until 1938, when the Army Corps of Engineers began using the site as a dumping ground for material dredged from Town River. A second dredging project took place in 1956, and the marsh was used as a dumping ground again.

"Broad Meadows Marsh was part of a huge salt marsh complex in Houghs Neck. In 1938 and the 1950s, our Corps of Engineers filled portions of the marsh for the Town River dredging and lost about 106 acres of marsh," Army Corps of Engineers chief of ecosystem planning Larry Oliver explained to the City Council Monday.

In the early 2000s, the city began planning to restore the marsh to its original condition. The city worked with the Corps of Engineers on the project; Quincy contributed about $1.3 million to the project, the Neponset River Watershed Association paid $300,000, and the Corps paid the rest of the $6 million price tag.

"The Corps of Engineers is interested now in restoring salt marsh. Salt marsh is extremely valuable estuarine habitat for fish and wild life - clams, shrimp, crabs, winter flounder, a lot of species like that depend on salt marshes and so we feel it's important that we get back in these areas we've impacted and do some restoration,"

Cahill Status Conference Delayed To Feb. 25

A status conference regarding corruption charges against former Treasurer Tim Cahill has been delayed, again.

The status conference had been scheduled for Tuesday afternoon, but was bumped back to Feb. 25 at 2 p.m.

inside the Suffolk County Superior Courthouse. A previous status conference took place on Jan. 4, and the second one had been scheduled for Jan. 25 before being rescheduled to Tuesday.

In December, a mistrial was declared after a jury failed to reach a unanimous verdict on two conspiracy charges against the former treasurer, who resides in Quincy and served on the City Council. The charges relate to ads he ran during his 2010 campaign for governor.

Broad Meadows Marsh Restoration Nearly Complete

Oliver said.

The Corps divided the project into two major components, 31 acres of salt marsh and 23 acres of coastal grass upland from the marsh, as well as a wet meadow. Work began in 2009, and by December 2011 saltwater was once again flowing in the marsh.

"We included a berm to keep the area separate from tidal flooding while we were constructing it. We broke through that berm in December of 2011. That was the indicator of the completion of the salt marsh restoration portion of the project," Oliver said. "That is the thing that would trigger the salt marsh vegetation coming back."

Within a couple years vegetation at the salt marsh should start to fill in, resembling what the marsh would have once looked like.

Work on the upland portion is also complete, though the Corps is still trying to eliminate all the Phragmites australis – the common reed – from the site.

"These areas are coming in with some fairly nice vegetation. We still have some Phragmites mixed in, we're trying to deal with that – we've gone out and tried to kill some of the Phragmites," Oliver said. "These areas are vegetating fairly nicely for what we want to see in an upland habitat surrounding and adjacent to a marsh."

Oliver said the city will need to be vigilant in eliminating the reeds and making sure they do not return. Problems also arose in some areas of the upland portion because the soil has a low pH because of the dredge material.

In total, 390,000 cubic yards of material was removed from the site. The only work that remains is seeding the meadow area and installation of control structures near culverts. Both projects should be completed by the spring.

"There's only two things that the contractor needs to do. They need to seed those wet meadow areas in the spring and then they need to put control structures on the culverts we installed to allow storm water to drain into the marsh," Oliver said.

Originally part of the $6 million would have gone towards the creation of recreation facilities, such as elevated walkways and gravel paths. Gravel paths were created, but the elevated walkways were not because more money was needed for restoration work. Mayoral spokesman Chris Walker said the city will contemplate how the public will be able to utilize the area after construction is completed.

"At some point this no longer becomes a construction site," Walker said. "At that point, some decisions will be made as to what, where, and how public access is going to be allowed."

DARE Officers John Grazioso, Don Sautter Honored For Work In Quincy Schools

By SCOTT JACKSON

The City Council took time Monday night to honor Quincy DARE Officers John Grazioso and Don Sautter for their work in Quincy's schools.

Presenting the citation, Councillor Doug Gutro said the two officers – known as Officers John and Don – have played a key role in drug awareness in city schools with little fanfare.

"They don't get much fanfare and they don't get much recognition, but they're the folks that really shape the conscious and shape the decisions of the next generation when it comes to drugs," Gutro said. "They do extraordinary work and when you have two young kids in the school system as I do you hear the feedback and the message that they send and how it resonates with teachers, with students, and with parents."

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci, chairman of the council's public safety committee, said the DARE officers provide invaluable education to schoolchildren because there is no cure for drug addiction.

"Once a child or young adult becomes drug addicted that is something they will struggle with for the entirety of their life," Palmucci said. "Chances are there will be very negative consequences in their life before they get to the point where they are in treatment. In this particular case, an ounce of prevention is worth far more than a pound of cure. That's what these officers do on a daily basis – they're dispensing this prevention."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin, a probation officer, said the increase in substance abuse has been the biggest issue he's seen during his career. That increase underscores the need for education programs like DARE.

"In 34 years in probation one of the things some of my colleagues and I have talked about – probably the most prevailing issue throughout that time has been the increase in terms of substance abuse and alcohol abuse," Coughlin said. "I don't think we can do enough at the earliest stages to try and interdict that and what you guys do is certainly component in that effort."

The DARE officers said they'd continue to help in the schools the best they could.

"We'll work as hard as we can to keep helping the kids," Grazioso said.

"John and I have been working together for awhile now. It's been a pleasure working with him and we work well together," Sautter said. "We always like to talk about keeping away from drugs and alcohol as a wheel. And John and I might have a couple spokes in that wheel, we obviously don't have the whole thing. We try to help at a younger age, elementary and middle school, we hope it lasts as they get to their adult years."

Lt. Det. Patrick Glynn of the Quincy Police Drug Unit thanked Mayor Tom Koch, Police Chief Paul Keenan, and the council for keeping DARE funding in tact as other communities cut back because the program's success is difficult to measure.

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said a concerted group effort lead by the mayor and police chief has helped make Quincy a leader in drug awareness education. She pointed out that Glynn will be honored by the White House for his work in the coming months.

"It is a team effort that has Quincy as a leader in drug awareness education. Our programs are consistently being recognized as a leader on the South Shore and beyond to the point our lieutenant here is being recognized by the White House in the spring," Laforest said.

ABCC Hears Four Hours Of Testimony

Tilted Kilt Decision Expected By April

By EMILY TAFT

After over four hours of testimony during a hearing on Jan. 30th, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC) is expected to have a decision by April about the Quincy License Board's ruling to deny an all alcohol restaurant license to the Tilted Kilt last August.

On Jan. 30th the ABCC met with License Board Chairman and City Clerk Joseph Shea, City Solicitor Jim Timmins, Waxy's Quincy LLC (doing business as Tilted Kilt) owners Gordon Hyde and Ashtok Patel and their attorney Louis Cassis, along with St. John's Church Deacon Paul Lewis and Fort Square Presbyterian Church Pastor John Culp, to hear testimony from both sides of the case.

"There was a lot of testimony presented at the hearing," said board Chairman and City Clerk Joseph Shea. "I think we have sound footing on the Chapter 138 Section 16C, which says that we have to notify any schools or churches within 500 feet. I think it interferes with the spiritual activities that go on at St. John's (Church). I feel good and very optimistic. I feel we put our best foot forward."

The hearing date was originally set for Dec. 12th but was cancelled after the Hyde and Patel filed a Motion for Summary Decision by the ABCC and it was denied. Hyde and Patel then had to re-file for a hearing, which was then set for Jan. 30th.

During the two-hour hearing on Aug. 29, 2012, over 20 citizens spoke to the board on their opinion of the proposed restaurant. Seventeen people spoke against the business and over 400 signatures were on a petition opposing the proposal. The board voted 3-2 denying the license with board members Jay Duca, the city's Director of Inspectional Services, Police Chief Paul Keenan, and Shea voting against the license. Co-chairman and Commissioner of Public Health Andrew Scheele and Fire Chief Joseph Barron voted in favor of the license.

If the ABCC approves of the decision the license board made then Hyde and Patel have the opportunity to appeal the ABCC's decision to Superior Court within 30 days of receipt of the decision. If they vote against the actions made by the license board they will recommend further action, and the board must take the recommended action within five days of receipt of the ABCC's decision.

The board will decide whether they want to continue with their original decision or implement the recommendations from the ABCC. If the board decides to stay with their original decision the owners may file a suit against the board in court or they may reappeal to the ABCC within five days.

Political Musical Chairs

Cong. Stephen Lynch's decision to vie for John Kerry's vacated U.S. Senate seat may be the first of many musical chairs that could change the city's political landscape at the state and local level.

Lynch announced last Thursday that he's seeking the Democratic nomination in the special U.S. Senate race. He joins Capitol Hill colleague Cong. Ed Markey as the only announced candidates as of this writing but the state GOP promised to field at least one candidate.

But it won't be former U.S. Sen. Scott Brown. He took himself out of the race leaving many to speculate he'll run for governor next year.

If Lynch wins his party's nomination April 30 and is elected June 25 to fill Kerry's term that expires next year, another special election would be held to fill Lynch's congressional seat.

That scenario could lead to a myriad of candidates, including State Sen. John Keenan who is seriously considering a run for Congress if there is an open seat.

"I would seriously consider running for the 8th Congressional District seat if Cong. Steve Lynch is elected to the United States Senate," Keenan says. "Many of the issues that I have worked on as a city councillor and as a state senator, including issues such as fiscal responsibility, economic development and jobs, and the causes of ending substance abuse and bringing parity to the treatment of mental health, impact the entire region. Serving in Congress would be a great opportunity to continue working on these issues and to keep advancing these causes."

Keenan, a Democrat, wouldn't be the only candidate but he could be the strongest considering how the new 8th District breaks down by precincts and counties.

Keenan, re-elected to a second term as state senator last fall, represents the Norfolk and Plymouth Senate District. Of the 53 precincts in his senate district, 47 of them are located in the new 8th Congressional District. The six precincts he represents that are not in the 8th are located in the Town of Rockland.

And Norfolk County is the lion's share of the new 8th District.

According to figures from the City Clerk's office, Norfolk County represents 49.92 percent of the new 8th District. Plymouth County is second at 28.53 percent and Boston is third with 20.69 percent.

What does that mean in terms of voters?

There are 493,435 registered voters in the 8th District. Of that number, 246,344 voters live in Norfolk County; 140,799 live in Plymouth County and 102,109 are in Boston, according to figures compiled by the Quincy Election Department.

So, it would seem, a candidate with name recognition in Norfolk County, has a well-organized campaign team and can raise money would appear to have an advantage if the 8th seat opens.

Keenan falls into all three categories. The Harvard graduate is also a proven vote getter in Quincy, topping the ballot several times. Quincy, with 30 precincts, is the second largest community in the 8th district, second only to Boston's 72 precincts.

Two other high-profile Quincy Democrats would be strong contenders in a Congressional field of candidates but neither is interested in Congress.

They are House Majority Leader Ron Mariano and Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey. Morrissey, by the way, has political observers wondering if he may run for state attorney general next year if

MORRISSEY

Martha Coakley decides to step down or run for governor.

The last three attorney generals have been district attorneys — and all from Middlesex County (Scott Harshbarger, Tom Reilly and Coakley). Current Middlesex County Dist. Atty. Gerry Leone has announced he won't seek re-election. He also said he won't seek another public office.

Morrissey would seem a logical candidate for AG. He was a fixture at the State House for 34 years serving Quincy as a state representative and state senator before being elected Norfolk County district attorney in 2010. Morrissey's term as D.A. doesn't expire until 2016 so he could run for attorney general and not risk his district attorney post.

Another potential candidate for Congress also took himself out of contention last week. That's state Sen. Jack Hart — a South Boston Democrat who also represents a good chunk of the 8th District. Hart is resigning from the Senate to join a law firm. His Senate seat is the same seat Lynch held before he was elected to Congress in 2001 after the death of Joseph Moakley.

A Keenan victory for an open Congressional seat would trigger a political chain reaction in Quincy.

That's because Keenan's open Senate seat would generate some more musical chairs. Potential candidates for Keenan's seat would include state Rep. Bruce Ayers, state Rep. Tackey Chan and Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci.

If one of the city's legislators were to win Keenan's senate seat, that would open up a state representative seat. And that would likely lead to some city councillors taking a run at that seat.

Sure, a lot has to happen before those scenarios crop up.

But a lot has already fallen into place with Kerry's appointment as Secretary of State. And Lynch's bid for Senate.

A few other things to keep in mind:

A special election for Congress would be a sprint since it would have to be held within 145 to 160 days of the vacancy. So, such an election would occur in mid-November or early December.

There's also a city election this year. The city election falls on Nov. 5. It's possible local voters would head to the polls to elect a mayor, nine city councillors and three school committee members and then elect a new Congressman a few weeks later.

We're not sure at this point if the city and special elections could be "piggy-backed" and be held on the same day with two separate ballots.

What also is unknown is whether a special election for an open state senate seat would be called if Keenan's seat were to open up.

That's because there is no requirement for a special election for open legislative seats in Massachusetts. The statute reads the legislature may call a special election for an open Senate or House seat or it could choose to leave that seat open until the next state election.

In other words, if Keenan were to win a special Congressional election, then the state Senate would decide whether to have a special election for his Senate seat, or leave the seat vacant until the 2014 election cycle.

Leaving it open for nearly a year may not sit well with communities like Quincy who would be left unrepresented in the State Senate for about a year. So, you could conceivably have a special election for a State Senate seat sometime in early 2014.

But leaving it open would also give potential candidates ample time to fund raise and organize for an election that fall.

And what happens if one of Quincy's state representatives wins an open Senate seat in a special election?

Same thing: either a special election or leave the seat open until 2014 state election.

Lynch's Senate decision cues the musical chairs.

A Lynch win really gets them moving.

Blizzard Brings City To Standstill

By SCOTT JACKSON

A weary army of workers struggled to dig Quincy out from under more than 26 inches of snow that brought the city to a standstill the city for days.

The record-breaking snowfall was backed by howling winds that gusted to more than 90 miles per hour. The winds drove high tides into sections of Houghs Neck and Squantum, forcing the evacuation of several hundred residents. Many of the residents were evacuated by boat, because streets were impassible.

"Motor vehicles were almost useless in the clogged streets," Police Chief Francis X. Finn said two days after the storm hit. "There are still areas we cannot get to with ambulances and certain fire equipment."

No deaths in Quincy were attributed to the storm, and no serious fires were reported. The storm cut power to 1,500 Mass. Electric customers, mostly in North Quincy and Quincy Point. Gov. Michael Dukakis banned all non-essential traffic in streets, schools throughout Quincy were shut down for the week, and MBTA service between Boston and Quincy was suspended. Sen. Ted Kennedy visited Quincy and vowed to seek federal aid to pay storm damages.

Circulation of The Quincy Sun was delayed two days and radio station WJDA lost power for four hours during the height of the storm when Town Brook overflowed into the studio transmitter.

DONORS TURNOUT FOR SERIOUSLY INJURED YOUTH

More than 50 residents responded to an appeal in The Quincy Sun to donate blood to George Bush, a 19-year old Quincy Point resident. Bush ruptured his spleen and damaged his liver in a car crash in December, remaining in intensive care at Quincy City Hospital since.

Ruth O'Connell, blood bank supervisor for the hospital, said 20 people donated blood within a week of the newspaper appeal. Another 20 had appointments to donate scheduled, and 10 were turned away because they were ill at the time.

PRESIDENT'S PHYSICAL FITNESS DEMONSTRATION AT BROAD MEADOWS

Mass. Commissioner of Education Gregory Anrig and Mass. Board of Education Chairman Charles Grigsby were among those present for a physical fitness demonstration at Broad Meadows Junior High School.

The demonstration included a review of a regular physical education class at the school's gym, led by instructors Denise Martin and John Bogan. It also featured a gym exhibition by the Broad Meadows team, led by Martin and Bogan.

Broad Meadows was one of ten schools across the state selected as a demonstration center.

THIS IS A 1914 postcard view of the old wooden commercial building that was on the corner of Franklin and Water Streets in Quincy Adams. The Quincy Variety Store was owned and operated by Walter Pinel and his son Arthur for over 40 years. It was a home furnishings store selling mostly furniture. A few hundred yards to the right was the Quincy Adams Depot and the infamous Water Street railroad crossing of the Old Colony Railroad. This was the last grade crossing to be bridged in Quincy. It was terribly dangerous with over 100 trains a day crossing the street and trolley tracks at grade. After years of appeals and many deaths and accidents a bridge was finally built over the tracks during the Depression using WPA funds. The building above was demolished a dozen years ago by the Hibernia Bank and the new building they built here is now a branch of Eastern Bank. ### Doubts 20 MPH Speed Limit Will Reduce Accidents

The imposition of 20 mph speed limits in certain residential streets will not work to reduce pedestrian accidents unless enforced. With limited police manpower, this will not happen. It was stated that such speed limits cannot be imposed by the city on state highway Route 3A. Of the streets stated, Hancock Street along Route 3A was not named.

Between Willett Street and North Quincy on Hancock Street, is a senior crossing. At that crossing are signs stating "Senior Zone 20 mph." These signs are completely disregarded by vehicular traffic.

The upsurge in pedestrian accidents is a global warming, anthropomorphic phenomena. With the mild winters, more folks are out and about. A structural reason for these accidents is, while traffic is heavy, it is also intermittent at times allowing folks to dart across streets.

Attempts to allow traffic safety cameras have been nonstarters. The best hope for a reduction in pedestrian accidents is cold weather.

Cell Phones – Not The Speed Limit – Is The Problem

I write this letter with some hesitation because I have such a high regard for the work of the city council, Mayor Koch and my friend Kevin Coughlin.

As I tried to drive 20 miles an hour going down Beal Street, I had to ride my break due to a slight slope in the road. As an elderly man blew past me on his bicycle, I had to ask, does this really make sense?

The reason casualties drop 60 percent when 20 miles per hour speed limits are enforced is that...YOU ARE NOT MOVING! If we lowered the limit to 5 miles an hour, I am sure we would have even more impressive statistics. The problem on the roads is cell phones. They really are not really cell phones anymore but hand-held computers. New York, New Jersey and Connecticut all ban hand-held cell phones in cars. The Massachusetts texting ban is so unenforceable, it can hardly be explained by public officials with a straight face. We should take a look at the real problem drivers are not paying attention to the roads before we slow the city to a crawl because some people like to check Facebook while they drive.

Sunde, a Quincy native and a student at Syracuse University, is working towards her Bachelor's of Science degree in public relations. She was born in China and at the age of one and a half was adopted. Not knowing what her future held she is grateful for what her new life has and continues to offer her.

Sunde will be performing a Contemporary Dance piece that portrays the emotions of being free, moving on, and letting go.

During their year of service, both Miss Boston and Miss Cambridge will travel across Greater Boston, speaking to government officials, business leaders, and community groups about their platform issue. Both Miss Boston and Miss Cambridge will compete for the title of Miss Massachusetts in June. The Miss Boston and Miss Cambridge Pageant is an official Miss America preliminary.

The winners of Miss Boston and Miss Cambridge will be awarded over $8,000 in scholarships and prizes to fund their college or graduate school education.

"We're excited to expand our organization and offer the title of Miss Cambridge this year. She will not only serve as a representative for the City of Cambridge but compete side by side with Miss Boston for the title of Miss Massachusetts," said Stephanie Janes, executive director of the Miss Boston Organization. "Once again, we are honored to have a group of smart women who are impressive with their variety of backgrounds, interests, talents and passion for community service."

HEART-SHAPED DIAMONDS

The heart-shaped diamond is considered to be the most romantic of all diamond shapes for obvious reasons. However, when selecting a heart-shaped diamond, it is important to set emotions aside and give careful consideration to several important factors. In essence, a heart-shaped diamond is a pear-shaped diamond with a cleft at the top. It should have clearly defined round lobes as well as good symmetry, shape definition, and outline. To determine proportion, review the diamond's length to width ratio and judge if the gemstone is too short (and fat), elongated, or evenly proportioned. Also bear in mind that "shape" and "cut" are two different matters. Cut is critically important when it comes to a heart-shaped diamond. Heart-shaped diamond cuts are perfect for Valentine's Day and highly recommended by Cupid for diamond earrings, diamond pendant necklaces, or as a center stone in a diamond engagement ring. BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Stuffed Strawberry Valentine Treat

There are so many ways to enjoy strawberries from just plain to dipping them in chocolate. And this one would be great to serve on Valentine's Day.

Today's strawberry recipe was given to me by my co-worker Emily, and wait until your taste these scrumptious strawberries.

STUFFED STRAWBERRIES

About 3-4 dozen strawberries

1-8 ounce package cream cheese (softened)

1/3 cup powdered sugar

2 teaspoons lemon juice

1/2 cup graham cracker crumbs

Wash the strawberries and scoop out the center keeping that aside. Mix the cream cheese, the powdered sugar, lemon juice and the mixture from the strawberries.

Fill each strawberry and then sprinkle the tops with the graham cracker crumbs. How delicious is that?

Scallops Over Arugula

One of the family's favorites is scallops made every which way. The recipe that my daughter Nancy makes is a bit different and so easy, you might want to make them this way again and again.

One of the nice things about this recipe is they are baked, not fried.

SCALLOPS OVER ARUGULA

1- pound scallops

Olive oil for dredging and the arugula

Unseasoned Panko breadcrumbs

Juice of one lemon

1 bunch or bag of arugula

Pat the scallops dry. Dip each on in the olive oil, then the crumbs. Place on a slightly greased cookie sheet and bake in 350-degree oven for about 5-8 minutes or until the scallops are done.

In a bowl, toss the arugula with a little olive oil and the lemon juice.

On a serving platter, place the arugula and top it with the scallops. Not only does it look tempting, but is equally tasty as well.

America's Kitchens Presentation Monday

From the colonial period to the present, the kitchen has been a source of nourishment and comfort. As the place where parents nurture children and families gather at breakfast and dinner, share chores, and discuss the world outside, the kitchen gives meaning to family life.

On Monday, Feb. 11, at 7 p.m., author and curator Nancy Carlisle will discuss how the American kitchen has evolved from the seventeenth-century to the present. Drawing on her book America's Kitchens, co-authored with Melinda Narandinov, Carlisle will tell the story of the nation's kitchens from New England hearths, to Victorian kitchens isolated at the back of the house, to open plan kitchens of 1950s suburbs.

The program will be held in the community meeting room at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

America's Kitchens provides new insights into the technological and social changes that have taken place in this room and suggests how these innovations have transformed kitchen work and changed women's lives.

Carlisle has been a curator for 25 years at Historic New England where she works with some of the most important historic kitchens in the country. Carlisle, author of Cherished Possessions: A New England Legacy, has written and lectured widely on the material culture of domestic life from the seventeenth century to the twenty-first.

The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Helium Shortage Takes Some Air Out Of One Local Business

By EMILY TAFT

Jackie Pescatore has only seen a shortage of helium supply twice in the 22 years Four Star Paper & Supply has been in business, but this time seems to be far worse.

"People are coming in looking for balloons and we can't fill their orders," said Pescatore, the owner of Four Star Paper & Supply. "A couple of years ago the supply was low but you could still get helium."

"This time around we can't even get helium. Both places I have received helium from are out. One of my suppliers ran out so I went to another one and now they have also run out, so now we can't even sell balloons."

"They are telling me they aren't sure when they will have more to sell, but I am sure the price will be higher when they do have some to sell."

Pescatore said that the store offers a lot more than just balloons for party supplies but they have had to limit the number of balloons they are selling and ultimately had to stop selling balloons to customers who then take them elsewhere to be filled.

"We are fortunate enough that balloons are a small part of the business," said Pescatore. "We were taking small balloon orders, but now there is a sign on the tank saying 'No Balloons.'"

Pescatore added that although they aren't able to sell helium-filled balloons they have sold some unfilled balloons to customers who then take them elsewhere to be filled.

For the Four Star Paper & Supply store this time of year isn't a busy time for balloon orders, but that they do get calls and walk-ins looking for balloons at least twice a day.

"This time of year we aren't in heavy demand for balloon orders," said Pescatore. "We do have about five small tanks of helium left that we are selling for $30 — they come with 50 balloons and string. We certainly have lost some business because of it."

Pescatore said that she heard some places are getting creative with how they are building their balloon archways, filling them with oxygen and constructing them so they stay afloat without the helium.

Helium is not only used for filling party balloons but also used in the medical field as a coolant for MRI magnets, which Pescatore said is another reason there might be a shortage.

"Helium is being used a lot more now in the medical field," said Pescatore. "I think that is also making it harder for us to get because they get first priority, as they should."

Other uses for helium include deep sea diving, water production, space exploration, and it is also used for checking vacuums and other enclosures for leaks.

Plans To Seek Re-Election As Ward 5 Councillor Hughes Elected State Republican Chairwoman

By SCOTT JACKSON

Kirsten Hughes was elected chairwoman of the state Republican Party one week ago today (Thursday), and she already has her hands full.

Hughes, the Ward 5 city councillor, must prepare the GOP for June's special election to fill the U.S. Senate seat vacated by John Kerry and for special elections to replace state legislators who vacated their seats. And Hughes wants to improve the party's infrastructure from the grassroots up to prepare it for the long term.

"We have the Senate special coming up, obviously that's going to be a focus. We also have five legislative special elections statewide," Hughes said before Monday's City Council meeting. "And just building an infrastructure that will allow the party to grow from the grassroots up, which is something I campaigned on."

Hughes was deputy finance director for Scott Brown's ultimately unsuccessful 2012 Senate re-election campaign, helping the campaign raise $42 million. Brown, however, has said he won't run in this year's special Senate election. Nor will former Gov. Bill Weld, former Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey, 2010 gubernatorial nominee Charlie Baker, or former state Sen. Richard Tisei, Baker's running mate in 2010 who also lost a bid for Congress last year. But Hughes said she expects the GOP to field a competitive candidate in the race.

"I've talked to a couple of candidates who are interested in stepping forward and they're seriously considering making the run. They've reached out to me and I'm sure there are other folks out there who might want to make a run at it," Hughes said.

Those candidates Hughes had been in contact with are state Rep. Dan Winslow of Norfolk, who was chief counsel to Mitt Romney while Romney was governor, and Gabriel Gomez, a former Navy SEAL from Cohasset who works in finance. Winslow announced Tuesday morning that he was forming an exploratory committee test the waters for a possible run.

No matter who the GOP nominee is, Hughes said that person will offer a fresh face compared to either of the Democrats currently running in their party's primary - Malden's Ed Markey or South Boston's Stephen Lynch, both of whom are U.S. representatives.

"Scott really breathed new life into our state party - he gave us a heartbeat again. That being said, anything that a GOP candidate has to offer is a fresh face forward," Hughes said. "The other side is putting out people like Markey, Lynch, guys who together have 50 years of service in D.C. - real D.C. insiders and their just go on, get along mentality furthering this tax and spend agenda and just moving it another rung up the ladder.

"Something that the GOP is going to offer is a fresh face and fresh direction forward."

Hughes, 35, has been involved with the GOP since she was 12 years old when she stuffed envelopes for Weld's campaign. During the 2006 and 2010 election cycles she worked with the state party, and in 2008 was a field staffer for U.S. Sen. John McCain's presidential campaign before working for Brown last year.

Hughes is halfway through her first term as Ward 5 councillor. Though she is now in charge of the statewide party, and a new mother, she said she 'definitely' plans to run for re-election for her council seat in November's city election.

Republicans from across the state elected Hughes chairwoman last Thursday. She defeated Rick Green of Pepperrell 41-39 on the second ballot. Hughes won on the first ballot by one vote, but those results were discarded after one ballot had been ignored because Green's initials were used in place of his name.

Hughes was elected to a two-year term as chairwoman. She hopes a strong showing by the GOP in the 2014 election cycle will lead to her own re-election as chairwoman in 2015. During her tenure, she wants to recruit and train new Republican candidates in races across the Commonwealth.

"The party is really there to support all the candidates up and down the ticket and provide training, technology, fundraising training, media for candidates and recruitment for candidates statewide," Hughes said. "That's primarily what my focus will be on, building that grassroots, working on getting a ground game together for the long haul for the larger races and recruiting candidates to run."

Hughes' election means South Shore residents chair both major parties in the state - Abington's John Walsh has been chairman of the state Democratic Party since 2007.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

KEEPING WHITE TEETH AFTER TREATMENT

Whether you use over-the-counter products to whiten your teeth or have your teeth whitened professionally, there are steps you can take to ensure the longest-lasting results. It is especially important not to eat foods that can stain your teeth immediately after having them whitened. Because treated teeth remain porous up to three days after being whitened, it is a good idea to avoid coffee, tea, red wine/grape juice and other dark-colored foods and beverages that can be absorbed into the enamel. On the other hand, firm fruits and vegetables such as apples, green beans, cauliflower, carrots, and celery help scrub teeth as you chew. They also encourage the flow of saliva, which neutralizes acids.

There's something you can do to recreate a healthy, natural-looking smile. Your smile says a lot about you. Whether you're considering cosmetic dentistry, need answers to a dental problem, or just want to improve your daily dental care, you'll find we have the information you need to keep your smile in top shape. We are committed to your best interests. You are important to us as a person - not just a patient. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule your next appointment. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology and a full trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Dairy products (especially those high in calcium) help keep teeth white because they contain lactic acid and that helps prevent decay.

The conference included over 20 workshops focusing on best practices, management tools, actions and issues that are essential to running municipal government efficiently and effectively in challenging economic times. Workshop speakers offered training and advice on a full range of topics designed to shape the future of Massachusetts communities. state and fiscal realities. The meeting also featured over 230 exhibitors at its trade show, offering the latest, state of the art products and services to municipalities.

The MMA Annual meeting is the single largest statewide gathering of local officials each year and provides city and town leaders with an opportunity to meet with colleagues from throughout the commonwealth, to share ideas, insights and innovations in managing municipalities and to set a common agenda for the year which strengthens local government in Massachusetts.

Gutro Elected To Statewide Board

Councillor Douglas Gutro was reelected as a district 4 representative to the Massachusetts Municipal Councillors Association (MMCA), a member group of the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) during the association's annual conference and trade show in Boston in late January.

Gutro will also serve on the MMA Board of Directors where he will play a key role in advancing the needs of all communities.

Gutro has served on the MMA and MMCA board since 2008. The district 4 seat was a position once held by former state senator and Quincy city councillor Paul Harold.

the state to discuss issues affecting local government and to find ways for state and local government to cooperate in delivering services to taxpayers.

"MMA has been a strong and long-respected voice for local government in Massachusetts," said Gutro. "I've had an extraordinary opportunity to learn from some of the most experienced municipal leaders and Massachusetts, and am grateful to have the continued opportunity to advocate for the taxpayers of Quincy and other communities facing similar challenges throughout the state."

The MMA is a private, non-profit, nonpartisan association of cities and towns that provides its member communities with a broad range of services, including lobbying and advocacy efforts, training and education, publications, policy research, insurance and management assistance.

The MMA is governed by a 36-member Board of Directors composed of mayors, selectmen, city councillors/aldermen, town managers and finance officials from across the state, who are elected by their peers to represent Massachusetts communities.

Remembering The Blizzard Of '78

administration and you're thinking of priorities, things you want to address, the issues of the day – no one was planning on a blizzard.”

Striking on Monday, Feb. 6 and into Tuesday, Feb. 7, the blizzard dumped 27 inches of snow on the area, a record- and back-breaking total that held the record for a single storm in Boston until 2003. The blizzard also packed 90 miles per hour wind gusts that drove a five-foot storm surge into Houghs Neck and Squantum.

The blizzard was so powerful, in fact, that Tobin said no storm to hit Quincy in the last 35 years has come close to its intensity. The only storm Tobin remembers that comes close is the Hurricane of 1938, a storm that tore through the Connecticut River Valley but was so strong that 121-mile per hour sustained winds – and a gust of 186 mph, the strongest ever from hurricane in the U.S. – were recorded at the Blue Hill Observatory.

“When I was about eight years old I remember the Hurricane of 1938. That caused quite a havoc in the City of Quincy. I remember it because I was on Hancock Street, almost at the intersection of Hannon Parkway and Hancock Street, I was right on the sidewalk there and some wires came down and some people were telling us be careful and they sent us home,” Tobin said.

The Feb. 6 blizzard wasn't the first snowstorm to strike the city under Tobin's watch. In late January, a storm dropped about 21 inches on the Boston area. But it was just a snowstorm, without strong winds to upgrade it to a blizzard, and Tobin had dealt with heavy snows before during his decade-long stint as a city councillor.

“It was just a snowstorm and I'd been on the City Council for 10 years, so I was familiar with it,” Tobin said. “There was nothing to prepare you for that blizzard.”

Weather forecasting in 1978 wasn't as good as it

PAGE 1 PHOTO from the Feb. 9, 1978 issue of The Quincy Sun shows a lone walker braving high winds and driven snow in deserted Quincy Square during the height of the Blizzard of 1978 on Tuesday, Feb. 7. is now. A storm was predicted, but no one knew it would be the ‘storm of the century.’ Still, Tobin took steps to prepare Quincy's flood prone peninsulas by moving emergency equipment into the area. He also knew he could depend on City Councillors Frank McCauley and Leo Kelly to help out in Houghs Neck, and Dennis Harrington, an assistant solicitor at the time, in Squantum.

“I don't believe we knew about a blizzard, but we did know about a storm. It was part of a nor'easter, so we knew Houghs Neck would get flooded up and we knew Squantum [would be flooded] so we did prepare for that,” Tobin said. “I directed a fire apparatus, a police cruiser, and an ambulance in each location.”

“And I knew in Houghs Neck that Frank McCauley and Leo Kelly were there – I knew they were on the other side, so I knew we had two good guys out there. And I knew out in Squantum we had Dennis Harrington."

Kelly, who was the Ward 1 Councillor at the time, vividly remembers the blizzard. He was in a truck that drove down Edgewater Drive, plucking stranded residents out of their houses as floodwaters rose. The entire neighborhood was flooded out, including two of Kelly's cars.

"I don't think I'll ever forget the Blizzard of 1978," Kelly said. "The only thing that came close was the hurricane in 1938."

Kelly was quick to praise Tobin for how he handled the storm after it walloped.

"It was Arthur Tobin's finest moment," Kelly said.

McCauley, at the time an at-large councillor who would go on to be mayor, said Houghs Neck would often be separated from mainland Quincy during severe storms before the neighborhoods' sea walls were upgraded. The Blizzard of '78 stood out because its intensity.

"That was a major one," McCauley said. "We were cut off from the mainland for a while."

Many Houghs Neck residents took shelter in the Atherton Hough School. The National Guard was called in to provide food and other aid to those taking refuge, because no one else could cross into the peninsula.

Overall, McCauley thinks Tobin did a good job handling two major snow events — the late January storm and the blizzard in February — within a month of taking office.

"He did a pretty good job, he had just come into office," McCauley said. "A lot of people forget there was big storm in January — that was a major snowstorm. He had to fight that one on top of the one in February."

"It was a real difficult storm but I think the city did well on it," McCauley added.

Tobin tried to get down to Houghs Neck during the storm. He and Public Works Commissioner James "Pete" Ricciuti were in a car driving through the Willows section of Houghs Neck — the area just past the intersection of Sea and Palmer Streets — when Ricciuti had to quickly spin around to avoid a storm surge.

"He spun the car around right there — screeching tires — pressed on the gas and the damned thing hit us in the rear. It was big surge that came over," Tobin said. "It was all flooded and everything. It was bad."

Tobin brought together the city's department heads and other senior staffers, his snow cabinet, and set up headquarters at a Department of Public Works building on Sea Street. The first problem they had to solve was finding someplace to put all the snow.

"If you have a storm, you get the equipment out there to open up and plow the streets. In the Blizzard of '78 that was not the issue. It was such an abundance of snow [the problem] was getting the equipment to lift it up and transport it — that was the issue," Tobin said.

It was during the discussion on where to put the snow that one of the more humorous exchanges in the snow cabinet happened when Ricciuti told the mayor the city needed to construct a snow dump.

"I'm hearing the word 'construct' a snow dump and I'm thinking carpenters and builders. So I leaned over

Well Done, Quincy

It was a storm you'd like to forget but will vividly remember for as long as you live. Awesome. Devastating. Furious. Horrendous. Mean. Terrible. You may have even a stronger one word description.

But as bad as it was with the suffering and the losses it brought — in lives and damage — and the inconveniences, it had one nice side effect: it brought out the best in most people.

People opened their hearts and extended helping hands to those in need. Not just neighbor helping neighbor, but stranger helping stranger.

A feeling of togetherness and unity descended upon the area in a way we hadn't seen since World War II. People were united again by catastrophe. They shared a common cause: survival. And they were more than willing to make personal sacrifices to help one another get through the ordeal. Most important: they cared for one another.

Houghs Neck and Germantown were the hardest hit in Quincy. Squantum got pretty well battered, too.

Compared to neighbors Hull and Scituate, however, Quincy overall was lucky, as far as damage and other losses were concerned.

But Quincy got its full share of the record near 27 inches of snow. The city was virtually paralyzed during most of the week. Business came to a costly standstill.

Overall, we think, the city of Quincy deserves a "well done." New Mayor Arthur Tobin certainly has gotten his baptism under fire. He had been in office just 34 days when he got hit with the two worst snowstorms in our history.

We got a chance to personally observe him during this second storm — the all-time champ in fury and meanness — and saw a man calm and in complete control of the situation. He never reached for the panic button.

And so it was, all down the line.

Public Works Commr. James [Pete] Ricciuti proved an able general as his army of weary workers fought around the clock to win the Big Battle of the Snow.

There were many others who did an outstanding job during the long hard week: Police, firefighters, Civil Defense units, nurses and doctors and hospital employees, snowmobilers, school personnel, and many volunteers of varying shapes and sizes who all pitched in to help Quincy residents in need.

There were many unsung heroes — and many of their heroics will never be known except to those directly affected.

Of course, it wasn't all 100 percent peaches, cream, and let's-all-sing-together. A lot of people came down with cabin fever in their homes. And even in snowfighting command centers where workers were cooped up for days under very trying circumstances, tempers flared now and then.

And then there were gripes. About, for example, some people who managed to slip their cars by officials during the travel ban to stock up on food while most people had to trudge to stores on foot and lug small amounts of groceries home in their arms or on sleds.

Some didn't like the way their streets were plowed. Someone complained about snow being pushed against his fence, and another into his driveway. And there was the story about the guy who harassed one of the plow operators to the point where the latter stopped his truck, got out, and flattened him.

And there was another one about the weirdo who telephoned a resident to report that his wife, who was in the hospital, had died. Police brought the grief stricken man to the hospital, the story goes, where he found his wife very much alive.

That cruel prank, meanwhile, delayed police from taking needed medicine to another resident with high blood pressure.

Most of those and other similar incidents will be forgotten by the time the first robin gets up enough courage to put in an appearance here.

But there is one character we hope will not be forgotten: the looter.

Fortunately, for Quincy, there were only isolated cases of looting although some homes are still empty and could yet be plundered.

The looter, in our book is a creep — a wart on humanity. He takes advantage of a tragic situation to steal from homes evacuated because of floods or lack of heat. Or steals from stores where windows have been blown in.

We hope anyone arrested for looting and convicted after a fair hearing get what he should: severe punishment.

We hope judges here in Quincy and elsewhere feel the same way about that. The looter deserves no sympathy.

He is as bad as the thief who steals from the blind, the bully who picks on the invalid and the rapist whose victim is the innocent.

Overall, Quincy came through it well. And most of us may even be better off in the long run for the experience. It sure humbled us.

to him and I said 'what the hell is a snow dump,' and he leaned back over and said 'a place to dump snow,'" Tobin recalled. "We joked about it for a long period after that."

The decision was made to dump the snow on Pageant Field. But the city didn't have the heavy equipment, large tractor-trailers or bulldozers, to bring it there.

"We had a location now, an open place to dump the snow," Robin said. "We needed the correct equipment. We needed big, heavy trucks. Not the little pick-up truck, they're good in storms to keep the roads open but we needed the great, big trucks. And we also needed a big bulldozer."

So Tobin called in some outside help. He was friends with Ed Martin, a top aide to U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy. Kennedy and Martin, who was a Quincy resident and Marine, like Tobin, helped deliver the necessary equipment, allowing the city to utilize Pageant Field.

Tobin's first focus was making sure Quincy's major business districts were cleared of snow, to ensure merchants would be able to open up quicker and minimize their losses.

"We tried to get the business areas so that stores would be opened because the business owners have to pay their overhead. They have to pay their employees. They've got expenses and if that don't have people who can get to their store, they're not making money," Tobin said. "We concentrated on opening up the main arteries."

During the cleanup, motor vehicles were banned from driving to help snow removal crews do their job. Tobin still remembers streets that were normally busy with traffic full of families out walking.

"We had a motor vehicle freeze on, no cars on the streets. And it was reminiscent of the turn of the century. It was beautiful, families were out taking their children on sleds and so forth and people were walking and talking to each other," Tobin said. "They were prohibited because we had to open up the streets. We had to bring in the front end loaders and everything."

The mayor also ordered all public safety officials — fire, police, and nurses at the hospital — to stay at work for the first few days after the blizzard struck. To help get nurses up Hospital Hill, the city relied on a fleet of snowmobiles.

"We had to keep all public safety officials around the clock. The fire and the police were working around the clock, they weren't working in shifts — and the nurses in the hospital too," Tobin said. "It was up to us to get them into work. Some of the people couldn't get into work, and some of the people couldn't get home so we kept them on because we needed them. We were taking nurses up on snowmobiles."

The city also helped on-air staff at WJDA arrive at the radio station's office on Brackett Street. The station broadcast news updates throughout the storm, except for several hours when the transmitter shut down over fears water from Town Brook would leak in. Jay Asher, who camped out overnight at the station during the blizzard, said WJDA's staff relished the opportunity to broadcast such a major story and provide important updates.

"For all of us at the station it was exciting to be able to help people. Fortunately there was no loss of life," Asher said. "In essence it was a lot of work but it was rewarding. It's what people in radio or journalism want to do."

Asher explained that while he heard minor complaints about certain side streets not being cleaned, the city did a good job responding to the blizzard. He credited city employees for their hard work.

"Everybody in the city seemed to do what was required. Quincy has always had good fire and police and a good Department of Public Works," Asher said.

Members of the community were eager to help out city workers. Tobin recalled one gentleman who cooked a giant Italian feast and delivered it to City Hall, and refused any money for it.

"He was so proud of living in Quincy and being successful he cooked a big pot of meatballs and sausage and pasta and salads and delivered it to City Hall so the workers could have a hot meal," Tobin said. "He wouldn't take any money."

That person wasn't the only community member to help out city workers.

"The Dunkin' Donut places were giving boxes of donuts and people were delivering water. A lot of wives of different city employees, mothers and wives, we're baking tollhouse cookies and brownies for the guys. It was a lot of goodwill," Tobin said.

Residents stepped up in other ways too. There was the contractor Kelly mentioned who used his equipment to bring residents to safety; a Wollaston minister and other CB (Citizens' Band) radio operators who stayed at the DPW headquarters around the clock contacting people; a Quincy attorney who was the head of the local Red Cross and brought supplies in; and School Supt. Lawrence Creedon, who opened up buildings to provide shelter and food to residents.

"I can't say enough. There were a lot of good people," Tobin said.

IT REALLY WASN'T so bad said Marty McLaughlin (left) of Putnam Street and Jim Mullen of Whitney Road as they dug out a house on Greenleaf Street after the Blizzard of 1978

THE BLIZZARD OF 1978 also brought recreational opportunities. ## Skills Clinic At Broad Meadows Middle School

Quincy Youth Basketball Hosts UMass Boston Lady Beacons Basketball Team

Quincy Youth Basketball recently hosted the UMass Boston Women's basketball team led by Coach Courtney Mattingly.

Coach Mattingly and 12 members of her team conducted a skills and drills clinic at Broad Meadows Middle School for the Quincy Youth Basketball girls basketball players in grades 3 through 8.

The clinic included ball handling, shooting and passing skills, sprints, "foot fires", post and defense moves. The clinic was capped off with a timed, fun and informative shooting contest.

Nearly 50 girls participated in this fun and informative basketball evening where each QYB player was encouraged to bring a friend. This clinic was part of QYB's ongoing focus to have players learn fundamental basketball through repetitive drills to improve their skills.

Last season QYB hosted the Harvard University Women's basketball team for a similar clinic and it was also a great success for QYB players and their families. The college basketball clinics are a fun way for players to meet and connect with local college coaches and players while learning and practicing top tier drills which the colleges conduct at their own practices.

In addition to having college coaches and players visit QYB for clinics, the Girls Division of QYB also participates in the annual Milton Travel Basketball Thanksgiving Tournament at Milton High School, as well as having local basketball legends such as Sarah Behn (former Boston College All-American) and Togo Palazzi (Holy Cross and Boston Celtics) conduct their own skills and drills clinics for the girls of Quincy Youth Basketball.

North Quincy - Scituate Showdown Here Friday

Red Raiders Dismantle Middleboro, 65-29

By BILL GRIFFIN

For North Quincy, it was a week with two games the Red Raiders should have and did win.

Such weeks can be trap weeks for teams because complacency and lack of focus can lead to bad habits and lazy basketball. The Raiders avoided all this by going back to where all good things begin.

Practice.

The sharpness showed Friday night against Middleboro when 12 players played and 12 players scored as North rolled to a 65-29 Patriot League decision.

Earlier in the week, Aaron Anderson had 17 and Dan Gould added 11 to lead North past Pembroke, 77-34. The Red Raiders finished the week at 12-3, 6-2 in the Patriot League and a game behind Scituate in the race for first place in the Fisher Division.

"What I liked best about the week was our practices," said coach Kevin Barrett. "We were coming off a tough loss to Hingham, and the kids came in Sunday and Monday and dedicated themselves. We had two of the best practices we've had all year. Against Pembroke, the kids saw how good practices translate into good games."

The most encouraging part of the week was the return to full-time duty of senior guard Dan Gould who missed five games with an ankle injury. He played sparingly against Hingham, had 11 against Pembroke and was sharp and crisp with 14 against Middleboro. He drained two threes in a 25-5 first-quarter rush by North which put away the game. He dished out two assists off the break, moved well on defense and had good elevation on his jump shot.

"There was a world of difference in one week from the Hingham game," said Barrett. "His whole game is sharper. His lateral movement, especially on defense, is much better. He looks good."

North was able to handle the injury just right because of the play of Anderson. He shot threes like they were layups and averaged in double figures in Gould's absence. He had two threes against Middleboro. He will back up Gould and the two will see time on the floor together. Toss in Pat Gould and North will not lack for outside shooting.

"I don't know where we would be without Aaron," said Barrett. "You'll see a lot of him. You can't have too many shooters."

The week saw the continued growth of junior center Anthony Green. He had 10 against Pembroke and eight against Middleboro. He had a two-minute run in the first period against Middleboro in which he cashed two offensive rebounds and a layup off a great feed from Pat Gould. For two minutes he owned the basket. He blocked six shots and altered several others against Middleboro. Game-by-game, he continues to grow and again, it gets back to practice.

"He's improved because of his work ethic in practice. He's worked hard and now he's starting to see the results," said Barrett.

North's ball movement was excellent. Middleboro pressed from start to finish, and the Red Raiders passed over and through it. Dan and Pat Gould passed the ball beautifully for the first unit and the quality did not suffer when Barrett liberally used his bench. Sophomore Matt Gerakis is a fine passer. Early in the fourth, he drew the defense to one side of the lane and slipped a perfect feed to Vinny Tran for a layup. Seconds later, Tran returned the favor, finding Gerakis cutting to the hoop for a layup.

"It's a selfless group," said Barrett. "They like passing the ball. Gerakis has developed well. He's a smart kid with good basketball IQ and it shows in his passing."

North was up 37-8 at the half and 45-11 with 4:51 in the third when Barrett pulled his starters for good. Everybody cracked the scoring column. Gerakis and Green had eight while Tran and Anderson had six each. Pat Gould (4), Kyle Richardson (4), Greg Clarke (4), Efthim Butka (4), Matt Donovan (3), Kevin Pillone (2) and Solomon Umoren (2) all scored for the Red Raiders.

North is in the stretch run. The Red Raiders have four games left, three in the league, starting with a showdown at home with Scituate Friday night. The goals of the Fisher Division and the best record in the Patriot League are still possible, but North cannot stumble.

"The key is defense, it always is for us," said Barrett. "When we defend with energy, we play well. It should be an exciting finish."

Friday's North Quincy-Scituate game tips off at 6:30 p.m. in the NQ school gym.

Quincy Boys Defeat Duxbury, Bow To Hingham

Presidents Need 2 Wins For Tourney Berth

By BILL GRIFFIN

One-point upsets over first-place teams are wonderful, but good teams do two things. They win when they are not playing well, and they beat the teams they should beat.

Quincy accomplished both last week against Duxbury. Sophomore James Lam and Tino Gonçalves paced the offense, and the Presidents capitalized on a technical foul to break open a close game midway through the fourth period to defeat the Dragons, 62-51 in a Patriot League contest.

"It wasn't pretty, but it was a win," said coach Dave Parry. "The thing that pleased me most was we persevered. We didn't play our best, but we won which is something good teams have to do."

The win lifted the Presidents to 6-2 in the Patriot League, temporarily put them in a first-place tie with Hingham and Whitman-Hanson in the Keenan Division, and set up a showdown last Friday against Hingham.

In the Hingham game, the Harbormen built a 20-point lead by the middle of the third period and held off a furious Quincy comeback for a 75-62 decision.

At the end of the week, Quincy was 9-6 overall and 6-3 in the Division, one game behind Hingham. Quincy needed to win two more games to qualify for the tourney.

Quincy used its fullcourt press to battle back into the game. The press forced turnovers which the Presidents turned into layups. Jaquan Harris and sophomore Colin Evans knocked down threes, and Quincy was within six in the fourth period, but Hingham stopped the run and rebuilt the lead behind the inside work of Eddie Bowler (15 points, 15 rebounds) and the outside shooting of Ricky Sullivan (17).

Harris led Quincy with 19, point guard Gonçalves had 15 and Colin Evans added 12.

Quincy defeated Hingham earlier in the year when the Presidents limited Bowler to four points, but Hingham hit four threes in the first period and the Presidents had to honor the outside shot and could offer only limited inside help.

"They spread the floor and hit their threes. We couldn't help from the weak side as much as we did in the first game," said Parry.

Parry was pleased with his team's composure, especially his sophomores, in a tough road gym. The stands were packed and rocking with Hingham fans. The stands are also very close to the floor and the atmosphere has intimidated more than one visiting team, but Quincy played with confidence.

"Except for the result, it was a good experience for our younger players," said Parry. "The place was rocking, but they didn't show any nerves, and learned something about playing on the road."

The Presidents are in the stretch run. They have five games left, three in the league and are in a four-team fight for the first place with Hingham, W-H (6-3), and Silver Lake (5-4). Quincy travels to Whitman-Hanson Friday.

"We have to realize every possession matters and play with focus and urgency on every play," said Parry.

Against Duxbury, Lam had 14 for the winners, including the Presidents' first eight points of the game. In the Whitman-Hanson win, he played lockdown defense on star guard Brian Feeney, and with each passing game he is showing more of his offensive weapons. His first four hoops included a jumper, a powerful drive to the hoop, a stop-and-pop from 15 feet, and a fast-break layup on a flying bounce pass from Gonçalves with whom he is fast developing a fine chemistry. That's a pretty good mix of shots.

In the fourth period, he jumped into the balcony to make a one-handed grab of a high pass. He came down, squared up and banked in a layup. He had a team-high 11 rebounds. He was the starting QB for the football team and as January turned into February, his football legs have become basketball legs.

"He is basketball shape now," said Parry. "Basketball requires instant transition and it tests a different set of abilities and conditioning than football. James has his basketball legs and he's doing what we knew he could do."

Gonçalves ran another crisp game at the point. The senior point guard, who is averaging 12 assists per game over the last month, had a team-high 16 points and 10 assists. He was especially effective in the second half, scoring off the drive and dishing for clean layups.

"We made an adjustment at the half," said Parry. "We told Tino to split the defenders instead of passing the ball around the perimeter, and it worked for us."

Quincy never trailed after the opening minutes and led at every checkpoint: 19-7 after one, 29-22 at the half and 43-32 after three. However, the Presidents weren't as sharp as in previous games and could not put away Duxbury, who had won just once entering the contest, until the final minutes.

"We didn't play our best, but give Duxbury credit. They slowed us down and took us out of what we like to do," said Parry.

A hot shooting spree by Duxbury's Jake Foote (25 points) had the Dragons within 46-42 with 5:36 left. Duxbury was hit with a personal and technical foul. Harris (8) and Drew Myers (8) each hit a free throw. J.T. Bain (8) drove for a bucket.

JAMES LAM (shown here against Whitman-Hanson) scored 14 points for Quincy as the Presidents defeated Duxbury 62-51 in a Patriot League contest last week.

Quincy Sun Photos/Robert Bosworth

Following a 10-second violation, Gonçalves made a pretty, no-look feed to Bain for layup. The Presidents cashed in six points off the fouls and the lead was at a safe 52-42.

"The technical was a turning point. Another was I thought our depth had an impact later in the game," said Parry.

Quincy struggled with the taller (seven players over six feet on the roster) Dragons' zone a bit in the first half. Myers loosened it with a pair of threes and after Gonçalves began the second half by slicing to the basket for a layup, Duxbury moved out into a man-to-man which made getting to the hoop a bit easier.

"We drove a little better in the second half, but Duxbury played good defense the entire night," said Parry.

JAQUAN HARRIS (shown here in a game against Whitman-Hanson) led Quincy with 19 points but the Presidents bowed to Hingham 75-62 last Friday night.

Quincy Girls Down Hingham, Keep Tourney Hopes Alive

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was a game Quincy had to win to keep its tournament hopes alive, and the Presidents faced several challenges.

They were missing three important players from their rotation, Hingham had beaten Quincy earlier in the season, and there was the pressure associated with a tourney game because the Presidents had no room for error.

Quincy delivered big time. Its press broke open the game in the second period and freshman Nicole Jorgensen had another monster game with 12 points 20 rebounds and 11 blocked shots to lift the Presidents to an impressive 57-39 Patriot League win over the Harbormen Friday night.

Earlier last week, powerful Duxbury stopped Quincy, 61-39 despite 11 points, 16 rebounds and five blocks from Jorgensen. Junior forward Kayla McArdle, who had a game-high 22 against Hingham, added nine in the Duxbury game.

Quincy finished the week at 7-9 and needed to win three of its last four to make the tourney.

"Every game is like a tournament game for us now," said coach Jeff Bretsch. "I was pleased with the way the kids responded. They rose to the challenge and played with poise and confidence."

Quincy led by one after the first period and the press stretched it out to 24-14 at the half and 46-24 after three. Not only did Quincy force turnovers but also turned them into hoops led by McArdle and freshman Gabriella Jerahian who flourished in the up tempo game.

"Gabby hit a three, but most of her baskets were off the press," said Bretsch.

Jerahian's performance was important. Quincy was without starting point guard Alyssa Lydon (knee), Maryssa Dwyer (flu) and Alysha Dunbar (ankle).

"We were shorthanded and we needed a big game from Gabby. She was excellent in our press," said Bretsch.

Jorgensen's presence has grown tremendously in the last five games. In that stretch she has 80 points, 84 rebounds, and 32 blocks. That averages to 16 points, 17 rebounds, and nearly seven blocks per game. Those are fine numbers for any player, but for a freshman, they are exceptional.

"I think she's playing more physical and with more confidence," said Bretsch. "She is also very coachable. She comes out every day and works on the little things that make her a better player."

She is obviously the focus of every defense Quincy faces. She has learned to work in traffic, move without the ball, and present a good target for entry passes.

"She's better at getting open when teams surround her," said Bretsch. "She knows how to get the ball, when to shoot and when to kick it back out. She knows she has to learn to get better and it's fun to watch her grow."

Bretsch also credits his backcourt, which is working without its leader Lydon, for getting the ball to Jorgensen where she can do damage.

"I really think it's a team thing. Nicole has to rely on our guards to get her the ball," said Bretsch. "Lately, we've set better screens and moved the ball better. This gets the ball to Nicole in better position for her shot."

McArdle's offense has been consistent for the Presidents in the second half of the year. She had a three-game stretch in which she scored 55 points.

"She is super-aggressive going to the hoop, but lately she's shown more control when she is in the lane and that has helped her game," added Bretsch.

Quincy hosts Whitman-Hanson Friday at 6:30 p.m.

North Quincy Girls' Hoop Clinches Tourney Berth

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was a week to remember for North Quincy's girls basketball team.

The Red Raiders swept to impressive victories over Pembroke and Middleboro, clinched a berth in the state tournament, and moved into a first-place tie of the Fisher Division of the Patriot League.

"None of the girls has ever been in the tourney, so everyone is excited," said North coach Jessica Worden. "It was one of our goals at the beginning of the season. The key has been our confidence. We've grown used to playing together and it shows in our play."

Against Middleboro, senior guard Caitlin Bulger scored 22 and junior forward Maya Umoren added 14 as North cruised to a 69-19 win.

Against Pembroke, Umoren scored 23 points and pulled down 23 rebounds as the Red Raiders rolled to a 47-29 decision. Jane Minton chipped in with seven points for the winners.

The two wins lifted North to 10-6 overall and 6-2 in the league, good for a first-place tie with Scituate and Hanover at the end of the week. Umoren, who is averaging 15 points and 10 rebounds, had 37 in the two wins and has been a reliable inside presence for North all season.

"Maya has been our dependable player. We knew we could count on her in every game," said Worden.

Bulger had a terrific shooting night against Middleboro. She drained four threes and had 15 points in the first quarter. She ended with 22 in only 13 minutes of play.

"She has a great outside touch," said Worden.

The Red Raiders started 2-3 and have won eight of their last 11. One of the reasons has been Worden's decision to go with a three-guard set and insert junior Haley McKay in the starting lineup beginning with the second game against Quincy.

"I think it's given us a little more quickness and it's made us better against the press," said Worden.

McKay has given North a defensive stopper against top guards like Megan Shea of Plymouth North and Kellie Martin of Scituate. She has also been an important contributor on offense.

"Haley has given us a defender to put on the other team's top scorer," said Worden. "She's also moved the ball well against the press."

Annie Dow, who had a big game against Middleboro with eight points and nine assists, has been excellent in the backcourt for the Red Raiders. Kristyn Mark gives the Red Raiders another solid guard along with Dow, McKay, Bulger, and Minton that Worden can use in the backcourt.

Christine Kelliher and Therese Riordan each played strong games up front for the Red Raiders against Middleboro and Pembroke.

North is at Scituate for a big divisional game Friday.

Q-NQ Girls' Hockey Ties Boston Latin, 2-2

By BILL GRIFFIN

They save their best until last.

Julia Donovan and Brianna Mullaney scored within nine seconds of each other in the final three minutes of the game to earn the Quincy-North Quincy girls hockey team a 2-2 tie with Boston Latin at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena Saturday night.

Earlier last week, Scituate edged Quincy-North, 3-1. Savannah Flynn scored for Quincy-North.

"We always seem to play our best hockey at the end of game," said coach Steve Burgio. "It's a tribute to the way the girls play and never give up. Tonight was a good game for us, but the final five minutes were the best part. We really stepped it up."

Quincy, who had lost to Latin 7-2 in their first meeting, controlled the third period. Leah Ryan had a clear break and rattled a drive off the crossbar in the opening minutes of the stanza.

"I thought it was in," said Burgio.

Madison Hally, Donovan, Ryan, Brianna Mullaney and Danielle Mullaney all had excellent chances before the Quincy-North broke through.

Brianna Mullaney took a nice, short feed from Danielle Mullaney and clicked on a low drive to narrow the Latin lead to 2-1 with 2:52 left. Ryan earned an assist on the play.

On the next trip into the offensive zone, Donovan made a beautiful backhand finish after a nice break-in on which she deked the goalie out of position with 2:43 remaining. Ryan had an assist on the play.

to press in the final minutes. With three seconds left, a Danielle Mullaney wrist shot was stopped, the rebound trickled through into the net, but the whistle had blown the play dead.

Senior goalie Erin McGinnis had another fine game in a terrific season. She had 31 saves, many of them on deflections, slap shots through screens, and clean looks from the slot. She gave her team a chance to come back and Donovan and Mullaney made her efforts worthwhile.

"She has stood on her head for us all year," said Burgio. "I don't know where we would be without her. She has so many tough saves. She's kept us in games and given us a chance."

Quincy-North is at Marshfield Saturday at 8 p.m.

Tourney Spot Secure, Red Raiders Seek Consistency

By BILL GRIFFIN

There was mixed news for North Quincy's hockey team last week.

The good news is the Red Raiders qualified for the state tourney for the third straight season. The bad news is they are still searching for more consistency and they enter the final two weeks of the regular season.

"We made the tourney which is where we want to be, but I didn't think we played well," said coach Matt Gibbons. "We are capable of playing better and scoring more."

North rode a two-goal effort from James Doherty to a 4-2 win over Hanover to earn a tourney berth.

Saturday, Scituate scored with four seconds left to edge the Red Raiders, 2-1 in a Patriot League contest. It was Scituate's second one-goal win over North this season. North finished the week at 8-4-4 and 5-2-4 in the league.

"If the tournament started today, we would struggle, but we have two weeks to finish on a high note and that what we are shooting for," said Gibbons.

Despite being outshot 25-11 against Scituate, the Red Raiders were within 1-0 with six minutes left. Freshman Timmy Glynn, who has been a tireless worker all season, broke through for his first goal by following his own rebound and driving it home with an assist to Brendan Brady for a 1-1 tie. It was a goal of pure effort which is fitting because no one of the team has given more effort than Glynn.

"He just keeps working and working. It was great to see him get the goal," said Gibbons. "He's small, but he takes and gives out hits. You always get his full effort."

North had a power play chance in the final minute, but couldn't connect. Scituate scored off a faceoff in the final seconds for the victory. Nolan Greene played another fine game in goal for the Red Raiders to keep the score close.

"We made a mental mistake on the last goal. It would have been nice to get the tie, but Scituate deserved the game by the way they played," said Gibbons.

Against Hanover, North jumped to a fast start and led 2-0 after one. Hanover rallied to tie early in the second but Doherty got the eventual game-winner in the second on a beautiful play. Pat Verhault made a nice pass to Glynn who made a perfect feed in the slot to Doherty. Doherty blasted it home for a one-goal lead North would not surrender.

"It was a perfect tape-to-tape pass just like we work on it in practice," said Gibbons.

Mike Finn and Robbie Cameron also scored for the Red Raiders. North made it 4-2 late in the second period, and Greene and the defense made the lead stand up in a scoreless third.

North's defense has been terrific all year, giving just 21 goals in 16 games. The issue has been the scoring. Although Gibbons won't use it as an excuse, the Red Raiders' forwards have been banged up all year, missing three or four from their rotation most games.

The most significant loss has been All-League forward Shawn Grady who figured to be North's top scorer, but has missed the season with a shoulder injury. It is not an excuse, but it is part of an explanation for why the North offense has yet to click fully.

"We have had injuries, but so do most teams. I know we can score more with the players we have," said Gibbons.

North is at Whitman-Hanson Saturday at 3:45 p.m.

Quincy Hockey Battles But Bows To Titans, 7-5

By BILL GRIFFIN

For nearly 15 minutes, Quincy played its best hockey. The Presidents forechecked, forechecked, and forechecked. They swarmed the offensive zone, handed out big hits in the corners, converted their chances, and built a three-goal lead.

Then it all changed. Pembroke's Matt Bentig notched a momentum-busting goal with 14 seconds left in the first period and the Titans put up six unanswered scores to drop Quincy, 7-5 in a Patriot League game played at the Quincy Youth Hockey Ice Arena Saturday night.

Earlier in the week, Duxbury scored three times in the first period and held off a Quincy rally for a 5-2 decision.

Patrick Freeman, who started the game as the second leading scorer in the league with 18 points, scored twice, and Mike Pugsley and Jake Hallisey added single goals as Quincy (2-12-1) roared to a 4-1 lead thanks to a forechecking game which not only pinned Pembroke in its end, but produced a glut of chances.

Patrick Donovan (a goal in the third period) had four assists in less than 12 minutes. Sophomore Brian O'Callaghan was a standout in the checking game, pressing Pembroke in its end and skating his lane back on defense.

"That was our plan," said coach Ken Lewis. "We wanted to get on them quick, pin them back and build a lead. That's what we did for almost the entire first period."

Pugsley scored on a slap shot which seemed to deflect off a skate in front with assists to Donovan and Jimmy Brennick for a 1-0 lead with 12:49 left in the first. Just 37 seconds later Freeman got his first of two, slipping home a rebound of a Donovan shot. Chris Andrews also drew an assist on the play as Quincy went up, 2-0.

After Pembroke's CJ Buckingham cut it to 2-1, Hallisey scored a beauty, flashing across the slot and driving home a rebound of a Donovan shot. Chris Andrews also drew an assist on the play as Quincy went up, 2-0.

After Pembroke's CJ Buckingham cut it to 2-1, Hallisey scored a beauty, flashing across the slot and slipping home a low backhand with assists to Donovan and Freeman. Freeman finished a perfect cross-crease setup from Hallisey with Donovan earning his fourth assist with 2:30 left in the first.

The Quincy blitz appeared to be gathering force, but Bentig stopped it by finding the top corner with 14 seconds left to narrow the lead to 4-2, and the game had been changed and changed completely.

"That was the turning point," said Lewis. "We should have had a three-goal lead after the period, but we had a five-player breakdown on defense and it cost us."

Pembroke took back the game in the second, peppering Quincy goalie Ryan Higgins with 21 shots. Higgins was brilliant, but Bentig and Mike Ruxton scored just past the midway point of the stanza to tie it at 4-4 entering the final period.

"We only had four shots on net in the second period, and we have to better," said Lewis. "It seemed like we were playing to survive the period rather than win it, and you can't play like that."

Nick Burns scored a pair for Pembroke in the first three minutes of the final period for a 6-4 lead. After the Titan went up 7-4, Donovan tucked in a rebound with assists to Hallisey and Freeman with 3:52 left to make the final, 7-5.

"We built the lead, we have to be better at maintaining it," said Lewis.

Against Duxbury, Quincy rallied after falling behind in the first period. Freeman and Donovan scored to cut the margin to 4-2, but the Presidents could draw no closer against the first-place Dragons.

Mike Davis and Hallisey had assists for Quincy. Brennick had a standout game on defense. Higgins played another fine game with 41 stops.

Quincy/North Quincy's Rachel O'Driscoll Wins Two Events At League Championships

Sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) won two individual events to lead the Quincy/North Quincy girls swimming and diving team (7-4, 4-3) to fourth place at the Patriot League Swimming Championships held Saturday at the Lincoln-Hancock Pool in Quincy.

The QNQ boys (6-5, 2-5) finished sixth of eight teams. Four QNQ swimmers were named Patriot League all-stars including O'Driscoll, classmate Sabrina Rauch (Q), senior captain Kat O'Connor (NQ) and sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ).

"I can't believe the regular season is over already. I am extremely proud of both teams for being over 500 for the first time in a long while. There was no boys swim team five years ago and to go 4-3 in the Patriot League is quite an accomplishment," said Head Coach Bob McGillicuddy.

Under the tutelage of Coach McGillicuddy, the girls have won at least seven meets in each of the last three seasons after the 2009-10 squad won just three in the coach's inaugural season. This year's six victories for the boys team surpassed its combined win total of four from the past three seasons.

Rachel O'Driscoll won the 200-yard freestyle with a season-best clip of 2:02.49 and the 100 butterfly (1:04.08). Another dynamic sophomore, Sabrina Rauch, finished second in both the 200 individual medley (2:32.50) and the 100 freestyle (58.83) ahead of teammate Kat O'Connor, who garnered third place (1:00.32) in that race and also placed fifth in the 50 free (27.45). Sophomore Evelyn Scuzzarella (NQ) was sixth in the 200 IM (2:44.71) and 10th in the 100 backstroke (1:18.21). Freshman Grace Anderson (NQ) saved her best performances for last, earning eighth in the 100 butterfly (1:16.26) and tenth in the 500 freestyle (6:36.01).

Sophomore Randall Kwong finished fourth in both the 50 free (24.28) and 100 free (54.16). In that 100 free, junior captain Elio Daci (Q) placed fifth (56.54) before taking fourth in the 100-yard backstroke (1:06.57). Teammate Jack Fischer (Q) placed 10th in both the 100 back (1:20.53) when he dropped 10 seconds, and the 500 free (7:23.63), undercutting his previous season low by 15 seconds.

The QNQ girls will participate in the South Sectionals, Saturday, Feb. 9th at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass. while the boys compete the next day.

In other recent action:

The QNQ girls swimming and diving team dropped a 90-82 decision to host Duxbury Jan. 29 in Duxbury.

The QNQ boys succumbed in an 84-67 count to lower their record to 6-5 overall and 2-5 in the Patriot League. Those six wins this season are the most victories by any QNQ boys team under Head Coach Bob McGillicuddy and exceed the total amount of wins (four) accrued in the first three seasons.

Sophomores Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) and Sabrina Rauch (Q) fronted the QNQ girls campaign. The pair finished one-two to inch QNQ six points within Duxbury after the 200-yard freestyle where O'Driscoll swam 2:03.00 followed by Rauch at 2:10.60. In the 100-fly, O'Driscoll touched the wall first at 1:03.37, edging the next Duxbury competitor by 10 one-hundredths of a second, while Rauch finished third (1:06.27).

Sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ) garnered a pair of seconds, swimming a season-low 54.00 clip in the 100 free after he clocked 24.31 in half the distance. Junior Elio Daci (Q) was second in both the 200 individual medley (2:27.60) and 100 butterfly (1:08.06).

Connor Resigns As NQ Football Coach

By BILL GRIFFIN

Jim Connor called it the hardest decision he's ever made in his life.

After seven years as head coach, Connor has resigned his position at North Quincy and accepted the head coaching job at Norwell High.

"The North Quincy experience was one of the best I've had in my life. I can't say enough about it," said Connor. "In the end it came down to family. I have two young kids and during the season I hardly saw them. I had the opportunity to coach eight minutes from where I live and I took it so I could spend more time with my family."

One of the toughest parts of the decision was telling his players at North.

"It was hard because everyone will be starting over which is difficult. We were together. We knew each other," said Connor. "But the kids are resilient and they'll be fine."

Connor was an assistant at North for two years before taking the head job. His years at North are ones that he'll always remember.

"You could not have a better experience. I know I grew a great deal as a coach," he said. "From the administration to the parents to the kids, the support was unbelievable. It's a hard place to leave."

Connor had high words of praise for his staff of Mark Nutley, Ken McPhee, Mike Hanson, Peter Christom, and Tom Carter.

"For the last three years we've been together as a staff which, give the turnover is high school sports, is something special," he said. "They were great. They were loyal to me to the program and the kids."

One of Connor's fondest memories of his time at North is the Holy War on Thanksgiving against Quincy. It was Connor's team in 2009 which broke Quincy's 10-game winning streak and North went on to reel off three straight victories. Connor finished at 3-4 on Thanksgiving.

"That was the best game to be a part of," said Connor. "It will be forever a highlight in my career. All the excitement, the whole week leading up to the game, and to finally get a win against Quincy is something I will never forget. It's a special game."

Connor, recognized as a fine teacher of the fundamentals of the game, will inherit a program at Norwell which has seen tough times. He had a similar experience at North and he brought life to the program. His overall record of 30-46 his deceiving. He had three 6-5 seasons. One year the Red Raiders were a game away from a playoff berth. In recent years, his teams, well-taught in blocking and tackling, were competitive despite the dwindling numbers on his roster. This year on Thanksgiving, North dressed 30 players. Quincy dressed over 60.

"Our second year, I think we had the first winning record North had in 15 years," said Connor. "I think I was able to bring some positive feeling to the program and I'd like to do the same at Norwell."

Athletic Director Jim Rendle said applications for the head coaching job will be accepted until mid-March and he hopes to have a coach in place by sometime in April.

Ken McPhee, after 34 years as a head and assistant coach at North, is retiring. He was an assistant for 12 years at North, head coach for 17, and came back the last five years to work with Connor. He is the only man to play on a state champion at North (1966) and coach a Super Bowl champion (1992).

"I have nothing but wonderful memories," said McPhee who is a member of the Massachusetts Coaches Hall of Fame. "I enjoyed every moment of it. To be involved with athletes and friends on the high school level is the best thing in sports."

McPhee had high words of praise for Connor.

"He's a phenomenal young coach, as good an X-and-O's coach as I've been around. I learned a lot the last five years," said McPhee.

Merrymount School Students Talk With NASA Scientist

Learn About Space Station, Satellites During Web Conference

By EMILY TAFT

Fourth graders at the Merrymount School recently spoke with a NASA scientist to learn about the International Space Station, satellites, and to ask questions about how different things work at NASA.

"I was really happy with how it went. I was very impressed with the NASA scientist, I think he did a fabulous job with handling questions and comments from the students," said event organizer and teacher Lorie Hammerstrom. "It was a unique experience that captured the student's attention and tied together some lessons we have been working on."

NASA scientist Michael Hare, who was in Houston, TX spoke to 63 Merrymount fourth graders during an hour long Web Conference about geographical features of earth and how satellites gather information through remote sensing in the lesson called 'A View From the Top: Looking at Earth from Space.' Hare showed students how scientists use that information to observe and predict various events on Earth such as weather, pollution, growth of cities, and studying ancient cultures.

The students received a virtual tour of the International Space Station through many different cameras and pictures Hare showed and explained during the web conference. They were also given a virtual tour of the NASA Johnson Space Center where astronauts practice and train for their trip into space. One of the big hits of the conference was when Hare showed the students a video of astronauts up in space.

"I liked when they showed the video of the astronauts eating food," said fourth grader Gianna Gattorna.

Three of Hammerstrom's classes came together on Jan. 8th to speak with Hare about the many different things they have been learning the past few weeks.

"We have been studying geography terms and will be starting a unit on Canada," said Hammerstrom. "We have been looking at photos that Commander Chris Hadfield has been posting from the International Space Station (I.S.S.) and picking out landforms to identify what is in the photos."

Hammerstrom learned of the web conference opportunity during her time at the Honeywell Space Academy that she attended. She organized the event after finding a lesson that matched what she was teaching to the students in the classroom.

"I heard about NASA Distance Learning Network when I went to the Honeywell Advanced Space Academy," said Hammerstrom. "It was just a matter of finding a lesson that they teach that fits in with our curriculum. They have 25 or 30 lessons for kids ages K-12."

The NASA Distance Learning Network helps get students excited about science, technology, math and engineering. The lessons are developed by NASA and aligned with National Geography Standard and National Science Education Standards.

After Hare's lesson, students had a chance to ask questions they had prepared ahead of time that ranged from if he had ever met Astronaut Neil Armstrong, to how old the I.S.S. is and what is the most important thing NASA has ever done? One topic that seemed to interest the majority of the students was the Mars land rover named the Curiosity.

"I liked learning about Curiosity," said Merrymount fourth grader Julianna MacPherson. "The Curiosity is a rover that landed on Mars it's really amazing."

Hammerstrom said the Curiosity is something she would like to explore more with the students and create lessons around it.

"We will probably do some lessons on the Curiosity along with Mass and weight," said Hammerstrom. "I really want to do some more of these lessons with the forth grade. They really liked it and I believe it helps them become interested in STEM (science, technology, engineering and math.)"

MERRYMOUNT STUDENT Joey Russell asked NASA Scientist Michael Hare if he was involved or made an appearance in the 'NASA Johnson Style' video. The video is a play on the hit song and video "Gangnam Style."

DURING AN HOUR-LONG web conference with NASA Scientist Michael Hare, fourth grade students of the Merrymount School were able to view satellite pictures taken of different places on Earth along with live feed of what their school looks like from a satellite in space. At left is Merrymount School teacher Lorie Hammerstrom who coordinated the web conference for the students.

Quincy Sun Photos/Emily Taft

COURTNEY DONDERO, a fourth grader at the Merrymount School, was among the students who asked NASA scientist Michael Hare a question during a web conference lesson on Jan. 8th.

NICOLE ACERRA was one of many fourth grade students of Merrymount teacher Lorie Hammerstrom that asked a question during a web conference with NASA Scientist Michael Hare. Her question to Hare was, "When was the I.S.S. (International Space Station) built?"

NASA SCIENTIST Michael Hare speaks with students via web conference about how to read different satellite images, how they can use those images to predict and see different things that are going on with the pollution, weather, and the growth of cities on Earth.

Clearing A Sink Clog

Q: Some time ago, you mentioned that a clogged sink can be cleared using a plumber's snake. Where can I find one, and how do I use it? -- Jerrold in West Virginia

A: A plumber's snake is a tool that has a flexible steel cable extending from a spool and hand-crank assembly, with a wire snarl on the far end. You'll sometimes see it referred to as a cable auger, but if you refer to it as the former, experienced people will understand. It can be purchased at any home-improvement store for around $25.

The salesperson might ask what you're using the tool for. There are longer cables, up to 100 feet, as well as versions like closet augers (which are specifically for toilet clogs) and power augers (which are rented by the day, and something I wouldn't recommend for a first-timer or a small clog).

To clear a sink clog, you should try a couple of other tricks before shelling out money for the plumber's snake. First try a plunger, making sure the bell completely covers the drain and touches the sink surface in order to create a vacuum. Plunge up and down about 15 times. If the sink drains, run hot water through the pipe to clear the remaining clog.

If plunging doesn't work, try to clear the clog through the sink trap (at the bottom of the U-shaped drain pipe under the sink). Put a bucket under the trap and put on rubber gloves. Using an adjustable pipe wrench, unscrew the plug at the bottom of the trap. Water and gunk will start draining immediately, but that doesn't mean the clog is cleared. Use a wire coat hanger or something similar to probe the pipe via the trap, and try to pull out any additional material. Then screw the plug back in and turn on hot water.

If the clog still isn't cleared, now it's time to try to plumber's snake. Unscrew the plug at the bottom of the trap again and thread the end of the snake cable into the pipe, toward the wall, as far as it will go. To navigate pipe bends, turn the handle to adjust the cable end. Once the cable is extended as far as it will go, or won't go in any farther, slowly wind it back out.

Clog material that the snake pushed through will likely be tangled up in the wire snarl at the front of the cable. Be sure to clean this off before storing the tool.

Now, close up the drain plug, turn on the hot water, and let it run for a couple of minutes to clear out the rest of the clog.

If this still doesn't do the trick, contact a professional plumber.

HOME TIP: A drain filter or screen is one of the most cost-effective tools to combat pipe clogs.

On Saturday, Jan. 26th, at approximately 10 a.m., Officer Declan Breslin, while on routine patrol on Quincy Ave., observed a green pickup truck backed into a construction site located adjacent to 245 Quincy Ave. At the rear of the truck were two males loading roof trestles into the truck's cargo area. The Officer thought that this was odd because the truck in question did not seem capable of transporting such heavy equipment. Officer Breslin also knew that very little work had been done at the site since pouring concrete foundation a few months ago.

The Officer was called to a minor accident, so he responded and minutes later returned to the area to find the same pickup truck stopped on Quincy Ave. with the two men at the rear of the truck, loading up items that apparently fell out of the truck. After notifying the dispatcher that he was stopping the two men, the Officer pulled up behind the truck and activated his emergency lights to prevent an accident. After both males removed the debris from the street and back into the truck, Officer Breslin instructed the driver to pull the vehicle off the roadway to secure the load safely.

At this time, the driver, suspect #1, moved the pickup truck off the road. The Officer then asked suspect #1 if he had permission to remove the metal from the job site and he said that his boss hired him to remove it. He stated the name of a construction company he worked for. At this time Officer Breslin realized that suspect #2, the passenger, had left the scene. Suspect #1 said he didn't know where suspect #2 went. At this time, the Officer believed that suspect #2 fled the scene because they removed the metal unlawfully and he did not want to be arrested. The Officer asked suspect #1 for identification and he said it was inside the truck. As suspect #1 walked towards the truck, he suddenly ran off towards the rear of a nearby building.

A Job Well Done

Officer Breslin gave chase, notifying the dispatcher of what was happening. The suspect jumped over a wall and ran behind a garage area where the Officer lost sight of him. Several Officers responded to the area in an attempt to locate the two suspects. A short time later, Detective's Dentremon and Pieper, who were in an unmarked unit, observed a suspicious male running in the rear of 182 Quincy Ave. They cornered the male behind the building. When Officer Breslin arrived on scene, he immediately identified the male as suspect #2, the male who fled as suspect #1 was being questioned.

Suspect #2, a 36-year-old Weymouth resident, was placed under arrest for "Larceny over $250, Knowingly Resisting Arrest and Conspiracy," then transported to Quincy Police Head Quarters to be booked. Meanwhile, Officer Jim Cassidy and his K-9 partner Khiya, began a track from the pickup truck, which followed a trail to Martensen St. Several Officers converged on the area in an attempt to corner suspect

#1. As the K-9 Officer closed in on an address on Martensen St., he found the suspect lying prone on the second level of an apartment building hall. Suspect #1 was given his Miranda rights by Sergeant Sean Duggan. Suspect #1 confessed to being with suspect #2 and taking the metal.

Suspect #1, a 38-year-old Dracut man, was arrested on the charges of "Larceny Over $250, Knowingly Resisting Arrest, Conspiracy, along with operating after Suspension, Operating an Unregistered Motor Vehicle and Uninsured Motor Vehicle." A tow truck arrived to remove the pickup truck, but due to the amount of junk metal hanging from the vehicle, much of the metal had to be removed and placed at the side of a building until the victim/company could pick it up.

Nice Work!

Nice Work goes out to Officer Kevin DiMaggio and Detective's Dave Pacino and Jason MacIsaac. Officer DiMaggio responded to a suspicious vehicle in the George Rd. area. Due to breaks in the area a few months ago, he began checking houses for signs of a break when he observed a vehicle drive off. He noted the license plate and soon after found a break into one of the homes. Detectives arrived on scene and took photos of a wet shoeprint, then learned the name of the driver of the rented car. They caught up to the suspect in Taunton by using a "ping" activation by the rental company, which helps them locate their cars. When the photo of the shoeprint matched the footwear of the suspect, he was placed under arrest for "Breaking and Entering." The suspect has an extensive criminal record, which includes past breaking and entering offenses.

2012 Real Estate Stable With Signs Of Improvement, Reports Register O'Donnell

A new report issued by Norfolk County Register of Deeds William O'Donnell shows real estate activity in 2012 was "stable" and showed "signs of improvement."

The report encompasses real estate activity from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31 of last year.

"Overall the real estate activity in Norfolk County in 2012 remained stable with positive signs of improvement over past years," O'Donnell said as he noted the total volume of real estate sales as well as the total number of documents recorded at the Registry of Deeds as positive indicators.

According to the report, real estate activity in Norfolk County during 2012 showed increases across all measurement categories with the exception of foreclosure deeds filed.

There was a 24 percent increase in documents recorded at the Registry of Deeds during 2012 at 201,130 which was 39,322 more documents than the 2011 total of 161,808.

The total volume of real estate sales in Norfolk County during 2012 was $5,668,285,980.60 which showed a 26 percent increase over 2011 while the average sale price of deeds over $1,000 (both residential and commercial properties) was also up county-wide by 1 percent in 2012 at $600,644.91 which showed a $3,388.81 increase over 2011.

The number of mortgages recorded on Norfolk County properties in 2012 was up by 36% from 2011 at 46,554, and total mortgage indebtedness increased by 13% to $19,002,248,311.00 from the 2011 total of $16,813,944,797.

The number of notice to foreclose mortgage filings increased by 144 with 1,217 filings during 2012 compared to 1,073 filings in 2011 although the number of foreclosure deeds filed during 2012 decreased by 96 with 500 filings in 2012 compared to the 2011 total of 596.

Homestead activity was on the rise during 2012 with 13,358 homesteads filed representing a 21 percent increase over the 2011 total of 11,066.

The Registry of Deeds, located at 649 High St., Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County. The Registry is the basic resource for homeowners, title examiners, mortgage lenders, municipalities and others with a need for secure, accurate, accessible land record information.

To Assist Curriculum Development, Lab Renovations, New Equipment, Supplies Quincy College Biotechnology Program Receives $100,000 Grant

Quincy College has received a $100,000 Capital Grant through the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center to train students for careers in the biotechnology industry.

The grant is in addition to the $3 million federal grant the College was awarded in October 2012. The college currently offers an associate's degree in Biotechnology and Compliance and plans to launch a certificate program in the fall of 2013.

The funds are slated to assist curriculum development, laboratory renovations, purchase equipment and supplies, the hiring of new faculty members and other changes.

Following industry trends, the College's biotechnology and compliance program will prepare students with the skills required to enter the bio-manufacturing industry in areas of the biotech sector where there is a pressing need for workers. Furthermore, Quincy College will be the first college to integrate a virtual lab in its bio-manufacturing program. Renovated laboratories will be updated with new equipment that accommodates training in the emerging single-use biomanufacturing technology as well as the traditional technology. Building single-use technology into new laboratories will give Quincy College graduates a substantial lead in the evolving biotech job market, which is slated to increase 14 percent between 2012 and 2020. Partnerships with public workforce leaders will address issues such as student barriers to education, including financing, college entrance skills, transportation, and English language acquisition.

"We are extremely grateful to the MLSC for their continued support of Quincy College and our Biotechnology and Compliance program," said Dean of Natural & Health Sciences, Laura

MICHELE NORTON, Biotechnology & Compliance major at Quincy College. The college has received a $100,000 Capital Grant through the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center to train students for careers in the biotechnology industry.

Corina. "These funds will allow us to purchase equipment and supplies that will help us train our students in the fine art of biomanufacturing and prepare them for direct entry into the workforce."

Quincy College's federal grant award follows closely on the heels of the City of Quincy's initiative to bring more biotechnology and life science companies into the city, which is well-placed to be a hub of biotechnology industries. Grant funding stems from The Massachusetts Life Sciences Center, a quasi-public agency of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts tasked with implementing the Massachusetts Life Sciences Act, a ten year, $1 billion initiative that was signed into law in June of 2008. The Center's mission is to create jobs in the life sciences and support vital scientific research that will improve the human condition. This work includes making financial investments in public and private institutions that are advancing life sciences research, development and commercialization as well as building ties among sectors of the Massachusetts life sciences community.

RULES OF THE ROAD: ROTARIES

Rotaries are much more common in Massachusetts than in other states. A rotary is an intersection of roads coming together from several directions. It allows you to continue through without stopping at a STOP sign or a traffic signal. There are often yield signs at the entrance to a rotary. There is a physical barrier (the Central Island) in the center that forces traffic to travel counter clockwise around it. Drivers entering the rotary must yield to vehicles already in the rotary (unless told differently by signs or police officers). Use your right turn signal when you are ready to exit the rotary. Suggestions when navigating a rotary:

For a quarter-turn, or to continue straight ahead, enter the rotary from the right lane. Stay in that lane, and exit onto the right lane.

For a three-quarter-turn, enter the rotary from the left lane. Travel through the middle or inner lane. Exit onto the right lane. If coming from a road with a single lane, you should stay in the right lane for the entire turn. Do not stop in the rotary unless traffic necessitates this action.

Bottom Line: when entering a rotary, you must yield to vehicles already in the rotary because they have the right of way.

By SCOTT JACKSON
Quincy Youth Hockey's Under-16 Tier II squad is heading to Michigan this April to compete for a national championship after winning the state championship in November.

The team's season opened in September, and they qualified for an eight seed in the state tournament. The team opened the tournament by knocking off top seeded Wellesley 6-1, losing to the 495 Stars, and beating the Walpole Express in round robin play, earning a spot in the semi-finals. In that round they beat the Springfield Falcons 5-2 and took the championship in a rematch against the 495 Stars, 6-1.

Operation Barred During Golfing Hours

Wind Turbine OK'd

Next To Granite Links

By SCOTT JACKSON

The Town of Milton will build a wind turbine next to Granite Links, despite an arbitrator's decision to bar it from operating at times when golfers would be on the course.

Milton and Quarry Hills Associates (QHA), the company that runs the golf course, had been feuding over the turbine ever since Milton proposed building it on land next to Quarry Hills. QHA argued that the turbine would distract golfers, in violation of a lease with Milton, because of the flicker and noise it would generate. It also argued that changes in town zoning ordinances and a threatened eminent domain taking to create an access road for the turbine's construction would also be a violation of the lease.

QHA filed a lawsuit in Superior Court, which was then sent to arbitration as called for in the lease. The decision by Gordon L. Doerfer of the JAMS dispute resolution firm found that the turbine's flicker and noise would be distracting to golfers and limited the operating hours.

From Nov. 16 to March 31 the turbine would be allowed to run around the clock - Doerfer noted that any play during that time in Massachusetts doesn't count towards a golfer's handicap. For the rest of the year, the turbine would only be able to work at night. It also limits the construction to the period between Oct. 15 and March 15 and would allow eminent domain takings as long as they do not interfere with play on the course.

William Clark, Milton's planning director, said the town is 'absolutely' committed to building the 410-foot turbine despite the restrictions on its use. Those limitations will have an effect on how much power the turbine can generate, but those effects aren't yet known.

"They're going to have an effect - what that effect is we don't know yet," Clark said. "We have every intention of moving forward."

Milton's first step will be preparing the site for construction by preparing to take land for the access road and engineering for it.

"We'll be moving ahead with eminent domain and we'll be going ahead with the engineering for the access road," Clark said.

Jeff Tocchio, an attorney who represented QHA during the arbitration process said Doerfer's findings of fact we're consistent with the assertion that the turbine could interfere with play. He said Doerfer did a good job with his decision.

"Basically both sides presented all their evidence - it was extremely detailed," Tocchio said. "The arbitrator did a good job being thorough."

Milton filed a number of counterclaims to QHA's lawsuit. The town claimed a tee box encroached on town land not leased by the golf course, that environmental controls weren't adequate, that QHA failed to create an access road for Boston Gas (National Grid), and that a site layout plan wasn't adequate. Doerfer said in his ruling that Milton failed to provide enough evidence for any of those claims.

Preliminary Election In Ward 4?

There's still a ways to go before candidates can take out nomination papers but this year's city election could be on the quiet side.

And don't be surprised if every elected official who's up for re-election does just that: seeks another term.

That doesn't mean there won't be a challenge here or there but at this time the political front looks pretty quiet.

All except in one area of the city. That's in Ward 4 where there could be a preliminary election for city councillor.

One challenger has already announced his campaign. That's Michael Healy.

Incumbent Brian Palmucci – who had given some thought to running for city councillor at-large – has decided to seek a third term. He'll make it official next month.

And there's also some speculation that a third candidate could emerge for the Ward 4 seat. That's Noel DiBona, current president of the Ward 2 Civic Association whose family has roots in West and South Quincy. DiBona – who is also a member of the Quincy Park and Recreation Board and active with local sports including serving as head coach of the Quincy Point Panthers – says he hasn't made up his mind about a possible run.

If he tosses his hat in the ring, he would have to move to Ward 4 in order to serve as that area's representative on the City Council.

"I'm a 4th generation proud Italian-American with a strong blue collar work ethic," says DiBona, a small business owner (Russ DiBona & Son Landscaping.)

"I'm no different than every hard working American in the city of Quincy. I just might want to take the next step and run for Ward 4."

If there are more than two candidates for a ward council seat (and mayor), a preliminary election would be held Tuesday, Sept. 17.

At the moment, the Ward 4 council race is the only election featuring a challenge to an incumbent.

Some political observers think this city election will be rather tame compared to recent cycles.

For starters, the rumor mill isn't churning in terms of an opponent for Mayor Thomas Koch. Koch will announce a bid for a fourth two-year term in the spring.

Any potential challengers for the mayor may be biding their time and waiting for the outcome of this fall's initiative petition that will ask voters if they support a 4-year mayoral term. If the petition passes, Quincy voters would elect its first four-year term mayor in 2015. And the term would not expire until 2019.

Koch remains a pretty popular mayor and deserves credit for cobbling together an ambitious downtown revitalization effort that will begin to bear fruit later this year when the first new building rises at 1400 Hancock St. He's been elected three times by comfortable margins and has strong bases of support, including the business community.

So, challenging Koch this year could be a fool's errand.

And with a potential four-year term on the ballot in 2015, that would make a challenge more enticing perhaps to someone with mayoral aspirations.

At the city council at-large level, all three incumbents are running for re-election. Michael McFarland and Doug Gutro indicated last fall they would seek another term. Joe Finn had a campaign reception the other night so it looks like he'll run again.

One potential city council candidate is School Committeeman Dave McCarthy. It's still wait-and-see for McCarthy but observers believe he may opt out of a run for an at-large seat or against incumbent Margaret Laforest in Ward 1.

There are three School Committee members who are up for re-election next fall: Vice Chairwoman Barbara Isola, Emily Lebo and Anne Mahoney. Isola and Lebo will seek another term. Mahoney is reportedly undecided about running for another term or challenging Koch for mayor again.

It's still early in the election cycle but at the moment the only action appears to be in Ward 4.

We know that can all change – like the weather – at the drop of a hat.

POLITICAL CALENDAR has been set and the first date to circle is Tuesday, May 7. That's when nomination papers are released by the Board of Registrars.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1920 postcard reproduction showing the Miller Stile Inn on Miller Stile Road in Quincy Center. Built in 1813, this was the home of the Miller and Bigelow families who between them owned much of the property in this area. The Millers allowed neighbors to cross through their property on a footpath with a stile over the brook, hence the Inn's name. The last owner/resident to live here was Dr. William Everett, the headmaster of the Adams Academy. When Everett died in 1912, Quincy's real estate mogul Henry M. Faxon purchased the property and converted the house into an Inn. He added two wings on the opposite side of this view. He also built seven large cottages on the grounds of the estate to accommodate additional inn guests. The Inn operated for almost 50 years. This postcard view is from one of five cottages Faxon built along Elm Street. Across the foreground of the picture is the Town Brook. Guests in the cottages used the bridge to get to the Inn for meals; they had no kitchens. These cottages are now private homes. The Faxon family sold the Inn and two of the other cottages on the Bigelow Street side of the building in 1960 to what is now the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. After more than 50 years here, the South Shore Chamber recently sold the property to the Quincy accounting firm Hurley, O'Neill & Company. ## February Is American Heart Month

By RAY HURD

Acting Regional Administrator

Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services,
Boston Regional Office

I don't know about you, but usually by the time February rolls around I'm finding it difficult to stick to my New Year's resolution of living a healthier lifestyle. Unfortunately, in the United States, heart disease is a leading cause of death and disability for both men and women. Nearly 700,000 people die of heart disease in the U.S. each year, which is about 29 percent of all U.S. deaths. The American Heart Association has designated February as American Heart Month and I'd like to share some of the ways the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services is making it easier to maintain a healthy heart.

Medicare covers a yearly wellness visit, which is a great opportunity for you to sit with your doctor and ask about your risk for heart disease. Your doctor will be able to share specific information based on your medical history that may help lower your risk of heart disease. Thanks to the Affordable Care Act, Medicare now covers a number of preventive screenings. Ask your doctor about tests for your cholesterol, lipid and triglyceride levels to help determine if you're at risk for a heart attack or stroke. Medicare Part B (Medical Insurance) covers screening tests for cholesterol, lipid, and triglyceride levels every 5 years.

Smoking is also a major contributor to heart disease. If you smoke, the best thing you can do for yourself and your family is to quit. Medicare covers tobacco use cessation counseling for all people who smoke or use other tobacco products, including up to 8 face-to-face visits during a 12-month period. Ask how you can get help through this benefit at your next wellness visit.

Preventing heart disease is one of the smartest things you can do to protect your health. Most heart disease develops over time, so living a healthy lifestyle is the best way to keep your heart in good shape. Although it's not always easy, here are a few tips to keep you and your heart healthy:

- Watch your blood pressure and cholesterol levels
- Maintain a healthy weight
- Eat a healthy diet and limit fried and fatty foods
- Stay active
- Find healthy ways to cope with stress
- DON'T smoke!

You can register at MyMedicare.gov on the web to get personalized information about your Medicare health care claims and updates about heart screenings and other preventive services. You can also find information about Medicare health and prescription drug plan options in your area that can help you stay healthy.

For more information, visit www.medicare.gov or call 1-800-MEDICARE (1-800-633-4227). TTY users should call 1-877-486-2048.

FR Shipyard Could Be Most Profitable

By SCOTT JACKSON

General Dynamics Chairman David S. Lewis said it was possible for Quincy's shipyard to be the most profitable of all the company's yards by the end of the decade.

The Quincy division lost substantial amounts of money in previous years, Lewis explained, but three contracts for liquefied natural gas (LNG) tankers worth a combined $270 million would ensure the Fore River facility would stay open. Lewis was optimistic General Dynamics would ink more contracts to build LNG tankers, which would increase profits for the Quincy division.

"We are confident we will receive additional LNG orders in 1973," Lewis said. "The opportunity exists for Quincy to become our most profitable division in the second half of this decade."

Lewis' prediction came as he announced the company's net earnings for 1972 were the highest since 1968 and investors would see a 26 percent increase on their returns.

CITY MOURNS LOSS OF DR. CHARLES DJERF

Mayor Walter Hannon said the death of Dr. Charles Djerf, a pediatrician, civic leader, and former School Committee member, was a great loss for the community.

"He was a very dedicated man who didn't mind getting into controversy. If he thought it was the right thing to do, he did it. He was a very warm human being who dedicated his life to others," Mayor Hannon said.

Dr. Djerf, 62, was elected to the School Committee in 1953 and served for 16 years. After leaving the committee, he helped others in the community by founding drug rehabilitation program Survival, Inc. He was also chairman of the Citizens Transportation Committee, which played a key role in bringing the MBTA rapid transit extension to the South Shore.

In 1966 Dr. Djerf was named 'Citizen of the Year' by the Quincy Jewish War Veterans and received the inaugural Quincy Jaycees Distinguished Service Award.

CITY COUNCIL EXPANSION EYED

City Clerk John Gillis proposed expanding the City Council from nine members to 11, by increasing the number of wards in Quincy from six to eight.

Gillis said Quincy's six-ward set-up is a violation of the 'one-man, one-vote' principal. He warned that the city could face court action if ward lines were not redrawn on a balanced population basis.

The proposal was submitted to the council, but Gillis did not expect any action to be taken for at least two weeks as he finalized some details of the plan.

"A couple things have to be worked out first," he said.

WHAT'S IN YOUR RING?

As taste in women's rings becomes rather more interesting and somewhat edgier, many women are choosing to follow a fashion trend that speaks of romance and intrigue. In particular, women seem to be gravitating toward compartment rings, potion rings, poison rings, locket rings, and box rings, all of which have secret compartments. All feature an artfully concealed inner compartment that is encapsulated beneath a hinged bejeweled cover that can be unlatched and opened. After that, it is anyone's guess what lies inside. Popular during the Renaissance, these ornate rings were used to hold precious locks of hair; tiny portraits; and, according to legend, even poison.

While we can hardly subscribe to their latter use, compartment rings make for intriguing wear.

Contemporary compartment rings are popular and have found resurgence among collectors looking for both modern and antique styles. While today's wearers have no need to use these rings to carry poison or keepsakes like locks of hair, fashion will dictate what the next popular use will be. ## Broccoli, Cauliflower, Carrot Soup

These days there are so many commercials with some kind of a juicer for vegetables or fruits to drink.

But instead of doing it that way, my daughter Nancy took some of these vegetables and made the most hardy, delicious soup ever. In addition to the taste, it is the most -healthy soup as well.

BROCCOLI, CAULIFLOWER, AND CARROT SOUP

2 bunches broccoli
1 bunch cauliflower

5 carrots
½ cup fresh parsley
2 cloves garlic
¼ cup coconut oil
Salt and pepper

1 quart of water or stock of any kind
Boil all of the ingredients except the coconut oil until vegetables are well done and tender. Place in a blender and puree. It will take more than one batch at a time.

Heat through until bubbly and add the coconut oil. It is one of the best soups ever.

Unpeeled Apple Turnover

For years when I bake an apple pie or when anyone does, the apples are peeled.

When you think of it, the goodness of the apple is in the skin so one day, as I was making a large turnover that I like making instead of a pie, I decided to slice the apples thin and leave the skin on.

The result was wonderful and you couldn't even tell that the skins were on they apparently blend in so well.

My friend Irene told me she has been baking her apple pies for years without peeling them.

APPLE TURNOVER

1 green apple
2 red apples
1- pie crust (either bought or made from scratch)
1- teaspoon flour
3 tablespoons sugar

½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
1- teaspoon cinnamon
Egg for egg wash
1 tablespoon or so of lemon juice

Slice the apples so they are thin. Place in the bowl. Add the lemon juice and mix. In a small bowl, add the flour, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and sugar and mix together until well blended.

Add to the apples and mix well. On a cookie sheet, place the pie -crust. On one side of the crust add the apple mixture. Fold the crust over and seal the bottom with either your fingers or a fork. Beat the egg and brush the top of the crust. Place slits with pointed knife or a fork, and bake in a 425-degree oven for 10 minutes and then 350-degrees for another 20 minutes or until the top is golden brown.

It is so much easier to cut and serve.

Wayne Miller Guest Speaker At Adams Academy Quincy Historical Society Program 'Fore River Ships' Topic Feb. 21

The vast array and variety of ships constructed over a period of more than 80 years at the Fore River Shipyard will be the focus of a Quincy Historical Society program, Thursday, Feb. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at the Adams Academy in Quincy Center.

Guest speaker Wayne Miller, who grew up in Quincy, set out some years ago to assemble a collection of pictures of every named ship built at Fore River during the course of its history. He completed the task in 2011, and he has now collected the best of his images in a book just issued by Arcadia Publishing.

The Fore River output ranged from the seven-masted Thomas W. Lawson, through tankers and ocean liners, to the great U.S. Navy ships of the two world wars and tracking ships for the Apollo moon missions.

Miller will present a power-point of images from his collection, discuss the history of the ships, and talk about his experiences in tracking down all the images. A book signing will follow his presentation.

Everyone is welcome to attend.

There is no charge for admission.

Honeywell Report Before Council At March 4 Meeting

A City Council meeting on Honeywell originally scheduled for Tuesday has been postponed to March 4.

Councillor Doug Gutro, chairman of the committee, called the meeting to press the administration to release any energy data for buildings where Honeywell equipment is installed.

In 2007 Quincy and the New Jersey-based energy conglomerate reached an agreement to install water meters and $32 million worth of energy efficient equipment in the city. In 2008, Mayor Tom Koch launched an investigation into the deal, which was signed by his predecessor William Phelan.

The state took up the investigation, and focused on whether or not the installation of water meters qualifies as a energy savings measure in accordance to a state law that allows communities to bypass open bidding requirements for energy savings projects. In January, it was announced that all parties agreed to a $26 million settlement - $4 million in cash and the voidance of a maintenance contract worth up to $22 million.

4 Arrested For Cocaine Trafficking

By SCOTT JACKSON

Four women are facing cocaine trafficking charges following a two-month long investigation by the Quincy Police.

The investigation focused on Vicki LeClerc, who police allege had been selling cocaine from an apartment at 276 Water St. and other locations throughout the city. After conducting surveillance and utilizing other investigative methods, detectives from the Drug Control Unit obtained a search warrant for the premises.

A total of 10 detectives from Quincy, Braintree, and Weymouth executed the search warrant last Thursday afternoon. They arrested LeClerc, 48, and her daughter Kelly LeClerc, 25, and Shannon Murray, 43, all of Quincy as well as Patricia Mejia, 27, of Lynn. Detectives also seized 79 grams of substance determined to be cocaine by Quincy's Tru-Narc testing device, a 2005 Ford Explorer, various pills, and a small amount of cash. Police said the cocaine seized has an $8,000 street value and was packaged for sale.

Vicki LeClerc was charged with trafficking over 36 grams of cocaine, possession of a class "b" and class "c" substance, and conspiracy to violate drug laws. Kelly LeClerc and Mejia were both charged with trafficking over 36 grams of cocaine and conspiracy to violate drug laws. Murray was charged with trafficking over 36 grams of cocaine, conspiracy to violate drug laws, multiple arrest warrants, and possession of a class "a" substance.

Pleas of not guilty were entered on each defendant's behalf when they were arraigned Friday at the Bel-lotti Courthouse. Vicki LeClerc, Mejia, and Murray were held on $10,000 cash bail and Kelly LeClerc was held on $5,000 cash bail. All four are due back in court March 5 for a probable cause hearing.

Det. Lt. Patrick Glynn of the Quincy Police's Drug Unit said the arrests makes Brewers Corner residents safer.

"The quantity of drugs was significant for this dealer and it has separated her from the cocaine and means of transportation. This arrest again demonstrates the success of the collaborative efforts of the police and citizens working together," Glynn said. "The residents of Brewers Corner can now feel safer with this operation being dismantled. Informa-

Manet Community Health Board Sets Ambitious Agenda

The Manet Community Health Center Board of Directors has jumped full-force into 2013—with new officers, a new member, and a targeted agenda—determined to meet the needs of its growing patient volume and capitalize on national health care reform.

Joseph Reardon of Milton, and vice president for Keohane Funeral and Cremation Services, continues as board president for another term. Serving as vice president is Quincy resident Henry (Hank) Rittal, business performance management analyst for Blue Cross Blue Shield of MA; as secretary, Quincy resident Chris Cogdill, district manager for Walgreens Pharmacy; and, as treasurer, Quincy resident Robert Griffin, law partner with Krokidas & Bluestein, LLP.

Joining the board is Michael R. Milner, PA-C, of Hull, who combines the perspective of a clinician with that of a patient. Milner is dean of the School of Physician Assistant Studies at the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Services, and the recently retired Rear Admiral and Assistant Surgeon General of the U.S. Public Health Services for New England.

"Mike Milner will be an outstanding addition to our board," said Reardon. "We especially will benefit from his background as a clinician, as we move toward a new payment system that rewards providers for keeping their patients healthy instead of the number of patients per day they treat."

Not only is Milner a patient at Manet's Hull practice site, so are his mother and his wife. Milner learned about Manet's focus on quality primary care and supportive services when he relocated his mother to the Hull area.

"I'm thrilled to join the Manet board. I know the quality of care at Manet Community Health firsthand—as a son whose mother is treated here, as the husband of a patient, and now as a proud patient myself," said Milner. "Manet, and other federally funded centers like it, is delivering the kind of personalized, comprehensive care that will help more people enjoy healthier futures."

The Manet Board of Directors is formulating its agenda against the backdrop of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, which takes full effect in 2014. The Act is relying on Community Health Centers to provide even more primary care services—based largely on their stellar track record in savings and performance.

Estimates are that health centers save taxpayers $24 billion annually by keeping people out of costlier settings, including hospital emergency rooms. A study published by the American Journal of Preventive Medicine found that Community Health Centers performed equal to or better than their counterparts in private practice.

"Plus, health centers serve as economic engines in our communities, creating jobs, keeping local employers' work forces healthy, and generating about $20 billion in combined economic impact nationwide each year," noted Reardon. Locally, Manet contributed an overall economic impact of $19.9 million to the South Shore region in 2012.

The Manet Board of Directors is updating its strategic plan and overseeing plans to renovate its North Quincy practice site this year, with the addition of a Center for Older Adults and a Center for Health in Public Housing.

Two board members—Hanover resident John Galluzzo, director of education and camping, South Shore Natural Science Center, and Linda Kelly of Quincy—have been working with the Boston-based architectural firm DiGiorgio Associates, Inc. to craft a design that meets the needs of patients and community. The entire board recently reviewed plans for the evolving project. Also on tap this year will be the groundbreaking of a Center for Older Adults at Manet's Hull practice site, as well.

"Our ultimate goal is to fulfill our mission of providing care to people who might not otherwise have access because of a variety of barriers," said Reardon, "including culture, language, geography, transportation, and/or the ability to pay. At Manet, all patients are treated the same, regardless of health status, income, or insurance coverage."

The board is actively engaged in increasing Manet's philanthropic base to support expanded programs. "Caring for a diverse population, and responding to impending Affordable Care Act changes, will take serious resources," explained Reardon.

As a child, Reardon experienced a chronic health problem—asthma. As he grew older, he began to realize that "I could help myself by adopting healthy habits." He added, "That's central to what we do—help people get and stay healthy and, through excellent primary care and other services, avoid the health catastrophes that could otherwise affect their lives."

Continuing on the board for another year are Braintree resident, John Brothers, executive director for Quincy Asian Resources, Inc.; Medford resident, Kenneth Dyer; Galluzzo; Hull resident, Stephen Gore; Kelly; Scituate resident Elise Kline, clinical nurse specialist in adult psychiatric and community mental health for the Lemuel Shattuck Hospital; Quincy resident, Barbara Morris, Quincy educator, ESOL instructor, Quincy Community Action Board of Directors member, and Quincy Democratic City Committee Affirmative Action Officer; and, Quincy resident, Ivan Wong, victim witness advocate for the Norfolk County District Attorney's office.

Leaving the board are Quincy residents Alicia Gardner, director of support services for the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds; and, Joseph Renzi. "Combined, Ms. Gardner and Mr. Renzi volunteered over 13 years of service to our community, and this board is grateful for their gifts of time and their dedication to the Manet mission," said Reardon.

Palmucci Seeks Third Term In Ward 4

Ward 4 City Councillor Brian Palmucci will formally announce his re-election campaign for a third term with a kick-off event at 6:30 p.m. on March 14th at the Common Market Restaurant in West Quincy.

In his campaign announcement, Palmucci, who was first elected in 2009, says he has built a record focused on dramatically improving direct communication with residents on City and neighborhood issues, tackling head-on some of the ward's most long-standing problems and working to protect public safety and invest in education.

In his campaign, Palmucci said he plans the same shoe-leather campaign of door-knocking, coffee hours and community meetings with residents that propelled him to office and have defined his tenure as councillor.

Palmucci says he has transformed communication with constituents through a range of initiatives, including scores of community meetings, regular paper newsletters, a frequent e-newsletter and e-mails, phone calls and an aggressive social media operation including facebook and twitter. He is the only city councillor who video tapes his community meetings and posts them on youtube.com for residents who can not attend to view. He noted that he is always available to residents on his cell phone and email at any time of day or night.

"Listening, communicating and providing a strong voice on the issues important to our neighbors is the foundation of this job, and I am grateful every day for the opportunity to serve so many great neighborhoods. I know that by working together we can continue to move the ward - and the city - forward in a positive direction," Palmucci said.

Palmucci said he is most proud of his work in driving the effort that led to the first widespread flood-relief program in West and South Quincy in more than a generation following the 2010 floods that devastated the area. Flood-relief projects had long been sought by neighbors in a series of low-lying neighborhoods, and the Capital Improvement Plan he fought for and that is now underway throughout the City will see an investment of more than $6 million specifically for flood-relief measures in Ward 4.

The scope of the flood relief projects are the largest investment in the Ward for flood control in recent history and is the largest single component of the citywide Capital Improvement Plan.

"In the floods of 2010, I saw first-hand the devastation so many residents suffered, and it was abundantly clear to me that we had a responsibility to act in a meaningful way," he said. "I am tremendously proud that we came together as a community and have committed to this work. We know there are no silver-bullets, but we are making great progress to resolve problems residents have dealt with for far too long."

Currently, Palmucci serves as chairman of the Council's Committee on Public Safety. He says he has played a leading role in the fight to keep the neighborhoods of Quincy a safe place where residents can live, work and raise a family.

Palmucci also said he is an active voice in the city's nationally recognized efforts to fight substance abuse; championed new tools that allow Quincy Police to more aggressively combat absentee-landlords who let their properties become havens for crime and drugs; launched a broad review of the circumstances - and potential solutions - surrounding an increase in pedestrian accidents; and developed a number of strategies aimed at protecting Quincy's seniors.

With Palmucci and his wife, Alison who is a public school teacher, expecting their first child this spring, Palmucci also highlighted the importance of ensuring that Quincy remains one of the best school systems of its size in the Commonwealth. He has fought for additional resources for programs and equipment in Ward 4 schools, supported budgets that mean small class sizes, and is now leading the Council's efforts to ensure that the aging Sterling Middle School qualifies for state funding to be reconstructed in the coming months.

"Reconstruction of Sterling Middle School is one of these issues that has lingered for years, and is now moving forward. School buildings are among our most important assets as a community, and we have a responsibility to ensure they provide safe and functional environment for 21st century learning," he said.

There is an unprecedented amount of work now ongoing in the City, from infrastructure projects to school improvements to the historic downtown redevelopment, and Palmucci said he's worked to ensure that necessary investments are always coupled with financial responsibility. He noted that by working with the Administration, half of the funding for flood-relief projects will come from sources outside of the City's general operating account.

Similar success in finding outside revenue, such as 80 percent state reimbursement for the New Central Middle School and anticipated reimbursement for Sterling, have allowed the city to maintain one of the lowest annual debt burdens of any city in Massachusetts and kept property tax increases below statewide averages.

by hundreds of dollars and among the smallest of any community the last four years.

"We've made difficult spending cuts when necessary; we've increased investments in areas that were necessary; we've located outside revenue sources when necessary, and I'm always focused on the bottom line of the city's financial health and how my decisions effect residents wallets," said Palmucci.

Prior to serving on the Council, Palmucci received his Bachelors Degree from UMass - Amherst in 2000 and he received a Juris Doctorate from the New England School of Law in 2004 year. Palmucci and his wife Alison, an elementary school art teacher, own a home on Willard Street in West Quincy. They are expecting their first child in May.

Palmucci owns and operates his own law practice in Quincy Center.

He is a past president and board member of the Ward 4 Neighborhood Association. Palmucci is also a member of the Ward 4 Democratic City Committee, Quincy Quarry and Granite Workers Museum, Quincy Lodge of Elks, Quincy Environmental Network, Friends of the Blue Hills, Quincy Lodge of Elks, Quincy Access Television, Sons of Italy, Sons of the American Legion and the Friends of Thomas Crane Library.

The Quincy city council election will be held on Tuesday, Nov. 5th.

the classroom with a key.

"It's a complex issue, we have so many doors in the system. The classroom doors are all an inch and three quarters, which is standard size, with the exception of a few doors. We're looking at a standard key lock system," said Draicchio.

"It allows the teacher or instructor or the office person to lock the door from the inside. If a student wanted to get out they could get out from the inside, but they don't have the capability of locking it once a teacher has left the room. This is a key lock system that we are currently looking at right now for all classroom doors."

Approximately 500 doors, mainly in elementary schools, will need to be fixed with the locking system, which will cost around $150 per door, according to Coordinator of Custodial Services Kevin Segalla.

Draicchio suggested that the committee consider making the keys universal so they can be used on all doors, which was something Quincy Education Association President Allison Cox agreed was probably the best way to streamline procedure.

"That's the biggest concern among the teachers is the classroom door situation with the locks, and a lot of the classrooms in the older buildings have the coat rooms that go out into the stairwells and out into the hallways, so there is a lot of different access points. Classroom doors is probably the number one concern," said Cox.

"One of my concerns would be the keys and if it is the same key that fits every lock. We've got teachers going in and out of classrooms, specialists that use all the different classrooms, and we've got a lot of substitute teachers. I can just imagine utter chaos with 65 different keys."

School Committee member Dave McCarthy, the chairman of the Facilities and Security Subcommittee, said the committee would always continue to look at every aspect of security and facilities throughout QPS.

"We are going to re-look and re-look again at our school building security and facilities, both exterior in regards to cameras, door alarms, door intercoms, lobby entrances, and some access control issues we have," said McCarthy. "In the interior we are looking at our ID badge system, our visitor protocol, and specifically, a very hard look, and probably move forward and aggressive look at classroom door locks at the elementary level to start, along with our emergency procedures and our PA system."

Draicchio said that a pilot program for the intercom system is already being implemented at a number of elementary schools and the hope is to install the new systems at all of the schools.

"All the schools are equipped with a door buzzer with a communication piece, this is for elementary and middle schools.

"One of the things we've looked at and we've started to go forward with is to do some trial phases on some schools with door intercoms that have the camera built in. On the other end of the buzzer would be the same type of box inside for the staff. It's very important and a great tool and we want to try and go forward with it in the future for all of our schools," said Draicchio.

"We started out with, as you know, one camera pointed at the door where the door buzzers are. What I would like to do moving forward is to increase from one camera at the elementary and middle schools to somewhere in the range of 8-10 within the next year or two."

McCarthy said that they are also looking for ideas on how to tighten up security measures at both high school entrances.

"We've talked about access control around the perimeter door of Quincy so that someone hits a buzzer and then is let into the vestibule, and then checks in with the security person," said McCarthy. "Then we discussed, should we have the second door, where we buzz them through the second door after you buzz them through the first. We're kicking it around right now. But it's an easy lobby."

"North's lobby isn't as easy, once you're past the front doors and you're in, you've got up the stairs, and left and right, you can't really box them in a little bit, so we're kicking that around a little bit right now as well. That's what is on our high school radar right now."

Draicchio mentioned that they have been looking into a system where security personnel, particularly at the high school level, would be able to scan a visitor's license and information about the visitor would appear on their computer screen. He added that they are looking into a few different ways to have ID badges for all QPS employees to get in and out of the buildings.

"They have a certain ID system where you swipe the persons license and you will be able to tell certain things about that person," said Draicchio. "We've talked to one company so far (about staff ID's) and that company said that we could basically kill two birds with one stone. You would have your card for your staff member on a lanyard but it would also be their ID badge as well as their access card. Instead of looking at costing a lot more money probably in the long run to do two separate things, this is a way for us to consolidate that into something that would be cost effective for everyone."

School committee member Paul Bregoli asked if the idea of installing metal detectors at the entrances of both Quincy and North Quincy High School had been discussed.

"My only other concern would be concealed weapons under garments or a backpacks. A kid could walk in and have something in his backpack and we wouldn't know until he was already in the school," said Bregoli. "Was there any consideration given to installing metal detectors, at particularly at the high school and middle school doors? Is that something to be considered or something we should consider at some point in time?"

McCarthy said that metal detectors weren't something originally discussed but it was something they should look into.

"I think it's probably an item that we might want to explore a little bit. I don't know if we have had a number of instances, at least at the high school level, where we've run into anything. I know we've had some instances but we could look at that and see what the cost is," said McCarthy. "I always hoped we wouldn't even be at this level talking about this so you know you try and hope that you don't get to that level."

One suggestion McCarthy made in lieu of installing metal detectors was to conduct random bag checks as students arrived at school. School Committee Vice chairperson Barbara Isola said that if they considering doing random bag checks they need to be aware of search and seizure laws and they will have to make sure they follow protocols and case laws carefully.

McCarthy said that every concern and idea will be looked into and placed on a list, with the most important items being looked at first. During the school committee meeting, Mayor Tom Koch said that security procedures and items would always be something the committee continues to look at and take seriously.

"I appreciate the parent input that has been involved. I think people understand that had there been a police officer in Newtown, the police officer would have been the first one shot. We can prepare for events as best we can, and we should for the safety of the kids," said Koch.

"The priority will be the schools, when we are comfortable with that report, what improvements we're going to make, we're they short term, long term, then we'll come up with a funding source on how we're going to approach it, and I think it's reasonable," the mayor added.

New Central On Schedule For September Opening

Members of the School Committee received a brief update on the progress of the new Central Middle School among others during their Feb. 6th meeting.

School committee member and Central Building Subcommittee Chairperson Anne Mahoney said that they expect classrooms to be ready to move into in September.

"At the last meeting I was at they said we would be move in ready in September but it won't be 100 percent complete though, is my recollection of it," said Mahoney. "For the most part it will be complete, just like we did at Quincy High School where the gym wasn't 100 percent complete, we have had that kind of communication where the classrooms will be ready for move in, in September. The hope is that we're picking up speed so we could be 100 percent complete but the guarantee is that we will be ready to move in, in September."

time, the city was covered in 30 inches of snow according to National Weather Service observations, about three more inches than the Blizzard of 1978 left in its wake. The National Weather Service also confirmed that this was the first official blizzard — defined as a snowstorm with 35 mile per hour winds and visibility of less than a quarter-mile — to hit Boston since the infamous 1978 storm, which struck 35 years and two days prior to the weekend's nor'easter.

The blizzard's biggest impact was on Quincy's power. Scattered outages started popping up Friday evening as winds began to howl. Around 10:30 that night during the height of the storm transmission lines in the Fore River area responsible for bringing electricity to Quincy failed, plunging all 43,000 National Grid customers in the city into darkness.

The utility company was able to repair those lines after the storm tapered off just before noon Saturday. Power first returned to Quincy Center, and later that evening customers in North Quincy, Wollaston, Quincy Point and West Quincy saw their service restored. On Sunday power came back online in Germantown, Houghs Neck, and Adams Shore.

A few hundred customers were still without power Monday, and mayoral spokesman Chris Walker said National Grid worked throughout the day, going street-to-street to bring all power back online. All power was restored by Tuesday morning. Walker said Mayor Tom Koch felt National Grid's response to this storm was better than previous ones, but still had reservations over the state of infrastructure bringing power to Quincy.

"The mayor is pleased with the boots-on-the-ground response of National Grid and the dozens of crews that worked tirelessly throughout the duration of this event to get power back online in Quincy," Walker said. "It was without question an improved response over previous storms."

"The larger concern for Mayor Koch — and it's something that he'll be talking about directly with National Grid — is the transmission line that failed and caused the citywide outage in the first place and whether it is the deeper symptom of problems with our overall electrical infrastructure."

The storm also caused flooding in Houghs Neck, Adams Shore, and Merrymount as high tide approached around 9:30 p.m.

Friday. The Post Island Road area, Narragansett Road, Babcock Street, and Edgewater Drive were among those affected. Water also flooded the Willows section of Houghs Neck, cutting the peninsula off from the rest of Quincy.

"There was flooding in a lot of the coastal roads," Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said. "The area by the Willows was cut off and Houghs Neck went from a peninsula to an island."

Most of the damage from the flooding was to basements. Laforest said about a dozen residents suffered property damage, such as furnaces that will need to be replaced or furnished basements that will need repair. Walker explained that the blizzard caused no total losses.

"Property damage is substantial but we do not believe it to be catastrophic," Walker said.

Many residents feared that Saturday morning's 10 a.m. high tide could have compounded flooding damage done the night before because that storm surge hadn't fully receded. But the winds shifted and weakened Saturday morning, reducing the impact of the tide.

"It could have been a lot worse," Laforest said. "We really lucked out with the high tide."

As the storm surge rose, the Police and Fire Departments with assistance from the DPW evacuated residents. The Police used four military surplus Humvees to bring people to safety, because they were the only vehicles capable of doing so.

"Those vehicles were such a tremendous help," Laforest said. "They were the only vehicles that could reach people."

Laforest was grateful for the city's response both during the storm bringing residents to safety and afterwards helping pump out flooded basements.

"The city workers out there were amazing. This was such an enormous storm," Laforest said. "There is always room for improvement but as far as feet on the ground I couldn't say enough."

She was concerned, however, that her ward was the last major section to have power restored. Without power, residents could not use sump pumps to drain their basements, which only makes damage worse.

"The longer water lingers the worse damage is done. We couldn't start sump pumps without power," Laforest said. "I'm quite concerned about what the priority system is for National Grid."

The city opened two shelters during the storm, one at Quincy High School and another at the Kennedy Center in Squantum. In total 200-250 residents, those who left their houses because of flooding and those who left because they had no heat, went to the shelters and all were able to leave by Sunday afternoon.

Plows took to the streets throughout the storm, and Walker said most of Quincy's roads had been plowed within 12 hours of the storm. But the cleanup after the storm continued into Monday night, with a focus on the area near schools — public schools were closed Friday, Monday, and Tuesday — and on making sidewalks and intersections safe for pedestrians.

"The removal operation is focused on school areas, clearing grounds, sidewalks and making intersections safe for pedestrians. Sidewalks plows are out and will get to every major area they always do, and residents are asked to do their part by shoveling sidewalks, fire hydrants and catch basins when possible," Walker said. "The DPW and contractors will be out again tonight (Monday) in full-force continuing the clean up of some of the trouble spots."

Walker said it was too early to estimate how much of Quincy's snow removal budget would be spent dealing with the storm.

The city did receive some complaints from residents about the plowing, Walker explained, but said most people were understanding given how severe the storm was.

"With a storm like this there are always going to be complaints — we've gotten some compliments too.

Largely people understand it's a historic storm," Walker said. "The city is doing everything in its power to get up and running."

Walker added that no major problems were reported during Monday morning's commute when many returned to work.

"The morning commute was difficult, but there were no major problems. In fact, we have no reports of any serious injuries or fatalities throughout the duration of the storm, which is a blessing. We need everyone to be extremely careful out there — that goes for drivers as well as pedestrians. Just take it slow, recognizing the magnitude of the storm," Walker said.

In anticipation of the storm, Gov. Deval Patrick issued an executive order banning all vehicle travel except for public safety officials, public works employees, utility workers, plow drivers, healthcare workers, and others in important private sector jobs. The ban, the first ordered statewide since the Blizzard of '78, was in effect from 4 p.m. Friday until 4 p.m. Saturday. Quincy Police Capt. John Dougan said the ban was effective in the city, which had no reported traffic accidents during the storm.

"Everyone heeded the governor and it helped immensely," Dougan said.

Dougan said having people out on the road during the height of the blizzard would've been dangerous for drivers and pedestrians alike, and could impede snowplows and emergency personnel. And because of the nor'easter's timing, there was added concern about people going out Friday night and finding themselves stranded.

"People would be going out Friday night and getting stuck. It'd be gridlock," Dougan said.

The MBTA shutdown all service Friday at 3:30 p.m. and most of the system remained closed until Monday morning — the Red Line and other subway lines were able to run a limited schedule starting Sunday afternoon. The Postal Service suspended deliveries Saturday because of the nor'easter.

Permanently Silence A Squeaky Floor

Question: The floor squeaks loudly when I walk over a couple of spots in my living room. I read somewhere that you can stop these squeaks by sprinkling talcum powder between the boards. But my floor is covered by carpet. Is there any other way to fix the squeaks? -- Squeaking Mad in Memphis

Answer: Talcum powder is a good temporary fix for squeaky floorboards (as noted in my new book, "101 Best Home Repair Tips," available from Amazon). But eventually the squeaks come back anyway. If you're not inclined to pull back the carpet repeatedly to apply powder between the boards, try a more permanent solution.

Do you have access to the underside of the living room floor, such as in the basement or the crawlspace under the house? If so, you either shim the nearest joist or secure the subflooring to the squeaky boards to reduce the noise.

To shim the floor, have a helper walk around the living room while you listen below for squeaks, and mark the noisy areas. Next, mark the joists (the large boards running perpendicular to the floorboards underneath the floor) on either side of the squeaky area. Coat a shim (a thin wedge of wood, available at most home-improvement stores) with a thin layer of wood glue, and hammer the shim into the gap between the joist and the subfloor on each side of the squeak. You may need to add a couple of shims on each side, and have your helper test the area each time.

If that doesn't completely rid your floor of squeaks, try attaching the subfloor to the floorboards in the squeaky area more tightly. You do this by driving wood screws through the subfloor layer into the bottom of the floorboards. Be careful to select screws that will not punch through the floorboards. Place the screws into the center of the squeaky area -- two should do it, but if you need three or more, go ahead.

What if you can't access the underside of the floor? This is where you'll need to roll back the carpet and address the boards from above.

To avoid marring the floorboards, hammer finishing nails between the squeaking boards, angling them so that they go into one edge of one of the boards. The nails should be flush with the floorboards. Space them a few inches apart along the squeaky area.

If that doesn't do it, you can secure the floorboard to the subflooring from above. This will mar the board, as you'll need to drive a finishing nail (or if necessary, a wood screw) directly through the center of the squeaky floorboard into the subflooring. Use a nail set or another nail to drive the finishing nail slightly below the wood's surface. Then cover it with wood filler whose color matches the color of the floorboard.

HOME TIP: Talcum or graphite powder are just temporary fixes for squeaky floors. Apply either one between the offending boards and brush away excess.

13 Tips To Teach Kids Love: The Power Of Positive Parenting

By DIANE LANG

Kids have so much to teach us, so much we forget as reality takes over. We need to learn how to love everything around us: life, earth, others, etc.

Kids know how to forgive, release and let go. So positive parenting isn't about teaching how to love, it's teaching kids to hold onto their love and reminding them how great life is.

Kids are born with the knowledge of love not fear! As parents we need to remind them of this. Here are 13 tips to teach kids love through positive parenting:

1. Teach kids through example. Be the example, the role model, the mentor. Show the personality traits you want your kids to have. If you show kids love, warmth, kindness, patience and empathy, you will get it in return.

2. Teach them to want not to need. Teaching love is to remind kids they don't need to be attached to any material objects and to be grateful for what they have.

3. Discipline is love. It shows your child you care.

4. Show love by being honest. It's okay to say I don't know. Be honest, clear, simple and to the point.

5. Show loyalty through actions. Make sure to give daily hugs, kisses, pats on the shoulder, hold hands, etc.

Valentine Princess Tea Party Feb. 16

The annual Valentine Princess Tea will be held Saturday, Feb. 16 at Houghs Neck Congregational Church, 310 Manet Ave., Quincy.

Celebrate Valentine's Day with a fairy tale princess at this special event. In addition to tea and sweets, there'll be crafts, music and lots of fun activities for princesses from preschool to Grade 5. Princess dress and accessories (tiaras, magic wands, etc) are optional. All princesses must be accompanied by an adult.

Admission is $10 per child and $5 per adult, and reservations are required. Two seatings are available: 10 a.m. to noon, and 2 to 4 p.m. To make a reservation, call Sue at 617-479-2311 or e-mail hnce@comcast.net. Indicate the number of princesses and adults attending and the seating time you prefer when making a reservation.

Show love to your spouse; let your kids know there is a lot of love in the family.

6. Show kids love through praise. Let them know how proud of them you are with praise. Praise your child's efforts so they stay motivated and don't give up.

7. Show them love through listening. Be an active listener: use eye contact, don't interrupt, show your listening with nods of the head, non verbal gestures, summarize what you just heard and ask questions.

8. Show your empathy by being an empathetic listener. Even if you don't understand why your kids are upset, be empathetic. Put yourself in their shoes. Imagine how they must feel. Respond with empathy.

9. Show love through communication. Ask how they are doing, what kind of day they had, how was school? Ask questions that involve more than a yes or no answer and be a great active, empathetic listener when communicating with children.

10. Teach kids to remain their authentic self and share their inner joy and light. We need to teach kids to hold onto their lightness.

11. Teach kids to be compassionate with random acts of kindness. Get kids involved in volunteering at an early age. When kids perform random acts of kindness they feel more respect for themselves and get a boost of happiness.

12. Teach your kids to love healthy foods by eating meals together. Let your kids be involved in the process. They can help make the menu, help with food shopping and even cooking. The more involved they are, the more likely they are to eat healthy and enjoy it. Teach kids to respect their body which is their true home.

13. Teach kids that mistakes are good. Mistakes are teachable moments that move us forward into a better path.

didn't have three solid lines both defense and offense we would never have made it this far, and having one of the state's best goaltender doesn't hurt either," Craig said.

The team's players—James Brennick, Brendan Cox, Mike Davis, James Doherty, Mike Finn, Pat Freeman, Nolan Greene, Jake Hallisey, Bobby Harding, Ryan Higgins, Matt Kozlowski, Dan Matisoff, John Ross McEvilly, Matt Monahan, Brian O'Callaghan, Eddie Riley, Steven Ross—play for Quincy, North Quincy, Milton, and Archbishop Williams High Schools. Many of them started playing hockey together with Quincy Youth Hockey as mites. Quincy

Youth Hockey President Matt Gibbons said the organization is proud of the National Championship-bound team.

"Quincy Youth Hockey is so proud of the way the coaches and players have demonstrated themselves throughout the season and to see it come to together as it did and bring a State Championship back to QYH is amazing and we wish the boys the best of luck in Michigan," Gibbons said.

The City Council honored the team for their historic victory at a recent meeting. Councillor Joe Finn, whose son Mike plays on the team, said the team's state title proves Quincy is a true hub for hockey.

"I had a chance to be at many of the games and believe me it's an incredible achievement and it highlights how much Quincy is a hockey town," Finn said. "It's been a long time since the right group of kids have come together to make something happen—against quite honestly some of the best hockey talent in the state of Massachusetts. So we have every reason to be very proud of them."

Unlike other teams the council has honored, the U16 team's players chose to accept only a group citation instead of individuals ones for each player. Finn said he would honor them individually if they do bring the national title to Quincy.

"This is a unique group. I don't think this has ever happened, but usually we give citations out to various teams and players—this team, and I think it's characteristic of the way they compete and play—they decided they only needed one citation," Finn said. "It represents how they feel about themselves and how they think about themselves as a team. Quite honestly, they don't even think they need a citation until they get the national championship. At that point I'd be glad to bring them back and give individual citations to each and every one of them."

The team had no captains during the season. But Finn said Brennick was the team's emotional leader and was chosen to accept the trophy after winning the state championship.

"I've been going to hockey now for the past 15 years almost, but it was one of the most extraordinary events I ever saw when they defeated 495 in the final championship game in South Boston," Finn said. "Given their team characteristics they never had a captain. And yet the people who were sponsoring the event asked for a captain to come up, and the team kind of spontaneously just told this young man to come up and accept the trophy as the captain, because he was oftentimes the person who inspired and who led and I might mention he probably spent the most time in the penalty box as well."

The 2013 Toyota USA Hockey National Championship Tournament will be held, in Troy, Michigan. The team is sponsoring various fundraisers to help pay for the trip's expenses. Those include a St. Patrick's Day Social, a $25 event to be held March 8 at the Florian Hall featuring raffles, a DJ, and traditional Irish dance; a $10 raffle to win a PlayStation 3; a $100 raffle to win $5,000 cash; and a Quincy Youth Hockey alumni game. To Compete April 3-7
In Troy, Michigan

U16 Team Eyes National Championship

By BILL GRIFFIN

The story began with a fifth-place finish in the regular season and it could end with Quincy playing for a national championship in April.

Quincy won four elimination games en route to capturing the Midget 16 and under state championship in October and are making preparation for a trip to the national championships in April in Troy, Michigan.

"The kids, the parents are all excited," said coach Brendan Craig. "It's a once in a lifetime experience and we want the kids to make the most of it."

It is worth a look back at what the team has already accomplished. After finishing fifth in the 20-game regular season, they had to win a qualifying game against Milton just to make the tourney. That was elimination game Number One. They won. They were in the eight-team tourney as the lowest seed. The Cinderella story had begun.

"I don't think we were getting a lot of respect," said Craig.

Quincy won its opener against Wellesley, 6-1, but fell to Worcester, 3-1 in the second game. This brought Quincy to elimination game Number Two, Quincy beat Walpole, 5-2 to make the semifinals and face two more win-or-go-home tests.

Dan Matisoff had a hat trick in the 5-1 semifinal win over Springfield. Mike Davis scored three as the express kept rolling in a 6-1 decision over Worcester for the state championship. As the tourney progressed, as the tests and the stakes grew higher, Quincy played better and better.

"They did everything we asked," said Craig. "Nobody took a shift off. The Wellesley win gave us confidence. Everyone showed up to play from start to finish in every game."

When it was over, Quincy had won five games in two days and earned its first trip to the 16-and-under nationals since 2006. They had defeated Springfield and Wellesley who had beaten them during the regular season. They had stopped Worcester who bested them in the tourney. Quincy had answered all questions. State champion had a nice ring to it.

"It was unbelievable. The kids clicked at just the right time," said Craig.

Jake Hallisey, Davis, and Matisoff formed a potent first line. The second line of Pat Freeman, Brian O'Callaghan and John Ross McEvilly chipped in at important stages of the tourney.

"Pat had big goals for us and O'Callaghan was probably our best two-way player," said Craig.

Robbie Harding, Jimmy Finn and James Doherty formed a third line whose checking consistently gave their team a lift.

"They played physical hockey and they gave us a boost when we needed it," said Craig.

Eddie Riley and Jimmy Brennick were standouts on defense. Riley paired with Brendan Cox and Brennick worked with Steve Ross. Matt Kozlowski and Matt Monahan were the third defensive tandem.

Nolan Greene, who has been brilliant for North Quincy during the high school season, backboned the champions in goal. Ryan Higgins also played an excellent tourney.

"We wouldn't have won it without Nolan. He saved us. He got hot at just the right time," said Craig. "Ryan was great as well. He gave us shutout goaltending when we needed it."

There are fund-raising efforts to reach the goal of $30,000 which the team will need to compete in the 16-team nationals from April 3 to April 7. The main fundraiser will be a banquet March 8 at Florian Hall at 7:00 p.m. There will be a disc jockey and the Brady Irish Step Dancers will perform. Tickets are $25 and can be purchased at the door.

Each player is also taking part in a letter-writing campaign to local businessmen and officials seeking donations. There is also a raffle. Each raffle ticket costs $100. There will be 100 tickets sold and the grand prize is $5,000.

Anyone interested in buying a raffle ticket, a ticket to the event at Florian Hall, or further information can contact the E-Mail address: u16nationalboundteam@gmail.com.

Red Raiders Slip To 8-5-4 After Falling To Pembroke

By BILL GRIFFIN

The goaltending was excellent, the defense was solid, the checking was good, but there weren't enough scoring chances.

It's a familiar story for North Quincy. Pembroke scored a pair of power-play goals in the first period and then limited the Red Raiders to 16 shots on net en route to a 4-1 Patriot League victory at the Quincy Youth Arena last week.

"The scoring chances are the problem. We're going in the wrong direction. It's disappointing," said coach Matt Gibbons after his team slipped to 8-5-4 overall and 5-3-4 in the league.

North's game against Whitman-Hanson Saturday was postponed due to the storm.

North only managed 11 shots on goal in its previous game against Scituate, and the problem continued against Pembroke. North did create opportunities, but they were isolated. The consistent pressure, the swarming in the offensive end which characterized the first part of their season were missing.

"We're not continuing our chances," said Gibbons. "The reason is we are making mental mistakes and that is what is frustrating."

Freshman Timmy Glynn played another terrific game on left wing for North. He never stops. He works along the boards, battles in front of the net and takes hits from players 50 pounds heavier. In the third period, he made a strong rush up his wing and drove a wrist shot for the top corner, but Pembroke goalie Bobby McElligott reached out and robbed him.

"Once again, he was by far our best player on the ice. If we could get the same energy from our other players, we'd be in good shape," said Gibbons.

Robbie Cameron scored North's goal and played a good game along with linemates Pat Verhault and James Doherty. The defense, especially Rudy Tryon, Matt McDonald and Brendan Brady, was effective after the first period. Nolan Greene and Mike Capobianco combined for 30 saves. The backchecking was consistent, but the offensive spark was missing.

"Robbie Cameron played a good game," said Gibbons. "Nolan was excellent again and Mike did well when he took over in goal in the third period. I thought he might give us a different look."

Mike Ruxton drove home two rebounds on two power plays for Pembroke for a 2-0 lead in the first seven minutes of the game. No goalie could have stopped either.

Cameron drew North within 2-1 on a two-man advantage with 4:01 left in the period. He ripped a blast from the point which deflected off McElligott into the far corner. Tryon and Andrew Currie drew assists on the play.

Greene kept North close by stopping two clear breaks in the first, but the Titans went up, 3-1 in the second when CJ Buckingham whistled home a drive into the top corner from the slot with 13:46 left in the period.

North stepped up its checking game, and it stayed at 3-1 until Pembroke hit an empty-netter in the final minutes. North had its best period in the third. Cameron broke in cleanly for a hard blast and a rebound which McElligott stopped in the opening minute of the third, and Glynn forced a pair of good chances with his digging and hustle.

"We did play better in the third, but we need to be more physical and cut down on our mistakes," said Gibbons. "We have a week-and-a-half to get ready for the tournament and we have a lot of work to do."

Presidents Seal The Deal With 5-1 Win Over Scituate

By BILL GRIFFIN

The moment of truth for Quincy's hockey team came early in the third period.

The Presidents had been flying with a three-goal lead. Scituate scored to cut it to 3-1. All season, Quincy had been rolling towards towards a breakthrough win only to see a rough patch of hockey derail them.

The question was how they would respond to a little adversity after the Scituate goal. They responded by playing lockdown defense and sealing a 5-1 Patriot League win with late goals from Patrick Freeman and Jo Jo McArdle last week.

Quincy's game against Silver Lake was postponed due to the storm.

"In that moment in the third period, it could have gone either way," said Coach Tim Lewis who has been talking about resiliency and stringing three good periods of hockey together all season. "We could have lost the momentum, but instead we locked arms as a team and earned the win. I couldn't be happier for the kids."

Quincy (3-12-1) mixed in all the ingredients necessary for winning hockey. There was offense. Freeman scored twice. He has 17 goals on the season and has scored in 10 straight games. Patrick Donovan, Jake Hallisey, and McArdle chipped in with singletons.

"Freeman is as talented and competitive a sophomore as I've seen and that includes my time at Catholic Memorial," said Lewis.

There was defense. Jimmy Brennick led a five-man rotation of Ryan Harty, Brandon Beal, Matt Kozlowski, and Steve Ross which controlled the blue line.

"We were missing Matt Davis, but the five we had did the job. Brennick has played exceptional hockey the last five or six games for us," said Lewis.

And there was goaltending. Sophomore Ryan Higgins turned away 31 shots, and the only goal against him came on the power play.

"Before the game, we talked to him about just making the saves he was capable of and not trying to do too much. That's what he did, and it gave us an exceptional boost," said Lewis.

Quincy went up, 2-0 in the first period. Hallisey drove home a Freeman rebound for a 1-0 lead, and Donovan scored on a rebound of a Kozlowski blast from the point for the two-goal edge.

"We've been telling them most goals are rebound goals and to focus on that," said Lewis.

Freeman connected on the power play with a drive from the slot with assists to Hallisey and Brian O'Callaghan in the second period for a 3-0 edge.

After Scituate drew within two, Quincy clamped down the defense, and Freeman put it away with an empty-netter in the final minutes. McArdle then notched his first goal of the year for the 5-1 final.

Lewis juggled his lines recently and united Freeman man, Hallisey and Donovan on the first line. In their first two games together, the trio produced 10 goals.

"We wanted to shake things up and get a potent scoring threat on the first line," said Lewis.

Mike Puglsey now centers Brian O'Callaghan and McArdle on a strong second line.

"Mike is our best pure center," said Lewis. "Brian is a versatile player with a big shot and McArdle gives us tenacity in the corners."

Quincy meets North Quincy in the season finale Saturday at 7:50 p.m. at Quincy Youth Arena.

Quincy Boys Bow To SL, Tourney Hopes Still Alive

By JEFF OHLSON

Games get bigger as the season goes along, and players have to begin to mesh together, fall into roles, and begin to step up in big situations.

For the Quincy Presidents (9-7) and Silver Lake Lakers, both players stepped up and played big throughout the game, Silver Lake coming out on top late 71-63.

J.T. Bain played very well on both ends for Quincy and senior Tucker Bouchard was brilliant for Silver Lake.

In the first quarter neither team wanted to make anything easy. Quincy High's defense played so tough that the Lakers were forced into difficult fade away shots and deep three pointers. Silver Lake played up to par with the Presidents defense throughout the quarter sinking those tough shots.

James Lam, who finished with 12 points, and J.T. Bain both had 6 points in the first, and Silver Lake made the tough shots they had to, to stay alive going 2-3 from three in the quarter. The last three that Silver Lake made gave them the lead going into the second quarter 18-17.

"We were really tough defensively. I think this time of year, you're going to get every team's best game because you've got teams trying to win their leagues, trying to improve playoff seeding, or trying to just make the playoffs" said Quincy coach David Parry.

"When you face a team like Silver Lake, they are a talented group, and they are going to bring it every night," Parry continued. "We're talking about a team with the league's top three scorers, so it's not a matter of slowing them all down, cause you can't. It's more about keeping up and making the right plays."

Quincy kept the game close in the second quarter with some clutch shooting from Colin Evans and some tougher overall team defense. At halftime Quincy was right where they needed to be with the score all knotted up at 30 apiece.

The third quarter of the game was the Presidents' quarter and mainly for Quincy, it was Jaquan Harris's quarter as he dropped 9 of his 13 points in the third. On the heels of Harris's performance and some more stingy defense Quincy found themselves with a nine point lead heading into the final quarter, with the score Quincy 52, Silver Lake 43.

Unfortunately for Quincy, the fourth quarter was Silver Lake's as the Lakers scored a whopping 28 points in the final frame and held the Presidents to only 11. Quincy's tough defense could do nothing to slow down the Lakers scorers as they went off, hitting 4 three pointers and shooting well overall as Tucker Bouchard, a thousand point senior, went off scoring 10 of his game leading 29 points in the fourth.

"I think that we were playing the way we needed to play, but at the end of the game we were playing to not lose, as opposed to playing to win. We're a young group and part of being a young group is sometimes losing games like this. Up nine heading into the final quarter and up 7 with only a few minutes to go, I think we just tightened up a little bit and let them back in," said Coach Parry.

Quincy now has to win two of their remaining five games to make the playoff tournament.

High School Sports Round-Up

By BILL GRIFFIN

North Quincy's boys basketball team stayed within a game of Scituate in the loss column in the race for first place in Patriot League Fisher Division by rolling to a 68-34 win over Hanover in a league contest last week.

The showdown between North and Scituate scheduled for last Friday was postponed due to the storm. The game will be made up Saturday at North at 5:00 p.m. North won the first meeting between the two teams earlier this season.

Dan Gould continued his strong comeback from an ankle injury by scoring 16 for the Red Raiders. Marquis McClendon added 15. Forward Greg Clark had 12 for North who went to 13-3 on the season and 8-2 in league play.

North is at Pembroke Thursday.

Junior Natalie Donovan had a goal and an assist in her first game back from injury and the Quincy-North Quincy girls hockey team posted a 7-4 win over Bourne last week.

Quincy-North, which had a win and a tie in its last two games at the end of last week, has played well in recent weeks. They raced to a 5-0 lead against Bourne and then relied on goalie Erin McGinnis and a strong defense to hold off a late rally.

"The girls have continued to work hard as they have all season," said coach Steve Burgio. "Against Bourne we started and finished strong which is what we're looking for."

Burgio was especially happy with the work of O'Donovan who scored her goal at the 5:00 mark of the second period to put Quincy-North up, 4-0.

"Natalie has come to all of the practices even though she's been injured," said Burgio. "She listened and caught on to what we were teaching. It showed in the way she played her first game back."

Sophomore Julia Donovan scored the first goal of the game in the first period when she broke down the left wing, fired a backhand and then put home the rebound.

Sophomore Madison Hally upped it to 2-0 on an assist to Brianna Mullaney. Freshman Savannah Flynn finished a strong first period by knocking home a rebound on a slap shot by Katie White for a 3-0 lead after one.

"We kept the pressure on right from the start," said Burgio.

O'Donovan and Leah Ryan connected to up it to 5-0 midway through the second before Bourne rallied for a pair of goals to cut the lead to 5-2 entering the third period.

Bourne scored twice on the power play to make it a 5-4 game in the third, but McGinnis was terrific here, playing her best hockey to preserve the lead.

"She saved the lead for us," said Burgio.

Megan White notched the insurance goal for Quincy-North for a 6-4 lead, and Danielle Mullaney hit the empty net for a 7-4 final.

"Kennedy Harding played a good game on defense for us," said Burgio. "Her natural position is forward, but she's moved back to defense because we needed help there. She's done a great job for us."

Last Saturday's game against Marshfield was postponed due to the storm. There is no makeup game scheduled. Quincy-North faces Whitman-Hanson Saturday at home at 6:40.

The Quincy boys hockey vs. Silver Lake game was postponed Saturday and Monday due to the storm. It will be played Thursday at 3 p.m. at the Quincy Youth Hockey Arena.

GETTING TO THE CRICK OF A HEADACHE

Research that involves biofeedback sensors shows that tension-headache sufferers are able to cut the intensity and duration of their headaches in half by relaxing their necks. Special attention was paid to relaxing the trapezius muscles, which slope down from the neck and shoulders to the mid-back. While we all experience tight trapezius muscles to some degree, tightness of the upper trapezius muscle is a particular problem for desk workers and drivers. Chiropractors know that muscular tension centered in the neck can cause irritation of the nerves within the neck and/or reduction in blood flow that can bring on a headache at the top of the head, which is why they look to the back and neck for a tension headache's source.

HANNAH DONOVAN battles a Hanover opponent for position under the basket as both players seek a rebound.

HALEY MCKAY leads North Quincy offense up the court in the Red Raiders' 44-30 win over Patriot League Fisher Division foe Hanover last Tuesday at NQHS.

North Quincy Girls' Defense Stops Hanover, 44-30

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was basketball in the black-and-blue division.

There is pretty basketball which tests deadeye shooting and fancy passing. There is hard basketball which tests defense, rebounding and toughness.

North Quincy and Hanover played a hard basketball game. North's defense stopped everything but the snow and cold weather, and Jane Minton and Caitlin Bulger supplied the necessary touch and skill to lift the Red Raiders past Hanover, 44-30 in a battle of Patriot League Fisher Division contenders last week.

North finished the week at 11-6 and 8-3 in the league. Its showdown with Scituate (7-2 in the league) was postponed due to the storm. It has been tentatively rescheduled for Wednesday, February 20.

"We knew from our first game with them (a 57-52 Hanover win) that we had to get back against the break and stop their drives to the basket. They are very quick," said coach Jessica Worden.

How good was North's defense? In the second period, Hanover scored four points. In the fourth period, Hanover scored two points. In the first 6:21 of the fourth period, Hanover did not score. The Red Raiders held Hanover to 27 fewer points than in their first meeting. This was Hanover, as in Hanover a club which went unbeaten in its first eight league games. This is a very good basketball team. And North gave them nothing.

Worden wanted the Red Raiders to get back. Not only did North get back, they got back and they got back, ready and set in position to play defense. Worden mixed in a little man-to-man, but mainly went with a 1-2-2 zone which shut off the driving lanes and forced the Indians to shoot from the outside.

ANNIE DOW dribbles while looking to make a scoring pass to a Red Raider teammate in North Quincy's 44-30 victory over Hanover.

"We wanted to force the outside shot and stop penetration. The zone worked better for us," said Worden.

More than strategy, this was a tribute to effort. Defense is hard work. Wherever Hanover looked, there was a hand deflecting the ball, intercepting passes, blocking shots. North took charges, fought through picks, flew out of bounds chasing the basketball. They had 10 team steals. They had about 100 deflections. There is mental toughness and physical toughness. North had both.

"We've played with confidence and developed into a mentally tough team. The girls know what they want and that's to be division champs," said Worden.

There was the rebounding. Zones work when teams only get one shot and Hanover only got one shot. Maya Umoren had 14 rebounds and sophomore Camille Mullaney had eight, but this was a story of team rebounding. Everybody blocked out. Everybody went to the ball. The guards rebounded. Minton had five, Bulger had four and Haley McKay had three. That's 12 rebounds from the backcourt and 34 from the starting five.

"Everyone rebounded for us," said Worden.

Hanover used everything short of a roadblock, double and triple-teaming Umoren to hold North's excellent post player to five points. The guards made them pay. Minton (14 points, five rebounds, three steals, Bulger (eight points, four rebounds, two steals), and Haley McKay (six points, three rebounds, two steals) supplied the finer touches of basketball. They shot and passed beautifully during a 12-5 run which built a 32-20 lead in the third and a 12-0 burst in the fourth which upped it to a nonrefundable 44-29 with 1:39 left.

Minton, in particular, remained in control in a game which had bodies crashing off the floor and flying through the air. She took Hanover out of its trademark press by passing over and through it in the first period. She was perfect from the line. She made her lefty runner. She directed her team and offense with poise and control amid the heavy contact.

"I think the difference was we stayed in control when it got rough and ran through our offense," said Bulger.

"When we got the lead, we were able to work the clock. It worked because Haley, Jane and Caitlin all handled the ball well," said Worden whose team hosts Pembroke Thursday.

Mullaney, a talented sophomore, had 11 points and eight rebounds and worked with Umoren to control the inside for North who led 14-11 after one, 20-15 at the half and 32-28 after three. When it was over, there were smiles and satisfaction with a hard battle just won, with maybe just one exception.

"I think that, maybe, I'd rather have a night when we win and I make four open threes," joked Bulger.

Another night, Caitlin, another night.

Little Things Add Up To Big Win For Quincy Girls

By BILL GRIFFIN

Little things can win basketball games, and little things can save seasons.

Defense, rebounding, fighting for a loose ball, and making a free throw are little things, and junior Kayla McArdle did them all in the final seconds to preserve Quincy's 49-47 victory over Whitman-Hanson and keep alive the Presidents' tournament hopes in a Patriot League thriller Thursday.

The win was Quincy's third straight against a quality opponent and lifted the Presidents to 9-9 on the season. After the win, Quincy needed to defeat either Duxbury or Middleboro to make the tourney. Duxbury is unbeaten in league play. Quincy had to win the Whitman game or its season was likely finished Friday. For the third straight draining test, the Presidents delivered.

Earlier last week, Quincy stopped Silver Lake, 50-41 behind 24 points, 24 rebounds and seven blocks from center Nicole Jorgensen.

Two weeks ago Quincy sat at 6-9 looking at Hingham, Silver Lake, and Whitman-Hanson. The Presidents had lost to Hingham and Whitman earlier in the season. Silver Lake had beaten both Hingham and Whitman. All three were win-or-go-home games and Quincy won them all through grit as much as through talent.

"We knew we needed all three," said coach Jeff Bretsch. "We showed toughness and heart. It was fun to watch. We competed like crazy."

Nobody competes harder than McArdle. After Jorgensen hit a free throw and a turnaround jumper to put Quincy up 48-47 with 29 seconds left, McArdle took center stage. After W-H worked down the clock, McArdle took the Panthers' shooter Megan Downing and contested a jumper which grazed the front of the rim.

"I knew the clock was winding down, so I played her for the shot," said McArdle.

She read the bounce off the rim perfectly and grabbed the rebound. Four Whitman players swarmed her. The ball squirted loose. Bodies hit the floor. Seconds clicked off the clock. Nobody was going to call a foul. McArdle was outnumbered, but not outfought. She regained possession and balance. She was hammered and had a one-and-one at the line. There were four seconds left.

"All I saw were four jerseys and they were all black," said McArdle. "I didn't think, I just dove. I wanted to be careful not to get trapped on the floor. The ball was just there and I grabbed it."

"If there is a loose ball around, Kayla will get it," said Bretsch.

Now for the free throws. They were no sure bet. McArdle had struggled from the line earlier in the game. Quincy missed 15 for the night. She needed at least one. She swished the first, missed the second and the Panthers' desperation jumper sailed wide as the clock hit 0:00.

"I was nervous," she admitted. "I knew I had to make the first so I concentrated on the rim and my release."

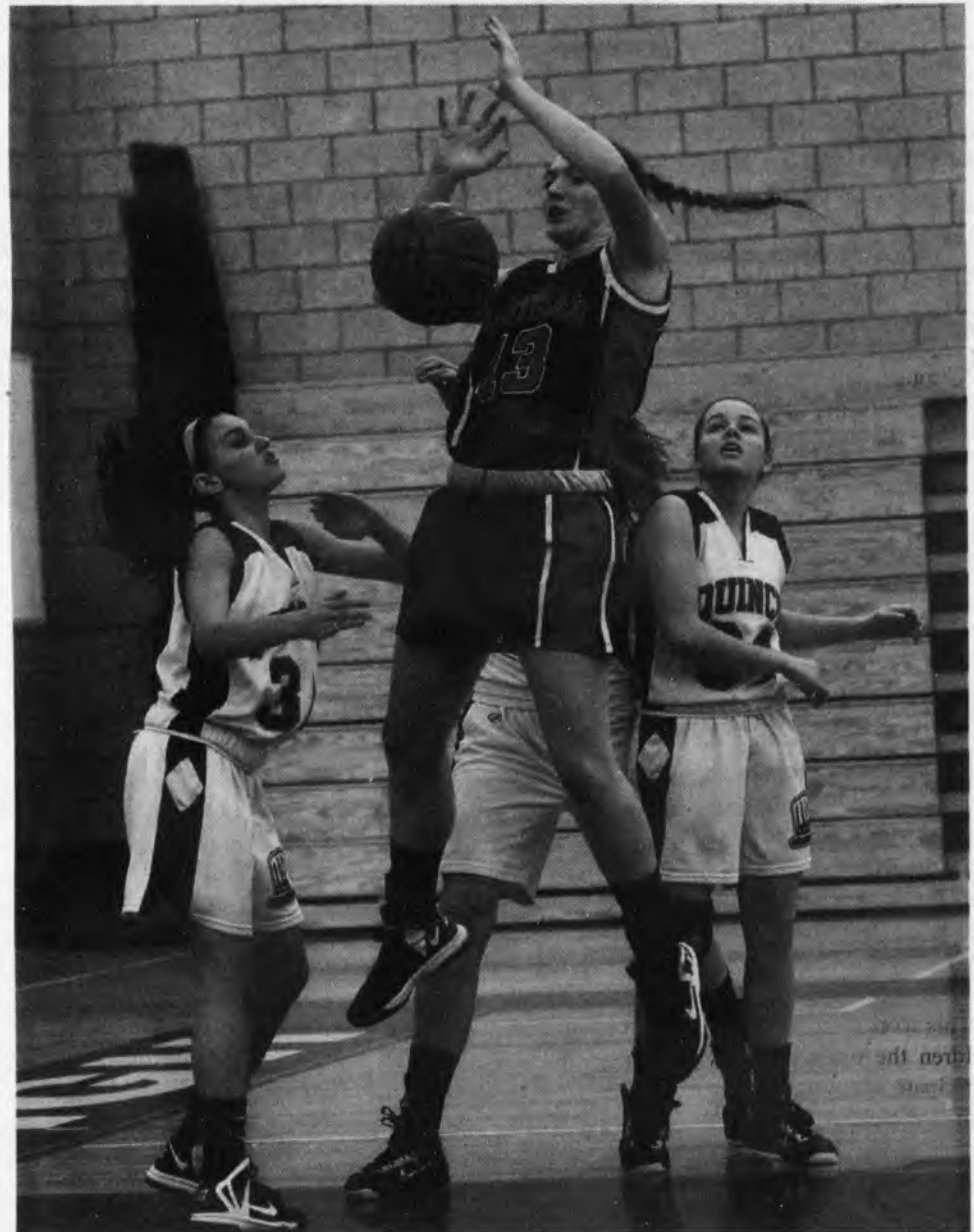

Youth led the Presidents to the threshold of the tourney. Freshman guard Gabrielle Jerahian had a game-high 15. She drained two nerveless threes to keep Quincy ahead early in the fourth. She hit five of six from the line. She got to the basket, ran her team with confidence, protected the basketball, and reacted well to the pressure of the moment.

"She was going against a good defender who had six inches on her," said Bretsch. "What I liked was her poise. She stayed in control and played aggressively. She was our point guard in a big game and she reacted well."

Jorgensen, Quincy's talented freshman center, continued on her one-player blitz through the Patriot League with 14 points, 15 rebounds and four blocks. In her last seven games, she had 118 points, 123 rebounds and 43 blocks. That works out to 17 points, 18 rebounds and over six blocks per game. Nothing was easy against W-H. She went against Whitman's gifted Erin Clifford (14 points) with help from gangs of double and triple teams, but when her team needed winning points at the end of the game, Jorgensen delivered them.

"Nicole played a good, tough game," said Bretsch. "It hard being doubled every time you catch the ball, but she showed her growth as a player and kept competing."

The crucial stretch of the game came when Jorgensen sat with four fouls with 1:28 left in the third. When she left, Quincy was up by two. When she returned midway through the fourth, Quincy was down one. Jerahian hit her two threes. Alysha Dunbar and Maryssa Dwyer, who each had a three-pointer earlier, were relentless on Quincy's press. Junior Caroline McBride stepped in at center with two key offensive rebounds and one put-back for a bucket. With Jorgensen out, the Presidents stayed close.

"That was a scary stretch. Caroline gave us a big lift," said Bretsch.

Quincy led 10-7 after one, it was tied 16-16 at the half, and the Presidents were up 36-32 after three. The largest lead was six points. When it was over, after a game with seven ties and eight lead changes, Quincy was still alive.

"We worked hard and played tough. We deserved this to happen," said McArdle.

Against Silver Lake,

Quincy built a 12-point lead in the third behind the all-around power of Jorgensen. When the Lakers cut the lead to two, Courtney Ryan responded with two threes and a layup to build it back up to 10.

McArdle had another clutch game, making eight-of-ten free throws and scoring ten points.

Quincy is at Middleboro Friday.

'Sports Can Lead You To An Education And The Education Comes First'

Jim Rendle Retiring As QPS Athletic Director

By BILL GRIFFIN

The story begins with a young boy in the seventh grade at Central Middle School nearly 60 years in the past. The boy studies, does his homework and pays attention in class. However, when he takes his tests and writes the answers, the letters and numbers are inverted. His answers are wrong.

Jim Rendle had dyslexia. In 1958, dyslexia meant you did not know. There was the hard frustration of knowledge he could not express, but he focused on his first love and learned a lesson which would endure for a lifetime: the power of sports to do good.

"Back then, dyslexia meant stupid," said Rendle. "Sports was always the outlet for my frustrations. But I knew I couldn't play sports if I didn't do well in school. Sports kept me in school, and frankly, out of trouble."

A part of Rendle's sporting life will end this spring when he retires as Athletic Director of Quincy Public Schools. He's had a landmark career. He played in great games for great teams, he coached state champions, and he did the endless, thankless administrative work that makes high schools sports possible for the kids.

Through it all, he always remembered his time at Central when football, basketball and track kept him in school and gave him a chance at a better life.

"Sports can teach you things that you carry with

JIM RENDLE, a star high school athlete and Hall of Fame volleyball coach, is stepping down as athletic director for the Quincy Public Schools after seven years as AD this spring.

you in life, and they can open so many opportunities," said Rendle. "That's what I remember the most: the success of the athletes after they graduated. Sports can lead you to an education and the education comes first."

At Central, he played for Mike Casali. It was obvious Rendle was an athlete, but Casali, also taught him lessons outside the classroom about teamwork, leadership and hard work that he always remembered.

"He was a great coach, a big influence on me," said Rendle. "What he taught was there was no magic formula. He taught hard work. I learned about a work ethic from him."

Rendle graduated from Quincy High in 1966. He played tight end as a junior on a football team which went 9-1-1, losing only by a point to perennial power tunity and the work ethic I needed. I had to stay eligible for sports."

He returned to Quincy after graduation and served as physical director at the YMCA for seven years. He started his own business. Quincy girls volleyball coach Ray Whitehouse asked him to work with the team in the off season. In 1985, his daughter wanted to play volleyball at North and the struggling team needed a coach. Enter Coach Rendle.

"I was lucky to have the opportunity to coach my two daughters and my son," said Rendle.

His record at North was remarkable. His teams won six Division 1 titles and made the finals 10 times. He was named Boston Globe Coach of the Year in 1992. He coached for 20 years. He was inducted into the Massachusetts State Girls Volleyball Coaches Hall of Fame in 2004.

The honors are just fine, but what he remembers most is the lesson he learned at Central. Sports can open doors, present opportunities. If the athlete learned its lessons and worked, there could be great success.

"I remember they went on to succeed at college and in life," said Rendle. "On that first title team, every starter went to college, every starter played volleyball and every starter was elected captain."

"We sent kids to schools like Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Bucknell, and Lehigh. Many went to excellent Division 2 and 3 programs where they played and got an education. A few went on to be volleyball coaches. Kerry Ginty (North) and Kathleen McCarthy (Fontbonne) are former players of mine."

He coached boys basketball at North from 2003-2006 and won North's first league title in 34 years. He built the boys volleyball program at Quincy and North. There were ten years in which he coached three sports. In his final four years, he coached three sports. He had lessons to teach and athletes who wanted to learn.

"Coaching three sports is a recipe for burnout. I was lucky to have a wife who let me out at night," he smiled.

He was named athletic director in 2006. Rendle was a hands-on athletic director. There are many AD's who punch out when the school day ends. This was not Rendle. If there was a game, he was at it. He loved the kids, the coaches, the sports. It could be a Friday night football game or a Tuesday night basketball game. It could be Saturday night at the rink or Tuesday afternoon on the soccer pitch. Rendle was there. During the winter, he frequently saw two games in one night.

"That was the fun part of the job. I always got enjoyment out of seeing the kids play," he said.

One of his hopes when he took the AD job was to help young coaches. Unfortunately, the administrative demands of the job occupied too much of his time.

"If there is one thing I'm not satisfied with, it is that I didn't get to spend more time with the young coaches. That's what I wanted most to do. There are so many demands of the job on your time, and only so many hours in the day," he said.

When he was asked to give his thoughts on more than a half century of sports, he tells the story of a parent of a player he coached. The parent saw her daughter play in college. The match was between Harvard and Columbia. The parent showed Rendle the game program.

"There were players from all over the country, all over the world," he said. "There were names from Russia, France, Japan, California and Texas. Right with them, one after the other, there were three players who listed Quincy, Mass. as their home town. That made me proud."

The lessons he had learned at Central had held firm and true.

DENNIS PAGE of Bennington, NH, grandson of Lea Coose of Quincy and son of Rich and Deb Page, natives of Quincy, a senior Engineering/Geography double major at Dartmouth College, finished third in his age group and 13th overall out of 100 races at the recent 40th Annual Geschmossel Classic 10K Nordic Ski Race in Bretton Woods, NH. On Jan. 26 he finished second in his age group and 21st overall out of 95 racers at the 9th Annual White Mountain Classic 30K Nordic Ski Race in Jackson, NH. The next morning, Page won the silver medal at the 3rd Annual Nansen/Milan 15K Nordic Ski Race in Milan, NH. Dennis is a nordic skier for Dartmouth College in Hanover, NH.

On Tuesday, Feb. 5, at approximately 9:00A.M., Officers' James Menz and Steve Cleary were dispatched to a West Quincy address for a "family disturbance in progress." Fallon Ambulance was also dispatched because the caller stated that her boyfriend had a "broke finger."

Officer Menz arrived on scene first and met with the female caller, who said that her live-in boyfriend punched out a window (door leading to living room - small window pane) and was bleeding. She stated that he left on foot and was probably heading towards the Quincy Adams MBTA station.

Officer Menz updated communications for other Officers to look for the boyfriend/suspect #1. Fallon Ambulance EMTs' arrived on scene. As the Officer interviewed the caller/victim, he overheard one of the EMTs speaking with someone in the rear of the driveway. The Officer exited the apartment and walked to the driveway and located a man who was applying pressure with a cloth to a cut hand.

Officer Menz spoke with suspect #1, who clearly was agitated. He stated that he didn't want any medical treatment. When asked what happened, the suspect said, "I don't hit women - so I punched out a window." When asked if he was suicidal, the suspect angrily said he wasn't.

Officer Cleary arrived on scene. As the suspect appeared to calm down, Officer Menz asked him to cooperate with the EMTs so they could bandage his hand. Officer Menz then went back into the apartment to continue his interview with the victim while Officer Cleary stayed with the suspect. The victim, now in her second floor apartment, told the Officer that they had a verbal argument and there was no physical contact. She stated that she was not in fear of her boyfriend and did not want police services or a restraining order. Officer Menz observed the house to be unkempt with dirty dishes everywhere. The couple has two young children and they were present.

Just as Officer Menz was ending the interview, one of the EMTs came to the bottom of the steps and yelled that Officer Cleary "needs help!" Officer Menz ran down the stairs and out of the house just as Community Policing Officer Sean Glennon pulled in the driveway. They both observed Officer Cleary struggling with the suspect on the ground at the back of the driveway.

The suspect was face down with his hands tight to his stomach/chest. He refused numerous commands to place his hands behind his back and was trying to get free. As the struggle continued, Officer Cleary sprayed the suspect with mace. The suspect continued to resist arrest but with less strength. After about 30 more seconds of prodding both arms free, the suspect was handcuffed.

As the suspect was led to a cruiser, he let out a barrage of obscenities directed at the officers. After being treated on scene for exposure to mace, the suspect was transported to the station for booking. Due to the scuffle with the suspect, Officer Cleary was exposed to the mace and suffered scrapes to both hands. Officer Menz interviewed the EMTs, who stated that the suspect was being treated for his hand injury when all of a sudden, "He just ran at him," referring to Officer Cleary.

The EMT stated that the suspect kept raising his voice and repeatedly used foul language. Officer Cleary repeatedly asked him to calm down, but the suspect refused. Officer Cleary asked the suspect his name and it was at this point that the suspect pointed a finger at the Officer, then broke away from the EMTs and ran at the officer. Officer Cleary defended himself, avoiding punch attempts by the suspect.

Officer Cleary was able to handcuff the suspect's right hand, but then the suspect increased his resistance, punching the Officer in the arm. The officer then brought the suspect to the ground and it was then that the EMT called Officer Menz for help.

The suspect, a 26 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Assault and Battery on a Police Officer, Resisting Arrest and Disorderly Conduct."

Nice Work!

RULES OF THE ROAD

The "move-over law" (Chapter 418 of the Acts of 2008) requires that if you are approaching a stationary emergency vehicle (Police, fire and ambulance, etc.) and it is displaying blue or red flashing lights, you must proceed with caution and reduce your speed to that of a reasonable and safe speed for the road conditions.

If you are on a highway with at least four lanes (at least two of which allow travel in the same direction you are heading), yield the right-of way by safely "moving over" to a lane that is not next to the lane the emergency, highway, or recovery vehicle is occupying.

Simply, leave an open lane between your vehicle and the stopped emergency vehicle. If "moving over" is impracticable, you must still proceed with caution by reducing your speed to that of a reasonable and safe speed for the road conditions.

By planning ahead, seeing the emergency lights off in a distance, allows the driver to take preventive measures well before nearing the unknown situation. Remember, it is not only for the safety of emergency personnel - it could be for you too.

Imagine coming up to a scene where emergency units just responded to a truck leaking dangerous chemicals or a gas hauling truck on fire!

The Keohane family – Edward Keohane and his sons John and Dennis – are joining together for the third year to sponsor Daffodil Days.

One of the American Cancer Society's most popular and enduring fundraising efforts, Daffodil Days has been bringing hope for healing since 1973 while ushering in spring each year.

Residents and businesses of Quincy and surrounding communities can donate by ordering daffodils and other Daffodil Days gifts by visiting the Keohane and Pyne Keohane Funeral Homes website at www.keohane.com which links to the American Cancer Society's list of beautiful items available in exchange for donations, including everything from fresh-cut daffodils to an adorable Daffodil Days Boyds® by Enesco® Bear.

"Our staff is excited to be a part of the fight against cancer once again by participating in this unique campaign," said Ed Keohane, second generation owner and funeral director of the Keohane Funeral Homes. ## Includes Snow Removal, Sheltering 200

Blizzard Costs Seen Over $1 Million

The City's cost for the response to the Blizzard of 2013 is likely to exceed $1 million, officials said Tuesday.

Officials are now calculating the full cost of the response and recovery, which includes snow removal, the response to flooding along coastal areas, and the cost of sheltering more than 200 people during the height of the historic storm that also caused a citywide power blackout.

In addition to the plowing operation during and immediately after the storm, the City removed tons of snow via front-end loaders and dump trucks from major intersections and other areas across the City, transporting it to a spot at the former Fore River Shipyard.

The National Weather Service reported that a total of 30 inches of snow fell in Quincy, which would make the blizzard the largest snowfall in the City's history.

Progress For Marina Bay, West Street Condo Projects

By KRIS KALABOKAS

Representatives of Flagship Marina Bay, LLC gave testimony at last Wednesday's meeting of the Planning Board indicating they have revised their existing roadway plan to minimize the burden of traffic which may result from the construction of two luxury apartment complexes in Marina Bay containing roughly 380 units in total.

Attorney Bryan Connolly outlined improvements which have been made to what has been termed the "definitive roadway subdivision plan," and praised those involved with the proposal.

"The city and its peer review staff have done a really thorough job and have been working really hard to make this project better on both the special permit side and also the subdivision," he said.

According to Connolly, granite curbs will be installed along Victo-

C-Mart Proposal Before Council March 11

The Quincy City Council, acting in its capacity as the Special Permit Granting Authority, will hold two meetings on C-Mart's proposal to build a supermarket, office, and warehouse at 10-40 Hayward St. in North Quincy.

Officials representing C-Mart will present the proposal to the council on Monday, March 11 at 7 p.m. inside North Quincy High. In addition to representatives from C-Mart, officials from city departments and consultants will make their presentations. That meeting had been scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 26, but was rescheduled because it wasn't properly advertised in time.

A public hearing on the C-Mart proposal will be held after the March 11 meeting. During that time, residents will have a chance to ask questions and express any concerns or support for the project. The date and location for that second meeting has yet to be determined.

The council previously rejected C-Mart's application in 2009. That decision was appealed, and a settlement remanded the proposal back to the council. The settlement also bars Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee from voting on the application.

Dylan Hughes Hailed A Hero For Saving Elderly Neighbor

By SCOTT JACKSON

When 16-year old Dylan Hughes and his family lost power when the Blizzard of 2013 slammed the city, they spent a cold, sleepless night worrying about the 103-year-old woman who lives next door on their Penn's Hill street.

Hughes went over to check on the neighbor the next morning, in all likelihood saving her life.

"He went over to this 103-year old neighbor to check on her and to give her hot water and all that because we knew that she probably had a pretty bad night," Hughes' father Joseph Pereira said. "Our house, which is right next door to hers, was so cold that night that we couldn't sleep and so we were concerned for her."

When Hughes, a junior at Thayer Academy who wishes to one day go to medical school, went over to check on the neighbor, she came to the door to answer him. But he felt something was amiss because she was shivering so badly the door rattled.

"She answered the door and she was able to talk but she was shivering a lot and the door was shaking — it was rattling with her shaking it," Hughes said.

Pereira and Dylan's mother Sally Hughes were alarmed when their son told them the neighbor was shivering so severely, realizing it was an early sign of hypothermia. They tried to call 911 for help, but their cellphones and their regular phones didn't work. So Pereira decided to run to the nearest fire station, about a half-mile away. Before he got there he found some neighbors with a working phone, and an ambulance was dispatched to bring the 103-year old to safety.

But before EMTs could reach the neighbor, Hughes needed to shovel a pathway for them.

"I started to shovel more and faster knowing that the EMTs wouldn't be able to bring her out, there was too much snow on the ground so I shoveled," Hughes said. "When the EMTs came they couldn't get up the street because it's a fairly steep street so they had to park the car at the base of the hill and walk up and bring all their gear."

"I hadn't finished shoveling the pathway yet but I continued to shovel while my dad and the EMTs checked her out in the house. When they finally came out they had her own a stretcher and I had shoveled out of her yard. Me and my dad continued to shovel a path out along the road to help the EMTs get to the ambulance."

All told, it was about an hour from the time Pereira called 911 to the time the EMTs were able to take the neighbor away for treatment. It was a physically draining experience.

"It was very, very difficult work. We were sweating from head to foot and we had to shed off all of our jackets and everything it was so hot," Pereira said.

The neighbor was treated at the hospital and has since returned home. In the days after the blizzard word of the story began to spread, setting off a media whirlwind. Television reporters from Boston started showing up at Hughes' doorstep, and a national cable news channel ran video of the rescue. All that attention came as a surprise for Hughes, who said any of his friends would have done the same thing.

"I didn't think it was a big deal. I'm surprised it's become such a big story. I'm shocked that an act like this that should be so regular, and so routine, and so normal becomes such a big story in the news," Hughes said.

On Monday, the Quincy teen was honored by U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren and Mayor Thomas Koch at the mayor's office. Sen. Warren presented Hughes with an American flag that was flown over the U.S. Capitol.

Koch honored Hughes with a commendation praising the teen's heroic actions during the blizzard.

Chief Keenan Attends Counterterrorism, Security Conference In Israel

By SCOTT JACKSON

Chief Police Paul Keenan returned to Quincy this week after spending a week in Israel learning about counterterrorism and other security tactics.

Keenan joined 14 other police chiefs from the Northeast on the trip, which was sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League. Keenan worked with the ADL before the trip during the Quincy's No Place for Hate Campaign. He didn't hesitate when the group offered him a chance to participate in a tour of Israel.

"I jumped at the chance to go," Keenan said. "It was incredible. It was an amazing experience."

This was Keenan's first trip to Israel, and he was busy throughout his stay. The group visited border crossings, airports, and shopping malls to learn how Israeli police work to keep those locations safe.

"We were busy from start to finish," Keenan said. "We went throughout the State of Israel and learned about different security procedures."

The chiefs also observed how Israel protects the many holy sites within its borders. The group toured the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in the old walled city of Jerusalem.

"Israel has a number of holy sites. We observed how they protect those holy sites," Keenan said.

Throughout the tour, the chiefs met with officials from the Israeli Army to discuss antiterrorism measures, and with Israeli Navy officials to discuss how they keep their ships safe. They also were taken on a harbor patrol from the port city of Eilat on the Red Sea.

The weeklong tour also included emotional moments. The group visited a Holocaust museum, and met with a survivor there. And at the Anti-Defamation League's headquarters they met a sergeant major in the Israeli National Police Force who was seriously injured in a suicide bombing but was able to recover, return to work, and have another child.

"On her way to work she got on a bus and a suicide bomber got on, sat behind her, and blew up the bus," Keenan said.

Fire Damages Sea Avenue Home

One woman was forced out of her Houghs Neck home when a fire broke out following the blizzard earlier this month.

Quincy Fire Department Deputy Chief Paul Griffith said the department responded to the fire at 135 Sea Ave. just before 6:30 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 9. He said the fire broke out in the fireplace, and spread through empty spaces in the walls.

"It went through cracked mortar or cracked brick and into the void spaces," Griffith said.

Three engines, two ladders, and a rescue truck were called in to put down the fire. It took about an hour for them to fight the main blaze. Because of the nature of the fire, firefighters remained on scene afterwards to overhaul, or inspect, the scene to make sure no flames went unnoticed between the walls.

Griffith said the fire left the house uninhabitable and will need to rehabilitation work before anyone could move back in.

"The house is uninhabitable. I estimated the damage at $120,000 but it could be more," Griffith said. "There was pretty extensive damage."

That day's weather conditions made the firefighters' efforts more difficult. More than two feet of snow clogged the streets, Griffith said, delaying fire apparatus from arriving. The wind also helped fuel the fire.

No firefighters were hurt during the blaze. But the resident did have two cats that went missing after the fire; one was found dead a few days later.

Firefighters were also called to a house on Mount Vernon Street in West Quincy earlier in the afternoon that Saturday when a portable space heater exploded, blowing out a window in the process. That explosion did not spark a fire, however.

At The Quincy Sun, we call it simply "The Photo." Or, "The Lone Walker."

It was snapped 35 years ago during The Blizzard of 1978 and was the lead photograph in The Quincy Sun's coverage of one of the worst storms in history.

It depicts a lone walker braving white-out conditions and hurricane strength winds walking along deserted Hancock Street between United First Parish Church and City Hall.

Today, that iconic image still evokes the magnitude and emotion of that storm.

The photograph was taken by Jonathan Burak – a young aspiring photojournalist at the time who worked as a full-time freelancer for The Quincy Sun.

The blizzard assignment was among the most challenging of his career because of the weather – but also the most rewarding for that reason, too.

Burak – who was 21 at the time – fondly recalls that assignment and others while working for The Sun. The 56-year-old lifelong Quincy resident is the man behind the photo and it's an interesting story.

"I set out to specifically get a photo of Quincy Square during the Blizzard," said Burak who has lived on Whitney Road his entire life. "I hadn't been up there and I figured I might be able to get something unusual because even in photojournalism which is often just straight documentary in nature, as a photographer you try to do something artistic."

Burak trudged through blizzard conditions and "swam through snow drifts" before reaching the square. He was dressed in a leather bomber-type jacket and had his camera equipment protected in a bag. When he took his camera out of the bag, he kept it under his coat to shield it from the elements.

"I had to take my gloves off for an extended period of time and the wind was blowing right into my face. My hands really hurt but I wanted to get the photo," he recalls.

He never hesitated despite harsh conditions.

"I wanted to get a good photo for The Sun. I took a lot of photos during that storm but I thought I might find something special in the square because everybody recognizes the square. You want the photo to have emotional content. I was trying to get something good."

What Burak saw – and photographed – was indeed something special.

"When I saw that the (South Shore) bank building (now Bank of America) was obscured from where I was standing, I knew the photo would be special. Everybody can see that bank. It was the biggest building in the square at that time. To not be able to see the bank building from pretty much the Bargain Center from where I was standing was pretty remarkable."

While the buildings give the viewer an idea of the landscape, it's the "lone walker" that gives the photo perspective.

"Even without the walker I knew I had a photo because of the blowing snow and the bank being obscured. That really made a point – it showed the reader how bad the storm was."

"I was grateful that the walker came along to give the photo perspective. I would have still taken the photo but it would not have had the same impact. It probably wouldn't

Son Beams

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

LEAD PHOTO from the Feb. 9, 1978 issue of The Quincy Sun shows a lone walker braving high winds and driven snow in deserted Quincy Square during the height of the Blizzard of 1978 on Tuesday, Feb. 7. The iconic photo was taken by Jonathan Burak, a 21-year-old aspiring freelance photographer who was on the Sun staff at the time.

JONATHAN BURAK as an aspiring professional photographer in the 1970s (left) and today.

have been the lead photo on Page 1," he says.

To this day, Burak says he doesn't know who the walker is.

"Henry (Bosworth - the Sun's publisher at the time) had a rule that I was supposed to identify people in my photographs but I thought this was an exception because he was so far away. I remember he walked by me and his face was candy-apple red from the beginnings of what looked like frostbite. I didn't try to identify him. That may have been a mistake on my part but no one really seemed to mind."

He took three photos of the lone walker approaching him. Did he think he had something special after snapping the shutter?

"I knew that if I did everything right it was going to be something special. Number one because I couldn't see the bank from where I was standing. And number two, because I felt fortunate to get the lone walker. That's what I focused on."

He also made sure his exposure was correct.

"I knew I was going to have trouble getting the proper exposure and here I am standing out there with an 8 x 10 neutral gray card pointing my light meter. I had a very sensitive light meter but I didn't trust myself to be able to get a very accurate reading off of these buildings with all the snow."

"I'm in the wind holding up an 8 x 10 gray card that photographers use sometimes to take exposures."

With his camera loaded with the storm photos, he then faced the arduous task of walking home.

"It wasn't getting up the Square that was hard, it was getting home because my hands and my face were in such pain. I had to take my gloves off and I almost tried to get a ride in a snow plow just to go a quarter mile but I got myself home."

When he looks at the photo today, Burak – in his eyes – sees some flaws with that iconic print.

"I look at the photograph and being an architectural photographer it's not perfect. The buildings are leaning in a little bit. In order to correct that you either need a view camera that you can change the angle of the lens to the film or you need a big ladder to get up on top of the Bargain Center and there's no way I would have done that," he says.

Still, the lone walker photo remains the most well known and recognized photograph of his career. He also fondly recalls his years as a regular contributor to The Sun as among the best and happiest of his life.

"I was honored to be a member of The Sun team and that was an honor. I remember that Henry almost always called me personally to give me assignments instead of delegating it to another staff member."

He particularly enjoyed hard news assignments and recalled the time Henry called him early one morning after a news helicopter had crashed in West Quincy. He also got to work alongside renowned photojournalist Ulrike Welch of The Boston Globe on a Sun assignment photographing the setting of a Guinness record for changing an engine in a Volkswagen Beetle.

Being on the Sun staff also enabled Burak to discover more of his hometown of Quincy.

"I was sent to every school and neighborhood and most of the clubs and organizations throughout the city. At the Montclair Mens' Club I got to meet and photograph Bobby Orr and John Havlicek. I went to many veterans organizations and posts. And it was the ordinary people like myself whom I met through my assignments that gave me the most pleasure."

For example, Burak photographed the first baby of the year born in Quincy each January. He also covered the Sun's Muscular Dystrophy Labor Day Telethons and did sports coverage and action photos of football games at the stadium.

"Some players would later call me for copies and I would go to their homes and be greeted warmly by them and their families."

"For years, when I met new people and introduced myself, I frequently heard, 'you're the photographer from The Quincy Sun.'"

Burak says he's forever grateful to Henry Bosworth who introduced him to many of his professional contacts including developers who hired him to take architectural and construction photos for their catalogues. He took all the construction progress photos for the City Hall Annex and the Stop and Shop Headquarters when they were built.

After 12 years as a professional freelance photographer, Burak changed his career focus from photos to computers.

He earned two associate degrees from Quincy College, including one in computer science, and embarked on a career as a software engineer and telecommunications.

"I decided to go into computers and go into an office and work a real job. But I don't have any regrets."

In fact, you could say one moment of his photography career left a lasting impression.

At his last assignment taking photos at a wedding in Everett, he met his future wife, Patty.

"If I hadn't been a photographer, I wouldn't have met my wife. That made it all worthwhile – the years I wasn't making much money. I didn't think much about money back then, it was just something I loved to do."

And he did it exceptionally well.

Scenes From Yesterday

Willard School, Quincy, Mass

THIS IS A 1912 postcard view of the Willard School on Copeland Street in West Quincy. This view was shortly before the Furnace Brook Parkway was built right through the playground behind the youngsters in the foreground. Opened in 1891, this building replaced the wooden 1855 Willard School that was named for Solomon Willard. He had donated the land for the school on Copeland Street to the town, and he designed and framed the building himself for the children of quarrymen in West Quincy. Willard, known as "The Father of the Granite Industry" and of West Quincy, had moved to Quincy in 1825 to take charge of the Bunker Hill Quarry operation. He opened the quarry, the first in Quincy, to provide granite for the Bunker Hill Monument which he designed and supervised the construction of. This led to the opening of West Quincy to quarrying and the granite industry that flourished here for over 100 years. Willard had a lifetime of other achievements that resulted from his many talents as a carpenter, wood carver, model maker, architect, engineer and inventor. At the end of his life, he tended to his farm in West Quincy near his home that still stands. He died in 1861. A large monument to him is in the Hall Cemetery on Crescent Street and a model of the Bunker Hill Monument is next to his grave there. The city sold this school building in 1984 and it is now office condominiums. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Blizzard Of '78 Photos Brought A Flurry Of Memories

I really loved all those old photos that the Quincy Sun ran Feb. 7 showing the visual impact of the Blizzard of '78 brought back many old memories for me.

I didn't live in Quincy then. I was back in Charlestown where folks were skiing down the slopes of Monument Avenue and cross country skiing along Main Street. I was caught without a shovel that year.

I remember feeling lucky when I was able to purchase the last shovel in Charlestown at a hardware store near Thompson Square. It was solid oak and American steel. It was mine for only five bucks. It saved the day during that 1978 blizzard and also for all those terrible winter storms in North Quincy I suffered through.

During this most recent Blizzard of 2013 which paled in comparison to 1978, my almost new plastic shovel split in half. I resorted to my cellar and took out my 1978 shovel and went to work on the latest snow mounds. After 35 years it was still good as new.

The only thing I found differently in this blizzard was the fact the snow was so much heavier than 35 years ago. However, I was only 29 years old back in 1978 and that might have played a factor in the "heavier" snow of 2013.

Thanks again for those great photos of the blizzard of all blizzards back 35 years ago. It was a once and only storm never to be replicated here in Greater Boston.

Wishes Hughes Luck As State GOP Chairwoman

I wish Kirsten Hughes luck as Chairwoman of the State Republican Party.

Now the bad news.

She's finished if she sticks with Republicans In Name Only (RINOs) who turn Democrat as soon as they take their oaths of office. She states that Scott Brown breathed life into the state party.

All Scott did was what RINO's always do: stab their supporters in the back. If you think I'm off-base, I urge you to read Holly Robichaud's article in the Feb. 4 Boston Herald. This Republican "strategist" was falling all over herself the previous week, urging Brown to run for the Senate again; and commit political suicide.

When he refused, she tore him apart for stranding the party and then enumerated all the reasons why he is a two-faced, double-dealing hypocrite. That shows you how venal these consultants are. They want their guy to run, even though they know he is a sell-out and speaks with forked tongue.

Kirsten would be smart to get as far away as possible from Brown, the Romneys and all the other has-been RINO's this state has offer. Also, Eric Fehrstrom, the shill who orchestrated the disastrous Brown and Romney campaigns, should be run out of town before some other Republican fool hires him and gets bilked out of millions of dollars.

If Kirsten wants to rebuild the party, she has to start from the bottom with people who truly stand for something. Frank McCauley, a man of honor and the last Republican Mayor of Quincy, saw our party hijacked and destroyed by the RINO hacks. They should all be swept out to sea.

When Scott decided to betray those of us who supported him the first time around, first by falling into Barney Frank's clutches, he became our sworn enemy.

If he ever decides to run for another office here in MA, I and my friends have vowed to pledge our lives, fortunes and sacred honor to destroy his political aspirations.

McIntyre Appoints Ice Rink Committee

By SCOTT JACKSON

Mayor James R. McIntyre appointed a five-member committee to study the possibility of Quincy building its own ice rink.

"It has been suggested to me by several people that there is a shortage of ice skating rinks in Quincy, particularly for the youngsters who play in organized hockey leagues," the mayor said. "It has been tremendously difficult to find our high school teams to get ice time this year in the MDC rinks on the South Shore."

No cost was mentioned for the possible rink, but the going rate for rinks was about $600,000. McIntyre intended to use revenues generated by the rink to pay off any bonds. The committee was also tasked with finding a suitable location, preferably near Quincy Center.

City Athletic Director Carl Leone was named chairman of the committee. Also appointed to the committee were City Council President Arthur Tobin; James F. McCormick, Sr., the chairman of the Parks and Recreation Board and School Committee Vice Chair; Quincy High Hockey Coach Robert Sylvia; and City Auditor Alexander Smith.

ZONING PROPOSAL HAS FAVORABLE RECEPTION

Residents reacted favorably to a proposed overhaul of Quincy's zoning regulations during an open meeting of the Houghs Neck Community Council.

The meeting, a forerunner to official meetings to be held by the City Council and Planning Board, drew a large but orderly crowd to the Houghs Neck Legion Hall.

Theodore Gerber, principal planner at the Planning Department, explained that the zoning changes were meant to accomplish four things — best utilize the little unused space in Quincy, eliminate 'pyramid zoning,' end 'commercial strip zoning,' and provide for the influx of apartment dwellers from Boston.

A show of hands at the end of the meeting showed most in the audience backed the proposal. Some questioned floodplain and wetland designations listed on the new map, but Gerber explained those designations would help protect residents.

"Someone desiring to develop in that area has to show the Board of Appeals that its plan will not adversely affect safety or health in that area before than can build," he said. "In effect, it requires a special permit."

Milton Players Present Comedy

Kristie Norris, Charles Hughes Star In 'Moon Over Buffalo'

Quincy residents Charles Hughes and Kristie Norris recently appeared in the Milton Players production of Ken Ludwig's madcap backstage comedy Moon Over Buffalo.

After the Hays hear that famous director Frank Capra is considering them for his next movie and is en route to their show, and their daughter Roz (Norris) arrives with her fiancé, hilarity ensues, including multiple mistaken identities, romantic entanglements and performance disasters.

MEN ARE SWITCHING SIDES

It is no secret that nearly all men love wristwatches, which combine precision, utility, and beauty in a very alluring package. Going one step further, men particularly love sport and other watches that are specifically designed to improve, clarify, or register performance in their chosen fields of endeavor. Aviators love chronographs; runners love watches with lap counters and heart monitors. Boaters, swimmers, fishermen, kayakers, divers, and other water-sports enthusiasts love water-resistant watches. Interestingly, many golfers, surfers and other sportsmen are also gravitating toward a design change that involves moving the crown to the left side of wristwatches to avoid "wrist bite" (irritation caused by the protruding time-setting button as it rubs against the skin).

There is a wide assortment of men's trendy watches. A wrist watch is the best accessory for men and it looks so stylish as well as it fulfills the needs of punctuality. We are conveniently located at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center where our professional and knowledgeable staff will work with you to make sure you have the best buying experience possible. With so many watch styles to choose from, you'll want one of each. Call us at 617-773-3636, and allow us to assist you.

25th Quincy Lunar New Year Festival Celebration Sunday

Over 8,000 Expected At North Quincy High

More than 8,000 revelers are expected at North Quincy High School on Sunday, Feb. 24 for one of the biggest Lunar New Year festivals in the region.

The 25th Quincy Lunar New Year Festival presented by Quincy Asian Resources and sponsored by South Cove Community Health Center and many other local businesses, will open at 10:30 a.m. with a traditional Lion Dance followed by hours of entertainment, exhibits, activities and information for people of all backgrounds and cultures.

The festival is just part of the global celebration of the Lunar Year of the Snake. Snakes are revered as good omens in the Chinese zodiac and are considered to be intuitive, refined and graceful.

This year's festival features a Family Area with crafts, games and physical activities for kids organized by the South Shore YMCA; a Cultural Area with painting, Beijing Opera costumes and a mahjong contest; a Green Area sponsored by State Street to educate visitors about the environment; and a Chinese Wishing Tree where people can ask for their dreams to come true.

All of that accompanies a full day of traditional music, singing, dancing and martial arts exhibitions by talented performers from across the community and across the cultural world.

Free parking at several locations around North Quincy High School, a large food court featuring traditional foods, and more than 200 volunteers from the community will help to make this an event you will enjoy and remember. The high school location is just a few steps from the North Quincy red Line Station.

The entire festival is free to the public thanks to Presenting Sponsor South Cove Community Health Center, along with dozens of other businesses, community organizations, and government and social service agencies, many of which will be available with information tables within the exhibit area.

In the event of bad weather, the event will be rescheduled for March 10 with announcements on local media channels. More information is available at www.quincyasianresources.org.

March 1 Deadline For Garden Club Scholarships

Applications are available for the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, Inc (GCFM) annual college scholarship program.

There are eleven $1,000 scholarships being awarded.

This program is for high school seniors, undergraduates and graduates students who plan to major in horticulture, floriculture, landscape design, conservation, forestry, city planning, environmental studies, landscape management, botany, biology and allied subjects.

Eligible students must be residents of Massachusetts, have a minimum of "B" average (3.0 on a 4.0 scale), be of good character and demonstrate financial need. Students must be attending or planning to attend an accredited college or university. Applications are due by March 1. Applications may be found on the GCFM web site <http://www.gcfm.org>

In 2012, the GCFM awarded 11 scholarships; each student received $1,000. Two applications were selected as Massachusetts representatives and sent along to national headquarters and both students were awarded additional National Garden Club Scholarships of $3,500 each.

"The most successful applicants will be those who have organized and led an important well-documented environmental, conservation, or landscaping project or done significant scientific/environmental research," said Wollaston Garden Club president Jan Clifford.

"A prize winning science project, or an Eagle Scout or Community Service project that relates to the goals of the state garden club would put an applicant in solid contention," added Jane McGilvery, Wollaston Garden Club Youth Gardening Committee member.

McGilvery delivered scholarship information in January to the guidance departments at Quincy High School, North Quincy High School and Norfolk County Agricultural High School.

The Wollaston Garden Club is a long-time member of both The Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, Inc and The National Garden Club, Inc.

Wollaston Garden Club To Participate In Boston Flower Show

The Wollaston Garden Club (WGC) will participate in the Boston Flower and Garden Show's "Seeds of Change" at the Seaport Trade Center, Boston, from March 13 through 17th.

Under the direction of the club's horticulture chairperson, Cynthia Lewis, WGC will participate in the Amateur Horticulture Division: "Structures - Large Window with East Exposure." In 2008, the Wollaston Garden Club won a blue ribbon for an east window entry with over 30 club members involved. Just as many members are participating this time.

Club members have volunteered their mature east window houseplants to be included in the club's exhibit. The best plants for east facing windows will be ones preferring indirect light with cooler temperatures. East window houseplants get their sun in the mornings when it is not as warm and their shade during the afternoon.

Plants included in the collection are: begonia, cape primrose, cyclamen, dieffenbachia, peacock plant, pocketbook plant, cast iron plant, sansevieria, aluminum plant, dracaena, ivy, asparagus fern, aluminum plant, philodendron, pothos, peperomia, Chinese evergreen, peace lily, spider plant, schefflera, and a few other interesting plant specimens.

In preparation for the exhibit, in the fall of 2012, the club's East Window Steering Committee of Pat Artis, Rebecca Dinsmore, Colleen Lawler, and Cynthia Lewis, purchased a wide variety of additional east window plants that club members have adopted and are carefully nurturing. At two different re-potting workshops in January, led by horticulture chair, Lewis, club members re-potted all the plants into new terra cotta pots.

Many of the club's members will also enter plants in the Amateur Horticulture competition for individuals.

For more information about the garden club's participation, visit www.wollastongardenclub.org.

Cutlets With Pasta And Peppers

Here is a casserole that I cooked recently that can be made ahead and then popped in the oven when ready to eat.

In this recipe, I used chicken for the cutlets, but pork, veal or beef can be used also.

CUTLETS, PEPPERS WITH PASTA

4-5 cutlets

1 red pepper (sliced)

2 green peppers (sliced)

1 medium onion (sliced)

2-3 cups tomato sauce

corn flake crumbs for coating

1 egg with milk for dipping

1/2 pound penne

Oil for cooking the peppers

salt and pepper

First, prepare the cutlets by dipping them first in the egg mixture and then the crumbs. Sauté them for a couple of minutes only (they will cook thoroughly when baked). Set aside.

In a skillet in hot oil, sauté the onion and peppers. Add 1/4 cup of tomato sauce and cover until the peppers are tender. Set aside.

Cook the pasta according to directions al dente, add the tomato sauce and mix well.

In a slightly greased baking dish, Place the cutlets, over that the pasta, and then the peppers over all.

Bake in a 350-degree oven for about 15-20 minutes until done and hot. Sprinkle with a favorite grated cheese.

Pumpkin, Chocolate, Walnut Cake

A couple of my friends (former co-workers) were having lunch at my home last week and one of them brought a delicious pumpkin chocolate, nut cake. After we enjoyed it, I had to share this great recipe with all of you. Fran said it can be made ahead of time and it will keep for days in the refrigerator.

PUMPKIN, CHOCOLATE NUT CAKE

1 1/2 cups flour

1- teaspoon baking soda

1/2 teaspoon salt

1- teaspoon cinnamon

1/2 teaspoon nutmeg

1/4 teaspoon of ginger and cloves

1/2 cup butter or margarine

1- cup sugar

1- teaspoon vanilla

2 eggs

3/4 cup pumpkin (unsweetened)

3/4 cup chocolate morsels

1/2 cup walnuts chopped

Preheat oven to 350-degrees

Mix the melted butter and the sugar, and then add the eggs and vanilla. Beat until light and fluffy. Add the dry ingredients alternately with the pumpkin, and beat at low speed. Stir in the chocolate morsels and the 1/4 cup of the nuts.

Pour in a slightly greased 9x5x3 inch cake pan. Top with the rest of the nuts, and bake at a 350-degree oven for 60-70 minutes. Let cool for at least 15 minutes.

Palmucci Recruiting Men For Massachusetts White Ribbon Day Campaign March 7

Ward 4 Councilor Brian Palmucci, on behalf of the Massachusetts White Ribbon Day Campaign, is recruiting men from Quincy to demonstrate their commitment to being part of the campaign to end violence against women.

Men can take the White Ribbon Day pledge themselves as well as serve as an Ambassador who recruits male colleagues and friends to join in taking the pledge and wearing a white ribbon on March 7.

"By wearing a white ribbon, men and boys will show they do not tolerate or condone men's violence towards women, men, or children," stated Palmucci, who represents South & West Quincy on the City Council.

The sixth annual White Ribbon Day is a statewide campaign sponsored by Jane Doe Inc. Throughout the month, men across the state will show their support by encouraging others in their organizations, families and workplaces to wear a white ribbon, place a poster up at their workplaces, spread the word about the campaign, organize local events to speak out against violence towards women, and challenge attitudes and behaviors which condone or tolerate violence.

"We're taking our cue from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights that speaks to how violence against women is a human rights violation and how these abuses around the world are obstacles to efforts for peace and gender equality in all societies," said Craig Norberg-Bohm, Jane Doe Inc.'s White Ribbon Day campaign coordinator.

White Ribbon Day began in Canada in 1991, two years after the Montreal Massacre in which 14 female students at the University of Montreal were killed and 13 other students wounded by a single gunman.

Canadians organized a response to show their support to victims of violence everywhere. The White Ribbon Day Campaign has grown internationally in the past 20 years.

North Quincy, Quincy High Students Perform In MMEA Eastern District Concert

Seven students from the city's high schools were recently selected to participate in the Massachusetts Music Educators Association Eastern District Concert, which was held on Saturday, January 5th at Boston Latin School. Under the direction of QPS music teacher Timothy Carew, these students prepared for and entered auditions at Milton High School in November. Auditions included performing a classical selection, demonstrating ability with musical scales and sight-reading of a musical selection. The students qualifying from North Quincy High were George Bill, Nicholas Burt, Cindy Nelson & Natasha Sautter, while those representing Quincy High were Ciana Bonfiglioli, Lydia Culp & Jenny Thi. After a day and a half of rehearsing, all of the selected students from Eastern Massachusetts cities and towns joined together as the Eastern District Senior Chorus to perform under the direction of Dr. Michele Holt, Coordinator of Music Education at the University of Rhode Island. Music included Mendelssohn's "Verleih uns Frieden", "Alleluia" from Songs of Faith by Basler and the spiritual "Ain't-a That Good News" arranged by William L. Dawson. Students Nicholas Burt and Jenny Thi have further qualified to attend the MMEA All-State Festival in March which will culminate in a concert at Boston Symphony Hall.

Travel lanes will be widened to 16 feet to accommodate turning fire trucks in case of emergency and a reduction of parking spaces lining the road will provide better sight lines for drivers. Remaining parking spaces will allow for parallel parking as opposed to the originally proposed 90 degree spaces, which were speculated to have a disruptive effect on the flow of traffic as cars backed into driving lanes to exit the area.

In addition to the proposed changes to Victory Road, Hall Road will be striped, indicating the presence of bike lanes and two, 12 foot travel lanes.

"The point...has been to improve the traffic situation, improve safety, improve the public benefits, and improve our overall infrastructure," said Connolly.

"There are no signals proposed by the applicant nor are they required as a result of a review by our traffic engineers," said Planning Director Dennis Harrington. "There are pavement markings, there is the possibility of islands, and signage but there are no traffic signals."

Private spaces currently on Victory Road near the Vietnam Memorial will remain private, while two will be reserved for public, handicap parking.

Planning Board Chairman William Geary raised concerns over the applicant's desire to provide street level and garage spaces measuring in at 8.5 feet wide and 18 feet long. Industry standards state that optimal spaces should be 9 feet wide; however, the narrower spaces still fall within regulation guidelines.

"I have lengthy and painful experience with respect to parking spaces in garages that are too small, and every time I've gone into the city I come into a development and I can't get out of the car," said Geary. "I can say myself, I would be disinclined to favor that while at the same time saying that through this whole process we, as parties to the process, have attempted to be reasonable in looking at the various needs of all the developers."

A public meeting has been scheduled for March 6 at the Kennedy Center to address worries over plan revisions and to allow residents to speak in favor of or against these changes.

Discussion shifted to the development of a nine-unit residential complex to occupy four separate buildings at 84 West St. Representing the applicants was Attorney Christopher Harrington.

"We went to great lengths to try to design something that was different than a lot of the townhouse developments that we've seen in the city of Quincy in the last ten years," he said. "Because the site is so long, we decided that we had an opportunity to spread the units out across the site to break up the density."

The Cape-style buildings will occupy a 42,000 square-foot lot and be comprised of three, two-unit structures, and one, three-unit structure, each with a one-car garage and one additional space located outside.

Jim Edwards of the architectural firm Holmes and Edwards, Inc., attested to the aesthetic design of the project. "The scale of these buildings is broken up nicely and would blend in with what you see in the neighborhood," he said. "There's a real attempt here to provide a neighborhood setting with nicely designed buildings."

Despite the anticipated installation of subsurface infiltration systems meant to handle flood water and excess runoff, residents took to the podium to voice their unease over water directionality, and whether abutting properties would see an increase in ground water due to the proposed site's land gradient.

"My concerns are the water mitigation," said John Pantano of Hynes Ave., following engineers' testimony that the installation of the infiltration systems would substantially decrease the risk of water accumulation, and that sandy soil would promote downward water drainage, as opposed to it spreading out onto neighboring properties.

"Hynes Ave. floods to the point that it's ankle deep on a regular basis," he said.

Pantano wasn't the only resident of Hynes Ave. to speak against the proposal.

Thomas Malvesti told of the difficulties caused by what he believes are inadequate water drainage systems already in place. "In the last year and a half, I've had sewage back into my house four times. I'm not just talking about the toilets, the sinks, and the bathtubs," he said. "I've had the city come down and blow out the main line twice, and what they've told me is the system can't handle what's going through there now."

Also of concern was the placement of a dumpster in the area, meant to accommodate the needs of the proposed site's tenants.

"How often is it going to get dumped?" said Pantano. "Are we going to be smelling trash all summer long?"

According to Harrington, the frequency of dumpster emptying will be determined by the property's condo association once it has been established.

The application of T-Mobile Northeast, LLC c/o Network Building and Consulting LLC, which calls for the modification of six existing antennas which are attached to the rooftop penthouse of 25 School St. in Quincy Center was presented by Marty Cohen of Network Building and Consulting, and was described as a "part of our modernization project. It's actually a nationwide project."

"What's really driving this is all of the data needs that are created by smart phones and tablets, and we're also going to use the modified sites as a platform for 4G which T-Mobile is starting to launch. There's a big push to get this done in the year 2013," he said.

Permission to begin the modifications was given under the condition that all abandoned wireless equipment be removed and that radio frequency emissions reports be submitted to the board prior to the adjustments.

Similar renovations to T-Mobile cellular equipment took place last year at 1250

Hancock St.

The petition of Roseanna Marquis, Trustee of 77 Putnam Street Realty Trust, Donald J. Mullin, and Gertrude R. Houde for the Release of Covenant for the Eagle Terrace subdivision, a nine lot, residential subdivision off Forest Ave., was the final item to go before the board.

Landowners failed to improve the roadways and utilities associated with the property - a condition of ownership - and as such have filed to rescind the Subdivision Plan Approval granted by the board on Oct. 12, 2006.

As no outside parties were negatively impacted by the rescission, the board approved the applicant's request.

Quincy High School State Finalist For Green Ribbon Schools Award

MA Green Ribbon Schools (GRS) has nominated Quincy High School as a state finalist for submission to The U.S. Department of Education's GRS recognition award.

The award honors schools that are exemplary in making the greatest progress in three areas:

- reduced environmental impact and costs;
- improved health and wellness of students and staff; and
- effective environmental and sustainability education, which incorporates Science, Technology, Engineering, & Mathematics (STEM), civic skills and green career pathways.

"Under the exemplary leadership of Principal Frank Santoro, who is set to retire in June, Quincy High School has excelled in its efforts towards sustainable action," said Mayor Thomas P. Koch.

From earning Energy Star certification for green building standards, sourcing of renewable energy via installation of rooftop photovoltaic arrays, and reduction of Greenhouse Gas Emissions as part of the City's Green Community designation; to its participation in the United States Department of Agriculture's Healthier School Challenge, use of certified eco-friendly products, and increased rate of recycling, QHS has an impressive record across all three areas. Officials said.

"Clearly though, Quincy

High School's greatest achievements are its well-rounded students," said Koch, "who are shaped by a comprehensive interdisciplinary STEM curriculum and dedicated to civic engagement through the school's Service to School and Community effort."

"Principal Santoro is truly dedicated to the education of the whole student as a productive citizen. We are very pleased his work is being recognized."

Quincy High School's efforts were reviewed at the state level by committees from multiple state education agency offices, judges from state environmental, energy, and/or natural resources agencies, and, in many cases, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency regional office judges as well.

The Green Ribbon Schools Award is the first comprehensive federal program addressing efforts to identify environmental impact best practices that are proven to result in improved student engagement, higher academic achievement and graduation rates, and workforce preparedness, as well as a government wide goal of strengthening the nation's energy independence, economic security and conservation of natural resources. It is a major milestone in the Green Schools Movement, which lays out a thoughtful vision for green schools and states, such as Massachusetts, whose policies encourage them.

Fore River Shipyard Subject Of Quincy Native's New Book

By EMILY TAFT

When 63-year-old Quincy native Wayne Miller began collecting postcards of the Fore River Shipyard over two years ago he had no intentions of writing a book with them.

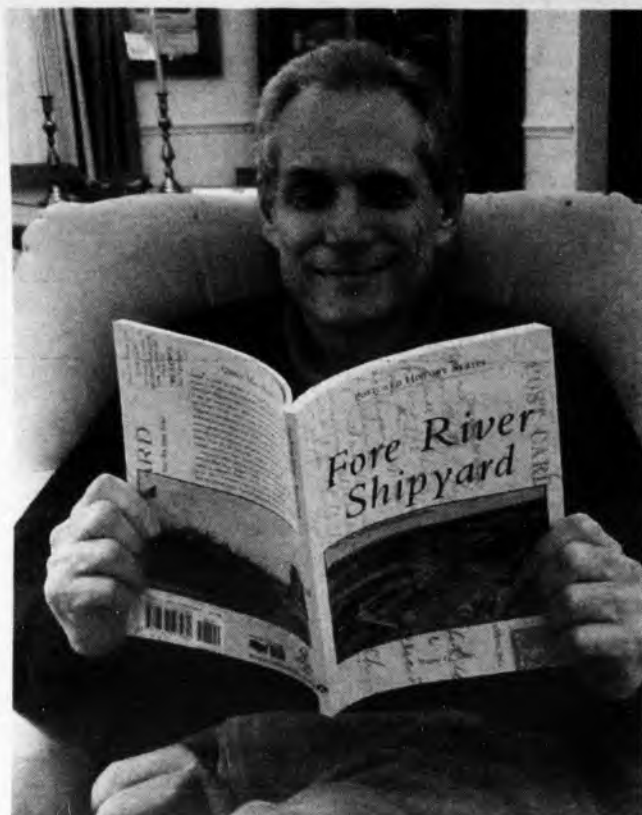

"I didn't really plan for this to happen," Miller said in a phone interview. "Three years ago I decided I needed a new hobby and wanted to know more about the city I grew up in, which was Quincy.

"I became fascinated with the shipyard, went on to Amazon to look for books about it and found that no one has even written a book about it, even as famous as the shipyard was. I felt it deserved some recognition and decided to collect as many postcards as I could and that's how my collection started. After about a year of collecting is when I decided to write a book. I thought it deserved to have its own book and so I became a man on a mission."

The book, Fore River Shipyard, which is now on sale at local retailers, online bookstores, and through Arcadia Publishing at www.arcadiapublishing.com, is a collection of postcards and history on the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, from its inception in 1884 to its final days in 1986.

Miller, who grew up in Quincy on Hudson Street and graduated from Quincy High School in 1967, has lived in Maryland for the past 38 years but continues to visit Quincy at least five times a year. He said he remembers seeing the smoke coming from the shipyard and hearing the whistles of the ships.

"When I was little I remember my family would cross the bridge on our way to Nantasket Beach and the bridge would come up to let the ships go out to sea. My brother and I would run out of the car to watch the ships pass by," said Miller.

AUTHOR WAYNE MILLER, a Quincy native, holds a copy of his recently published book "Fore River Shipyard" published by Arcadia Publishing. Miller will appear at the Quincy Historical Society tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 p.m.

"I have always had a fascination with ships; my father and two uncles were in the Navy so I grew up always having a fascination of Navy ships."

Miller began collecting and selling old postcards after he established an antiques and collectibles business specializing in books, postcards, sports, political and movie memorabilia. In 2007, he began collecting memorabilia of Quincy, especially postcards of the Fore River Shipyard and the ships that were built there.

He collected over 200 postcards before he began taking the steps to put together a book and research the many ships that were built at the Fore River Shipyard. Miller collected the postcards from all over the world, bidding in online auctions for many of them.

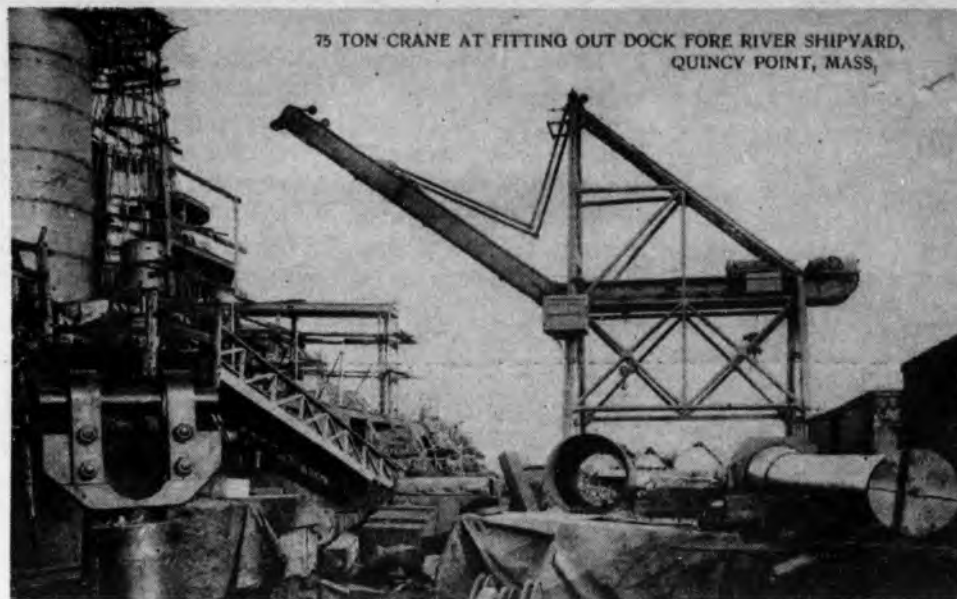

"I think ship postcards are some of the most beautiful postcards ever made," said Miller. "Postcards in 1910 were like email today.

Someone could send you a postcard in the morning and you would have it by the end of the day. I was able to collect many from 1905-1920 because they were readily available back then. Finding postcards of early ships was fairly easy, I would find five or more a week, but towards the end of my collecting I might have only been able to find one or two once a week."

Before he began to research and learn about the Fore River Shipyard, Miller didn't know much about its history. With help from the Thomas Crane Library, the Quincy Historical Society and other resources, he was able to put together the book with such detail, history, and information.

Miller would write about each postcard as he collected them, saving the scanned copy of the postcard and the write-up that went with it in his computer; he did this for over two years before organizing them into book form. He said he wanted to be able to put together the book in a way that the reader would know about the history and ships without having to look at the postcards.

"The hardest part was that I wanted to do the book in a number of chapters so the reader could understand

Some of Miller's favorite postcards are of the USS Lexington, the Thomas W. Lawson, the Auxiliary Yacht "Aloha", and the postcard of Eugene B. Ely flying from the USS Birmingham.

"My favorite postcards are the earliest ones," said Miller. "The ships are so beautiful to look at."

Even with the release of the book on Feb. 4th, Miller is still collecting postcards with hopes to one day donate the collection to the city.

Miller will appear at the Quincy Historical Society tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 p.m. for a presentation on his book. A book signing will follow his presentation.

Miller will also be at the Thomas Crane Public Library, Monday, Feb. 26 at 7 p.m.

"It was a sense of accomplishment and kind of a thrill to see the finished product," said Miller. "It is very exciting to see here years of work show up at your door. I was pretty green when I started this collection, I didn't know much about the shipyard, and now I am able to give a 45 minute presentation on it and I am pretty knowledgeable now when it comes to the ships they built there."

NQHS Students Organize Drive For Troops

Marguerite Belcher, Ciara Forde
Collecting Items Through April 6th

By EMILY TAFT

North Quincy High School sophomores Marguerite Belcher and Ciara Forde are hoping to brighten up the days of many service men and women stationed overseas by holding a troop drive at their school until April 6th.

"My parents have a close friend whose son is serving in Afghanistan, Michael Casserly, and so we came up with the idea of the drive to honor him," said Forde. "His mom heard about what we are doing and sent us a list of things we can send over to the troops and it just continued to get bigger and bigger."

The idea started out as sending a few care packages to Casserly and his troop and then became bigger when they decided to expand and send packages out to as many troops as possible, Forde said that they have also reached out to the Quincy Police Department in order to send care packages to officers who are serving overseas right now. The expansion of the drive allowed for the pair to partner up with the CarePacks organization located in Weymouth.

"When I heard they were doing this, I asked Jennifer Rossi, another English teacher who was helping the girls, if I could give them a hand. Since we started working together, I have discovered these girls to be bright and enthusiastic. Jennifer and I look forward to helping them every year," said NQHS English teacher Noreen Holland. "This was done on their own and I really am proud of these girls."

Along with placing a drop-off box in the schools lobby, Forde and Belcher have organized a number of contests and fundraisers to collect as many items as possible.

"We are sending letters home and are asking all sports team members and members of various clubs to donate an item to create a group donation," said Holland. "Ciara and Marguerite are also hosting a bake sale and all proceeds will go to buying supplies for our troops. The girls also created a contest where the home-room that brings in the most items will have a breakfast paid for by the teachers in the Foreign Language department."

Those looking to contribute may drop off donations at North Quincy High School during regular school hours.

The following items are acceptable donations:

Blizzard Costs Likely To Exceed $1 Million

Other measurements have varied by a few inches, but officials said the storm is without question in the top two or three in recorded history.

"This was a historic storm, with really three distinct components to the City's response - the snowfall, the coastal flooding issues, and the citywide blackout and loss of heat for so many thousands of our residents for an extended period of time," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "Whatever the final number is relative to cost, the City is in very good financial health and can handle the necessary expenses related to such a historic emergency."

In the last five years, the City has increased its budget for snow emergencies from $300,000 to $1.2 million this year. Snow removal budgets are allowed to be overspent by Massachusetts law, and most cities and towns traditionally underestimate annual budgets and make up deficits in following years.

The City has moved away from the practice that creates a "structural deficit" in recent years, but the scope of the Blizzard of 2013 and other winter storms to date will almost certainly exhaust budgeted amounts this year, officials said. Those deficits are typically covered by the City's year-end "free cash," which is state-certified surplus in various accounts.

Mayor Koch this year also included a new line item in the City's budget of $400,000 to be set aside in a inclement weather account. That money is purposed for weather emergencies beyond major snowstorms, but could also be allocated for costs associated with the blizzard.

"We have worked very hard to end the year-after-year deficits in the snow account that most cities and towns under-budget every year, and we are getting to a point where we will soon be budgeting for what an average winter typically costs the City," Koch said. "We're not there yet, and this was certainly no typical storm or typical response. But we are making progress every year."

The cost estimate from the City does not include private property damage or damage assessments to any public infrastructure caused by the storm, which could include damage to seawalls. That damage is now in the process of being assessed, and the City is working with state and federal authorities to determine if any disaster aid will be made available to the City, officials said.

BANK OF CANTON President Stephen P. Costello (left) and Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey at the two-day training program for law enforcement and school officials held at Bank of Canton's corporate offices.

Bank of Canton Hosts Training Program 'Moving Beyond Lockdown'

Bank of Canton hosted a two-day training program "Moving Beyond Lockdown" for Quincy and other Norfolk County police departments and school systems, the Boston Police Department, Curry College, Harvard University, state police, and officials from the Norfolk County District Attorney's office, to prepare them for situations involving violent intruders.

Law enforcement and school officials participated in the training for the A.L.I.C.E. Program (Alert, Lockdown, Inform, Counter, Evacuate) at Bank of Canton's corporate offices in Canton. Presented by Response Options, the program was sponsored by the Norfolk County District Attorney's office.

"We are very grateful to the Bank of Canton for this public service," said Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey.

"Keeping our children safe in their schools is a vital function of government, and this training provides a lot of background information and concepts on planning and coordination. Every community has to decide according to their needs what they adopt, but this helps make those fully informed decisions."

"Bank of Canton is privileged to host this critical training for school and law enforcement officials in Norfolk County and throughout the Commonwealth," said Bank of Canton President Stephen P. Costello. "As a community bank, we truly appreciate the efforts of local, county and state law enforcement officials to keep our schools and communities safe, especially in the wake of recent shooting tragedies."

According to Response Options, most institutions rely on traditional stand-alone "lockdown" protocols that can be deadly if you are in a location that cannot be secured or your secured location is breached by the intruder. The organization's comprehensive approach integrates strategies using law enforcement response, environmental design, technology, communication and proactive mindset for those in immediate danger. The focus is on the critical gap in time between when the shooter first pulls the trigger and when law enforcement arrives.

Bank of Canton has a branch at 60 Thomas McGrath Highway, Quincy.

NQ Students Participate In 'Stock Market Challenge'

North Quincy High's Business Economics Class recently participated in the annual "Stock Market Challenge" presented by Junior Achievement.

The event was held at 1 Lincoln Street in Boston. Key sponsors to the event included State Street Bank and Robert Half Employment Firm.

This year there were 35 teams of high school participants from across Greater Boston in attendance, all with hopes of finishing number one.

The format of the Stock Market Challenge included four-member teams. The stock game itself is a software program created by one of the supporters of the event. Publically traded stocks with a real life stock trading atmosphere enhanced the simulation. The simulation included ticker tapes and charts indicating daily trades modeling the New York Stock Exchange.

Each group of students received an initial capital investment of $500,000 to invest and manage. Students were required to make initial investments before the stock market bell sounded. Once the bell sounded trading began with students yelling "trader." Business volunteers for the event with palm pilots in hand logged in "buy" and "sell" trades for the participants.

The total simulation period was 60 minutes, with

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

CAN YOUR TOOTHBRUSH MAKE YOU SICK?

Do you pay attention to your toothbrush's cleanliness? If not, you may be exposing yourself to harmful bacteria. According to new research, the average toothbrush can contain more than 100 million bacteria (including the infamous illness culprit E. coli and staphylococci). In fact, the average person's mouth is not really all that clean to begin with since it is also filled with bacteria; however, there is certainly no need to compound the situation with a dirty toothbrush. To keep your toothbrush clean, first, keep it out of toilet range flush. Also, keep it stored upright and away from other toothbrushes. Wash your hands before brushing, and don't use a cover for the toothbrush (which prevents the toothbrush from drying out).

'Finding Real Joy' Seminar At Wollaston Church Of The Nazarene

Eight-Week Seminar March 10-April 28

By DON SAUTTER

Is it really a happy new year? Probably not, but it could be. However to be so, we'll all have to do more than a "Happy New Year" greeting. Actually, to be a really "Happy New Year," requires a day by day, step by step positive life style skills and good habits.

Unfortunately, most of us aren't there yet, but we can be if we really want to be! Of course, we can't do it on our own. We need help. But more than that, we are almost too cautious about getting the help we need. After all, there are far too many "control freaks" out there. And the last thing we want to do is get involved with one or more of them!

What we really need to do is move beyond a search for happiness to the pursuit of joy. As the word implies, happiness is dependent on what "happens" to us, the good or ill that we encounter each day of our lives. Joy, on the other hand, is a reservoir that lends us support through the disappointments and pain common to all and lifts up the good days to an even greater level of satis-fiction.

Consequently, you are invited to an 8-week seminar titled, "Finding Joy - Christian Insights from the Life and Works of C.S. Lewis." The seminar will focus on joyful living through both the positive and negative events in our lives, using the life and works of Lewis as a vehicle for wrestling with issues of belief and unbelief, temptation, sorrow, friendships, marriage, forgiveness and other issues which can sap the joy out of our existence.

But, why Lewis? Who is C.S. Lewis and why should we care what Lewis has to say about joy?

Lewis is probably the leading lay, spokesperson for Christianity in the 20th century and was featured on the front cover of Time magazine. An atheist converted to Christianity in the middle of his life while a professor at Oxford University in England, he is the author of a wide variety of fiction and non-fiction books, including the popular children's series, The Chronicles of Narnia (made recently into three motion pictures). He is also the subject of many books, a popular 35 year-old course at Harvard University (paired opposite Sigmund Freud), and a major motion picture Shadowlands, starring Anthony Hopkins as Lewis.

But mostly, Lewis has the skill and imagination to make difficult topics understandable for the layperson. He is the author of both adult fiction and nonfiction defenses of belief at one end and simple children's stories at the other. He articulates complex topics through the medium of story, such as his book, Screwtape Letters, an amusing and insightful look into the challenges of daily temptations. Critically, he also demonstrates a life of Christian integrity in the face of both the good and the bad encounters of life. He "walks the talk and talks the walk."

The seminar will be led by Don Christensen, a software entrepreneur by day, but an advocate of C.S. Lewis and adult Christian education teacher for over 30 years. The meeting place is on the campus of Eastern Nazarene College in Gardner Hall on the second floor in room #27. The address is 23 East Elm Avenue in Wollaston. Weekly classes will be held at that location, concluding with a viewing of the motion picture, Shadowlands, at a concluding social event. The seminar is sponsored by the Wollaston Church of the Nazarene and begins on March 10 and runs eight weeks through April 28.

Also for your enjoyment and opportunity to visit with others, coffee and refreshments will be available between 9:45 and 10 a.m., right before the seminar begins at 10 a.m. concluding at 10:50 a.m. The style of the seminar will be on an informal discussion basis so that everyone will feel comfortable to participate, either by talking or just listening. There is no cost to attend.

Moreover, if you have children, you are welcome to bring them to attend an age appropriate Christian Education class at the Wollaston Church of the Nazarene, located on the campus of Eastern Nazarene College. The church offers Christian Education classes for all ages from nursery through adults. Feel free to come as a family.

For more information and/or directions, call the church office at 617-472-5669. You can also call Don Sautter at 617-479-2040. There is no charge for the seminar or the refreshments. Please RSVP as soon as possible by calling or emailing the church office at office@wollastonnazarene.org. The seminar will last eight weeks beginning March 10 and concluding April 28.

Quincy Native Carrie Sunde Crowned Miss Cambridge

2010 North Quincy High School Graduate To Compete In Miss Massachusetts Pageant

By EMILY TAFT

For Quincy native Carrie Sunde being crowned Miss Cambridge is not only about receiving the title but also about being able to go out into the community to encourage others to give back.

"For me it is about paying it forward it's not about the crown it's about what I can do with it to raise awareness by promoting volunteerism in the community," said Sunde. "The best way to get others to follow your example is not only by educating, but also by doing. I want to show the community leaders, members, and everyday citizens that I am serious about promoting community service."

The 2013 Miss Boston and Miss Cambridge Pageant, held in Boston on Feb. 10th, is the official preliminary for the Miss America pageant put on by the Miss Boston Scholarship Organization. The Miss America Organization is one of the nation's leading achievement programs and the world's largest provider of scholarship assistance for young women, providing over $45 million dollars in scholarship assistance annually.

Sunde, a public relations major at Syracuse University, was one of 16 young women to compete in the pageant to not only win the title of Miss Boston or Miss Cambridge but also to win over $8,000 in scholarships and prizes to fund their college or graduate school education.

Sunde started participating in pageants a couple of years ago after she stopped performing as a dancer.

"I was an entertainer, an artist, and I wanted to keep performing. I needed to be on stage," said Sunde. "What better way to continue performing than on a stage that not only allows me to entertain but better myself along the way?"

Sunde, a 2010 graduate of North Quincy High School, said that every contestant had to pick a platform, a cause that they are passionate about representing and promoting throughout the year that they hold the title of Miss Cambridge. Sunde's platform is called 'Lend a Helping Hand.'

"As Miss Cambridge, I would like to share my personal story and teach the benefits of 'lending a helping hand.' I was adopted from Changsha, China when I was one and a half years old. I was so fortunate to have been chosen for a second chance at a better life, and because I was given the opportunity to start a new life in Massachusetts, I feel that it is in my duty to give back to my community," said Sunde. "I want others to be able to obtain all the benefits of living a successful life."

Throughout her entire life, 20-year old Sunde has given back and volunteered whenever and wherever she could. She has done over 500 hours of manual service along with making many various donations to food pantries, homeless shelters, and other local and national charities. While she holds the title of Miss Cambridge, Sunde said she plans to promote volunteering and community service by continuing to volunteer when she can and by leading by example.

"I would like to promote volunteering in the community by first speaking at local schools and teaching today's youth about helping others. I truly believe that it is essential to inform children early about doing things that will not only enhance their lives, but the lives of others around them," said Sunde. "I would also like to continue volunteering in my community by making as many appearances as I can during my reign. I want to be able to enact my platform daily."

To be crowned Miss Cambridge, Sunde took part in five different rounds of competition: talent, interview, physical fitness, evening gown and on-stage interview.

"They train us like athletes we practice mock interviews, we start preparing as soon as we can," said Sunde. "It's much like participating in a triathlon you have to be physically and mentally prepared at all times."

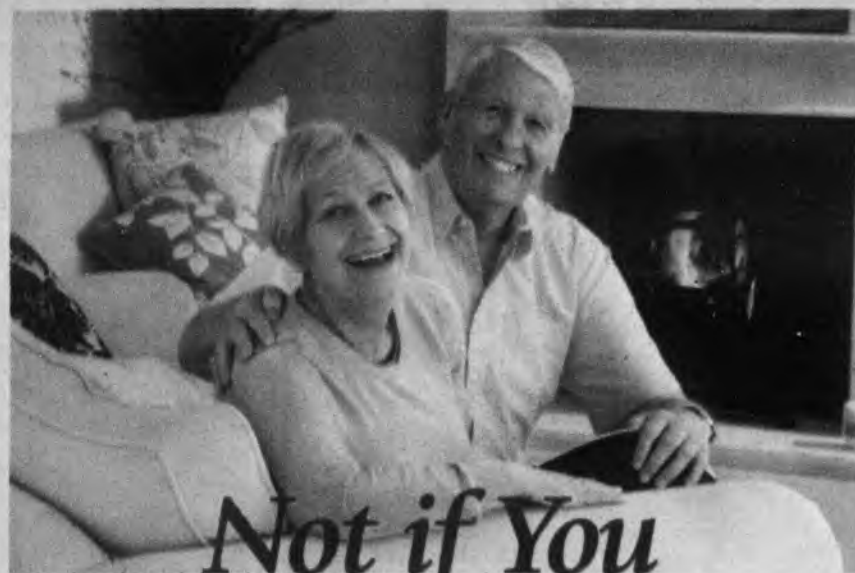

With experience and preparation, Sunde may just have what it takes to win the whole thing. She went won the Miss Teen Petite World 2012 crown, and if she wins the Miss Massachusetts pageant in June she will advance to compete in the Miss America pageant.

"There is 136 days till the Miss Massachusetts competition right now (as of Feb. 13). I have been preparing for it since I won the Miss Cambridge crown. I have been dreaming about the Miss America crown," said Sunde. "I am still in shock, and speechless really. The phone has been going crazy and I have over 2,000 friends on Facebook now. I worked so hard the last four months to get to this level. It's going to be a great year."

Higgins, O'Callaghan Lead Presidents Past Red Raiders

By BILL GRIFFIN

For over two months, Ryan Higgins was the goalie in Quincy nobody discussed. All the talk rightly was about North Quincy's Nolan Greene who is in everybody's conversation about who is the best goaltender on the South Shore.

Saturday night, the talk was about Higgins. He took center stage with a 33-save performance and sophomore winger Brian O'Callaghan supplied the offense with a beautiful hat trick to lift Quincy past North, 4-1 in a Patriot League game before a packed house at the Quincy Youth Arena.

The player with the golden scoring touch, sophomore Patrick Freeman, chipped in with his 20th goal of the season and ran his goal-scoring streak to 13 games for the Presidents who ended the week at 4-13-2. North Quincy was 8-6-4 after the Quincy game. Quincy and North met three times this year and finished 1-1-1.

"This is awesome," said Higgins. "It's huge to me. It's my biggest win because of what the rivalry means to the city. My teammates did everything for me."

"I was actually happy with the way we played. We had our chances, but Higgins was excellent. He was the difference in the game," said North Quincy Coach Matt Gibbons.

Higgins was rock-solid from start to finish, but he was at his best in the second with two robberies when he was protecting a one-goal lead. Timmy Glynn set up Robbie Cameron for a blast from the slot ticketed for the far corner which Higgins stopped with his pad. Later in the period he handled a rocket from Nick McGaughey and a rebound on the doorstep from Glynn. It was great stuff.

"There are nights when you see the puck well and tonight was one of those for me," said Higgins.

Freeman started the scoring with an unassisted goal less than four minutes into the game. He intercepted a clearing pass and put a laser just under the crossbar to the far corner. It was a goal out of a TV highlight. He had his stick loaded before he touched the puck and one-timed a drive that nobody was going to stop.

"That shot beats every goalie," said Quincy Coach Tim Lewis.

"I started the season a little slow, but I got two against Duxbury, and since then, I've been in a good zone," said Freeman.

Then came the O'Callaghan Selection which showcased all the skills from his two-way game: a booming shot, soft hands around the net, and a steal and a shorthanded finish which put away the game. His first came on the power play in the first when he took a feed directly off the faceoff from Jake Hallisey and ripped a low blast into the far corner for a 2-0 lead.

"He has a rocket, the second-hardest shot on the team next to Chris Andrews," said Lewis.

After John Ross McEvilly tucked home a rebound for North to cut it to 2-1, O'Callaghan took a perfect cross-crease feed from Patrick Donovan and slipped it in the open side. Mike Puglsey earned an assist on the play. It was a scorer's goal. Handle the pass, find the net. No hesitation, no chance for the goalie.

"Bang-bang. He's got a nice touch in front of the net," said Lewis.

O'Callaghan finished his hat trick at the decisive point in the game. North was only down two, the Red Raiders were pressing Higgins, and Quincy was hit with a four-minute major. That's a four-minute power play for a strong team well within range. O'Callaghan turned around the momentum of the game by intercepting a pass at the blue line and moving in clear for a backhand finish.

Hats came floating onto the ice to celebrate O'Callaghan. The lead was three goals. Aidan Pugsley, O'Callaghan, Jimmy Brennick and Steve Ross killed off the rest of the penalty and the lead stayed at 4-1 until the finish.

"It was the best game we played this season," said Lewis. "O'Callaghan's goal was definitely the key play of the game. It made the mountain they had to climb that much higher."

Quincy allowed just four goals in three games last week and showed the necessary checking and defensive discipline protecting the lead against North. Brennick, Ross and Brandon Beal had solid games on defense.

"It's a sign of a young

team maturing," said Lewis whose team was 2-1-1 in its last four after the Quincy game.

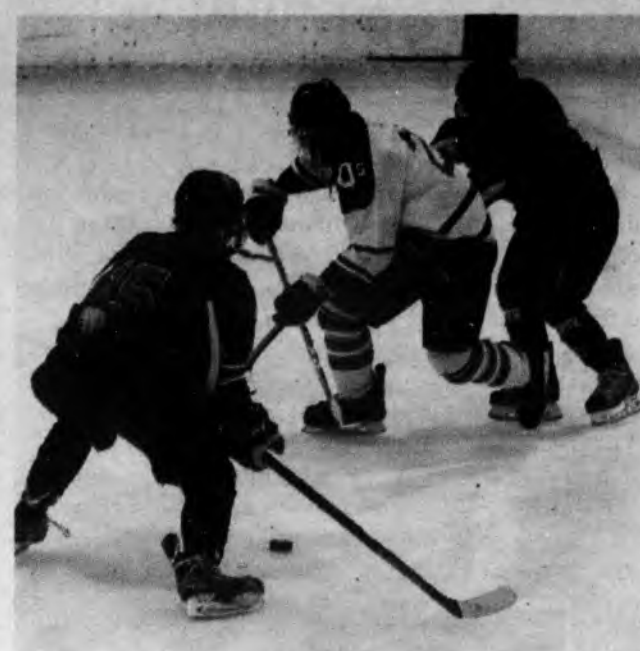

The Red Raiders created more offensive chances than they had in recent games. In the first period, Higgins stopped Brendan Cox from the slot and Rory O'Connor on the right wing. A wrist shot from Pat Verhault trickled past Higgins but stopped just short of the goal line. Robbie Cameron and McGaughey forced chances throughout the game.

"We made a couple of mistakes which hurt us, but our offense was better," said Gibbons. "I thought we had our best chances in the first, but we had flurries all night. Hats off to Quincy. Higgins played great."

Senior Mike Capobianco played in net for the Red Raiders. He was solid all night with 31 saves, 12 in the third period. None of the goals were his fault. The scores came off defensive mistakes and from a Quincy offense that can be too talented to stop.

"Mike played great. I feel bad for him. I wish we could have won for him in his final game against Quincy," said Gibbons.

North will find out its tourney pairing Friday.

Quincy/North Quincy Competes At States

Sophomore Rachel O'Driscoll (NQ) bettered her own school standard in the 100-yard butterfly to lead the Quincy/North Quincy girls swimming and diving team (7-4, 4-3) to 33rd of 49 teams that qualified for the Division I Girls States Swimming and Diving Championships Saturday at Springfield College.

O'Driscoll placed 13th with a new school standard of 1:03.13 followed by Sabrina Rauch (Q) whose 1:06.47 performance landed her 26th in the 100 butterfly, the second of two events in which the dynamic sophomore duo would compete. In the 200 freestyle, O'Driscoll swam a 2:02.69 for 15th overall while teammate Sabrina Rauch finished at 2:10.14 for 30th.

Senior captain Kat O'Connor (NQ) was 49th in the 50 free (27.85) and 33rd in twice the distance (59.98). In O'Connor's four years with the team under the tutelage of Head Coach Bob McGillicuddy, QNQ has won 26 of 44 meets, finishing third in the Patriot League twice. Individually, O'Connor earned league all-star accolades for garnering third place (1:00.32) in the 100 freestyle and fifth in the 50 free (27.45) at this year's league championships.

The three swimmers teamed up for 22nd in the 200 freestyle relay (1:51.54) and 18th in the 400 freestyle relay (4:03.17).

On Sunday, sophomore Randall Kwong (NQ) represented QNQ at the boys Division I State Championships hosted by Harvard University. Kwong finished 43rd in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 53.13.

"Reflecting on a great season for the girls and the boys," said Head Coach Bob McGillicuddy, "I am so proud of the dedication and willingness for the swimmers to put the team first before individual achievements. I wish that I could have taken the entire team to states, but the swimmers who qualified represented the schools with pride."

Improving Girls' Hockey Ties Whitman-Hanson, 4-4

By BILL GRIFFIN

The signs of improvement are clear and impressive.

When the Quincy-North Quincy girls hockey team played Whitman-Hanson earlier this year, they suffered an 8-1 defeat.

In Saturday night's rematch, it was a different story. Quincy-North scored in the first minute of the game, and carried a lead into the final five minutes of the contest when the Panthers scored to escape with a 4-4 tie at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena.

"The progress we've made is tremendous," said coach Steve Burgio. "You can see it in all phases of the girls' play. They've done everything we've asked and stuck to the system we want them to play. I just wish we had more games left."

Junior forward Natalie O'Donovan had a goal and two assists for Quincy-North. It was her second game since coming back from injury. In those two games, she has two goals and three assists for five points.

"Her greatest asset is her hockey knowledge," said Burgio. "She came to practice while she was hurt and learned what we were doing. When she was ready to play, she knew the system."

Brianna Mullaney scored for Quincy-North 32 seconds into the game. Quincy-North won a faceoff in the offensive end and pressured the goal. Mullaney drove home a rebound with an assist to her sister Danielle.

With six minutes left in the period, O'Donovan scored an unassisted goal. After W-YH cut it to 2-1, O'Donovan set up Julia Donovan for a goal and a 3-1 lead after one period.

After the Panthers tied it in the second period, O'Donovan made another fine pass. She worked the puck into the offensive end, moved into the corner and centered in front to Madison Hally who drove it home for a 4-3 lead after two periods.

The Panthers then scored with 5:00 left to make the final, 4-4.

"As always Erin McGinnis played well in goal," said Burgio. "Savannah Flynn played an excellent defensive game. We put her on Whitman-Hanson's top player who had four goals and two assists against us in the first game. Savannah held her off the scoreboard until she got an assist on the final goal."

Quincy-North plays its final game of the year against Marshfield Friday.

Here are the results and highlights from Quincy Youth Basketball League games played Jan. 27.

North Quincy Nearly Overcomes 20-Point Deficit In Gutsy And Stirring 4th Quarter Rally Red Raiders Fall Short Against Scituate In Division Showdown

By BILL GRIFFIN

Sometimes the best stories don't have happy endings.

North Quincy was surely dead. The Red Raiders were down by 20 with 6:30 left. They were down by 16 with four minutes left. Their point guard was in the locker room with blood streaming from a cut in the side of his forehead. They couldn't make a jump shot. They couldn't get a rebound. They were playing a team that had lost one league game. Surely, it was over.

With North, it is never finished until the clock reads 0:00, and the Red Raiders fought to threshold of an amazing comeback. Junior guard Kyle Richardson inspired a stirring rally which had the capacity crowd howling, but fell one point short as Scituate survived with a 57-56 victory which clinched the Fisher Division of the Patriot League for the Sailors Saturday night.

Scituate finishes the league at 12-1, two games ahead of North (10-3, 14-4 overall).

"In the last four minutes, we showed our resilience and perseverance," said North coach Kevin Barrett. "I'm proud of the effort. I just wish we weren't in that hole in the first place."

Let's start with North trailing, 53-33. They would close with a 23-4 run, a 16-1 burst over the last four minutes. Guard Aaron Anderson, who shoots 20-footers like layups, changed the flow of the game by draining two three-pointers. North was still down 56-40 with 4:00 left, but the feel of the game had changed and changed completely.

"When we had the big lead, I looked at my kids in the huddle and said: They will come back. They will come back. That's the kind of team they are," said Scituate coach Matt Poirier.

Efthim Butka knocked home two free throws. Point guard Pat Gould came back to the floor with the left side of his head bandaged and set up his brother Dan for a three. Then Richardson, the smallest man on the floor at 5'7" weaving in and out of a team of giants from Scituate, took over the game.

"He was our energizer tonight and he's been that way for us all year," said Barrett.

He drove and set up Butka for two layups. He cashed a layup off a steal at mid-court. He was hammered on a drive and calmly swished two free throws. He coaxed home a straightaway three pointer. He had nine points and three assists in the final four minutes and North was within 57-56 with 0:32 left.

"Kyle gets us from defense to offense so well and that's what happened in our comeback," said Barrett.

While all this offense had the gym shaking with noise, North's defense was stifling. In the last four minutes, the Red Raiders had six steals, forced two 30-second violations, one ten-second backcourt violation, and one five-second possession violation. Scituate had trouble making a pass, let alone a shot.

"Desperation. We knew the championship for the league was right there," said Barrett.

After the Sailors' David Cox missed two free throws, North had the ball and a final shot. Barrett wanted the ball to go to Richardson for a drive to the bucket, but an extra pass forced it to Pat Gould on the right wing. He worked for a contested jumper. This would be the happy ending. Wounded star would return and hit the winning shot. However, this was not the night for it. The jumper fell just short, Gould hit then floor hard and Scituate had its championship. Sometimes the best stories don't have happy endings.

"Extraordinary. They are an extraordinary team. We were fortunate to get out with the win," said Poirier.

The reason North was so far down was Scituate's offensive rebounding. The Sailors have six players over 6'3" and they used their size well. Freed from the worry of an over-the-back foul being called, Scituate attacked the boards for second, third, and fourth chances. The multiple opportunities fueled a 9-2 run at the end of the second period and a 13-0 burst at the end of the third which gave the Sailors control of the game.

"We knew about their offensive rebounding," said Barrett. "We talked about it, but they are a big, physical team and we couldn't keep them off the boards."

Scituate's defense was designed to keep the ball away from North's outside sharpshooters. The Sailors' guards played shirt-to-shirt defense, confident that their big men could handle any penetration. In addition, North shot in hard luck. At least six or seven jumpers spun down deep and out. Layups trickled around and off the rim.

"They shoot so well, we always had to have a hand in front of them," said Poirier.

Pat Gould represents well the toughness which brought North back into the game. Late in the third period, he was belted during a scramble and opened a cut over his left eye. The bleeding continued when he sat on the bench. It continued in the locker room. Finally, he was patched up. First he sat on the bench. Then, he talked to Barrett. Then, he was on the floor for the closing rush.

"I've never seen a tougher player," said Barrett. "I never thought he would come back. The next thing I know there's this voice on the bench asking me to go back in."

Cox led all scorers for Scituate with 18 and center John Foster added a physical 16. Butka (12), Dan Gould (10), Richardson (9), Marquis McClendon (9), and Pat Gould (8) led North.

Tournament pairings will be announced Friday.

Dan Gould had his second straight big shooting night, canning seven three-pointers and scoring 26 to lead the Red Raiders past Silver Lake, 82-64 in a league contest earlier last week.

Gould, who missed six games with an ankle injury, had 16 in North's previous game against Hanover.

Guard Kyle Richardson had 15 while junior forward Efthim Butka added 14 points and 10 rebounds for North who showed no ill effects from an eight-day layoff.

Against Pembroke, Pat Gould and Butka each had 12 to lift North to a 63-39 victory. Dan Gould added 11.

Presidents Punch Tourney Ticket With Wins Over Middleboro, Duxbury

By BILL GRIFFIN

The final step on Quincy's journey to the tournament was the most difficult.

The Presidents needed one more win. They were playing their third game in three days. They were coming off a draining three-point loss to Whitman-Hanson. They were stuck in traffic for almost two hours on their trip to Duxbury. This was not fun.

Jaquan Harris lifted the Presidents over the final hurdle by scoring 14 points and taking over the game in the final four minutes to help Quincy past Duxbury, 57-46 in a Patriot League game Saturday afternoon.

The win lifted Quincy to 11-8 (8-5 in the league) and gave the Presidents a tourney berth for the fourth straight year.

"It was emotionally draining," said coach Dave Parry. "It's like a weight has been lifted off our shoulders. The kids were tested, but they didn't get too high or low, and they got the job done."

It was a roller coaster week. The Presidents cruised past Middleboro, 70-33 behind 18 from Harris and 16 from senior point guard Tino Goncalves. Against Whitman-Hanson on Friday, Harris had 18 and Goncalves 13, but a late rally fell just short and the Panthers squeezed out a 54-51 victory.

"The Whitman game was in a jam-packed gym, a tournament atmosphere," said Parry. "It was a tough loss, but the kids rebounded."

Against Duxbury, Goncalves had seven assists and 12 points while sophomores J.T. Bain and Drew Myers chipped in with 10 each. Sophomore James Lam had six points and 16 rebounds. It was entirely fitting that this senior-sophomore connection should push the Presidents into the tourney because it has been the core of the team for the entire season.

"The senior-sophomore combination is exactly what led us," said Parry. "The two seniors (Harris and Goncalves) stepped up with the big plays and the sophomores delivered as well."

Quincy held a narrow lead for most of the Duxbury game. It was tied after one, Quincy was up five at the half, but only ahead by two with 4:00 left in the game. This is where Harris took control. He got to the basket for a pair of three-point plays. Junior Brendan Cunningham (seven points for the game) rebounded and penetrated for inside scoring, and Goncalves got the ball to where it needed to be.

"It was Jaquan's play which put us over the top," said Parry. "The tourney is important to us for two reasons. First, it's Jaquan, Tino, and Peter Cedrone's senior year. This is their year, their shot. Second, I think it will be great for our sophomores to get a taste of tournament play."

The first half of the Whitman-Hanson was evenly-played. Quincy was up 13-8 after one and trailed, 22-21 at intermission. The Panthers opened up a 40-25 lead in the third. Quincy's press forced mistakes and Harris brought the Presidents back in the game.

Harris had 14 in the fourth. He hit a big three, Myers hit a three, and Goncalves cashed four free throws. Quincy moved into a tie with 2:30 left, but the Panthers took back the lead. Quincy was within three in the final seconds, but three-point jumpers by Harris and Myers rimmed out.

This set up the ride to Duxbury and, at last, the tournament.

Quincy's four seniors (Harris, Goncalves, Cedrone, and Zach Aglugub) made senior night against Middleboro a memorable one by playing key roles in the Presidents' convincing victory.

Harris and Goncalves accounted for 20 of Quincy's first 21 points and 27 of its first 30 by either an assist or a basket. There is a special connection here.

"It's a bond that's come from years of playing together in high school, summer leagues, and all-year round," said Parry. "They have a sense of where they are and where they are going to be on the court."

Harris had five assists and a steal to go with his 16 points. He showed the whole arsenal. He hit three threes, put back an offensive rebound, slashed to the basket and found open teammates with solid, accurate passes.

"The key for Jaquan is to stay patient," said Parry. "When he doesn't rush and lets the game come to him, he's at his best. Tonight, he hit a couple of threes, the lanes opened for him and he got to the basket."

Goncalves added 10 assists and five steals to go with his 15 points. He plays like he was born to run the fast break from the middle of the floor. There is a joy to his game on the run. He runs faster dribbling the ball than most players run without it. If his mates fill their lanes and get open, he will get them the ball.

"His whole game lights up on the fast break," said Parry. "He'd rather make a good pass for a basket than score, and that's something special."

Cedrone played his usual game of defense, rebounding, setting picks, and doing all the dirty work that frees his teammates to score. He also takes a charge like a pro.

"He's great in the post and he's our best overall defender," said Parry.

Aglugub, a point guard, transferred from California at the beginning of the school year. He started against Middleboro, played excellent defense, and knocked home a three in the fourth period.

"He makes Jaquan and Tino work in practice with his defense," said Parry. "He is a sound all-around player and he played well tonight."

Quincy put 12 players in the scoring column. The Presidents were up 23-8 after one, 35-15 at the half, and 58-25 after three.

Cunningham had nine for Quincy while sophomore Lam added seven. Myers (5), Christian Callahan (4), Aglugub (3), Kenny Sorensen (3), Colin Evans (2), Bain (2), Tyler Beach (2), and Cedrone (2) also scored for Quincy.

the fifth straight year he's raised money for CarePacks - to date he's raised $102,000 for the charity. He began raising money for the organization after his younger brother Jeremiah enlisted in the Marine Corps after high school.

Foley will be hosting a fundraiser on March 9 at 7 p.m. at J.J. Foley's Café, 117 East Berkeley St., Boston. The event will feature a silent auction, raffles, and entertainment. Donations will be accepted at the door (checks can be made payable to CarePacks.) More information is available by emailing Foley at patrickjfoley3232@yahoo.com.

Tournament Pairings Released Friday

Quincy Girls Finish Strong, Defeat Middleboro 56-36

By BILL GRIFFIN

There are years when there is talent and experience to make a championship run. There are more years of new players, injuries and adversity when earning entrance to the tournament is a source of pride and accomplishment.

Quincy supplied a strong finishing kick to its brilliant stretch run by racing to an 18 point-lead and dropping Middleboro, 56-36 in the Patriot League finale for the Presidents last Friday.

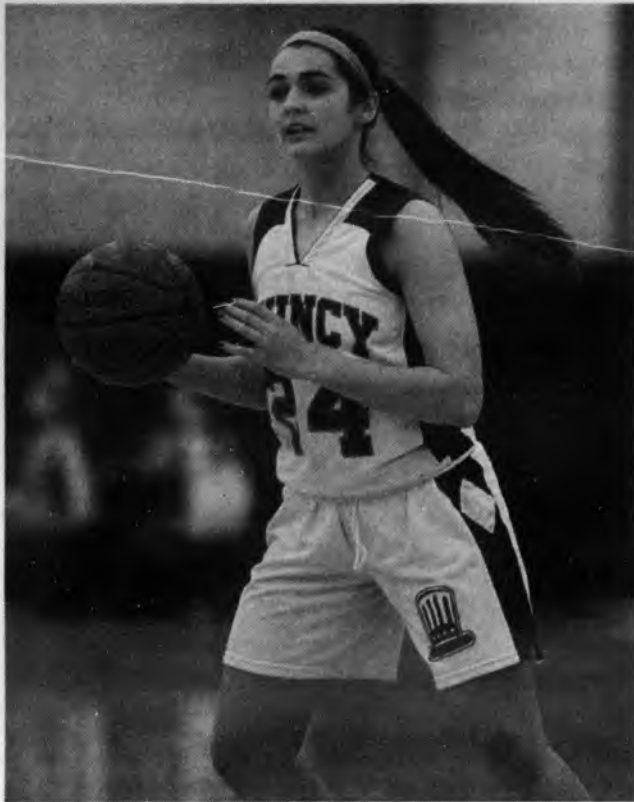

Leann McColgan led the way with 12 points and a career-high six rebounds as Quincy qualified for the state tournament. Kayla McArdle had 16 points, including two three-point jumpers, while Sam McArdle added a career-high 10 rebounds for the Presidents (10-10) who won four of their last five to make the tourney.

Earlier in the week, Duxbury, unbeaten in league play, defeated Quincy, 65-32.

Against Duxbury, the Presidents were led by their talented freshman duo of center Nicole Jorgensen and Gabrielle Jerahian. Jorgensen had 14 points and 14 rebounds while Jerahian had her second straight double-figure scoring game with 13 points.

"I couldn't be prouder of the kids," said coach Jeff Bretsch. "It was a brand new team from last year. We faced a lot of adversity with injuries. Two of the four teams we had to defeat (Hingham and Whitman-Hanson) had beaten us earlier in the year. We've been playing elimination games for more than two weeks and the kids responded."

Last year, Quincy had one of those dreams teams, the best girls team in the school's history which made the sectional final. One starter returned, point-guard Alyssa Lydon who is one of the top backcourt players in the league. She missed eight games and was at half-speed for at least five more because of a knee injury. Junior Colleen Andrews and Jerahian stepped up and played the point. Without Jerahian, there's no way Quincy beats Whitman.

"Alyssa was the big loss. She steadied us and took care of the basketball," said Bretsch.

Quincy lost 17 games to injury from the lineup which started the season. Alysha Dunbar missed four. Jorgensen missed four. Kayla McArdle, who blossomed as a scoring threat in the second half of the season, played hurt. Maryssa Dwyer, Courtney Ryan and Caroline McBride stepped up and played solid basketball. They were not last year's powerhouse, but they are a team Bretsch will always remember with pride.

"They had a tough act to follow," said Bretsch. "I told them at the beginning it might be a bumpy ride early in the season, but to stay with it and keep learning. They did and, especially when we lost Alyssa, that helped us. I felt midway through the season that we had turned a corner."

Jorgensen, who averaged 16 points, 16 rebounds and five blocks over her last nine games, had eight points and 16 rebounds in the tourney-clincher against Middleboro. Earlier in the week against Duxbury's star Michela North and the Dragons' huge front line, she played some her best basketball of the year.

"She had 10 in the first half and I thought it was the best half Nicole played all year. She played well against the best," said Bretsch.

Quincy was within 11 of Duxbury midway through the third when Jorgensen ran into foul trouble. Duxbury took advantage and opened up the lead.

"We had trouble hitting our threes and you have to hit your outside shots against a team like Duxbury," said Bretsch.

That left it up to the season-finale against Middleboro. Quincy delivered by taking control with a 25-7 halftime lead and putting the finishing touches on its hard-earned ride to the tournament.

"The seniors and Kayla did a great job keeping us focused. Give them the credit for making the tourney," added Bretsch.

"The adversity we faced makes this mean more and I think it will give us a huge advantage in the tourney," said Kayla McArdle.

Tournament pairings will be released Friday.

North Girls Impressive In Wins Over S-L, Pembroke

By BILL GRIFFIN

Few people recovered better from the blizzard than North Quincy's girls basketball team.

Last week, North shook off a one-week layoff with impressive wins over Silver Lake and Pembroke, enjoyed a memorable senior night, and stayed in a dead heat with Scituate in the race for first place in the Fisher Division of the Patriot League.

Against Silver Lake, Maya Umoren had 17 points and 12 rebounds as North raced out to a big lead and rolled to a 55-42 league win.

The Red Raiders had a balanced inside-outside attack. Senior guard Caitlin Bulger had 10 points while junior guard Jane Minton added 10 points and seven assists. Hannah Donovan played a strong game rebounding and on defense.

Bulger poured in 25, including three three-point jumpers, in senior-night explosion to lead the Red Raiders to their sixth straight win, 56-16 over Pembroke. Minton had eight and Umoren added seven in the win.

The victory left North at 13-6 overall and 10-2 in the league at the end of last week. The Red Raiders, who defeated Scituate 57-43 earlier this season thanks to the fine defensive work of Haley McKay on the Sailors' star guard Kellie Martin, travel to Scituate Wednesday night at 6:30 for a showdown which will decide the divisional crown.

"It was a good week," said coach Jessica Worden. "We only had one practice before the Silver Lake game, but we shook off any rust. The guards played well and we were able to fast break."

Along with the six-game streak, North had won 12 of its last 15 after the Pembroke game. The Red Raiders have assumed the identity of a defensive team. North scouts its opponents well and is able to switch seamlessly between a man-to-man and a zone depending on what the situation requires.

"I think the fact that we can play both well helps us," said Worden. "We have the quickness for a man-to-man and with our zone, our guards are so active out front that it's hard to find an open shot."

Most zones will yield a jump shot if the opposition is patient and moves the ball well. This is not true with North's zone. The three-guard set of McKay, Bulger, and Minton pressures the ball so well, there are few cracks for a clear jumper. Umoren and Camille Mullaney back it up with a strong inside presence and dependable rebounding.

"The guards are active and Maya and Camille usually limit the opposition to one shot," said Worden. "Maya has been great all year and Camille is a leaper."

North has bought into the defensive system and everything has flowed from that. The defense presents chances to run, Minton directs the break, and the Red Raiders end up with good scoring chances. Good defense produces a healthy team approach and North has it.

"I think it's been confidence," said Worden. "As the girls have seen success, they've grown more confident in their play. They know what they want. They want to be division champs."

On senior night against Pembroke, Worden started five seniors and six seniors saw extended action. Bulger, Sam McNally, Theresa Riordan, Kristyn Mark, and Annie Dow started the game. Christine Kelliher played well off the bench. It was a night of good feeling.

"It was awesome. The six seniors got to play a lot of minutes, and that's what we were looking for," said Worden.

NQ Falls To Duxbury, 4-1

BY BILL GRIFFIN

Junior goalie Nolan Greene and freshman forward Timmy Glynn have been two of the best stories on the North Quincy hockey team this year, and both continued their excellent play last week against first-place Duxbury.

The Dragons, unbeaten in league play, scored three goals in the final period to break open a close game and down the Red Raiders, 4-0 in a Patriot League contest played at the Quincy Youth Arena last week.

"It was a close game for two periods," said North coach Matt Gibbons, "but we made a couple of mental mistakes that cost us goals. You can't do that against a good team like Duxbury."

Greene was terrific again, turning back 30 Duxbury shots. Several of his saves were of the acrobatic variety. He has been the one stabilizing force for North all season. In the Red Raiders' first 17 games, he had made 397 saves and had a goals-against average of 0.94.

"He's been the obvious standout for us in every game," said Gibbons. "Against Duxbury, he kept us in the game again. He made some unbelievable stops. Mistakes cost us the goals. There was nothing he could do about them."

The Red Raiders played their best hockey in the first period and late in the third. Glynn was a standout throughout battling along the boards and forcing good scoring opportunities.

"He's been our best player for the last month," said Gibbons. "One of things you look for is improvement in a player and Timmy has improved by leaps and bounds. He never stops hustling. It's a nice thing to see."

After an evenly-played, scoreless first period, Duxbury took a slight edge in the action in the second. The Dragons made it pay off with a goal, good for a 1-0 lead entering the third.

After Duxbury went up 3-0, North had its best flurry of the game on a consecutive power plays. Glynn, Robbie Cameron and Nick McGaughey forced the action up front. Rudy Tryon blasted testing shots from the point, but the Red Raiders could not dent Duxbury goalie Chris Johnson.

"If we had been able to push one through, it might have been a different story, but we couldn't capitalize on our chances," said Gibbons.

In the first game between the two teams, North earned a 1-1 tie thanks to a goal with 22 seconds left by Andrew Currie.

Quincy Ties Hanover

By BILL GRIFFIN

Before the season began, legendary Quincy coach Bob Sylvia had words of advice for current coach Tim Lewis.

"He told me with a young team like ours, we wouldn't be playing our best hockey until the 10th or 12th game of the season," said Lewis. "I should never have doubted him. He was exactly right."

The Presidents continued their strong stretch run last week. Red-hot Patrick Freeman scored with just over two minutes left in the third period to give Quincy a 2-2 tie with Hanover in the annual Sylvia Cup game.

In another Patriot League contest, Silver Lake scored with 5:00 minutes left in the game to nip the Presidents, 2-1.

"The thing I liked about the Hanover game was it was the first time we came back in the third period to get a win or a tie," said Lewis. "I thought we were the better team, and if we played our best for 45 minutes, we would have won. But I liked the way we came back."

The Presidents controlled the first period limiting the Indians to three shots on goal. Freshman Jake Hallisey put Quincy up 1-0 in the first with a power-play goal. Ryan Harty did an excellent job at the point, patiently working and holding then puck until an opening developed. He found a passing lane to Hallisey in the slot and Hallisey buried it for a 1-0 lead.

Hanover tied it before the period ended, but Quincy dominated the play and the scoring chances.

"For the game, we hit four posts," said Lewis.

Hanover went up, 1-0 in the second and it stayed there until there were just over 2:00 left in the game.

"We called timeout to make sure Hallisey and Freeman were on the same page for what we wanted to do," said Lewis.

It worked just right. Hallisey found Freeman in the high slot and Freeman drove it home to earn the 2-2 tie.

Sophomore Ryan Higgins, who has played fine hockey in recent weeks, made 25 saves for Quincy. Sophomore Steve Ross played well on defense and Brian O'Callaghan had a strong two-way game on left wing.

The cup is named for Sylvia and his brother Jim who coached at Hanover before moving to the head job at Marshfield.

"I played for Bob at Quincy and so did my assistants," said Lewis. "The older I get the more I realize how much he knows about the game. His son-in-law is the Hanover coach. But I want to make clear Bob wore a blue Quincy jacket for the game."

The cup stayed with Hanover because the Indians won the first meeting of the season between the two teams, 3-1.

In the Silver Lake game, Quincy fell behind, 1-0 before Freeman tied it with his 19th goal of the season. The goal also stretched Freeman's scoring streak to 12 games. Hallisey worked the puck down low to Jo Jo McArdle, and McArdle found Freeman clear in the high slot for the goal with 5:00 left in the first.

It stayed at 1-1 until Silver Lake got the game-winner late in the third.

"I didn't think it was our best effort," said Lewis. "We had chances, but we have to do a better job chasing our rebounds."

Ross played another excellent game on defense, and Higgins was strong in net with 24 saves.

Quincy's Nicole Lee, Partner Score Personal Best At U.S. Figure Skating Championship

By EMILY TAFT

This past January, Quincy resident Nicole Lee traveled to Omaha, Nebraska to compete in the U.S. Figure Skating Championships with her pairs partner Tim Habeeb for the first time in her 10-year skating career.

Lee and Habeeb placed 12th out of 13 teams, but for them it wasn't about winning or placing in the top three, it was about learning from the experience and beating their own personal best scores in their long and short programs.

"Watching the other teams skate helped us learn a lot. We were able to see what they did on the ice and how they worked as a team," said Lee. "It is definitely a good start for us. I thought it went really well for our first time together in a big competition."

The pair beat their personal best score of their short program during the championships, and Lee said that their next goal is to focus on continuing to improve and work on their lifts and throw jumps until their next competition.

"I would like to get more lifts and throw jumps into our programs and work on making them much better," said Lee. "I would also like to work on moving up and placing in competitions."

Lee and Habeeb have only been skating together for a little less than a year, which makes their trip to the championships an even bigger accomplishment.

Lee, a 15-year-old sophomore at Quincy High School, began her career at the age of five as a singles skater. About a year ago she decided to try pairs skating in hopes of moving forward in her skating career. She auditioned a number of male skaters before meeting Habeeb, a 20-year-old sophomore at Boston College, who has years of pairs skating experience.

Before heading to Nebraska the pair practiced four to five times a week for three hours each day, not including the off ice training, conditioning and lifts. They placed fourth in the sectionals competition, which was their first major competition together, advancing to the championship round in Nebraska.

In order to get to the championships in Nebraska, Lee enlisted the help of local businesses and programs for donations. She received over $2,000 in donations sponsoring her and Habeeb from businesses such as Paul's Barber Shop, Newcomb Farm Restaurant, Officer Jamie Cochrane Memorial Road Race, Clancy Construction, Unchained Pizza, the American Legion—Jake Comer, Quincy Youth Baseball and Softball, and Pamela Carroll of Pearl Vision in Brockton.

Although there are no upcoming competitions, Lee and Habeeb will be keeping busy with appearances at Skatefest in March and they were also asked to be the guest skaters at UNH during the Synchronized skating teams annual send off show at the end of February. The pair will begin to train for the next competition season in March or April.

"They should be very proud of their accomplishments," said Lee's mom Robin. "It wasn't a mistake that they were there (at the championships). Nicole lit up the ice; it was amazing to watch her in that capacity. It's neat to know my kid has accomplished so much and has achieved her dreams."

NOTHING TO CHEER ABOUT

Cheerleading has transformed from a pom-pom waving exercise into a true sport that is fraught with injuries that come as a consequence of flipping bodies into the air and creating human pyramids over 15 feet tall. It stands to reason, therefore, that the more than 3 million cheerleaders nationwide aged 6 years and older should perform conditioning exercises and undergo physical exams that help avoid injury. Otherwise, cheerleaders of all ages may find themselves more susceptible to severe sprains, broken arms and legs, neck injuries, and concussions. In 2011, the Consumer Product Safety Commission reported that there were nearly 37,000 cases of girls aged 6-22 visiting emergency rooms for cheerleading-related injuries. Cheerleaders should be treated like the athletes they are.

Your brain, spinal cord and all your nerves control how your body works. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we believe in a team approach to your health care. Our staff forms a team of professionals dedicated to restoring you to full function and, if you have fitness goals, helping you achieve your peak performance. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where our entire staff is ready to help you identify your fitness goals and reach them safely, effectively, and in an economical fashion. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We offer computerized spinal scans. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. Female high school cheerleaders suffer fewer overall injuries than their counterparts in other sports (including gymnastics, soccer, and field hockey), but their rate of catastrophic injuries such as skull fractures and paralyzing spine injuries is higher.

Fitting New Tile Around Toilet

Question: I need to replace some cracked and chipped tile in the bathroom. Some of it was shaped to fit around the base of the toilet. Is it difficult to shape replacement tiles in the same way? -- Sarah S., Fort Worth, Texas

Answer: For first-timers, cutting ceramic tile to fit takes a bit of practice. At the home-improvement store, grab a few extra tiles of the same type as your replacement tiles, along with a tile cutter and a scoring tool. Practice cutting tiles in half, then in quarters, working to get a smooth break by first scoring along the cutting line (drawn with a pencil) across the top of the tile, then making the final cuts with the tile cutter. Next, practice cutting tiles to shape. For an arc, you may need to score deeper -- repeating along the cutting line a few times -- and then score down the middle of the arc before cutting.

Working from a template can make things a bit easier. If the chipped tiles haven't been removed, place as many of them back in place as possible. Trace the outline of the tile on a piece of paper, and use that trace as the template. If the tiles are too badly damaged, use as a template, mark the contours of the toilet pedestal base on a sheet of paper.

Now let's look at fixing the damage. Keep in mind that this repair works best if just a few tiles are damaged. If the damage is extensive, consider redoing the entire floor.

To replace the damaged tiles, tap a chisel gently along the edges to loosen the grout and then try to lift the tile. If it's stuck, place the chisel edge in the center of the tile and tap it with a hammer until the tile cracks. Then, pry out the pieces, being careful not to mar the surrounding undamaged tiles.

Once the damaged tiles are up, brush away the debris. This is a good time to inspect the underlayment (the flooring underneath the tile, often a plywood sheet) for water stains, swelling or other damage. Contact a flooring professional if you detect a problem.

Replace the damaged tiles with new ones that closely match the old ones. (Take one of the removed tiles to the home-improvement store to match them.) Make sure to buy a few extra, in case your initial cutting efforts don't work. Score and cut the new tiles to fit the spaces left by the old tiles.

Working one tile at a time, coat the bottom with a thin layer of grout or tile adhesive. Press the tile into place, as close to the toilet base as possible. Once they're set, apply grout generously to the spaces between each tile (about a 1/8 inch gap), using a wide putty knife to work in the tight area. Wipe away excess with a damp (not wet) cloth and let the tiles set for at least 24 hours.

To finish, scrub tiles with a lint-free cloth, soap and water to remove the hazy layer of excess grout. Dry completely, then apply a thin bead of silicone caulk between the toilet base and the edges of the tiles.

HOME TIP: Clean ceramic tile floors with a nonabrasive soap and warm water to keep from scratching the glossy surface.

222 Sea Street - Quincy

(617) 553-1880

www.RedDoor-RE.com

On Wednesday, Feb. 13 at approximately 1 a.m., Officers Sean Kelley and Daniel Clark were dispatched to the Kentucky Fried Chicken at 707 Hancock St. for an unruly male banging on the window. Upon arrival, Officer Kelley observed a vehicle parked in the drive through with the engine running.

As the officers approached the vehicle, they found it to be occupied by one male in the driver's seat. When the driver saw the officers approaching, he yelled out, "Really? All I want is some f@#$%^& food and the cops are here?" The driver then turned toward the customer service window and stated, "Really? You called the cops? You illegal f@#$%^& immigrant!"

Officer Kelley looked inside the work area of the restaurant and observed several employees huddled together in a corner in the kitchen. They appeared to be afraid of the driver. At this point, Officer Kelley went inside the restaurant to interview the employees while Officer Clark stayed with the driver.

According to the manager, the restaurant drive through was open for business. However, due to deliveries hindered by the blizzard, there were many food items listed on the menu that were not available. When the driver gave his food order, the employees told him that part of his order could not be filled. The driver grew angry as other employees attempted to reason with him, then became enraged and verbally abusive. The driver then blurted out, "If I wasn't white, you wouldn't do this to me."

The manager, feeling intimidated, asked the driver to leave. The driver refused to leave, continuing to yell at the staff and bang on the drive through window. Concerned for her safety as well as her employees, the manager called the Police.

With this information, Officer Kelley returned to the driver and told him that management wanted him to leave the property and not return. The driver then yelled, "Why? This is bull@#$%! I am an American and should be able to get my f@#$%^& food!" As the driver ranted on, Officer Kelley made observations about his sobriety, namely, that he detected a strong odor of an alcoholic beverage coming from the driver's breath and his eyes were glassy and bloodshot.

When asked how much he had been drinking, the driver responded, "Oh, so now you are going to bust my @#$%? Because they won't give me my f@#$%^& food?"

At this point, Officer Kelley asked the driver to step out of the vehicle. The driver replied, "Why? Do you have a search warrant?" Officer Kelley told the driver that he had reason to believe that he (the driver) had been drinking alcohol and then asked him if he would perform field sobriety tests.

The driver adamantly stated that he did not want to perform the tests and was not going to exit the vehicle. The officer told the driver that if he did not exit the vehicle, then the officers would have to remove him because they were concerned that he was unfit to drive, therefore, a hazard to all.

At this point, the driver turned the engine off and threw the keys on the passenger floor. As he exited the vehicle, he looked in the direction of the employees in the window and stated, "You illegal immigrant @#$%!" Officer Kelley directed the driver to the rear of his vehicle and noted that the driver appeared to be unsteady on his feet. The driver then yelled out, "I am not taking any of your tests!"

The field sobriety tests work two ways. If the driver was just tired and had one drink, it was possible that he was not intoxicated, so the field sobriety tests could clear him. The tests also help the officer to establish that the driver is too intoxicated to drive.

Based on the observations made of the driver, Officer Kelley believed that the driver was intoxicated, so he told the driver he was under arrest. As the officer instructed the driver to turn and face the vehicle in order to handcuff him, he began to yell again. Several customers from the adjacent 7-11 store gathered to observe the driver.

As Officer Kelley attempted to place handcuffs on the driver, he began to tense both his arms. Officer Clark assisted in securing the handcuffs on the driver. During this process, the driver continued to yell, "I'm an American and you are violating my civil rights."

The driver, a 27 year-old Quincy resident, was charged with, operating under the influence of alcohol and disorderly conduct.

Nice Work!

RULES OF THE ROAD

Turns on Red traffic Light:

You must come to a complete stop at a red traffic light. After stopping, you may then turn right unless a "NO TURN ON RED" sign is posted, and only after first giving the right-of-way to pedestrians and other vehicles. You may turn left on red only if you are turning from a one-way street onto another one-way street. The same rules that apply to right turns apply to left turns.

U-Turn: is a tight left turn that puts you in the opposite direction. You can make a U-turn if your path is clear and it is safe to do so. You cannot make a U-turn if a "NO U-TURN" sign is posted. You may only make a U-turn from the lane closest to the center line. Make sure you have enough room to complete the turn. Do not create a hazard for oncoming vehicles. Do not make a U-turn at the crest of a hill, near a curve, or anyplace where you or other drivers cannot see you from 500 feet away.

By SCOTT JACKSON

The blizzard that left Quincy without power and under 30 inches of snow earlier in February cost the city $1.4 in snow removal and related costs.

"The cost is $1.4 million, that's the best estimate that we have for the total cost of the storm," Public Works Commissioner Dan Raymondi told the City Council Monday night. "The manpower, the overtime, the vehicles, the private contractors, the purchase of salt."

Raymondi, Fire Chief Joseph Barron, Fire Capt. Richard Bryan, and Police Chief Paul Keenan appeared before the council to explain how the city responded to the storm and answer questions from councillors. Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten Hughes said her constituents felt

First Phase Of New Downtown To Begin Within 2 Weeks

By SCOTT JACKSON

The first phase of private construction on the new downtown is expected to begin within two weeks.

The first step of Beal/Street-Works $1.6 billion development of Quincy Center is the construction of Merchants Row. The $120 million project will see the creation of two new buildings – the 15-story Kilroy and the five-story Granite Trust Lofts – on the triangle-shaped block bounded Hancock and Chestnut Streets and Cottage Avenue and anchored by the Granite Trust Building, which will be renovated.

Abatement work on the site is expected to begin within two weeks, Street-Works Director of Construction Services Steve Chrusciel told The Sun Monday. A parking lot on the block behind the Granite Trust Building on the corner of Cottage Avenue and Chestnut Street is expected to be closed around April 1, and demolition of buildings on the block will start soon after that.

"We'll be starting abatement in the next two weeks. Demolition will start at about the time we close the parking lot," Chrusciel said.

Drivers that currently use the 76-spot parking lot will be reassigned to the Hancock and Quincy Mutual lots, with about half of the drivers going to each one.

Developers originally planned to start construction in February. Chrusciel said they encountered unusual utility connections to the buildings that required extra time to dismantle. The project, however, is still scheduled to be completed in the fall of 2014 as was originally intended when Merchants Row was planned last summer.

"Right now we're trending within two weeks of the timeline we had in July," Chrusciel said.

Once completed, Merchants Row will have 30,000 square feet of new street-level retail space, as well as 306 residential units. The Kilroy will be located where the soon-to-be closed parking lot now sits, and a 186-car parking lot will be built underneath it. The Granite Trust Lofts will be built next to the Granite Trust Building. A new public street will be built through the middle of the block. Buildings on the corner of Hancock Street and Cottage Avenue will remain untouched during construction.

'Squantumite Story Hour' March 13

The Squantum Community Association invites the public to attend "The Squantumite Story Hour" Wednesday, March 13 at 7 p.m.

The free event will be held at the First Church of Squantum, 164 Bellevue St., Squantum.

There will be stories of humor, peril, tremendous joy, ardent belief, longtime friendships, and simple pleasures in the seaside community of Squantum. There will also be stories from years ago of wide open spaces, beloved corner stores, war time support efforts, boating, and of course the cherished Squantum tradition, the Fourth of July parade.

Speakers will include Ralph Ames, Sr., Marie Clark, Pat Duggan, Mary LaFlamme, Maureen Mazrimus, Jim and Sandi Sumner, Bob Sealund, Jack Westerbeke, and Ruth Ann Wetherby.

QHA Maintenance Staff Praised For Clean-Up Efforts During Blizzard

Community Garden Eyed For Germantown

By KRIS KALABOKAS

Steve Perdios, head of Community Gardens of Quincy, a grass roots organization committed to encouraging the creation of community gardens throughout the city, approached the Quincy Housing Authority last Wednesday with a preliminary plan aimed at placing an easily accessible, public garden in Germantown.

"There's a big, gaping hole in Quincy where we don't really have community gardens and we're trying to improve upon that," said Perdios, who originally presented the idea to board members roughly two years ago. "It's something that's very popular in a lot of the urban locations around the country."

"We're asking to have the Community Preservation Act funds for this project, which amounts to about $10,000, reinstated," he said.

According to Perdios, the proposed site, a wide, open, and underutilized piece of land in the neighborhood, has "great visibility," is along the water's edge, and receives plenty of natural sunlight during the day and artificial light in the evening.

Commissioner Rosemary Wahlberg voiced concerns regarding community support, and indicated that those living within the immediate vicinity of the area would need to approve of the garden's location prior to committee approval.

"It just seems to me that for us to give approval before we talk to the residents of the Housing Authority is going backwards," she said.

Perdios stressed that any ideas presented that evening were tentative at best. "We're not asking you to give a final approval on this at all," he said. "We're just looking for you to give us the ability to continue to investigate this particular site."

Before any further steps can be taken, those within 50 to 100 yards of the area must be notified and definitive sketches must be presented to the board.

Green gardens weren't the only item on the evening's agenda. Executive Director Joseph MacRitchie emphatically thanked the Quincy Housing Authority's maintenance staff for their cleanup efforts during this month's monster storm which dumped a record-breaking amount of snow throughout New England.

"We really are grateful for the work that our staff does," he said. "Everyone would rather be at home or driving around in a nice warm plow."

According to MacRitchie, crews worked continuously -- for upwards of 40 hours -- keeping walkways, streets, and parking lots clear; an important task considering the amount of elderly tenants the QHA houses.

"It's a good thing we kept the walkways clear and so forth because the ambulance came and took people out," he said. "We had a laborer on duty in every one of our elderly buildings until late Saturday night and then back again Sunday morning."

Operating in the darkness proved challenging, but workers found creative ways to continue on with their mountainous task.

"I heard a story about a laborer who called his son and downloaded an app onto his cell phone so he could use a flashlight to get down the stairwell which was completely dark because the emergency generator hadn't come on," said MacRitchie.

Interviews for the position of executive director may take place as soon as March 18 and 19 according to Modernization Director Deborah Williamson. Currently, four candidates are being considered; however, it is unclear when a final decision will be made.

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows -- a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized...or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get: > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required > A mortgage with a competitive rate > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity -- most likely once-in-a-lifetime -- for first-time homebuyers. Is that you...or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

Big Lynch Boost; Phelan Comeback?

Cong. Steve Lynch has represented Quincy on Capitol Hill for only a few months but the South Boston Democrat is getting a big dose of support from local Democrats in his bid for the U.S. Senate.

Virtually every Quincy elected official who has a "D" after his or her name is working on behalf of Lynch who will lock heads with Capitol Hill colleague Cong. Ed Markey in the April 30 primary. Many political observers believe the winner of the Lynch-Markey primary will be a heavy favorite to fill the seat vacated by former Sen. John Kerry in the final election June 25. Kerry, of course, resigned his Senate seat to become Secretary of State in President Obama's second cabinet.

LYNCH

Lynch, when he announced his candidacy in the special U.S. Senate election last month, said a strong grass-roots effort would be a key factor in a successful primary bid against Markey. The Malden Democrat had a significant advantage in campaign cash as the Senate race left the starting line in January.

In Quincy, Lynch is getting a big boost from elected Democrats from all levels of government: from city councillors to the State House delegation as well as county officials and Mayor Thomas Koch. They are organizing support for Lynch as well as doing other tasks including collecting signatures to qualify for the primary ballot. Perhaps as many as 3,000 signatures for Lynch have been turned into the city's Election Department from campaign supporters. Some 10,000 are needed to get on the ballot.

And don't be surprised to see some local leaders cast in political TV ads supporting Lynch. Or making public announcements endorsing the congressman.

One elected official has already done that. Mayor Koch publicly announced his support for Lynch at a recent event kicking off the Quincy Park Conservancy before 500 attendees at the Granite Links ballroom. In an interview with The Sun, the mayor praised Lynch as a hard-working public servant who has cared about Quincy issues even before the city became part of his Congressional district this year.

"Steve Lynch, for some time now, even before he was our congressman, when we went to Washington, D.C. for help with the downtown, he saw us even though he was not our congressman as did (Cong.) Mike Capuano from Somerville," Koch said.

"Cong. Lynch was generous with his time, thoughtful with his questions and he's been very helpful. Since he's been our congressman, he has spent a lot of time in Quincy. He has shown great interest in the issues facing our city. I think he really cares and he's a real hard working guy," Koch said.

At a time when the public's perception of Congress is at an all-time low, Koch said Lynch is not part of the problem in Washington. The mayor also lauded Lynch for having political courage in not supporting the first Obama Health Care bill.

"He's in touch with his district. He knows what's going on. He's a Democrat, I'm a Democrat and obviously I don't get elected in a partisan format but I am a registered Democrat and I get frustrated with my own political party from time to time.

"I view Steve Lynch -- and the political beating he took from his own party on the first Obama health care bill because he wanted to wait a little bit to read it and see what the implications were for his constituents -- he got criticized big time from his own party but to me that's a badge of honor.

"He's a principle guy and I like that. I think the average voter would say we need more Steve Lynches (in the U.S. Senate). He's willing to go against his own party when it's right and he's willing to work with the other side. I think a lot of the guy.

"He's spent a lot of time in this city and he has been very helpful on a lot of issues. He's really gone to bat for us and I appreciate that."

The mayor said his endorsement in this special Senate race is different than the Scott Brown-Elizabeth Warren election last fall. Koch stayed neutral publicly in that race. He also says he's not afraid of any political backlash if Lynch falls short with his Senate bid.

"I'm not worried about that. The whole Brown-Warren thing was a whole different ball game. This is an open seat. I was working with Sen. Brown so I didn't publicly endorse Elizabeth Warren. I just didn't think that would be right as the mayor of the city of Quincy to get involved in that."

The mayor said he's not speaking for the people of Quincy in the Lynch race.

"I'm speaking for me and I certainly want the people of Quincy to know why I am with Steve Lynch but everyone can make their own decision," the mayor said.

Koch also stressed the importance of Quincy voters going to the polls in the special Senate election.

"I think it's important for the people of this city to understand that election turnouts people pay attention to at the higher levels of government. And if our turnout continues to drop -- although we are better than some of the other urban centers -- we'll have less attention paid to us.

"My goal during the campaign is to get as many people out to vote in a special election as we possibly can hopefully to support Steve Lynch in his bid for Senate."

WE'VE MENTIONED BEFORE that a Lynch Senate win would trigger a scramble for his open Congressional seat in the 8th District that includes Quincy.

You can add another Quincy name to the list of potential candidates who are seriously considering running for Congress if the seat opens.

That's former Mayor William Phelan who calls the prospects of an open Congressional seat intriguing.

"I am constantly asked, by people I see on the streets, when am I going to run for office again. I love public service," Phelan told The Sun. "The thought of running for Congress is intriguing, and I would have to give it serious consideration if the seat was to open.

"Washington could certainly use a fresh face," Phelan added.

The former mayor served six years as the city's top elected official. He also served two years on the Quincy School Committee. For the past two years, he has served as the administrator for the Town of Holbrook.

Phelan, coincidentally, also maintains a law office in Quincy in the same building at 1245 Hancock St. where Lynch recently opened a district office for constituents.

Another Quincy Democrat -- state Sen. John Keenan -- has expressed an interest in seeking an open Congressional seat. Other potential contenders include Braintree Mayor Joseph Sullivan and state Rep. Martin Walsh of Dorchester -- both Democrats -- and Republican state Sen. Robert Hedlund of Weymouth. Walsh's district includes one Quincy precinct: Ward 3 Precinct 3.

Scenes From Yesterday

Baptist Church, Wollaston, Mass.

THIS 1915 POSTCARD is a view of the Wollaston Baptist Church on the corner of Warren and Prospect Avenues on Wollaston Hill. Dedicated in 1873, this is the second oldest wooden church building in Quincy. It was one of the first buildings erected in the Wollaston Heights subdivision and was sited on land donated by the Wollaston Land Associates. Built in the Gothic Revival Style its square tower is peaked with a spire and four peaked dormers. The bell in the tower was donated by Henry H. Faxon. The original portion of the church on the right was expanded twice in the first 20 years and the chapel and auditorium on the left were added in 1913. The postcard was published by Charles Sherman, a city assessor who had a real estate office on Newport Avenue. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

GOP Needs Hard Workers, Not Monday Morning QBs

I wish to respond to Mr. Chuck Fazio's recent letters to The Sun in which he bemoaned and belittled the state Republican Party for not being what he thinks it should be. He alleged that the Party has been taken over by RINO's who don't uphold the hard line policies of ultra conservatives such as himself.

Although I understand Mr. Fazio's frustrations, I don't agree with his conclusions. I, too, am a Republican with strong conservative views but I am also a realist who believes that the Party, especially here in this Blue State, must be all inclusive, welcoming and absorbing all views if it is to be successful.

In his most recent diatribe Mr. Fazio pays a left-handed compliment to Kirsten Hughes on becoming the GOP State Chair and then proceeds to slam, debase and denigrate Scott Brown for what Mr. Fazio perceives as a betrayal by Brown of his GOP backers. I found his use of over-wrought and spiteful rhetoric to be petty, uncalled for and childish. It seemed to me that Mr. Fazio could have expressed his views in a far less vitriolic manner.

If Mr. Fazio studies the campaign he'll see that Brown acted as he said he would. He voted in accordance with what he believed were in the best interests of ALL the people of Massachusetts. I grant you that not all of his votes and decisions were what I wanted and were a bit upsetting to me, but I accepted that they were done because Brown weighed all the options and voted for what he believed was right. Imagine that, a politician voting for what he believes and not what his party dictated. Can that criteria be used to rate Elizabeth Warren, John Kerry or any of the Democratic representatives the state has sent to D.C.? I doubt it.

Mr. Fazio states that if Brown runs again for office, "I and my friends have vowed to pledge our lives, fortunes and sacred honor to destroy his political aspirations." How perfectly infantile and ridiculous! Although every vote counts, hopefully Brown won't need those two or three.

Mr. Fazio lectures Hughes on how to rebuild the state Republican Party, telling her to abandon ties with Brown, Romney and other candidates who don't totally adhere to his philosophy. Knowing Ms. Hughes to be a dedicated, intelligent, hard working individual I believe she will do what is necessary to improve the Party's position. The Party is in good hands!

My personal opinion is that we need candidates and supporters who will work hard to bring to the people of Massachusetts the ideals for which we stand; who will be willing to knock on doors and hold signs during campaigns, who will speak out, support their local Republican committees and work in unity with all Republicans. What we don't need are Monday morning quarterbacks whose negativity and mean spiritedness do more harm than good.

Currently the GOP has four qualified candidates vying for the Republican spot on the upcoming Senate election. Will we see Mr. Fazio and his friends out working in support of one of them?

Thank You, Stefan Gurgian

When our family moved to Quincy, we were thrilled that we had an experienced cobbler in our neighborhood. The word cobbler was associated with our resident footwear man, Stefan Gurgian.

Using 'cobbler' was an American term. Stefan was an artist in his trade in his native country, Romania. He mended and stitched our family's shoes, belts, bags, and anything made from leather. In his country of origin he worked with a team to make shoes. I know this because I asked him to make a pair of shoes for my husband. "Oh!" he said, "it takes many men to do this."

Today, most of our footwear is worn and either destroyed or thrown away. We still have men that will work on leather shoes. They are few and far between.

We were very fortunate to have had Stefan in Quincy all these years. We wish him good health and peace and thank him for his service. For us, the memories will become more vivid as time passes.

Building Height Limits Proposed

By SCOTT JACKSON

Concerned residents and city officials packed the City Council Chamber to a proposed height limit for buildings in Quincy.

The proposal by the Quincy Citizens Association would limit buildings to 10 stories or 100 feet. The crowd was split on the proposal - 19 individuals spoke against it and 18 spoke in favor while 39 signed in favor and 31 signed in opposition. QCA president Pasquale DiStefano warned that trash collection and DPW services were already maxed out, and that water pressure was already dangerously low for fire suppression.

"The QCA is anxious to preserve, at all costs, the present character of our city," DiStefano added.

Among the groups opposing the restrictions were the Planning Department, Housing Authority, and the Quincy Center Business & Professional Association.

"How can we expect Quincy to grow if we tell developers they can build but must make their buildings 10 stories or less," John Murray, executive director of the QCBPA said.

Councillor John Quinn predicted the council would not pass the measure. DiStefano said a referendum could be held if the council did vote it down, and expected it to pass a citywide vote.

CONFUSION REIGNS AT GAS STATIONS

During a nationwide oil shortage, confusion continued in Quincy about how much gasoline could be sold. But lines at the pump appeared to be getting shorter.

Gas prices varied widely across the city, from 47.9 to 69.9 cents a gallon. Some stations allowed customers to fill their tanks up, and others only allowed $3 worth of gas to be sold at a time.

Most gas station owners said motorists were handling the shortages 'pretty good.' But Joe Clauss of Driscoll's Shell Station said customers went crazy when they saw a fuel truck making a delivery to an underground tank.

"They went wild. A Volkswagen hit the gas truck. Another car ran up on the island in front of the station and got stuck," Clauss said.

The shortened lines were credited to Gov. Francis Sargent scrapping the odd-even system in weekends and added shipments of gas.

LARAIA CALLS FOR CEMETERY PROBE

Councillor Joseph LaRaia anticipated a thorough police investigation of the Cemetery Department and said he would keep a close eye on the matter before doing any investigating on his own.

LaRaia wanted the police to continue digging in a dump behind the Naval Reserve Center of Sea Street. Officials under the leadership of Lt. David Rowell did some digging, but stopped because the ground was too hard. No bones were discovered during that dig, but a previous one found animal bones. LaRaia maintained that more digging would find human bones.

"I'm sure if they continue to dig they will find what we know is down there," he said.

4 Local Students Cast In 'Reflections Of A Rock Lobster'

Boston Children's Theatre Production Begins March 9

Four local high school students are cast in the Boston Children's Theatre (BCT) production of the play "Reflections Of A Rock Lobster."

Based on the autobiography by Aaron Fricke, and adapted by BCT Executive Artistic Director Burgess Clark for the stage, "Reflections Of A Rock Lobster" is the true story of a gay teenager and his fight to defend his life and preserve his civil rights in the wake of bullying, prejudice and intolerance.

Local performers cast are:

- 16-year old Ellis Hampton who portrays the role of high school student 'Jeff.' Ellis was most recently seen in BCT's production of The Velveteen Rabbit and has also appeared at BCT in last season's World Premiere of Reflections of a Rock Lobster. A junior at Quincy High School, Ellis has performed in Arsenic and Old Lace and The Foreigner at Quincy High School.

- 17-year old Nick McNeil of Quincy plays the role of 'Bob Cote.' Nick appeared in BCT's World Premiere production of Reflections of a Rock Lobster last season. He has also performed with The Company Theater in All Shook Up, the Riverside Theater Works in You're A Good Man Charlie Brown, and at North Quincy High School in Brighton Beach Memoirs.

- Playing the role of 'Jon,' is 18-year-old Jeremy Mele.

A senior at North Quincy High School, Jeremy has been seen in several school productions including Flowers for Algernon, Leading Ladies, Murder Takes the Veil, and 12 Angry Jurors. He has also performed with Riverside Theater Works in Romeo and Juliet, and with The Footlight Club in The Tempest.

- Niamh O'Connor of Quincy will play the role of high school cheerleader 'Bea Duvwalge.' Niamh most recently appeared with BCT in The Velveteen Rabbit and was also seen in BCT's productions of Miss Saigon and last season's World Premiere of Reflections of a Rock Lobster. A senior at Quincy High School, Niamh appeared in the school production of Arsenic and Old Lace.

"Reflections Of A Rock Lobster" is set in 1980 and centers around the character of Aaron who is gay. With that stigma, he is subjected daily to violence and rejection—leaving him feeling dejected and with thoughts of suicide.

Rising from his despair, Aaron strikes back by suing his Rhode Island high school for the right to escort his boyfriend to the prom. By standing up for his personal and civil rights and for refusing to apologize for who he is, Aaron not only wins in court, but he also wins in the hearts and minds of his peers and his community. His strength and ultimate victory help pave the way for legions of gay and lesbian students.

In March 2012, BCT became the first children's theater in the country to address the issues of bullying and growing up gay in a mainstage production.

"We knew it was a risk to produce a new work that focused on these sensitive themes, but it was a risk we were willing to take because of the importance of the message," said Clark, who is also directing the production. "The play has had a tremendous impact on our audiences and the community. The ground swell of support was so strong that we felt a responsibility to produce the show again for an even broader audience."

Currently residing in San Francisco, Fricke has continued to work closely with BCT since the World Premiere last season. "I was overwhelmed by the reaction to the piece from the public and from school groups. This production has sparked incredible and insightful discussions and I'm extremely proud of the impact the play has had on the community," said Fricke. "I think everyone is able to relate to what I experienced. The fact that bullying and prejudice still exist today in our society, makes this play even more relevant and powerful."

In addition to a student cast of 25 actors from 18 area communities, the production also features several veteran Boston stage actors, including Richard Snee, Doug Bowen-Flynn and Kippy Goldfarb.

Performances will be in the Wimberly Theatre at the Boston Center for the Arts, 527 Tremont St., Boston, on March 9, 10, 15, 16 and 17.

Seafood Stuffed Shells

With the Lenten season upon us or just because today's recipe is one of my favorites, as well as the family's-a dinner with shells stuffed with seafood does the trick.

I made these the day before which made it a lot easier when the family was coming to dinner. With this entrée, you don't need very much else to have-we had it with an antipasto salad to begin with and a side vegetable.

SEAFOOD STUFFED SHELLS

2 large shrimp (cut)
5 scallops (cut)
1 egg
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 cup seasoned bread crumbs
2 tablespoons sherry

½ to ¾ pound shells
2-3 cups tomato sauce
Grated Romano or Parmesan cheese

Heat the oil and butter and sauté the shrimp and scallops. Add the breadcrumbs, beaten egg and sherry. Stir until consistency is ready for the stuffing. Set aside. Add a smidgen of water if needed.

Cook the shells al dente, drain and cool. Stuff each shell until full.

At the bottom of a baking pan, add a little tomato sauce, then pace the shells side by side, topping them with more sauce, grated cheese and the shredded cheese (one layer only).

Bake covered in a 350-degree oven for 25 minutes, then uncovered for another ten minutes or until the cheese is hot and melted.

Lamb Pops

I was looking over some of my recipes and found one I hadn't made in awhile, and forgot how delicious it is and not too difficult to prepare.

I used lamb patties for this recipe, because of its distinct flavor and the fact that it is made with a pop-over recipe. But if you are not a fan of lamb, any other meat will do.

LAMB POPS

1 pound ground lamb
½ cup milk
1 egg
1 teaspoon chopped onion
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tablespoon grated cheese
1 cup seasoned breadcrumbs
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
Batter for the Pop-Overs
2 eggs

1 cup flour
1 cup milk
salt and pepper to taste

For the lamb patties, in a bowl, mix the egg, milk, onion, cheese and bread crumbs. Mix well and make in round patties.

Heat the oil and sauté the patties until done. Don't over cook because they have to go into the oven. Set aside while you make the pop-over mix.

For the pop-over mix, beat the egg, milk and flour and blend well.

Pour the mixture into a round greased cake pan. Place the patties in the batter making them into a circle. Bake in a 450-degree oven for 30 minutes and then a 350-degree oven for another 15 minutes. When they are done, each patty is surrounded by the mixture, and looks and tastes so delicious.

African-American Music Topic Tonight

What common threads unite the music of Jay-Z, B.B. King, Aretha Franklin, Mahalia Jackson, Duke Ellington and Scott Joplin?

How did West African folk music influence the development of rock 'n' roll? How is hip-hop related to jazz?

Wheaton College professor Delvyn Case will explore these questions and more in this presentation on the history of African-American music tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Using live musical examples as well as audio excerpts, Case will provide a thought-provoking overview of the rich tapestry of black vernacular music in the American over the past 300 years.

Case is an active composer, conductor, scholar, performer and educator. He is a past faculty member at Boston College, Northeastern University, Eastern Nazarene College and Longy School of Music and is also the Music Director of the Quincy Bay Chamber Orchestra and the Great Woods Chamber Orchestra.

The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Show Dates March 7-8 At 7:30 PM; March 9 At 2 North Quincy High School To Present 'All Shook Up'

The North Quincy High School Performing Arts Department will present its version of "All Shook Up" in the Peter Chrisom, Sr. Auditorium at North Quincy High School.

Show dates are Thursday and Friday, March 7 and 8 at 7:30 p.m., and Saturday, March 9 at 2 p.m.

An adaptation of William Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" set to the music of Elvis Presley, "All Shook Up" is a story about a small, mundane, mid-western town that comes to life when a newcomer arrives and tries to shake things up.

As the story unfolds, love interests develop, mistaken identities spark hilarious outcomes, and the town learns how to rock and roll thanks to the Elvis-like newcomer. The show features a bevy of Elvis' number one favorites including "I Can't Help Falling in Love With You," "Hound Dog," and "Jailhouse Rock." With an up-beat score and diverse characters, this show is fun for the whole family.

The production showcases over 50 North Quincy High students, as well as students from several elementary and middle schools in Quincy. Directed by Theatre teacher Tracy Phelan and choreographed by Dance teacher Marisa Smith, the show features senior Nick McNeil as "the roustabout" Chad and junior Gabrielle LaPierre as the tomboy mechanic, Natalie.

The cast production features 50's styled teeny-boppers complete with poodle skirts, leather jackets, blue suede shoes and a juke box. Rounding out the ensemble are more than a dozen North Quincy staff members, ranging from security guards to classroom teachers.

Other staff members contribute in different ways as well. Band Director Rich Kenneally conducts the orchestra, Choral Music teacher Tim Carew develops the singing talent, while Wood Shop teacher Michael Bowes constructs the sets for the production with his classes.

"Musicals bring out the creative side in everyone," Phelan said. "Our cast is amazing. It's so great to have the support of Principal Rob Shaw and Assistant Principal Mike Connor who both truly believe in the importance of the arts."

"The mission of the show is to put a smile on your face and to have you dancing in your seats."

North Quincy High School and the Peter Chrisom, Sr. Auditorium are handicapped accessible.

Tickets are $10 and can be purchased in advance at the NQHS main office or at the door on the date of the performances.

Doors to the theatre open at 7 p.m., and the show time is 7:30 p.m. for the March 7 and 8 performances.

There is also a 2 p.m. show Saturday, March 9 (doors open at 1:30 p.m.)

Quincy High School Senior With 4.82 GPA Nominated By Two Of His Teachers

Billy Malas Outstanding Vocational Student Of The Year

By EMILY TAFT

On paper, Quincy High School senior Billy Malas looks like the perfect candidate for the 2013 Outstanding Career Vocational Technical Education Student of the Year.

He is second in his class and has a GPA (Grade Point Average) of 4.82, but it is what he has done throughout his four years of high school that sets him above the other candidates.

Malas, a double major in Engineering and Information Technology (IT), was nominated for the award by two of his teachers, which he said was something he didn't expect.

"I was surprised that my name was nominated twice. In previous years, I had seen the Tech Student of the Year go to many of my friends and thought it was really cool and that it would be really cool if I got that award," said Malas. "Senior year was so crazy busy that I totally forgot about it until Mr. (Ed) Holmes told me he had nominated me and at that point I was honored to be nominated for the award."

"Then, I thought since Mr. Holmes already nominated me, Mr. (Paul) Tully would nominate someone else. I did not realize that one person could be nominated twice by two different teachers, so when Mr. Tully told me I was nominated by him too, I was all the more honored to be chosen by two of my teachers to receive this award."

One student from each program in QHS was nominated and then they were cut down to five candidates. Those five students were then interviewed by six members of the Quincy school community partners. As Quincy's winner, Malas will attend the 27th annual state Outstanding Vocational Student of the Year banquet in Worcester.

"He was very articulate when he responded back to the various questions that the partners had asked. His experience, his community involvement here at Quincy High School as well as outside the high school, along with being a double major, not only IT but engineering is what made him stand out above the rest," said Keith Segalla, executive director of Career & Technical Education and Instructional Technology for Quincy Public Schools.

"It is unusual because he is a double major but they both nominated the one student because he is exceptional in both majors. We don't have many students like that at Quincy High School that do double majors."

QHS Information Technology Teacher Ed Holmes nominated Malas in a two-page letter describing him as exceptional, bright, hard working, and the epitome of the honor student.

"He's an exceptional student. He is top of his class; he is very active with the IT program and very talented in programming. He applies that work readily. He is able, not just to take the class as what it is, programming for the sake of programming, he envisions what it can be and takes it to the next level, which is far beyond the scope of most high school students. It's kind of amazing," said Holmes.

"He is very deserving of this honor and any other honors that could possibly come his way. He can do everything. If there were enough hours in the day he could be welding, he could be designing, he would try them all."

Malas is already a well-rounded 18-year-old. He participates in the National Honors Society, Science National Honors Society, the Programming Club, the Philosophy Club, and SkillUSA where he recently won the gold medal at the state competition and placed in the top 10 at the national level, among many other volunteering services and after school activities.

"Quincy High School is very lucky to have Billy Malas in a number of ways," said QHS Principal Frank Santoro. "It's his compassion for his fellow beings that we're very lucky to have, as he assists kids every afternoon for homework as well as what he is doing in the community. We would like all of our students to be like Billy."

He has also helped the school build different programs such as a new Point of Sales (POS) system for the Presidents Café along with a new license agreement software that will be used by Holmes to teach his students to always read the agreement before installing the software. He has also created an Android App called 'Guide to Quincy High' for incoming freshman and parents, which allows freshmen to input their class schedules along with giving class-to-class directions.

"Right now it is currently published on the Android market," said Malas. "That's what I have been working on for some of this year in my period two classes is making it ready for it to be QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL senior Billy Malas (left) recently received the Quincy Public School's 2013 Outstanding Career Vocational Technical Education Student of the Year Award. Malas was nominated by two of his teachers to receive the award and will attend a dinner in Worcester with students from all over the state who received the title in their respective schools. Malas is a double major at Quincy High School and is ranked number two in his class of 379 students. At right, Malas works on a project that allows video game users to exercise and play video games at the same time. published and actually publishing it, and making sure it's up and available for next year's freshmen."

Malas is working with two other students in his design and development class on creating a new way for kids to play video games. The project, titled 'Holo-deck Alpha: The New Way to Play Video Games,' is inspired by ride he took to Disney World.

"My freshman year I was in hyper robotics and we went to Orlando for a trip. While we were there we went to Disney Quest, and there was this one thing where you went on this ship and you put on these helmets and it was like your virtual world, where ever you moved your world would move and you had pretty much a wand that was your sword," said Ma-las. "I thought it would be really cool if we made that but only for the house, make it cheap enough so the average family can just have it for their own house, and easily store it. So I decided I kind of wanted to make that happen."

Malas has always had a love for creating things and making his ideas come to life along with working with computers to make that happen, which is why he hopes to continue on that path in college as either a computer science major or computer engineering major. He has been accepted to WPI (Worcester Polytechnic Institute) and ENC (Eastern Nazarene College) and is waiting to hear back from Harvard, Yale and MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology).

"Billy is going to be a great student no matter where he goes. He is going to make it a better place," said Engineering Technology Instructor Paul Tully. "To say that Billy is intellectually gifted or driven to succeed would be accurate but it wouldn't be enough. In addition to being what I consider the best student that I have ever had in front of me in 17 years at QHS, he might be the best young person I have ever met."

Republicans Need Grass Roots Growth

Like Chuck Fazio, I too wish Kirsten Hughes luck as the new chair of the Massachusetts Republican Party.

In a recent series of letters, Fazio has been dumping on the Republicans for being too RINO, Republicans I name only. This time around, Frank McCauley is now the good as opposed to being the bad guy previous.

As a conservative Democrat, I speak as an outsider to the GOP. The last time I flirted with the Republicans was back between Avi Nelson against incumbent Edward W. Brooke back in September 1978. After that race, I returned to Democratic status. Again in 1990, I became a Republican to help elect Bill Weld. After that election, I returned to the Democrats where I have stayed since.

Today, I consider myself either as a Reagan Democrat or a part of what I would like to call a working-class, Stevie Lynch Democrat. Hughes will have her work cut out for her. The Republican Party here is almost not even a true political party anymore.

Exhibit A: when Scott Brown decided against running again in the GOP primary for the vacant seat this April, the Republican apparatus showed it had no Plan B. However, Brown has shown that Republicans can still get elected here but it isn't an easy task. Sean Bielat just dropped out of the running, leaving an unknown former Navy SEAL and possibly former US Attorney Michael Sullivan as the GOP only hope for victory.

Fazio is right on one count that the Republicans need to start a new growth from the grass roots up. It also must develop some serious field working team. As for the RINO assertion, here in Massachusetts, party candidates must address the electorate in front of them. We are one of the most Blue states in America. We can not in a million years ever elect a Marco Rubio or Ted Cruz to Capitol Hill and that can not be denied.

However, as Brown has shown, we can still elect moderate conservative Republicans who are able to work together with Democrats to get common sense legislation passed that benefits Bay Staters and Americans across the country.

Unlike Rubio, if Brown were to run for governor in 2014, I would take a serious look at him and compare him to the Democratic gubernatorial candidates at that time. I don't consider Republicans who try to pass moderate conservative legislation as RINOs but rather realists.

Brown did a good job in his brief tenure in the US Senate and the voters of Massachusetts will soon regret their choice made last November. The Republican Party needs to be reinvigorated with newer and younger voices. The party needs to broaden its base rather than kicking out Republicans who don't follow the hard-right conservative line.

Mitt Romney lost in 2012 because he was the wrong candidate at the right time. Right now, looking at prospects being mentioned for 2016, the name Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey comes to mind. In a recent poll he received a 74 favorable percent from voter polled. He is a moderate East Coast conservative Republican. He doesn't play to the political extremes. He comes across as the voice of American families trying to struggle on as the financial and cultural crash continued unabated.

The only thing liberals seem to have going for them is that Governor Chris Christie is a fat-boy. He could be the worse nightmare for liberals if he runs for the White House in 2016.

Get a grip on yourself Chuck, things aren't as bad as you think they are.

Noel DiBona Running For School Committee

NOEL DiBONA

Noel DiBona will formally announce his run for school committee at his campaign kickoff event Thursday March 21st from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Commonwealth Restaurant in Quincy Center.

DiBona graduated from the University of Massachusetts Boston with a Bachelor of Arts degree in sociology. He also earned an Associates of Science degree in business administration at Quincy College. He attended both Point and Sterling Middle Schools and graduated from Quincy High School in 1993.

DiBona is a small business owner operating out of Quincy- Russ DiBona and Son Landscaping. The company is in its 17th year with his dad Russ DiBona. Russ is a Vietnam Veteran whom devoted 23 years of his life in the U.S. Air Force.

DiBona said he gets his work ethic and drive from his dad. "Dad taught me to have strong family values and to always look for the positive in every situation," he said.

DiBona is currently the Junior Vice Commander for the Sons of American Legion at Morrisette Post 294 in West Quincy. DiBona helps maintain the Sons of American Legion Island in front of Fort Square Church, where over 100 flags are raised during the weeks before and after Memorial Day and Veterans Day.

DiBona praised Paul Moody, the commander of the Sons of American Legion. "I've learned so much from Paul on how to help veterans. This past holiday season, we visited senior housing in Quincy and gave Christmas cards to war veterans. That was a touching experience," he said.

DiBona is involved in the community and is the president of the Ward 2 Civic Association, the treasurer of the Ward 2 Democratic Committee and a Park and Recreation board member. DiBona volunteers his time as the head coach of the Quincy Point Panthers youth football team and is an assistant coach for Quincy High baseball.

He also volunteers his time with Quincy Access Television (QATV) as a sideline reporter for the Quincy and North Quincy High football games, and a color commentator for the boys and girls Quincy and North Quincy High basketball games.

DiBona was a standout athlete at Quincy High playing football and baseball where he was a captain of both teams. DiBona talked about playing youth sports in Quincy. He was a member of the 1992 baseball state champions for Morrisette Legion Post 294 out of West Quincy. He played Babe Ruth baseball for Quincy Police and won the championship as a 15-year-old. He played basketball for St. Joseph's church league and Quincy Presidents youth basketball teams.

But, DiBona said his "true love" was being a part of the Quincy Point Panthers youth football team.

"I don't know where I would be today without youth sports and structure of team," he said. "I learned so much from coaches throughout my lifetime not just about the sport but about how to handle myself in life. It is so important to give back to my community for what my community gave to me."

DiBona and his wife Niamh live in Quincy and have an infant son, Tyler. DiBona talks about how different life is perceived when you become a parent. DiBona says safety and well-being of the children at the Quincy schools is his number one interest. The recent horror in Newtown, CT has parents concerned of their child's safety in school. DiBona is concerned with the doors, locks and windows in all elementary, middle and high schools. He said Mayor Thomas Koch is doing a fantastic job with prioritizing newly built schools in the city, Quincy High a few years ago and Central Middle School this fall.

DiBona said he also supports a new Sterling Middle School for the children of South and West Quincy.

DiBona gave Ward 4 city council seat some careful consideration but in the end decided he wanted to seek a School Committee seat because he is more geared towards the children of the community and in the school system. He attended the Quincy Public Schools as a child and wants great opportunity for his child.

"The best way to contribute is to be on School Committee and that is what I intend to do," he said.

For more information about DiBona "Like" his Facebook Page, Noel DiBona for School Committee or email him at noeltd26@gmail.com.

Moratorium Sought On Rx Marijuana Dispensaries

prior to a regular council meeting. Gutro said the moratorium would allow the council to wait and see what regulations the state Department of Public Health (DPH) sets for dispensaries and how other municipalities react. The council could use that knowledge to fine-tune a proposal by Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci that would severely limit where dispensaries could open.

"I honestly believe that Councillor Palmucci's ordinance — pieces of it if not much of it — will be enacted moving forward," Gutro said. "I would like to make the motion that the Ordinance Committee and ultimately the council adopt a nine-month moratorium which would give us ample time to get regulations from the state and learn from other communities."

Palmucci's proposal, introduced in November, would restrict dispensaries from opening within 1,500 feet of a residence, limiting them to a handful of possible locations in Quincy that include the Fore River Shipyard, Crown Colony, and Quarry Hills among others. The Ordinance Committee voted against that plan by a 7-2 vote Monday, with Palmucci and Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest voting in favor of the proposal. Palmucci asked for the vote because he felt it was high time to set community standards to regulate dispensaries.

"Four months have passed — I don't want to wait anymore and I stress that I don't think we should wait anymore and we should set some sort of community standard as to how we're going to regulate these dispensaries," Palmucci said.

Councillors expressed support for holding off on approving Palmucci's plan before Gutro formally proposed the nine-month ban.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee said he would be in favor of a moratorium because he felt that if the council rushed to approve any regulations, it might not have a chance to make any necessary changes quickly enough.

"I doubt that in the way that our attention is diverted quite often up here, if we craft something that is imperfect — nothing's perfect in regards to the ordinances we pass — that it may be sometime before we get to revisit it and correct it," McNamee said. "I'd be more inclined to address it once."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin, the Ordinance Committee chairman, noted the council once approved a moratorium prohibiting paving over yards to allow the body time to draw up an ordinance regulating the practice. "It gave us the opportunity to create an ordinance that is now in place and I think it has effectively dealt with the problem," he said.

Even without an ordinance or moratorium in place now no dispensaries could open until the DPH draws up the rules, which likely won't happen until a May 1 deadline to do so approaches, Coughlin went on to add.

"Technically speaking, no one can apply for a license until the promulgation of the DPH regulations which is going to be May 1st and I can almost bet it's not going to be before," Coughlin said.

Council President Michael McFarland advised leaving the proposal in committee and waiting for state regulations to be issued.

"I think we have about 60 days before May 1st. My recommendation would be to leave this in committee and revisit it — if not once more maybe twice more.

Maybe sometime between now and then DPH will issue the regulations we've been waiting for," McFarland said.

Home cultivation of marijuana with a doctor's approval has been allowed since Jan. 1 and will be allowed under hardship circumstances even after dispensaries open. Palmucci said his plan would prohibit any hardship cultivation going forward.

The possible conflict between state law and city ordinances was a concern for others at the meeting. Councillor Joe Finn suggested it would be better to wait and see what rules the state sets for home cultivation before trying to enact a ban.

"There's a lot of wisdom, I think, in waiting and seeing how those regs are promulgated — for example, how do they address that specific issue because it's hard for me to see how we're not in clear conflict right off the bat with that if that's our interpretation of it," Finn said in regards to a ban on home cultivation. "I think we should have this conversation and keep moving it forward, but I don't think it's absolutely critical that we pass something tonight."

Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten Hughes said the DPH to issue rules might not address everyone's concerns. But she felt the council needed to address the cultivation issue before moving to a vote, and said Palmucci's request to vote on his original plan wasn't beneficial to anyone.

"Waiting for DPH's regulations regarding licensure is not necessarily going to answer the questions we have or the concerns everyone has here," Hughes said. "But I do think it's important to address those areas of the law that have been identified as possible conflicts that might fail if the city's brought into court if it's challenged."

"I think we have a responsibility to make the strongest ordinance that we can and possibly scheduling another meeting to discuss those aspects of the law or making some amendments to it I think is the more responsible choice here rather than moving it to vote. An all or nothing approach is not beneficial for folks at this point."

Coughlin said he felt any attempts to prohibit hardship cultivations at the local level would ultimately be unsuccessful.

"There's nothing that I can see that we can do to prevent that from happening. I don't think the law allows that. I don't think the DPH regulations are going to allow for that," Coughlin said.

Coughlin suggested the council look into an ordinance under consideration in Pittsfield that would require anyone with a permission to grow marijuana in their homes to notify city officials there. That information would be available to public safety officials — firefighters, for instance, could take precautions if a fire broke out where they knew marijuana was growing.

Routine Traffic Stop Leads To Drug Bust

By EMILY TAFT

A Dorchester man arrested by Quincy Police Monday for heroin and cocaine charges was held on $25,000 cash bail after pleading not guilty in Quincy District Court Tuesday.

Quincy Police stopped Maximo J. Velazquez, 27, at 12:10 p.m. Monday on Copeland Street after he failed to stop at a stop sign at the corner of Arthur and Garfield Streets.

According to Quincy Police Captain John Dougan, Velazquez said he was on his way to Home Depot to buy some paint and failed to make eye contact with the officer. Dougan said Velazquez was driving a 2005 grey Mercedes Benz, which documents showed was rented under someone else's name. When the officer checked his driver's license he found open drug cases against him.

The officer began searching the car with his K-9 partner Khiya, who is trained to sniff out drugs. Dougan said they found 22 bags, around 16 grams of brown-powder heroin, along with one bag of cocaine totaling around one gram, all hidden in the cars rear passenger brake light. Police valued the drugs at $2,500.

Velazquez was charged with use without authority because his name wasn't on the rental agreement, failure to stop at a stop sign, possession of a Class B substance with intent to distribute, and possession of a Class A substance with intent to distribute.

Velazquez is due back in court on April 9th.

registration for that election ends Wednesday, June 5 at 8 p.m.

Quincy residents may register in person at the city clerk's office at 1259 Hancock Street — across the McIntyre Mall from City Hall. Registration can also be done when applying for or renewing a driver's license with the Registry of Motor Vehicles, or by mailing in a registration form available online at <http://www.sec.state.ma.us/ele/elepdf/2013-Voter-reg-mail-in.pdf> through Secretary of the Commonwealth Bill Galvin's office.

Quincy's city election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 5 and the last day to register for that is Wednesday, Oct. 16. If necessary, a preliminary city election would be held Sept. 17 and Aug. 28 would be the deadline to register for the preliminary.

Keenan Presents Priorities For Legislative Session

Focused On Serving Local Community, Advancing Public Health; Files 32 Bills Before Deadline

State Sen. John Keenan, who represents Quincy as well as the towns of Abington, Braintree, Holbrook, and Rockland, has laid out his priorities for the upcoming legislative session. Keenan will focus on local issues that affect South Shore communities, as well as broader issues of state-wide policy.

"Over the past several weeks my office has worked hard to write, review and submit legislation ahead of the bill filing deadline for the new legislative session," said Keenan. "In that time I have heard from many constituents, and have spent a great deal of time meeting with local leaders, community groups, policy advocates, executive branch officials, and my fellow legislators, to help develop my priorities for the next year."

Keenan filed 32 bills prior to the bill filing and co-sponsorship deadlines, which marked the end of the first month in session. In this initial period, state legislators decide which bills they will sponsor or lend support to in the coming months. While these decisions do not represent a final "aye" or "nay" vote, they do give indications as to the issues on which each legislator will focus.

Relative to Quincy Sen. Keenan highlighted a bill, presented by all members of the Quincy delegation, to further support the downtown redevelopment, by allocating additional liquor licenses to the project.

"I have been involved with the downtown redevelopment since its inception," said Keenan, "so giving the City and the developer the tools needed to ensure its success is certainly a priority."

He is also calling on the

JOHN KEENAN

Department of Transportation to address local noise issues, by conducting noise studies along I-93 and the Red Line Braintree extension, and installing sound barriers as appropriate.

"These issues have been raised by local residents and elected officials," noted Keenan, "so we will work with all parties in an attempt to address each of the concerns."

Keenan said he will continue working with the state's School Building Authority on Quincy's school projects, including the construction of the Central Middle School, renovations at the Sterling Middle School, and other renovation projects.

Keenan also submitted bills relative to local trade and industry throughout the region. A bill jointly sponsored with state Rep. Tackey Chan of Quincy, with strong support from Plumbers and Gasfitters Local 12, seeks to establish licensing standards for the practice of drain cleaning.

"We have heard from some homeowners that drain cleaners are, in some cases, doing more than drain cleaning work, and we have heard from legitimate drain cleaners that some individuals holding themselves out as drain cleaners have no training in the field," said Keenan.

Another local interest bill would make mortgage assignments more transparent at the county level, in the wake of allegations of fraudulent foreclosures by several major banks.

Keenan, joined by state Reps. Chan and Bruce Ayers, also filed legislation to increase the amount of annuities paid to Gold Star Families, who have not seen an increase in several years. He is also seeking to lessen the burden on seniors who file tax appeals with the Appellate Tax Board. Finally, Senator Keenan said he remains committed to protecting local funding through the budgetary process.

Keenan was recently appointed Senate chair of the Legislature's Joint Committee on Public Health.

"This committee will see a great many critical issues in the coming session," said Keenan, making mention of Affordable Care Act implementation, sterile compounding pharmacies, and other issues, "and I look forward to working in these areas. The assignment brings with it a broad new set of challenges, but will also allow me to continue working on mental health and substance abuse issues."

Prior to his Public Health Committee appointment, Sen. Keenan served for two years as Senate chair of the Joint Committee on Mental Health and Substance Abuse. That committee headlined last year a series of measures to reduce prescription drug diversion and abuse and to strengthen addiction recovery programs across the state.

Keenan said he is committed to improving access to mental and behavioral health services.

"It is absolutely a tragedy to see individuals, oftentimes children, boarded in emergency rooms for days and weeks at a time while awaiting in-patient care," said Keenan.

His new proposal would create incentives for insurance companies to assist in finding in-patient beds for patients boarded in an emergency room, require insurers to provide fair reimbursement for mental and behavioral health screenings, and require coverage of services in the emergency department setting.

In this session, Keenan filed with Representative Liz Malia a bill which seeks to establish certification standards for so called "sober homes," housing units that promise a drug and alcohol free environment to support recovering former addicts.

"Some of these homes, including some in Quincy and Weymouth are well-run and extremely beneficial to former substance abusers," said Keenan, "but unfortunately not every sober home is well-managed or even well-intended, and some expose this vulnerable population to very poor living conditions in the interest of higher profits. The bad sober homes also become problems in the neighborhoods."

Another bill filed by Keenan would grant the Commissioner of Public Health authority to issue emergency bans against new street drugs. Keenan said that such a tool would be critical to DPH's ability to ensure public safety when faced with the imminent threat of a new designer drug. In stating the need for this measure, he cited the state's experience with "Bath Salts," cocaine-like substances that remained legal for nearly two years while the legislative process to schedule new drugs played out.

A medical marijuana bill Keenan filed will provide the same protection and access to marijuana that Question 3 promises to patients suffering through serious medical conditions, but also build in safety measures to reduce diversion and abuse. The bill would require parental consent before dispensing marijuana to minors, prohibit marijuana certifications issued by out-of-state physicians, require annual renewal of marijuana certifications, and establish a delivery system to eliminate the need for home cultivation. The bill incorporates feedback from constituents and physicians.

It is difficult to know at this time how each bill will fare through the committee process, but Keenan says that his proposals have been generally well-received in conversations with colleagues. With committee assignments now complete, the bills will move into the legislative process.

School Committee Recognizes Quincy Historical Society Program

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy Historical Society Executive Director Dr. Edward Fitzgerald and Quincy Historical Society curriculum teachers Andriana Nochi and Ginny Karlis were recently recognized by the School Committee for their work with the historical program for all third and fourth graders in Quincy Public Schools.

"The Quincy Historical Society has done so much for this city and this school system," said School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro during a recent school committee meeting. "Over the past 30 years they have been terrific partners to us."

The program serves over 1,300 third and fourth grade students throughout the school year and teaches students the link between national events and the events of Quincy.

The two-day third grade program teaches lessons on the colonial error along with the history of Quincy and the Adams family. Third graders are able to look at artifacts and take field trips to the birthplaces of the Adams family, along with a trip to the Historical Society.

Fourth graders have a two-day program that teaches them about the Native Americans that lived in Quincy. The students participate in many activities throughout the two-day program such as taking field trips, and making brochures promoting Quincy.

"We're very grateful to you for giving us this recognition for the program. We are now into our 30 or 30 plus years, we've kind of lost track even though we are historians," joked Fitzgerald. "So, we're into our second and third generation of people going through the program by this time. We're building a tradition here, and we could not do it without the support of the school committee, the central administration and the city in general."

The school committee presented a certificate of recognition to Fitzgerald, Nochi, and Karlis, thanking them and the Quincy Historical Society for over 30 years of commitment, dedication, and support to the students and staff of Quincy Public Schools.

"It has been a really incredible partnership. It's important, certainly, for the students to learn about their city and the history of their city and to be able to visit some of these sites," said Assistant Superintendent Colleen Roberts in a phone interview with The Sun. "We want them to understand why Quincy is a place that people want to come visit and to see the richness of history that surrounds them every day in this city."

THE ULTIMATE AQUAMARINE

Those born during the month of March may be quite interested to know that the biggest and most beautiful example of their birthstone was recently donated to the National Museum of Natural History. This priceless aquamarine is 14 inches tall and weighs 10,363 carats (nearly five pounds). Named after the first emperor of Brazil, the Dom Pedro aquamarine possesses an obelisk-like shape that resembles the Washington Monument. The man who sculpted the fabulous gemstone, German gem artist Bernd Munsteiner, chose to sculpt into the stone to create internal facets, which bounce beams of light back to the observer. The result is a truly astonishing work that does incredible justice to this gorgeous blue gemstone.

Aquamarine symbolizes the essence of the ocean, from the spirited lightness of its shallows, to the mysteries of the deep. # Blizzard Leaves $1.4 Million Pricetag plow drivers contracted by the city didn't plow enough of the roads.

"I had a few questions from residents who were wondering if contracts with individual plow companies specified how much of the road must be plowed," Hughes said.

Raymondi said his department needed to do a better job of supervising those plows in future storms.

"When you miss a street that's unacceptable and that's supervision as well as the actual plow driver. We have to have more supervision on the ground, both from the private standpoint as well as the public — we do need to do a better job as chasers," Raymondi said. "That's one component we need to fix."

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said smaller streets in her ward went unplowed. And some streets that were plowed, weren't plowed wide enough.

"Ward 1 has small streets, lots of dead ends leading to the water. Many of those were missed and there were delays getting there. And the width — curb-to-curb, we weren't seeing curb-to-curb," Laforest said.

Raymondi explained that part of the issue is striking a balance between plowing the whole street width and not blocking shoveled sidewalks or driveways with snow. But he conceded that a better job is needed during larger snowstorms like the blizzard.

"Some folks want the street wider, other folks don't want you to block their sidewalk or their driveway," Raymondi said. "I don't blame people because we've all been there, we've all suffered the consequences of both. Eight inches or ten inches, not a problem. You've got 30 inches...we need to do a better job, especially with not hitting streets at all."

Laforest also heard complaints from residents in Germantown about not being able to catch an MBTA bus after their service was restored Monday. That bus was forced to skip parts of the route because the streets weren't plowed enough.

"Monday, bus service was restored to the MBTA and the 214 bus could not make the swing from Palmer to Taffrail nor from Taffrail to Bicknell. The MBTA's solution was just to skip those stops on Taffrail," Laforest said. "Who is communicating with the MBTA about that?"

Raymondi said the department pays close attention to making sure school bus routes are clear, but could improve the clearing of MBTA routes after snowstorms.

"We pay special attention to school bus routes and a little to the MBTA but that's something we could do a better job on," Raymondi said.

Barron, who is also Quincy's emergency management director, said the Fire Department responded to 150 incidents during the first 24 hours of the storm. Most were reports of downed wires, but 21 were for carbon monoxide alarms. Of those alarms, 17 were malfunctioning detectors and the other four required the building to be evacuated or ventilated.

The Police Department received 1,057 calls for service between Feb. 8 at 4 p.m. and nightfall on Feb. 10, according to Keenan, about twice as many calls as they'd typically receive. Those include 281 calls for cruiser transport, 152 ambulance calls, 116 well-being checks, and 65 disabled vehicle assists. There were more than 120 burglar alarms, but many were set off by power surges once electricity was restored. The department also towed 120 vehicles during the storm.

Both departments brought on extra personnel in anticipation of the storm. The fire department activated a spare ladder truck and stationed it in Houghs Neck and positioned extra equipment in Houghs Neck and Squantum. Keenan cancelled all vacation and personal time during the storm, and assigned all officers — community police, detectives, special investigations — to uniformed shift coverage. He reported about $30,000 in personnel costs due to the storm.

Personnel from both departments also staffed two shelters the city set-up during the blizzard, one at the Kennedy Center in Squantum and the other at Quincy High School.

Wollaston Planning Effort Meeting Topic March 5

The public is invited to hear an update on the Re-envisioning Wollaston Planning effort Tuesday, March 5 from 8 to 9 a.m. at the Wollaston Business Partnership Meeting to be held at the Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Quincy.

The meeting is being coordinated by Mayor Thomas P. Koch, Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten L. Hughes, Planning Director Dennis E. Harrington, and Quincy Chamber of Commerce President Dean Rizzo.

The City of Quincy and the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) are working together to complete a study analyzing opportunities for transit oriented development around the Wollaston Red Line Station. This analysis will be primarily focused on the commercial corridors of Beale Street, Hancock Street, and Newport Avenue around the MBTA station.

Officials said Wollaston has a high potential for revitalization, and the City—building from prior planning efforts in the neighborhood—will work with MAPC (along with neighborhood residents and businesses) over the next few months to identify a vision for the station area, develop land use and zoning recommendations, complete a market analysis, and put forth some transportation improvement recommendations.

The first neighborhood planning meeting was held last November. All information presented and collected at that meeting has been posted on the project website: www.mapc.org/envision-wollaston.

"Quincy's neighborhoods are the lifeblood of this city," said Mayor Koch, "and Wollaston is certainly an important, historic area that could really shine in the years to come. Hearing from the public on their thoughts and ideas for how Wollaston can be improved is a vital step in the re-envisioning process."

"We intend to have this community visioning process help set the stage for any future revitalization activities in the Wollaston Neighborhood," Harrington said.

On Tuesday, Feb. 19, at approximately 5 p.m., members of the Quincy Police Drug Control Unit were conducting surveillance in the area of Star Market on Granite Street for drug activity.

Detective O'Brien observed a male standing on the corner of Fort Street and Brook Road talking on his cell phone. When the male (suspect #1) put his phone away, he immediately began looking around. Moments later, a vehicle with two male occupants pulled up and suspect #1 got into the back seat. The vehicle drove off, heading up Pleasant Street, turning left onto Quincy Street.

Detective Powers then picked up surveillance and observed the vehicle turn left onto Marsh Street, heading back towards School Street. The vehicle then stopped and the suspect #1 in the backseat got out. The vehicle pulled out, heading east on School Street. Strangely, suspect #1 started walking in the same direction, rather than getting out further up the street.

Detectives Keenan, Barkas and Coen continued to follow the vehicle as Detective Powers and O'Brien approached suspect #1 on foot. Detective O'Brien exhibited his badge and announced, "Quincy Police." Suspect #1 made a sudden swallowing motion, which the Detectives believed was the destruction of evidence. Suspect #1 was asked what he received from the occupants of the vehicle and he denied getting any drugs, stating, "I didn't have any money and tried to get a bag of heroin on the cuff." (free) He said that they let him out of the vehicle when he told them he didn't have any money.

Suspect #1 stated that he purchased heroin from the driver at least a dozen times before, but he had never seen the passenger. Suspect #1 said that he makes a telephone call and an arrangement is made for delivery. Suspect #1 was searched and a hypodermic needle was located in his pocket. The information about the two suspects in the vehicle was relayed Detective Keenan over the radio. Suspect #1's information was taken and he was sent on his way. Detective Keenan requested a marked cruiser to assist in stopping the suspect vehicle. When the suspect vehicle stopped at a red light at Sumner Street and Washington Street, Detective Keenan approached the operator's window while Detectives Barkas and Coen approached the passenger side.

When Detective Keenan showed his police badge and announced "Quincy Police", the driver (suspect #2) grabbed an open water bottle from the cup holder on the center console and began to gulp water down. Detective Keenan knew from his training and experience that drug dealers often carry illegal drugs in their mouth, so when they are stopped by police they can swallow the drugs preventing the police from recovering the evidence.

Detective Keenan attempted to open the driver's side door but it was locked, so he breached the driver's side window and attempted to prevent suspect #2 from swallowing the evidence and harming himself. When Detective Keenan entered the vehicle, he observed water all over suspect #2's face and shirt as if he was trying to swallow water with his mouth full of something. Suspect #2 and his passenger, suspect #3, were then led from the vehicle.

When the driver/suspect #2 got out of the vehicle, he failed to put the vehicle in park, resulting in the suspect vehicle crashing into one of the unmarked cruisers that boxed the suspect vehicle in. Both suspects were given Miranda Rights by Detective Keenan and both stated that they did not want to talk. Sergeant Goyette, who had arrived on scene, observed a small container on the floor with brown powder in it. Detective Keenan then photographed the container where it was found and then recovered it. Detective Keenan believed there was heroin in it. A search of the vehicle revealed more brown powder in a bag under the driver's seat, believed to be heroin. There was also $47 dollars in one of the cup holders in the center console and an additional $750 inside the center console.

Detective Coen searched suspect #3, the passenger, and found he had two cell phones in his possession. One phone rang constantly with people asking for "George." One call was from a male who wanted "five for $200." Another caller wanted a gram and yet another caller wanted "four for eighty." Detective Coen knew that the callers were placing orders. Detective Coen, pretending to be the seller, arranged to meet one caller in Quincy. When they met, Detective Coen learned that this suspect (#4) had placed orders at least ten times from the same man, suspect #3. Suspect #4 was trying to buy two bags of heroin today for $80. The Detectives believed that the passenger, suspect #3, was the main dealer being called to make the deliveries.

Suspect #1 was released because he did not have any drugs on him. Suspect #2, a 23-year-old Hyde Park resident, and suspect #3, a 23-year-old West Roxbury resident, were arrested and charged with possession with intent to distribute class A (heroin) and conspiracy to violate the drug laws. The drugs were tested in the field and determined to be heroin.

Nice work!

RULES OF THE ROAD

Intersections Not Controlled by Signs or Signals

Slow down at an intersection without signs or signals. Look left and right for oncoming traffic and proceed if the way is clear. You must yield the right-of-way to any vehicle that has entered the intersection from your right or is coming from your right. Always look for traffic coming from the left. Even though you may have the legal right-of-way, make sure that the other driver is yielding before you proceed.

Four-Way Stop: At an intersection with stop signs in all directions, you must yield the right-of-way to another vehicle that has already come to a full stop and to a vehicle directly to your right that has stopped at the same time as you. Four-way stop intersections can cause confusion. Try to make eye contact with the drivers of other vehicles to judge their intentions and avoid accidents.

Turning Left: When making any left turn, you must first yield the right-of-way to any oncoming vehicle or a vehicle already in the intersection. You must also yield to pedestrians or bicyclists crossing your intended path of travel.

Get Ready To Reseed Bare Spots In Lawn

Question: I read a column of yours some months ago that said if you reseed bare patches of grass before the first winter frost, the seeds will sprout in early spring. I did not get around to doing that. Is it still possible to reseed? -- Gladys in Knoxville, Tenn.

Answer: Yes, it's very possible. In fact, with the winter-time pre-seeding method, the bare spots still usually need a bit more seed the following spring to completely fill them in.

Try to match the new grass seed with the type of grass that makes up your lawn. (You may need to take a sample of the sod to a professional landscaper or garden center.) Also, note how much sun the bare patch gets. You'll want a seed that performs well in the available sunlight. Or, you can just pick up a sun-and-shade seed mixture.

To reseed, clear the bare spot of debris and rake out loose or dead thatch. Use a pitchfork to puncture the soil, then spread the new seed according to package instructions. Be careful not to overseed, as that can lead to rot. Water the spot, but don't flood it. Tamp the soil to press the seeds in, then scatter straw or grass clippings on top to keep birds from eating all the seed.

Another option is to completely re-sod a bare spot. If the spot is fairly large with a lot of underlying thatch buildup, de-thatch the area so you have clear ground underneath. Purchase sod that matches the surrounding grass (this is where taking a sod sample into the garden center comes in handy).

Measure the height of the new sod against the depth of the de-thatched bare spot. If the spot is too deep to ensure an even lawn, fill the bare spot with soil, tamped down firmly, until the difference is made up. Add a little more soil so that the new sod sits about a half-inch higher than the surrounding lawn; it will settle in the next few weeks. Lay the new sod pieces, packing them tightly together. Tamp them down lightly and poke a few holes with a pitchfork so the soil stays porous. Keep the new sod moist for the next two weeks so that the sod grows in well.

In both cases, protect a newly seeded or sodded spot by marking it with stakes and string around the perimeter so that people stay off it while the lawn regrows.

HOME TIP: Clear away old mulch around trees and shrubs and replace with fresh mulch each spring.

Presidents Defeat Milton For Moscardelli Crown

By BILL GRIFFIN

For the seniors, it was the final game on their home-court and the championship game of a tournament they had never won. It was a night for memories and emotions.

For the sophomores, it was a game against a quality opponent in another pressure situation to showcase their remarkable progress. It was a night for the promise of things to come.

Senior Jaquan Harris scored 12, senior Tino Gonçalves added six points and nine assists and the sophomores took over the game in the second half to lead the Presidents past Milton, 61-57 in the title match of the Vin Moscardelli Tournament at Quincy High last week.

"We hadn't won the Moscardelli Tourney in over 10 years, and we're the host team, so it's nice to keep it for our trophy case," said Quincy coach. "It means a lot to our seniors. Our sophomores are pure basketball players. They are old for their age in a basketball sense. Their maturity level is excellent."

Quincy advanced to the final with a 73-41 win over Southeast Regional behind 20 from Harris and 16 from sophomore James Lam.

Harris (32 points in two games) flashed to the basket, played terrific defense and was named the tourney MVP. Gonçalves directed the offense, got open looks for teammates and was named to the all-tourney team. This final game at home was important to both players who helped the program to post-season berths each year in their time at Quincy. Both talked about it to their teammates at halftime.

"We let Tino and Jaquan talk at halftime. It got a little emotional. It was their last one at home and they wanted it," said Parry.

How good were the sophomores? In the second half, Quincy scored 28 points. The sophomores had 22 of them. In the third period, Quincy scored 12 points, the sophomore scored all of them. In the final 1:30, sophomore J.T. Bain threw a NBA outlet pass off a tough rebound which resulted in a Gonçalves' layup. Seconds later with Quincy up by two, Bain bulled free in the lane and hit an off-balance turnaround.

Twice in the final 21 seconds, a sophomore stepped to the line shooting one-and-one with Quincy leading by two. These are free throws a good team must make. Two sophomores, Lam and Colin Evans, stepped up and drained them. The present is just fine, but the future could be something special.

"The sophomores are basketball players. Period," said Parry. "That is what they do. They play basketball games. They play hundreds of games. And they shoot a lot of free throws."

"Our confidence has grown a great deal over the season, and the reason is what the seniors have given us," said Lam.

Evans had 10, but the headliners of the night were Lam and Bain. Lam, who had 16 rebounds in the tourney-clincher against Duxbury, had 12 points and nine rebounds while Bain added 15 points and 12 rebounds. Points tell you very little about Lam who is an athletic presence on both ends of the floor, a hard defender, and the best rebounder on the team. On offense, he is just beginning to realize how good he can be. Bain is a master of the inside moves. He is strong and smooth with his twists and turns to the basket.

"James has been amazing," said Parry. "He can guard a forward, a center or a guard. He's our leading rebounder, our most versatile player. J.T. has all the moves close to the basket."

This was a quality win. It was Quincy's fifth game in six nights. Milton entered with a five-game winning streak and beat a strong Randolph team in the tourney opener. The Wildcats owned two wins over Patriot League Keenan Division champ Hingham and one over Braintree. They played tough man-to-man defense and they were right there, down two, three or four for most of the fourth period. It was a perfect prep for the state tourney.

"This what we were looking for," said Parry. "We wanted the kids to experience the intensity of close games, and this was a good win against a very good team."

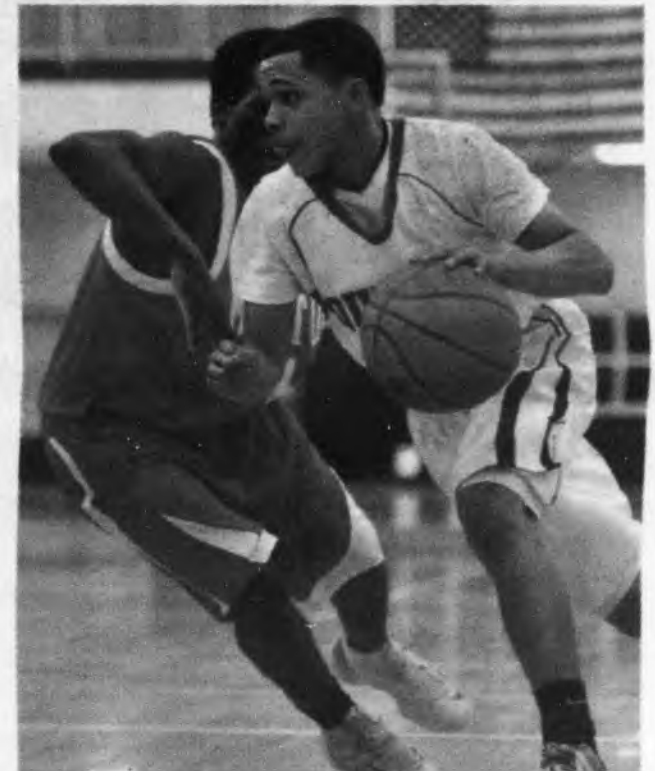

Quincy took and held the lead early in the second period. They had it up 10, but with Milton's AJ Flanagan canning threes, the Wildcats stayed within close range. Quincy never gave up the lead. There is a poise and toughness that go with playing with a small lead. Quincy, especially the sophomores, have been steeled by three games with North, thrillers over Cambridge and Whitman-Hanson at home, and hard road tests at Hingham and Whitman. They may be young, but they are not inexperienced.

"After all we've been through, we don't get nervous any more," said Lam.

"In the tourney, you have to be able to grind it out, play with a lead and we did that against a good Milton team," said Parry.

In other action last week, Cambridge Rindge and Latin defeated Quincy, 64-47 in the non-league, regular-season finale for the Presidents. Harris had 15 and Lam added 12 for Quincy who finished the regular season at 13-9.

SENIOR POINT GUARD Tino Gonçalves (six points, nine assists) drives to the hoop in Quincy's win over Milton in the Moscardelli Memorial Tournament. Gonçalves' stellar play garnered a spot on the all-tournament team.

ANOTHER BIG REASON for Quincy's success in the Moscardelli Tournament - 6'-2" sophomore forward James Lam who scored 16 points for the Presidents in their win over Milton. Other photos online: www.thequincysun.com.

Quincy Girls Bounce West Roxbury In Preliminary Round

Faced Second-Seeded Braintree Wednesday

By BILL GRIFFIN

Before the season began, Quincy girls basketball coach Jeff Bretsch made a prediction about his team.

"The road might be a little bumpy at the start, but by February, we usually have a pretty good team," he said.

The Presidents have proved their coach correct. Quincy, which had to win four of its last five to make the tourney, raced out to a big lead behind its dynamic freshman duo of Nicole Jorgensen and Gabrielle Jerahian and rolled to a 64-26 victory over West Roxbury in the preliminary round of the Division 1 South Sectional Tournament Monday night.

"We've come a long ways," said Bretsch. "To be sitting at 6-9 at one point and to be in this position now feels pretty good. Our confidence is up. Everyone is finding ways to contribute."

Quincy (11-10) will face second-seeded Braintree (20-2) at Braintree Wednesday night at 7:00 in a first-round game.

Quincy's press has been outstanding during its stretch run and it set the tone against West Roxbury. The Presidents forced a series of turnovers and converted them into baskets in grabbing a 19-2 lead after one and a 36-6 lead at the half.

"One sure cure for the jitters in an opening round game in the tourney is to play defense. If you're a little nervous, focus on defense and that's what we did tonight," said Bretsch.

For the third time in four games, the two freshmen led Quincy in scoring. The Presidents were able to get the ball inside to Jorgensen early and often, and she responded with 16 points and 18 rebounds. Jerahian chipped in with 11 points, four assists and another confident game at point guard.

"Our press gave them trouble and we went right inside to Nicole," said

Bretsch. "Gabby has been steady and poised for us. She's been in double figures four of our last six games."

Alysha Dunbar, one of only two Quincy players with tourney experience, had a fine night. The senior has fully recovered from a late-season ankle injury and scored eight in the first half (season-high 10 for the night). She hit a three, she drove to the basket, and scored off the press.

"Alysha has battled through injuries all year, but she's one of our players with tourney experience and, right now, she is playing well," said Bretsch.

Caroline McBride, who played a big role in the deciding win over Whitman-

Hanson, added six points and a strong game off the boards. Junior Kayla McArdle, a second tourney veteran from a year ago, had five assists, four steals and good overall defensive game.

Bretsch was hoping for a preliminary game, so that the Presidents would have a chance to grow used to the tourney pressure. It's a test that needs to be experienced and Quincy passed its first challenge with a solid effort.

"There's nothing like the excitement, the one-and-done feeling of it," said Bretsch. "I wanted the kids to get used to it. You have to experience it. It's not like anything else. It's an exciting motivation because you win or you don't play another game."

In a season of late-season good news, Jerahian has been among the best news for Quincy. She is filling in for junior Alyssa Lydon who is out for the season with a knee injury. It is a difficult task because Lydon held the Presidents together. Jerahian has responded by not only playing well, but playing aggressively. She is playing to make something happen, not merely to avoid a mistake.

"She's a basketball player," said Bretsch. "She's a good shooter and a good dribbler, but what is impressive is the poise she is showing filling in for a great player at a difficult position."

North Quincy Girls Bow To Scituate In Fisher Showdown

Visited Eighth-Seeded Durfee Wednesday In Tournament

By BILL GRIFFIN

Great players play their best in big games.

Scituate's brilliant senior guard Kelly Martin scored 17 points, handed out 14 assists and orchestrated two huge runs to carry the Sailors past North Quincy, 63-45 and clinch the championship of the Fisher Division of Patriot League in a title showdown last week.

Scituate wins the league with an 11-2 record. North Quincy finished the league at 10-3 and the regular season at 13-7 overall.

"They're very good. They had great starts to the first and third periods, and it's hard to dig out of a hole like that," said North coach Jessica Worden.

The first time the two clubs played, North won, 57-43. What was the difference? The Sailors got the fast pace they wanted, their press turned the ball over, and they hit their jumpers. Add all that up and it doesn't come close to matching Martin's impact on the game. She was the difference between the two teams.

"I think we were better prepared this time," said Scituate coach Matt Lewis. "We were ready for their box-and-one and we tailored our defense especially for them. Kelly can do things you can't teach. We build everything around her."

It is impossible to play better defense than Haley McKay did on Martin out of North's box-and-one. McKay denied her the ball, contested jump shots and blocked driving lanes. Martin responded by simply not looking for her points. Martin controlled the game in transition. She rebounded, played defense, but mostly she passed. Time and again, she found open shooters for great looks. She set up jumpers, layups and fast-break opportunities. She's going to Stonehill next year where she'll make many shooters very happy.

"She influences a game in so many ways," said Worden.

"She can throw a three-quarters court pass and hit it on a dime," said Lewis of Martin who broke the 1000-point career mark early in the season.

Martin and Scituate jumped to a 13-0 lead, but North played its best basketball of the game in the second period to cut the lead to two, 30-28, at halftime. The Sailors' zone was designed to keep the ball away from junior Maya Umoren (14 points, 13 rebounds) and dared North to hit its outside shots. In the second period, the Red Raiders hit them.

"Our defense was tighter in the second period, but the main thing is we hit our outside shots," said Worden.

Senior Caitlin Bulger swished two threes. Point guard Jane Minton and McKay each knocked home a pair. The shooting created a bit of space inside and Umoren and Camille Mullaney were able to cash in close to the basket. Umoren and Mullaney battled effectively for the entire game under the bucket for North.

"Maya and Camille both played good, scrappy games. They fought hard for their points and rebounds," said Worden.

Scituate's second big run, a 16-2 burst to start the third period, decided the game. Martin was, of course, in the middle of it. The Sailors hit ten jump shots in the second half, and most of them came directly or indirectly off passes from Martin. She has the uncanny ability not only to see open shooters, but to throw them just the right pass. If you love basketball, she was a treat to watch.

"She has a great eye for everything on the court," said Lewis.

For North, Umoren was a powerful presence inside. Minton ran the offense well, and Mullaney hustled, bounced off the floor, and fought for position and rebounds. Minton had nine while Bulger, McKay and Mullaney had six apiece. They earned Scituate's respect.

"We spent four full practices getting ready for them. Getting ready for North and nothing else," said Lewis. "They're talented and well-coached. Their post players (Umoren) has great hands and she moves well. The point guard (Minton) is tough as nails. And the other guard (Bulger) can shoot. They are a quality team."

The Red Raiders traveled to Durfee Wednesday for a 7 p.m. tip off in the opening round of the Division 1 South Sectional Tournament.

PREVENTING DEVASTATING KNEE INJURY

Knees are particularly vulnerable to injury. This is especially so among athletes of all ages, who commonly experience ACL ruptures, which result in severe pain and lengthy rehabilitation. The two tough ligaments called the anterior and posterior cruciate ligaments (ACL and PCL) crisscross from back to front and front to back to stabilize the knee against stresses. The usual cause of ACL injury is the twisting motion performed during cutting and pivoting maneuvers in sports such as basketball, soccer, and football. Research indicates that excessive pronation (inward turning of the foot) and foot arch collapse are contributing factors to ACL ruptures. By assessing these and other biomechanical factors, the chiropractor can take preventive measures that may circumvent this devastating injury. Chiropractic is a health care discipline which emphasizes the inherent recuperative power of the body to heal itself without the use of drugs or surgery. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we maintain that the body has a built-in capacity to restore health within certain limits, and we base our care on this principle. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where the conditions we address are as varied and as vast as the nervous system itself. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment and let us help you feel better. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service. P.S. A return to full activity following knee ligament injuries can take up to twelve months, which makes prevention the more appealing alternative to injury.

Remarkable Winter Season In High School Sports

By BILL GRIFFIN

As the regular season turns into the tournament, it is worth a look back at what was a remarkable winter season.

All four basketball teams from North and Quincy made the tournament which is a tribute to the quality of hoop being played in the city. North Quincy boys and North Quincy girls went to the final game with a chance to win their division. Quincy boys fought through an exhausting final week to make the tourney. Quincy girls overcame injuries and adversity to win four of their last five to earn a tournament ticket.

North Quincy hockey made the tourney behind the brilliant Nolan Greene, and Quincy's young, talented hockey club finished with a flourish with three wins and a tie in its last five games including a 4-1 victory over North.

North Quincy boys basketball finished 15-5 which gives the Red Raiders a 33-8 record over the past two years. Pat Gould had a pluperfect season at point guard. Aaron Anderson was the story of the winter, coming from the great beyond to replace the injured Dan Gould and raining down threes from the heavens. Efthim Butka showed touch and toughness as an inside player and Kyle Richardson was the most underrated athlete in the city for the winter season.

Quincy boys basketball started the season as the city's most fascinating story with an intriguing mix of seniors and sophomores and it was equally interesting when the regular season ended. Seniors and sophomores are not always the best mix, but it all worked for the Presidents. Tino Goncalves and Jaquan Harris had the finest of senior moments, but the future is coming with Colin Evans, Drew Myers, James Lam and J.T. Bain. Lam is a special athlete.

North girls basketball shook off a slow start and won 12 of its last 16. The club took on the identity of a rock-hard defensive club with the insertion of Haley McKay in the starting lineup. McKay, Jane Minton, and Caitlin Bulger gave the Red Raiders quickness from a three-guard set in both the zone and man-to-man. Minton developed into a complete point guard. Maya Umoren averaged in double figures in points and rebounds and Camille Mulaney is a sophomore leaper well worth watching.

Quincy girls basketball survived despite the most difficult injury loss of the winter season to junior point guard Alyssa Lydon. Anyone who watched Lydon's clinic in the first North game appreciates well what her absence meant to a young rebuilding club. Junior forward Kayla McArdle stepped up as an offensive force to complement her fierce defense in the Presidents' closing rush. Freshman Nicole Jorgensen offered a preview of a terrific varsity career by averaging 16 points, 16 rebounds, and six blocks over a nine-game stretch late in the year. Freshman point guard Gabrielle Jerahian is another gifted young player.

North Quincy hockey had one of the best defensive teams on the South Shore, giving just 29 goals in 18 games. Greene's goals-against average was 0.94, less than a goal per game. Opposing coaches who visited Quincy Youth Ice Arena named him as the best goalie they saw all year. The issue was scoring. Losing All-League forward Shawn Grady for most of the season was a major problem. Persistent injuries and absences up front hurt continuity. Rudy Tryon was excellent on the blue line, playing tough, hard-hitting defense and starting the offense with his big-time slap shot.

Take a look at Quincy's hockey team. Take a good look. They will all be back. Sophomore Patrick Freeman and freshman Jake Hallisey are two of the most skilled players in the league. Brian O'Callaghan is a two-way force up front. There is depth. The Presidents skate three lines and six defensemen. They took the huge step from playing well to winning games. Watch out for this team.

The following is the All-City All Star teams as this reporter saw them over the winter season.

Quincy High Wrestlers Fare Well At Sectionals

By JEFF OHLSON

The Quincy High School wrestling team (7-16) hosted the MIAA Division 2 metro sectional wrestling tournament Feb. 9.

Wrestlers from 12 teams – Arlington, Belmont, Boston Latin, Catholic Memorial, Natick, Needham, Norwood, Reading, Walpole, Wellesley, and Woburn – came to the new high school's gymnasium to vie for spot in the state tournament.

Two wrestlers from Quincy High qualified for the state tournament:

- Senior captain Matt Roach who finished in 4th, weighing in at 152lbs; and
- Sophomore Kenny Garcia-Rosario who finished in 5th and weighed in at 126lbs.

Also placing in 6th for the Presidents were senior captain Jose Perez, junior Lorenzo Scarnici and junior Conroy Hawthorne.

Freshman Peter Orseno and sophomore Andrew Cook also wrestled well in the tournament, picking up a few victories.

Quincy Coach Pat Lane said he was proud of his team's performance in the tournament and during the regular season.

"During the course of the season, the kids who performed well in the tournament also wrestled well in the regular season. Aside from those wrestlers we also had solid contributions from senior Kevin Barry, senior Pat Dowling, sophomore Suhail Purkar, junior Jia Zhou, sophomore Jake Bergonzi and junior Andrew Bell," Lane said.

Although Quincy has five seniors graduating and is moving up to Division I, Coach Lane said he feels that the future will bring good things and that the program will only get better for the Presidents.

"The future looks bright for Quincy High Wrestling. We're graduating five seniors and those seniors will be missed for their experience and leadership in the practice room but we are retaining 35 underclassmen. There will be heavy competition next year for spots on the varsity team and the number of participants continues to rise every year," Lane said.

Orseno. Back row: Matt Roach, Jia Zhou, Andrew Bell, Conroy Hawthorne, Jake Bergonzi, Nick Norton, Jose Perez and Coach Pat Lane.

The Presidents will also look into developing a youth program to get freshman some much needed experience to build on and to help them develop a quicker understanding of the sport. Coach Lane said it's important that the sport be very competitive, as it always has been at Quincy High, to keep forward momentum going.

"Quincy High School wrestling has traditionally been a very competitive team and the development of these current and future wrestlers will dictate whether or not we become a legitimate contender on a state wide level," said Lane.

NQ Hockey Hall Of Fame Inducts 18 New Members

The North Quincy Hockey Hall of Fame welcomed its second class at a recent dinner and ceremony held at the Quincy Neighborhood Club.

Over 200 guest filled the hall to honor 18 former players and friends from seven decades of Red Raider hockey. Former Mayor Walter Hannon introduced Frank "Bunchie" Carroll and Jack Gilbody posthumously from 1949.

First class inductee Ken Hayes welcomed Joe Gorham 1954 (posthumously) and John "Jake" Moran 1955, who drove up from Virginia to attend the ceremony.

Bobby Lippens shared some stories with new inductees Tom Henderson 1968 and Fred Cobban 1967. Lippens came in from Michigan to introduce his two friends.

Former Red Raider

Hockey Coach and Master of ceremonies and HOF member Jim Fatseas spoke about Steve MacKay 1973, Mike Smith 1977 and Paul Cooney 1979. Jago inducted "his" kids from some very successful teams in the 1980's: Keith Smith 1984, Rob Reidy 1985 and Greg McGlame 1986. These three played an important role of breaking a 32-year tournament drought for North.

Coaches Tom Benson, Paul Noonan and Bob Doyle offered kind words for their former stars who continued many tournament appearances. Dave Pacino 1994, AJ Carthas 1995 and Paul Markarian 1999 were thrilled to accept their inductee plaques.

Coach Doyle finished the evening with two of his best, Bruce Maggio and Matt Grazioso from 2003. The special moment of the evening came when Coach Doyle introduced Mr. Richard Morrissey 1942 as a friend of the Hall Of Fame. Morrissey helped the program with hours of volunteering on and off of the ice. Whether it be gathering equipment or getting kids to the rink Doyle appreciated his extra effort.

Former Mayor Hannon also told the audience of Mr. Morrissey's service to the country. The entire crowd rose to their feet in appreciation.

Matt Gibbons introduced his four captains of this year's NQHS hockey team and recapped this season to date. Coach Gibbons and his team is looking forward to participating in the MIAA tournament.

The Hall Of Fame Committee encourages people to nominate any player they feel worthy to be inducted, especially players from the 1940's or 1950's.

Freeman, Pugsley Help Quincy Hockey Bury Brookline

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was the final exclamation point on strong finishing kick which offers bright promise for the future.

Patrick Freeman and Aidan Pugsley each scored a pair of goals to lead a balanced scoring attack and lift Quincy to a 10-1 non-league win over Brookline in the season's finale for the Presidents at the Quincy Youth Ice Arena last week.

Freeman's two goals gave him 22 for the season. He scored a goal in each of his last 14 games for the young Presidents who finished 3-1-1 in their last five. They had quality wins over Scituate and North Quincy, and gave a glimpse of how good they can be next season.

"Right from the drop of the puck, we played well against Brookline," said coach Tim Lewis. "The kids played hard and had fun. It also said a lot about what we can expect next season."

Single goals went to Mike Pugsley, Sean Brennick, Brian O'Callaghan, Mike Gendeau, Matt Davis and Jake Hallisey. Freeman and Aidan Pugsley each had a pair of assists.

Ryan Higgins played the first two periods in goal while senior Anthony Tomasi finished up in goal in the third. Both played strong games.

"I was happy for Anthony," said Lewis. "He had never played goal before this season and he came out as a senior because he knew we needed backup help. He had a chance to play and he did a good job."

If ever a team was in position to build on a strong finish, it is Quincy. Chris Andrews is the only player on a regular shift who graduates. Everyone else is back. Everyone. Three lines, six defensemen are all back. They all come back and the will come back with the memory that they learned not only how to play good teams close, but how to beat them.

"Part of it was experience, part of it was the two things we talked all year: responding to adversity and playing three, complete periods of good hockey without five or six-minute lapses," said Lewis.

There is a fistful of young talent here. Freeman and Hallisey are linemates on right and left wing. Freeman is a sophomore, Hallisey is a freshman. Freeman finished the season with 31 points, Hallisey ended up with 29. They have two more years together.

"It's not official but I think they ended up 1-2 in the Patriot League in scoring," said Lewis.

O'Callaghan, a sophomore, is the complete two-way package on left wing. He is a sniper with a big-time shot, but he also checks, skates his wing, and works on the penalty-killing unit. He had four goals in his last two games, including a hat trick before a packed house against North. Sophomore Aidan Pugsley is a pure center, who scores, wins faceoffs, and sets up the shooters on the wing.

"O'Callaghan stepped up as a force at the end of the season," said Lewis.

Jimmy Brennick emerged as a top defender for Quincy. Juniors Matt Davis and Matt Kozlowski have played together on defense for three years. Sophomores Steve Ross, Brandon Beal, Ryan Harty skated regular turns and improved with experience. Ross, in particular, was solid over the last four games. Higgins, a sophomore, was outstanding over the second half of the season.

"Next year, they'll have the benefit of the experience of playing together regularly," said Lewis.

Lewis saw two important landmarks during the season. The first came when Quincy was mired in an eight-game losing streak and needed leadership.

"Players like Kozlowski, Freeman, Higgins and Davis stepped up and gave us the leadership we needed," said Lewis. "We had every excuse to quit on ourselves, but we didn't. The leadership we got from the players was a big factor."

The second big test Quincy passed was the Scituate game. The Presidents improvement over the season was obvious. They were close to Duxbury, close in the second North game, close to Whitman-Hanson. There would be a bad hop of the puck, a shot that found the crossbar, or a five or six-minute lapse in their game. Against Scituate they stepped over threshold. They carried a 3-0 lead into third. After Scituate scored, the Presidents played lockdown defense and rode home with a 5-1 win, a win over a quality Patriot League team. They hit a taste of adversity and they overcame it.

"We locked arms and played as a team," said Lewis.

Quincy only gave seven goals over the final five games. Higgins was a big part of the reason, the defensemen were good, but the key was Quincy played strong Team Defense.

"It took about 12 games into the season for them to catch on to the defensive system we were trying to teach and they saw it worked," said Lewis. "Next year, we should have it from the start."

Many of the Presidents will play on the Midget under-16 team which will compete for the national championship in April. There will be off-season workouts and leagues. They will get ready for what should be a good run of hockey for Quincy.

"They know exactly what's expected of them in the off-season," said Lewis. "We're excited about what kind of season next year can be, but they will have to work for it."

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You could have some problems with doubters who don't share your enthusiasm for that new project you're supporting. But use the facts to win them over to your side.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Someone is impressed by how you managed to get your case to the right people, despite attempts to keep you on the outside looking in. Expect to hear more about this.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Good for you -- your gift for seeing both sides of a dispute helps cool down a potentially explosive workplace situation. Some family-related tensions also begin to ease.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Your determination to prove yourself is put to the test by midweek. Counting all the positive factors you have going for you will help you get over your self-doubt. Good luck.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Several co-workers are still determined to resist coming over to your side. But don't let that stop you from presenting your proposal to the people who count. Stay the course.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You might prefer to be taken on faith and not have to prove yourself. But the truth is, you need to offer more facts if you hope to persuade people to accept what you say.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A family situation takes an unwelcome turn. While others might be looking around for answers, you'll soon sort it all out logically, and the matter will be resolved.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Someone might try to create doubt about your reliability for his or her own agenda. But your reputation and your colleagues' long-standing faith in you saves the day.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) An unexpected change of plans forces you to come up with an alternative by the end of the week. Look for colleagues to offer valuable suggestions.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Nothing upsets the Goat as much as broken promises. But before you vent your anger, consider that this could ultimately prove to be a blessing in disguise.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) An old workplace problem you thought you had solved for good resurfaces. But this time, co-workers will take a more active role in helping you deal with it.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Be careful not to be misled by a negative reaction to one of your more important projects. If you believe in it, then it has worth and is, therefore, worth staying with.

BORN THIS WEEK: Everyone appreciates your gift for finding beauty, even where it seems least likely to exist.

SQUANTUM ELEMENTARY SCHOOL students were joined by school administrators, staff and local officials at the launch of the "Build Our Kids' Success" program at the school.

'Build Our Kids' Success' Program At Squantum School

Squantum Elementary students were joined recently by Mayor Thomas Koch, School Committee members Barbara Isola and Paul Bregoli as well as School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro for some early morning exercise to officially launch the "Build Our Kids' Success" program at the school.

The BOKS program is sponsored by Reebok and is designed to prepare students for a day of learning while teaching the benefits of exercise and making healthy choices. BOKS was inspired by Dr. John Ratey's book "Spark" which speaks to exercise being "the most powerful tool that we have to optimize the function of our brains."

Over 60 Squantum students have been joining physical education teacher Brian Miller and some parent volunteers two mornings a week this winter for this exciting before school physical activity program.

The program ties in nicely with a school wide well-ness goal to promote wellness and healthy choices in the school community. BOKS runs every Monday and Wednesday for most of the winter and includes a number of team oriented games, movement activities and a nutrition component as part of the program.

Because the program is very popular at the school, staff and parents are in the process of planning another session to get more students involved.

"We are very fortunate in that Reebok donated a number of supplies for the program including BOKS T-shirts for all our students and volunteers," said Principal Steve Sylvia. The school also received a donation from Boston Medical Center Healthnet Plan to help support the program.

"We are looking forward to the positive and healthy impact this program will have on our students and their learning," Sylvia added.

$3.5M Project Would Widen Intersection At Hancock, Squantum Sts.

By SCOTT JACKSON

A $3.5 million project to widen the intersection of Hancock and East and West Squantum Streets in front of North Quincy High nearing the construction phase got a favorable reception from the City Council Monday night.

More than a quarter of a mile of Hancock Street, from the entrance to the North Quincy MBTA station to Glover Avenue near Sacred Heart Church, will be reconstructed. The project will widen the intersection in front of the school, improving its capacity.

"The scope of the project started off as Hancock Street and East and West Squantum but also includes about 1,600 linear feet of reconstruction of Hancock Street and sidewalks from the MBTA entrance to the north all the way down to Glover Avenue on the south side of the project," city engineering manager Frank Tramontozzi explained. "It also improves about 500 linear feet up East Squantum Street to the end of the driveway to the high school and about 200 linear feet on West Squantum."

Eighty percent of the project's $3.5 million in construction costs will be paid for by federal govern-

Gun Licenses Renewed For 20 Suspended Police Officers

By EMILY TAFT

The 14 police officers and six supervisors that were placed on administrative leave on Monday due to expired gun licenses are expected back at work before the end of the week according to Quincy Police Captain John Dougan.

As of Tuesday only six or seven officers still needed their licenses renewed, and many were expected to return to work Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

Dougan said that he expects the remaining officers to have renewed licenses and to return to work before the end of the week.

"We expect some of them to return tonight and RENDERINGS SHOW what the redesigned intersection of Hancock and East and West Squantum Streets will look like once completed. East Squantum Street (left) will be widened to create a new lane for dropping off and picking up students and to improve flow. Hancock Street (right) will be widened to accommodate a new right turn only lane onto West Squantum Street. Both renderings show new traffic signals that are meant to be more visible.

ment, and the state will pay the remaining 20 percent. The state Department of Transportation (MassDOT) will construct the project. Quincy is responsible paying for the design of the project, which is at the 100 percent phase, and for various land takings along the project. The takings are projected to cost about $440,000.

Hancock Street will be widened to include a third southbound lane heading towards the intersection at East and West Squantum. It will be a right turn only lane, allowing for better access to West Squantum Street. West Squantum will be widened, but a second lane won't be added next to the Shell station.

"In the southbound direction you have three lanes of traffic - one exclusive for turning right onto West Squantum Street and then two for the through movers," Tramontozzi said. "On West Squantum Street the cross-section remains the same. There is some work being done right at the driveway to the MBTA."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin said he often receives complaints about the intersection and feels that the addition of the right turn only lane will help improve flow.

"Where I hear the most complaints, and this is great because it's addressing one of them, is people being able to come up Hancock Street," Coughlin said, "heading southbound being able to take the turn onto West Squantum Street in the right hand lane. The fact that we are adding a dedicated lane will certainly address that issue."

The traffic signals at the intersection will be replaced with overhanging ones viewable from each direction. Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee said those new lights should help improve safety.

"I know this intersection very well. It's a very, very dangerous intersection and one of the reason why it's dangerous is you cannot see the signals very clearly," McNamee said. "The signals will now be brought overhead with boom arrangements. That's going to be a tremendous advantage. It will increase the visibility of the most valuable thing in a dangerous intersection, and that's the signalization."

Widening the intersection will also help change some of the angles of the curbs. McNamee said one of the major problems at the intersection now is that East and West Squantum Streets meet at an angle, limiting visibility.

"This is my observation having driven it thousands of times. West and East Squantum Street do not meet with 90-degree angles, they're kind of in a bent elbow situation, which affects visibility," McNamee said. "Anything that would square this intersection off so that there are more 90-degree angles at the curbs I think would be a very significant improvements."

To improve safety in front of the high school, a new fence will be installed along the Hancock Street side of the school property, to encourage students not to jaywalk by funneling them towards an intersection. McNamee said doing the fence will have a significant impact on safety.

"The amount of traffic from the McDonald's area, student traffic, that crosses over Hancock Street is very chaotic. They can essentially enter the school property from any access point along that exposure of the high school property to Hancock Street," McNamee said. "This is going to force them into one access point which I think is going to have a significant public safety effect."

The fence may also discourage parents from dropping off and picking up students along Hancock Street. The project will create a new drop off and pick up lane on East Squantum Street in front of North.

"When you talk about drop off and pick up, there is a separate lane for drop off and pick up for North Quincy students," Tramontozzi said.

tozzi said.

In addition to the fencing next to the school, a new staircase will be built linking the school's parking lot to the corner of the intersection.

"Right at the corner of Hancock Street at East and West Squantum entering the school parking there is a set of stairs that will be constructed by MassDOT also on school property. Those stairs were approved by the Architectural Access Board - we had to go through a process with them because those stairs are not handicap accessible but there is handicap access from two other directions," Tramontozzi said. "Because so many of the students run up that hill we are constructing steps there to make it safer so in the winter time they don't slide down the hill."

Unlike other MassDOT projects in Quincy, such as the Adams Green transportation improvements, no bicycle lanes will be built because there isn't enough room.

There is no timeline yet for the construction. Quincy is still negotiating with the owners of the Shell station at the corner of the intersection over that land taking. That site is more complicated, according to Assistant City Solicitor Deirdre Hall, because a previous owner still holds the deed for the underground property. The owner would also need to be compensated for moving his sign.

Overall Data For Oil, Natural Gas Incomplete; Council Wants Energy Manager Hired

City Sees Some Energy Savings Where Honeywell Equipment Was Installed

By SCOTT JACKSON

Energy usage decreased overall in city buildings where Honeywell equipment was installed; usage fell in most buildings but in others usage did increase, city councillors were told at Monday's meeting.

Councillor Doug Gutro, however, still feels Quincy is falling behind on reporting its energy usage. The council also called on the mayor to hire someone to oversee energy management in the city.

Data on the city's use of electricity and oil and natural gas was provided to the council Monday night by Public Buildings Director Gary Cunniff and City Solicitor Jim Timmins. The data compared baseline usage between October 2005 and September 2006 to the same period in subsequent years.

In the baseline year 10.5 million kilowatt hours of electricity were used in the three-dozen buildings with Honeywell equipment, excluding those not included because of incomplete data. For the period of time beginning from October 2008 to September 2009, the usage decreased by 11 percent. Over that same time period in the following two years, usage was down three percent compared to the baseline, and between October 2011 and September 2012 usage was down four percent compared to the baseline.

During the baseline year, 84,000 MMBTUs of oil and natural gas were used in the buildings. Usage from October 2008 to September 2009 was down 12 percent compared to the baseline year, and over the next year it was down 10 percent compared to the baseline. From October 2010 to September 2011

The Granite Railway Quarries,
W. QUINCY, Mass.

THIS IS A 1924 postcard view of the Granite Railway Company's Quarry in West Quincy. At the time Henry M. Faxon was the company president. Originally known as Pine Hill Ledge, its name changed when it was purchased by the Granite Railway Company in 1830 to provide additional granite for building the Bunker Hill Monument. It later became known simply as Granite Rail and was one of the Quincy granite industry's landmarks. It was located just west of the Expressway off Ricciuti Drive in an area where a half-dozen quarries yielded the darkest Quincy granite. Its very hard, evenly textured, "Railway Extra Dark" granite was widely recognized as one of the world's best when polished. In addition to the Bunker Hill Monument, some historic landmarks made from its granite include: Minot Ledge Lighthouse off the coast of Cohasset; the base building of the Boston Custom House with its 32 fluted columns; and the dark polished façade of the Omni Parker House Hotel in Boston. After it was closed to quarrying in the 1940s, Granite Rail became a favorite, albeit dangerous, swimming hole for youngsters from near and far until it was filled with Big Dig dirt in 2001. Today, its still protruding granite ledges attract large numbers of rock climbing enthusiasts, geologists, historians, curious historians and soon perhaps: zip-liners. ### McIntyre Seeks Army Equipment For Snow Cleanup

By SCOTT JACKSON

In a communication to U.S. Senators Edward Brooke and Ted Kennedy and Cong. James A. Burke, Mayor James R. McIntyre urged the passage of federal legislation allowing Quincy and other communities to use Army equipment to aid snow removal.

The legislation would allow communities - especially those with armories and other installations present, like Quincy - to contract with the National Guard to rent equipment prior to storms hitting. Communities would also be allowed to hire National Guardsmen to operate the equipment on municipal streets.

McIntyre pushed for the legislation after the region's third nor'easter in less than a month dropped six inches of snow on Quincy; overall 71.5 inches had fallen on the city since Feb. 1.

"While fighting these storms, I have had occasion to pass our local armory and the reserve center at Merrymount Park. It seems to me to be a waste of money and equipment to see scores of 2.5 ton six-six Army vehicles, jeeps, tow trucks, and other vehicles under heaps of snow," McIntyre said.

The mayor said that during the most recent storm, 400 guardsmen were at the Quincy Armory for drills, and some told contractors they wished they could have helped with snow removal.

DOWNTOWN PARKING PROPOSAL STUDY

The City Council's Finance Committee was set to begin reviewing a planned $387,500 appropriation to create a new parking lot in Quincy Center to help keep merchants in the city.

The plan called for building the 140-car lot between Hancock and Mechanic Streets to the south of Revere Road. Over half the money, $230,000, would go towards taking the land, $150,000 would be for construction, and the remaining $7,500 for qualifying fees.

Mayor McIntyre pressed the council to consider the plan, saying it "must act now" to prevent the loss of stores similar to the departure of Sheridan's Department Store.

Councillor Clifford H. Marshall proposed a similar study, to focus on bringing off street parking to Washington Street in Quincy Point. Councillor George B. MacDonald asked for a study on the parking needs of South Quincy.

GRAHAM URGES WARD 1 RENEWAL

Ward 1 Councillor Edward S. Graham urged Mayor McIntyre to support designating the Adams Shore-Germantown-Houghs Neck area as the recipient of Code Enforcement Upgrading.

A similar city-federal program was already underway in North Quincy and Wollaston under a $1.8 grant from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The program involved community-wide rehabilitation plans and offered low cost loans to residents in the project zone for home improvements.

Graham said his ward, the city's largest, would represent a logical extension for the program. If applied to Ward 1, he said the program could include construction of a new road to Germantown.

QUINCY-ISMS

The nor'easter forced a postponement of a dinner honoring the new members of the Quincy Youth council. The 10 members of the council were David D'Olimpio and Eric Johnson (Quincy High/Vo-Tech), Clifford MacDonald and Michael Reppucci (North Quincy High grades 10-12), Charles Santoro (North Quincy grade 9/Atlantic), Michael Conine (Broad Meadows), Frederick Gilbert (Central), Peter Doucette (Point), Peter Gacicia (Sterling), and Marion McEachern (Woodward School)...Former North Quincy High football star Bill Curran signed a contract to play with the Miami Dolphins of the American Football League. He played running back collegiately at Northeastern... Councillor John J. Quinn suggested boy scouts shovel out fire hydrants as one of their good deeds...WJDA owner James Asher presented a motorman's bell from a street car that ran in Quincy in 1910 to a museum in San Diego for that city's 200th anniversary... Boston Celtics star Tom "Satch" Sanders was keynote speaker at Star of the Sea Church CYO annual basketball dinner...Quincy Point resident Maurice R. Horrigan, Jr. received a letter from former Alabama Gov. George Wallace saying he had no plans yet to run for president again in 1972.

I am writing on behalf of many residents in Quincy that travel over the Neponset River Bridge each day.

Unions are getting a bad rap.

Some are legitimate and some are not. Labor unions consist of plumbers, electricians, carpenters and so on. There are very few of these people who earn $100,000 a year unless they work for the feds, state or city government.

Try working on a 40-story building in the middle of winter in Boston. No walls to stop 40 to 50 mph winds, rain or snow. That's what you call earning your money.

Plumbers Union Local 12 in Boston is one in a million. The members on their own merit voted to have 30 cents an hour taken out of their pay to contribute to a fund they call the 13th check that they send to their brothers who are retired every December. I know this as a fact for I am one who receives of

for the Marina Bay condos/apartments and that is moving along, but there is no mention of the effect that it will have on the traffic going over the bridge which will be much, much worse. It has been suggested that the timing of the Neponset Circle lights be changed to allow more time for those going northbound off the bridge to alleviate traffic but so far, nothing has been done.

During construction,

the checks.

There is no greater love than one brother for another broker.

With price of gas and just about everything else on the rise, the check is a God send.

John Isaac
Shaw Street

State Police directed traffic and allowed northbound cars coming off the bridge to go through the light before it turned green. This alleviated traffic so that it wasn't as congested. Since the officers are no longer directing traffic, the lights are now working alone and their timing is causing huge back-ups and delays.

Prior to construction, I was able to get over the bridge in 5 minutes - it now takes 30. Another resident stated that it takes 45 minutes from Marina Bay to UMass - that should only be a 15 minute drive in 7:30 a.m. traffic. Two other residents complained that it takes them an hour to go over the bridge and have instead gone out of their way to another route to avoid sitting in traffic and battling the two merges (Quincy Shore Drive lane merge and the QSD-Hancock Street merge).

The traffic situation is just going to get worse once the condos/apartments are done and being used. The only thing mentioned about traffic in regards to the condos was work to be done on Victory Road - but not anywhere else.

The traffic situation must be handled before the condos are finished. Even though the remedy for this issue may be outside of Quincy, it still affects its residents. I am hoping that this letter gets published to bring this to light and that a member of Quincy government can help out if possible.

Five Quincy Schools Plant 'Red Emperor' Tulip Test Gardens

In the fall of 2012, the Wollaston Garden Club invited science teachers in the Quincy Public Schools to join with the youth committee of the garden club to participate and plant gardens in the international science project called 'Journey North - Tulip Test Gardens.'

Students and teachers from five Quincy schools have already connected with hundreds of other schools in the Northern Hemisphere by planting "Red Emperor" tulip bulbs on their school grounds, and this spring will share local observations and track spring's progress. Students will have to factor the large amount of snow/moisture during February into their predictions and calculations.

This project enlists the help of students as citizen scientists to monitor seasonal change in a scientific way, using the scientific method, and to contribute valuable observations to a long-term database.

The Wollaston Garden Club is sponsoring and supporting five Quincy schools in establishing tulip test gardens. Participating schools and teachers are:

Montclair (Nancy Joyce); Lincoln Hancock (Trudy Roybal, Kelly Antonellis & Lois Blowers); Merrymount (Lorie Hammerstrom); Broad Meadows (Johna Dowdall); and Quincy High School (Lawrence Johnson).

Claire Fitzmaurice from the Wollaston Garden Club and Friends of the Thomas Crane Library Board planted a tulip-test garden at the Thomas Crane Library 'Atrium' Garden with teacher, Ron Adams and the Operation Days' Work students from Broad Meadows Middle School. Red Emperor tulips were also planted by the garden club in front of the puddingstone marker at Anne Hutchinson Square at Hillside Avenue and Beale Street in Wollaston.

Teacher materials focus on National Science Educational Standards and National Geography Standards. By planting these tulip test gardens students are expected to learn how to ask questions, and explore essential questions; make predictions, make and record observations, journal, compare, and collect data. Students use math, science, geography and language arts skills while beautifying their community and school grounds.

Scrod With A Twist

There are so many different ways to prepare fish, and at times no matter what you do, it sometimes doesn't come out as flavorful as you like.

But I found in today's recipe for scrod its made a little different and is certainly not bland. You can also use haddock or cod.

SCROD WITH WINE AND LEMON
1-2 pounds scrod (cut in 3-4 pieces, preferably thick slices)

Corn flake crumbs for coating

Flour for coating

1 egg with 1/4 cup milk for coating

1/4 cup white wine

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

3 tablespoons vegetable oil

1/4 cup seasoned breadcrumbs

Juice of one lemon

Mix the egg and milk together. Coat the fish with the flour, the egg mixture and the corn flake crumbs.

Heat the oil and butter and sauté the fish turning it gently until both sides are lightly browned.

Sprinkle the seasoned breadcrumbs over the top and then the wine and lemon juice over that. Don't turn the fish, but just cover and cook until well blended (about five minutes on low heat.)

Serve with any side. I've used both rice or sweet potatoes each time I made it.

Rice With Mushrooms And Wine

During the snow storm (the big one), I was at my daughter Nancy and son-in-law Jed's home and of course what else was there to do but cook or bake?

And so that's what Nancy and I did when we made a delicious risotto with mushrooms and wine.

I sautéed the mushrooms while she made the rice.

RICE WITH MUSHROOMS

1 large box of sliced mushrooms

2 cloves of garlic (chopped fine)

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

2 tablespoons olive oil

1/2 cup white wine

salt and pepper to taste

Heat the oil and butter. Sauté the garlic and add the mushrooms stirring until mushrooms are softened. Add the white wine and cook until all blended. There will be a nice liquid that formed with the combination of the mushrooms and the wine.

Set aside while the rice is cooking.

Rice with lime and cilantro

1 - 1/2 cups rice

3 tablespoons chopped cilantro

Juice of one lime

Boil the rice according to directions. Add the rice to the mushrooms and cook together until done. Sprinkle the cilantro on top and the lime juice over that. What a treat it was on that cold wintry day.

Stroke, Bone Fracture Screenings Friday

Life Line Screening is offering screenings designed to reduce the risk of stroke or bone fracture Thursday, March 7 at the Best Western Adams Inn, 29 Hancock St., North Quincy.

Stroke is the third leading cause of death and a leading cause of permanent disability. Eighty percent of stroke victims had no apparent warning signs prior to their stroke.

Preventive ultrasound screenings are fast, noninvasive, painless and convenient.

Screenings identify potential cardiovascular conditions such as blocked arteries and irregular heart rhythm, abdominal aortic aneurysms, and hardening of the arteries in the legs, which is a strong predictor of heart disease.

A bone density screening to assess osteoporosis risk is also offered and is appropriate for both men and women.

Packages start at $159. All five screenings take 60-90 minutes to complete.

For more information regarding the screenings or to schedule an appointment, call 1-877-237-1287 or visit www.lifelinescreening.com.

Pre-registration is required.

Savings Haul Seen With New 10-Year Trash Contract

The 10-year agreement with Sunrise Scavenger, Inc. of Boston will begin on July 1, includes no cost increases for the first two years and a 2-percent fixed increase for the remainder of the contract. Extending the existing contract would cost $1.4 million more in the first six years with no guarantee on what increases would be for the following four years. The last four years of the contract and its fixed prices are a critical element of financial stability in the new contract, Koch said.

Under the agreement, the City will pay $3.54 million for trash collection in the first two years of contract, which will be capped at $4.1 million in the 10th and final year.

The agreement means the City will bow out of the pilot program that saw the City negotiate together with Braintree and Weymouth on the current trash collection contract.

Koch noted that the Tri-Town collaborative led to cost-savings and dramatically increased recycling rates, but added that the City would be negligent if it did not pursue an agreement potentially even more beneficial. He noted that Braintree and Weymouth are pursuing their own efficiencies, such as automated trash collection trucks, that would not be feasible in Quincy's more densely populated neighborhoods.

"Our partnership with Braintree and Weymouth was a major success. It is a great credit to the leadership in those communities that we have made such great progress together in the last few years, and we are going to continue to pursue ways to collaborate that make sense for all three communities," Koch said. "Ultimately, I have a responsibility to do everything possible to ensure the best deal possible for the taxpayers of Quincy, and this agreement with Sunrise accomplishes that and then some."

Among key contract provisions are:

- Sunrise workers will consider a four-foot space around barrels essentially as part of trash barrels themselves, meaning that overflow and spillage will be cleaned up by workers.

- An increase in yard waste collection dates.

- No additional cost for the collection of televisions, yard waste, white goods and Christmas trees. All costs are factored into the fixed contract price.

- A dedicated call center for Quincy residents to register complaints and missed pick-ups.

- A $20,000 increase in community outreach funding and a $10,000 program specifically for educational outreach in the Quincy Public Schools.

- No fuel surcharge for the life of the contract.

Mayor Koch asked Department of Public Works Commissioner Daniel Raymondi to explore the City's options several months ago as the option-year on the current contract approached. The commissioner and his team worked through three proposals, including an extension proposal from the current contractor, Capitol Waste, Inc., and determined that Sunrise was the most cost-efficient and beneficial package.

"We rolled up our sleeves, went line-by-line, and came up with an agreement I believe will be a tremendous benefit for the City of Quincy in the coming years. The Mayor's directive was simple — get the best deal for the City, and I believe we have," said Raymondi.

Sunrise Scavenger is a growing collection company that currently has municipal contracts with neighborhoods in the City of Boston. The company, led by President Joseph Lombardi, has one of the newest, most environmentally friendly truck fleets in the region, which will include the new fleet of hybrid vehicles specifically for Quincy's routes.

Officials expect a seamless transition with the new contract, and none of the City's trash and recycling programs will be changing as part of the new contract.

The new contract comes on the heels of a new disposal contract the City negotiated Covanta-SEMASS that will save nearly $1 million in the first year and more than $10 million over the duration of the agreement. With the new collection contract, the City's collection and disposal contracts are now aligned, providing for future negotiating leverage.

Mayor Announces Staff Shifts On Leadership Team

Mayor Thomas Koch Tuesday announced a staff shift on his appointed leadership team that will see Director of Parks, Forestry and Cemetery Kristen Powers and Director of Constituent Services Christopher Cassani switch roles in the coming weeks.

Powers recently met with Mayor Koch to suggest that her schedule as a department head, particularly regular night meetings and weekend events, was becoming increasingly difficult to balance with personal responsibilities that include a family of three young children between the ages of 1 and 4.

The shift will provide Powers a measure of schedule flexibility and allows Cassani, who recently completed a masters degree in business administration, an opportunity to move into a department head's role that he has been working toward since Mayor Koch took office in 2008.

"These are two tremendously talented young people who have both worked very hard and accomplished much since the start of our administration, and I am thrilled they are both continuing on with us in these new roles," said Koch.

Powers was appointed to the position held by Mayor Koch for 12 years himself at the start of the administration, immediately taking over the stalled effort to complete the Upper Merrymount Park restoration and fountain project. Today, the area is one of the city's most popular open spaces and is among a series of new or restored public spaces completed under Powers' leadership.

The Park Department also created new playing fields at Cleverly Court in Quincy Point, built the city's first regulation running track at Faxon Field, added space to Faxon Park that was part of a broader master plan for the historic park, and completed a number of smaller projects to rehabilitate parks around the City.

Mayor Koch noted that the expansion of park space under Powers' tenure — including the required maintenance — came largely during the height of the recent economic crisis, a time which saw major cutbacks to the Park Department's budget that are only now gradually being restored.

"I take great pride in holding the position as steward of these treasured open spaces but recognize that I need to put my pride aside and do what is best for my young, growing family," said Powers, who has spent a total of 10 years at the Park Department in multiple roles. "I wish to thank all of the people I've had the privilege to call my colleagues in the Park Department who work incredibly hard every day for our City. I am very much looking forward to this new challenge, working directly with residents on behalf of Mayor Koch, and I am grateful for the opportunity to continue working for the City where I grew up and am now raising my family."

As Director of Constituent Services, Cassani led a broad overhaul of the city's previously archaic system for responding to every-day resident requests to City Hall, managing a service request platform on the City's redesigned website that has improved response times to requests and includes a tracking mechanism to determine when individual issues were resolved by department.

Building off the success of the new online program, Cassani also implemented a partnership with SeeClickFix.com, which allows residents to immediately report service requests, such as potholes, via mobile devices using a Google-based map.

Cassani is the Chairman of the Mayor Koch's Drug Task Force, an initiative that has been recognized as a statewide model for its leadership in developing community-based strategies to fight substance abuse, particularly opiate addiction. Most recently, Cassani spearheaded the Mayor's plans to purchase City street-lights and begin a conversion to LED-style efficient lighting that is expected to cut costs and reduce maintenance.

"I am very excited to get started," said Cassani, a Boston University graduate who earned his MBA from the University of Massachusetts last year. "The city's park, forestry and cemetery systems have been in very capable hands these past 5 years, and I am going to work extremely hard to build upon that work in the years to come. Our parks mean so much to so many people — and they do so much to enhance the quality of life for our residents. I am humbled by this opportunity."

Cassani recently purchased a home in West Quincy, where he will live with his wife and young daughter.

Scrod With A Twist

There are so many different ways to prepare fish, and at times no matter what you do, it sometimes doesn't come out as flavorful as you like.

But I found in today's recipe for scrod its made a little different and is certainly not bland. You can also use haddock or cod.

SCROD WITH WINE AND LEMON
1-2 pounds scrod (cut in 3-4 pieces, preferably thick slices)

Corn flake crumbs for coating

Flour for coating

1 egg with ¼ cup milk for coating

¼ cup white wine

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

3 tablespoons vegetable oil
¼ cup seasoned breadcrumbs
Juice of one lemon

Mix the egg and milk together. Coat the fish with the flour, the egg mixture and the corn flake crumbs.

Heat the oil and butter and sauté the fish turning it gently until both sides are lightly browned.

Sprinkle the seasoned breadcrumbs over the top and then the wine and lemon juice over that. Don't turn the fish, but just cover and cook until well blended (about five minutes on low heat.)

Serve with any side. I've used both rice or sweet potatoes each time I made it.

Rice With Mushrooms And Wine

During the snow storm (the big one), I was at my daughter Nancy and son-in-law Jed's home and of course what else was there to do but cook or bake?

And so that's what Nancy and I did when we made a delicious risotto with mushrooms and wine.

I sautéed the mushrooms while she made the rice.

RICE WITH MUSHROOMS

1 large box of sliced mushrooms

2 cloves of garlic (chopped fine)

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

2 tablespoons olive oil

½ cup white wine

salt and pepper to taste

Heat the oil and butter. Sauté the garlic and add the mushrooms stirring until mushrooms are softened. Add the white wine and cook until all blended. There will be a nice liquid that formed with the combination of the mushrooms and the wine.

Set aside while the rice is cooking.

Rice with lime and cilantro

1 -½ cups rice

3 tablespoons chopped cilantro

Juice of one lime

Boil the rice according to directions. Add the rice to the mushrooms and cook together until done. Sprinkle the cilantro on top and the lime juice over that. What a treat it was on that cold wintry day.

Stroke, Bone Fracture Screenings Friday

Life Line Screening is offering screenings designed to reduce the risk of stroke or bone fracture Thursday, March 7 at the Best Western Adams Inn, 29 Hancock St., North Quincy.

Stroke is the third leading cause of death and a leading cause of permanent disability. Eighty percent of stroke victims had no apparent warning signs prior to their stroke.

Preventive ultrasound screenings are fast, non-invasive, painless and convenient.

Screenings identify potential cardiovascular conditions such as blocked arteries and irregular heart rhythm, abdominal aortic aneurysms, and hardening of the arteries in the legs, which is a strong predictor of heart disease.

A bone density screening to assess osteoporosis risk is also offered and is appropriate for both men and women.

Packages start at $159. All five screenings take 60-90 minutes to complete.

For more information regarding the screenings or to schedule an appointment, call 1-877-237-1287 or visit www.lifelinescreening.com.

Savings Haul Seen With New 10-Year Trash Contract

The 10-year agreement with Sunrise Scavenger, Inc. of Boston will begin on July 1, includes no cost increases for the first two years and a 2-percent fixed increase for the remainder of the contract. Extending the existing contract would cost $1.4 million more in the first six years with no guarantee on what increases would be for the following four years. The last four years of the contract and its fixed prices are a critical element of financial stability in the new contract, Koch said.

Under the agreement, the City will pay $3.54 million for trash collection in the first two years of contract, which will be capped at $4.1 million in the 10th and final year.

The agreement means the City will bow out of the pilot program that saw the City negotiate together with Braintree and Weymouth on the current trash collection contract.

Koch noted that the Tri-Town collaborative led to cost-savings and dramatically increased recycling rates, but added that the City would be negligent if it did not pursue an agreement potentially even more beneficial. He noted that Braintree and Weymouth are pursuing their own efficiencies, such as automated trash collection trucks, that would not be feasible in Quincy's more densely populated neighborhoods.

"Our partnership with Braintree and Weymouth was a major success. It is a great credit to the leadership in those communities that we have made such great progress together in the last few years, and we are going to continue to pursue ways to collaborate that make sense for all three communities," Koch said. "Ultimately, I have a responsibility to do everything possible to ensure the best deal possible for the taxpayers of Quincy, and this agreement with Sunrise accomplishes that and then some."

Among key contract provisions are:

- Sunrise workers will consider a four-foot space around barrels essentially as part of trash barrels themselves, meaning that overflow and spillage will be cleaned up by workers.

- An increase in yard waste collection dates.

- No additional cost for the collection of televisions, yard waste, white goods and Christmas trees. All costs are factored into the fixed contract price.

- A dedicated call center for Quincy residents to register complaints and missed pick-ups.

- A $20,000 increase in community outreach funding and a $10,000 program specifically for educational outreach in the Quincy Public Schools.

- No fuel surcharge for the life of the contract.

Mayor Koch asked Department of Public Works Commissioner Daniel Raymondi to explore the City's options several months ago as the option-year on the current contract approached. The commissioner and his team worked through three proposals, including an extension proposal from the current contractor, Capitol Waste, Inc., and determined that Sunrise was the most cost-efficient and beneficial package.

"We rolled up our sleeves, went line-by-line, and came up with an agreement I believe will be a tremendous benefit for the City of Quincy in the coming years. The Mayor's directive was simple — get the best deal for the City, and I believe we have," said Raymondi.

With the new collection contract, the City's collection and disposal contracts are now aligned, providing for future negotiating leverage.

Everyone thinks Scott is

Lunar New Year Festival Sunday

The 25th annual Quincy Lunar New Year Festival was postponed to Sunday because of inclement weather, but organizers think the delay won't affect the celebration.

"We've been checking with vendors and sponsors to see if they can attend," Quincy Asian Resources, Inc. Executive Director John Brothers said. "It sounds like most people are resetting their schedules and will be able to come."

The festival runs from 12 to 5 p.m. on Sunday at North Quincy High School and is free to attend. Typically the event starts at 10:30 a.m. but the start time was pushed back to noon because roads around the high school are part of the Quincy half marathon route and will be closed during the morning hours.

About 8,000 people attended last year's Lunar New Year Festival, and Brothers expects about the same amount of people to attend this year's festivities.

"We're confident we're going to have a strong turnout," Brothers said.

The event kicks off with a traditional Lion Dance. The remainder of the day's events include cultural exhibits, entertainment, and activities that cater to people of all backgrounds. There were also be a food court offering traditional foods and a mahjong tournament.

There will be two newcomers to the festival. Children's librarians from the Thomas Crane Library will be on hand to do storytelling in both English and Chinese. Also new is a Wishing Tree, a traditional Chinese activity that allows festivalgoers to write wishes and hang them on a tree in hopes they will come true.

The festival was originally scheduled for Feb. 25 but was cancelled because of an anticipated snowstorm. Brothers said a contingency plan had been in place, but changing dates required a lot of effort from the staff.

"We had a plan in place but we still had to scramble," Brothers said. "It's a lot of people to get in place."

Amaryllis Chamber Ensemble Performance Sunday

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

READY FOR A MAKEOVER?

A smile makeover can be as effective as a facelift when it comes to rejuvenating the face and promoting confidence and high self-esteem. When gaps, chips, discoloration, or wear conspire to rob patients of their smiles' potential, the dentist can intervene with aesthetic techniques such as whitening, bonding, and laminated veneers to bring new freshness to their smiles. Professional whitening can render teeth shades whiter for a more youthful look, and bonding uses tooth-colored materials to fill in spaces and chips or otherwise impart a more youthful contour to tooth surfaces. In some cases, porcelain veneers may be recommended for a longer-lasting result. If you think that you may benefit from a smile makeover, schedule an evaluation.

City Sees Some Energy Savings With Honeywell Equipment

it was just one percent under the baseline, and in the most recent year it was five percent less than baseline. The oil and natural gas data was adjusted for weather.

The overall data for the two years after the baseline year – October 2006 to September 2007 and October 2007 to September 2008 – was not provided to the council because the oil and natural gas usage data for that time was not available.

"There are buildings that have shown improvements," Cunniff said. "There was a distinct drop in usage the first year (October 2008 to September 2009)...there are buildings that show definite improvement. Taken as a whole, as the job and the installation have run their course over a number of winters now, the trend is even though we saved a certain percentage in the beginning we're saving less as we go along. And there are some buildings where the trend is distinctly upward."

The Department of Public Works building, several fire houses, Squantum and Snug Harbor Elementary Schools, Broad Meadows, and the Fore River Clubhouse all had their electrical consumption jump by at least 10 percent in the most recent year compared to the same time during the base year. The City Hall annex, Park Department building, Beechwood Knoll, Central, and the Adams Shore and main library branches all had increases in gas or oil consumption of at least nine percent in the most recent year compared to the base year.

Timmins said the performance in buildings might have been impacted because of the city's protracted legal dispute with Honeywell.

Now that it's been settled, the city will be able to use Honeywell's building management software, which could help the city realize more savings.

"Part of what the Honeywell contract was about was using computer information," Timmins said. "We will have the ability to look at particular buildings with a computer using the system that Honeywell's provided and tweak things so we do achieve savings. So that is on the horizon here, it's one of the things we're going to be doing – commissioning the entire system – and when that happens I think you'll start to see less of an up, down, and all around."

At the meeting, Gutro distributed copies of an ordinance backed by Boston Mayor Tom Menino mandating disclosure of energy usage in that city's public buildings and in large private ones as well. He contrasted that with the lack of 2007 and 2008 data presented to the council, and said he would to have another meeting, this time with an energy expert present.

"Communities are light years ahead of us in terms of accessing, analyzing, and reporting energy use data in public buildings," Gutro said. "I still believe that is extraordinarily simple to collect the 2007 and 2008 data, I believe it exists today."

"Just get an energy expert up here to navigate us through the software and say 'here's what it is some of this information councilor is bad data – we've got bad data so we went back, we got data from this building and put it back in. We went to National Grid, got this data and put it back in. Here's the analysis. And by the way, they installed boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, in this building and it didn't achieve what I as an expert would have thought it would have achieved.'

"That's what I'm looking for – that give and take and that understanding of energy issues that can walk us through that equipment that was installed delivered for each building and collectively what was promised to the taxpayers who footed the tab for this. I don't feel I got that tonight."

Council President Michael McFarland made the request for an energy manager or energy consultant at the end of the Honeywell discussion.

Town Brook Culvert Work Expected Finished This Week

The city announced Tuesday that water should be flowing through the newly restored Town Brook culvert in Quincy Center within the next few days, marking a major milestone in the City's downtown revitalization plans.

The culvert's completion will send water, and the smelt spawning habitat, through new open-channel segments in downtown. The project needed to be completed prior to March 15 to coincide with smelt spawning season, according to Department of Environmental Protection regulations.

The end of construction will also mean the end of traffic changes in the near future around the construction site.

With water flowing, the Town Brook project will now turn to building the pocket parks that will surround the new day-lit channels of the Brook.

Preliminary designs for the parks are now being completed, and Mayor Thomas Koch will be scheduling a meeting to outline the park plans for the public in the coming weeks.

some to be back tomorrow morning," said Dougan. "We were able to have the licenses fast-tracked. The state agreed to expedite the approval process due to the nature of their jobs."

Dougan added that it had been a while since the department had conducted a spot check but that having an up-to-date gun license has always been policy.

"They know now that they have to have this done. It's the same policy as before. We have done spot checks in the past and will continue to do them," said

Dougan. "Officers are required to have updated gun licenses and drivers licenses, which is something we spot check periodically."

Dougan said that a change in the 90-day grace period might have been the reason as to why so many officers had expired licenses.

The Body Smith Shop Celebrates 50 Years In Business

The Body Smith Shop recently celebrated 50 years in business.

It all started back in 1962 when Vincent J. "Vinnie" DelVecchio - a lifelong Quincy resident and graduate of the Quincy Trade School - wanted to open his own business. He had worked in auto body shops in Wellesley, Roxbury, and the Vocational School.

Vinnie was told that there was a building vacant on 45 Hancock Street in North Quincy; the building had 600 square feet of space. To Vinnie, it was the perfect beginning. He was excited and willing to make his dream a reality.

The business suddenly grew and more working space was needed. Vinnie's friend, who was also a customer, told him about 212 Willard. This was an opportunity Vinnie couldn't pass up. He went from 600 square feet of space to the 3,500 square foot space where the Body Smith Shop is currently located.

He had everything he wanted - a loving wife, a growing family, and now his dream was a reality.

When asked how the name was chosen, Vinnie

VINCENT J. "VINNIE" DELVECCHIO first opened his auto body shop "The Body Smith Shop," on Hancock Street 50 years ago. He later moved the shop to Willard Street, where it's still open today.

MAYOR TOM KOCH presented a commendation to DelVecchio in October to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Body Smith Shop opening.

explained that his friend and father, Louis, were over his house once. "My dad wanted me to name my business with my own name, but talking around the table we all wanted to think outside the box - 'The Body Smith Shop.' Body as in auto body, Smith as in a black smith working with metal. And the name has been with us ever since."

Vinnie's hard work and dedication have given him and his crew continued success, and the Body Smith Shop has continued offering top-notch auto body repair work. Recently, a state of the art spray booth was installed.

Vinnie's son Vincent Louis DelVecchio has been by his father's side following in his footsteps. Vinnie couldn't be prouder of son's hard work and dedication to the business.

Dennis Bucceri, a shop employee, has been working there for 40 years, showing hard work and dedication.

Vinnie attributes his success to his loving wife of 56 years, Bitsy, his wonderful daughters Donna, Diane, and Lisa, his 14 grandchildren, his brothers and their families, and last the Quincy Trade School.

When asked when he will retire, Vinnie answers, "not yet, it will come someday."

Vinnie recently celebrated his 80th birthday, and was given a citation from Mayor Tom Koch for his hard work in the City of Quincy.

Grazioso Case Is Also Dismissed

Cahill 'Satisfied' With AG Agreement; Will Remain In Private Sector

By SCOTT JACKSON

Former Treasurer Tim Cahill will not be retried on public corruption charges after agreeing to pay a $100,000 civil fine and a former top Cahill aide avoided his own trial on related charges after agreeing to pay a $10,000 fine.

Both maintained their innocence of any criminal wrongdoing.

Cahill, a Quincy resident and former city councillor who owned a downtown restaurant before his career in politics, was indicted last April on two counts of conspiracy. Prosecutors from Attorney General Martha Coakley's office said he used public money for Lottery ads to give a boost to his ultimately unsuccessful 2010 gubernatorial campaign. Cahill argued the ads were necessary to defend the Lottery from third-party attacks — the Lottery ads didn't mention Cahill by name and his voice and likeness were not used.

In December, Judge Christine Roach declared a mistrial after a Suffolk County jury could not reach a unanimous verdict on the charges. Prosecutors could have retried Cahill, but both sides agreed to the six-figure settlement, and Roach signed off on the deal Friday.

"I'm very satisfied with the agreement we reached with the Attorney General's Office ending this saga. I think it is a fair agreement and I'm happy to be moving forward with my life and avoiding a second trial," Cahill said Tuesday in a phone interview.

Under terms of the agreement, Cahill will be able to pay off the $100,000 settlement with annual payments of $25,000 over four years. Cahill will remain on pre-trial probation for at least 18 months, and will stay on it until the settlement is paid in full. When it is paid off, the charges will be dismissed. While on pre-trial probation he is barred from seeking or accepting any public office. He will not be able to use campaign funds to pay the settlement.

Cahill said he does not plan to seek public office again once the pre-trial probation ends and is happy to be able to return to work for Braintree-based Compass Securities now that his ordeal is over.

"I want to continue to help the business grow," Cahill said. "I'm looking forward to life in the private sector."

Brad Bailey, an attorney for Cahill, said his client has made no admission of any criminal wrongdoing by agreeing to the fine.

"He doesn't admit to any criminal wrongdoing at all," Bailey said.

Coakley called the $100,000 fine a fair resolution to the case.

"With the Treasurer's admission of these violations and the payment of this fine, we believe this is a just resolution to this case," she said.

Al Grazioso, Cahill's chief of staff at the Lottery, had been awaiting trial on obstruction of justice charges for allegedly intimidating two witnesses during the course of the investigation into Cahill. On Monday, the case was continued without a finding and Grazioso agreed to pay a $10,000 fine in lieu of a trial.

Grazioso will have four years to pay the fine. He will be on pre-trial probation for a minimum of 18 months and will remain on it until the fine is paid in full. At that time, the charges will be dismissed. While on pre-trial probation he cannot seek or hold public office, or have any contact with the two individuals identified by initials in the indictment who claimed Grazioso tried to intimidate them.

Grazioso on Monday told The Sun he was grateful Coakley's office decided not to bring the case to trial and was thankful for the support he received from the Quincy community.

"I am thankful that the Attorney General's Office has decided not to pursue the charges against me," Grazioso said. "I have maintained my innocence since day one and have never waived. I want to thank so many people from our great city for the love and support they have shown to me and my family but most of all I want to thank God for the Sacred Heart faith community as well as others who have offered their prayers daily on our behalf."

Coakley said the agreement between both sides was an appropriate one. "We believe this is an appropriate resolution to this case," she said.

Morrissey Extends Partnership To Fight Insurance Fraud

Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey and Insurance Fraud Bureau Executive Director Daniel Johnston have renewed their partnership with Quincy and Randolph Police to fight fraud on the south shore — saving honest drivers money.

"This is both a public safety and a consumer issue," Morrissey said. "Every cent insurance companies pay out in false theft or accident claims becomes higher premiums for honest drivers. And even staged crashes can cause real injuries."

The task force was founded in 2005, including Randolph Police, and soon expanded to include Quincy, according to Morrissey and Johnston. The problem of thefts and accidents being staged to support bogus insurance claims drew broad media and public attention after a bogus accident left a Lawrence grandmother dead; the man who staged the crash was eventually convicted of manslaughter in Essex Superior Court.

Johnston said the task force has referred 78 fully investigated cases to the DA's office since inception, resulting in 76 defendants being charged with insurance fraud related crimes.

The Community Insurance Fraud Initiative is funded in part by a $39,000 grant from the IFB. "The task force has had a remarkable impact. There is evidence that insurance fraud schemes have been drying up."

"This success is possible because of the work of our partners in the Quincy and Randolph Police Departments," Morrissey said. "Chief William Pace and Chief Paul Keenan deserve credit for agreeing that this should be addressed. By using resources together, intelligently, the arc of this problem has been reversed."

"The Insurance Fraud Bureau is pleased to partner with local police departments in Randolph and Quincy, and to work closely with the prosecutors in Norfolk District Attorney Michael Morrissey's office," Johnston said. "Visible, aggressive investigations against perpetrators of insurance fraud benefit the honest rate payers who play by the rules. We are committed to driving insurance fraud out of our system, with the result being lower insurance premiums for everyone."

Gomez Kicks Off Senate Campaign In Quincy

By EMILY TAFT

Republican Gabriel Gomez kicked off his campaign for U.S. Senate Feb. 28, making his first stop in Quincy at the Morrisette American Legion Post on Liberty Street.

Gomez, a former Navy SEAL, spoke to a crowd of over 50 people asking them to vote and join his campaign of change.

"Too many in Congress are entrenched in their ideological positions. I will endeavor to be a voice for bipartisanship, reasonableness and common sense. Sending yet another career politician to the Senate would be more of the same," said Gomez. "So today, I'm simply asking that you give me a fair chance in this campaign."

"Ask yourself, is this addiction to debt as good as our government can be? Ask yourself, is this the best we can do? Ask yourself, is the path Congress has put us on a path you can in good conscience leave to your kids?"

"You and I know that Congress has failed us. You and I know this path is unsustainable. You and I know our country is better than its politics. It's time to hit the refresh button, so please join our campaign for change."

Gomez, 47, a Cohasset resident and son of Colombian immigrants touched on the issues of over spending and the economy during his first campaign speech. Gomez said that the country doesn't have to continue to fall deeper and deeper into debt and that both parties can work together to get government spending under control.

"The simple fact is that if we are going to preserve the American dream for future generations, we have to get our government spending under control, and focus on our economy," said Gomez.

"Sure, I'm running as a Republican, but I'm a new kind of Republican. Obviously as a Republican I hold some conservative views... but I'm an independent thinker, and I have no interest in going to Washington to engage in partisan trench warfare. We have enough folks doing that already."

GABRIEL GOMEZ
Emily Taft

"I'm not afraid to work with people who disagree with me. Our country has problems and we need problem solvers. I'm not a politician. I don't know all the political lingo and I don't want to. I want to have candid and open conversations with real people. I want to serve with common sense and straight talk."

After leaving the Navy in 1996, Gomez went back to school and received his MBA from Harvard Business School and joined Advent International, a Boston-based investment firm. He said that as a businessman he looks at the federal government and sees that it is an overextended, bloated organization with no budget and $16 trillion in debt.

"I would never invest pension funds for Massachusetts' public employees in a company like that. Yet we all are invested in that government and its time to fix it," said Gomez. "When I look at Washington I see non-stop bickering. I see a dysfunctional, partisan atmosphere. America deserves better."

Gomez said that he would like to see term limits for politicians so the career politician is phased out and there is a chance for new ideas and thinking in Washington.

"Today, there are thousands of lobbyists in DC. And many of them are former congressmen, senators, and staffers. Here's an idea - how about passing a law that says if you serve as a congressman or a senator, you can never become a lobbyist. What would be wrong with that? You can be a public servant, or you can be a lobbyist, but you can't be both," said Gomez.

"And while we are at it, how about this - term limits for politicians. The president is term limited. Why not do the same for Congressmen and Senators? Let them come back home and live under the laws they have created. Let them actually live in the communities they have been serving. It might be good for them, and it might give America the opportunity to phase out career politicians. It would give us the chance to get some new blood, some new thinking, and some fresh ideas in Washington."

Gomez, who made two other stops last Thursday, in Shrewsbury and West Springfield, is running against Republicans Daniel Winslow and Michael J. Sullivan in the April 30th primary election.

The GOP nominee will face either Democrat Cong. Edward Markey or Cong. Stephen Lynch in the final election June 25.

Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP) and Quincy Literacy Volunteers invite guests to explore learning opportunities in the area at their College Fair Monday, March 11 from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library in Quincy

Sullivan Names Senate Campaign Team

Michael J. Sullivan, Republican candidate for the open U.S. Senate seat, announces his campaign leadership team.

Shrewsbury native Karyn Polito, a six-term member of the Massachusetts House and the GOP's 2010 candidate for General Treasurer of the Commonwealth, will serve as general chairman of his campaign. Sullivan said that Polito "is a good friend and, more importantly, is a real advocate for honest, common sense reforms."

"As a state representative and candidate for Treasurer, Karyn worked tirelessly to promote real changes that would reform government. She understands the need to shake things up and clean things out. I am honored to have her on board as my Campaign Chairperson."

Polito said that "I'm supporting Mike Sullivan because he has the breadth of experience as to serve us well in Washington. We need change - desperately. Mike has tremendous integrity and a good heart. He's not afraid to stand up to do the things that need to be done."

"The U.S. Senate hasn't passed a budget in four years. We're running massive deficits. The people want change - but Washington refuses to deliver. Mike Sullivan is ready and able to be the messenger for reform that we need as our next United States Senator. I'm proud to be his campaign chairperson."

Sullivan also announced that Paul Moore will serve as his campaign manager. Moore recently served as Congressional Candidate Richard Tisei's campaign manager in MA-6. Despite the trouncing that Republicans took at the polls, Tisei's race was one of the closest in the Northeast (Tisei lost by less than 1 percent).

Moore served as an Assistant U. St. Attorney while Sullivan was U. S. Attorney. Moore, who started in politics as a field organizer for former U.S. Senator Jack Danforth, has run or advised several statewide campaigns throughout the Northeast, Mid-Atlantic, and Midwest states and served as a Regional Political Director for the Republican National Committee in two key election cycles.

Moore also served as Senior Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights in the U.S. Department of Justice.

THE SEDUCTIVE GEMSTONE

You may not have heard of kunzite, one of the newer gemstones on the market, but once you've seen this decidedly feminine and seductive member of the spodumene family, you aren't likely to forget it. Named for gemologist George Frederick Kunz, kunzite possesses wonderful clarity, with delicate pink tones with hints of violet. It is most valuable in its deeper shades. In order to get the full effect of this gemstone's color potential, it must be precisely cut. Depending on the angle from which the gemstone is viewed, it can appear violet, pink, or even colorless due to a phenomenon known as "pleochroism," which means "multi-coloredness." When treated to a trillion cut, kunzite provides a beautiful display of nuanced color play.

So, what are you waiting for? Add a touch of sophistication to your wardrobe, with pink kunzite jewelry which can be worn for any occasion. ## Home Energy Audits

Question: Recently, my wife received a call from someone claiming to be from our electric company, offering us a "free energy audit." I'm suspicious. Nothing is really for free, and I've heard stories of fraudsters getting money from senior citizens by posing as utility employees. Have you heard of this energy audit before? How can I confirm that it's real or not? -- Jesse F., Little Rock, Ark.

Answer: Many utility companies do offer energy savings programs. The programs vary, but they often include some type of review of your current energy usage (something like an energy audit).

Still, you're always right to be a little suspicious of generous offers. Your utility may very well have a free energy audit program. The way to find out is to call the customer-service number on your latest utility bill.

Whether the original energy audit offer is legitimate or not, ask the customer service associate if the utility offers any sort of energy savings program -- particularly one for senior citizens. Some offer energy audit kits, while others may refer you to a third-party energy audit service.

An energy audit basically takes stock of how efficiently your home is heated or cooled, and tries to pinpoint areas of the house where air is escaping. This is sometimes done by setting up a piece of equipment known as a "blower door" in the frame of your home's front door. The blower door changes the air pressure inside the house slightly -- enough for the audit provider's sensors, often infrared, to detect where that air is escaping.

From there, the provider recommends a few solutions.

Some energy audits are simple walkthroughs of your house, followed by recommendations to reduce energy use, such as replacing incandescent bulbs with newer fluorescent bulbs. Other audits are do-it-yourself and might be as simple as filling out an online questionnaire. In any case, it's worth it to find out if a low-cost or free energy audit is available.

HOME TIP: The Department of Energy's website offers details on types of energy audits and tips on ways to save energy.

ROBERT LaFLEUR left this commemorative cap he received from Mayor Tom Koch in front of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. so that it would be collected and eventually placed in a museum with other items left at the wall.

THE SECTION of the memorial above the cap bears the name of Quincy native David Pitts, a casualty of the Vietnam War. Pitts, a Marine Corps private, was killed in action at age 18 near Hue in South Vietnam in 1968. Pitts and Robert LaFleur were friends growing up in Quincy Point.

Flag Day Parade Memento May Be Museum Artifact

Special Baseball Cap Travels From Quincy To Vietnam War Memorial In Washington, D.C.

By SCOTT JACKSON

A memento from Quincy's Flag Day parade may one day find its way into a museum honoring the nation's Vietnam veterans.

At the 61st annual Flag Day parade last June, Mayor Tom Koch invited Quincy's Vietnam veterans to serve as grand marshals. The mayor also presented each veteran with a special baseball cap, thanking them for their service.

Robert LaFleur, a Vietnam era Navy veteran and the commander of the Quincy Disabled American Veterans (DAV) Post 79, and his wife Carol took one of those hats with them when they visited the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. He left the hat at the wall because he knew the National Park Service collects items left there and houses them in a special collection that is distributed to museums, including the Smithsonian.

"What they do in Washington, D.C. is a lot of people leave stuff at the wall," LaFleur said. "The National Park Service collects the items everyday and stores them in a warehouse."

Before leaving the hat at the wall, Carol took pictures of it near the name of Quincy native David Pitts — Robert presented framed copies of them to Koch at Morrisette Post's Memorial Mass on Presidents' Day to thank the mayor for helping veterans. Pitts, a Marine Corps Private First Class, was 18 when he was killed in action on Feb. 19, 1968 near the city of Hue in South Vietnam's Thua Thien Province. LaFleur left the hat under Pitts' name, to memorialize his childhood friend from Quincy Point.

"I left it as a memorial," LaFleur said. "It was for a friend of mine from my childhood days — David Pitts."

David Pitts had two brothers who served in Vietnam; Stephen Pitts was killed in action and Phillip "Buddy" Pitts was injured. LaFleur's brothers also served in the war, but nothing happened to them, and he sometimes wonders why the war took such a different toll on the two families.

"My family lived two streets over from the Pitts family," LaFleur said. "Nothing happened to us. It makes me kind of wonder what God's plan is."

Quincy Battles But Braintree Bests Presidents

By BILL GRIFFIN

One fact is certain. Quincy girls basketball will never have to worry about facing a better team.

Braintree put four players in double figures and played the game the way it is supposed to be played in an impressive performance from start to finish to eliminate Quincy, 69-24 in the first round of the Division 1 South Sectionals last week.

"There are a lot of people who think Braintree has the best team in the state and we saw why tonight. They're the best team I've seen in a long time," said Quincy coach Jeff Bretsch.

Braintree (21-2) can shoot, pass, rebound, run, defend, execute a set offense, handle the ball, make their free throws, and force turnovers. They have size, speed and depth. Their big players are agile and skilled. Their small players are strong and confident. They are superbly coached. Any questions?

"They have it all," said Bretsch of the defending sectional champions. "We knew we had to work against their size, and they came out and hit four threes right away. That's tough."

Despite the opposition and the score, Quincy played hard, aggressive defense for the entire game. The Presidents dug in with their man-to-man defense and contested each shot and pass from the first through the fourth quarter. They played with pride.

"Our defense is our trademark," said Bretsch. "We never stopped playing it. We played with grit and gave up nothing easy."

"I like Quincy. They pushed us around and made us work for everything we got," said Braintree coach Kristen McDonnell. "They're well coached and I respect the way they play. If you didn't know the score and saw how hard they were playing in the fourth quarter, you would have thought it was a one-point game."

Freshman Nicole Jorgensen led Quincy (11-11) with eight. She moved well against Braintree's big front line which goes 5'11", 6'0", 6'2", had a nice touch on her turnaround and played a strong game on the boards.

"I was impressed," said McDonnell. "What I liked best was how smart she played. She has a high basketball IQ. She knows when to look to score and when to dump the ball back out to her teammates. She knows the game and where the players are around her. That's rare in a freshman."

Freshman Gabrielle Jerahian added five and an active floor game for Quincy. Despite being a freshman against one of the top teams in the state, she continued to play aggressively. There is no fear in her game. She looks for her shot and the correct pass. The Braintree experience will serve her well over the next three years.

"She comes to my clinic, so I know her," said McDonnell. "She can shoot and get to the basket. I thought tonight she found her open shooters well. You have to take risks to play well, and she does. A tournament game like tonight before a packed gym is an experience that will help her."

Kayla McArdle had five for the Presidents and played with the grit about his players will always remember fondly. They could have given in when they were at 6-9, but they elevated their play, won five of six and had a fine two-game ride in the tourney. There are many teams Quincy could have tested well in the tourney. Braintree is just too good.

"I'll always have good memories of this team and season and so will the girls. We won five of six against some good teams to get here," said Bretsch.

Quincy looks to be strong next year. Jorgensen's potential is limitless. If Alyssa Lydon returns fully from her knee injury, she and Jerahian will form an impressive backcourt. Kayla McArdle is back. McArdle, Jorgensen and Lydon are three All-League caliber players. Courtney Ryan, Caroline McBride, and Colleen Andrews are three juniors who made important contributions this season.

"We only lose three of 13," said Bretsch. "The freshman and JV teams had successful seasons, so I think we'll have a good team. Also, my freshmen won't be rookies any more."

"I'm not looking forward to competing against Jorgensen and Jerahian for the next three years," said McDonnell with a smile.

MAYA UMOREN, center for the North Quincy High School girls' basketball team, grabbed 32 rebounds against Durfee in what is believed to be a school record. Umoren and the Red Raiders, however, dropped a 54-45 decision that eliminated North Quincy in the first round of the Div. 1 South Sectional tournament Feb. 27.

HALEY MCKAY, junior guard for North Quincy, is among a talented group of players returning for their senior season next year for the Red Raiders.

CAITLIN BULGER, senior guard for the Red Raiders seen here in earlier action against Hanover this season, scored 10 points in North Quincy's 54-45 road loss to Durfee Feb. 27.

JANE MINTON, junior point guard for the Red Raiders (seen here against Hanover earlier this season) scored 10 points and had 8 assists for North Quincy but North bowed to Durfee in the first round of the Div. 1 South Sectional tournament. North Quincy finished the season with 13 wins and qualified for the tournament for the first time since 2009.

Landmark Season Ends For North Quincy Girls' Hoop

Red Raiders Fall To Durfee In First Round

By BILL GRIFFIN

In many ways, it was a landmark season for North Quincy's girls basketball team.

The Red Raiders won 13 games and made the tourney for the first time since 2009. They broke an 11-game losing streak to Quincy and beat the Presidents twice. The came within a game of the division title. At one point, they won 12 of 15 games. They had signature league victories over Scituate and Hanover. They established themselves as one of the best defensive teams in the Patriot League.

It was fine ride which ended last week against a hot-shooting Durfee club. No. 8 seeded Durfee broke open a close game in the second half and eliminated North Quincy, 54-45 in the first round of the Division 1 South Sectional Tournament.

"It was a matter of their shooting. Our defense was good, they just made all their shots," said North coach Jessica Worden whose club finished the season at 13-8.

Durfee won despite an amazing performance from North's junior center Maya Umoren who had 16 points and 32 rebounds. 32 rebounds. Nobody gets 32 rebounds in 48 minutes. Umoren had 32 rebounds in 32 minutes. That's a rebound per minute. That is special.

"That has to be a record. I've never heard of anyone getting 32 rebounds," said Worden. "Maya has a knack for getting to the right spot. Plus she has great hands and quick feet. They were playing a zone and it's hard to box out in a zone. Maya was aggressive and went to the ball."

North trailed by two at the half thanks to Umoren and the guard play of junior Jane Minton (10 points, eight assists) and senior Caitlin Bulger (10 points, 3 threes).

Durfee opened up a lead in the third. The Red Raiders cut it to five in the fourth behind some great work from Annie Dow and Sam McNally off the bench. Worden went to a four-guard set and Dow was effective in the middle of it. After North's rally, Durfee heated up from the outside again to clinch the victory.

"We had a hand in their face on all their shots. They just made them," said Worden.

It was the first tourney experience in a packed gym on the road for North's players. The Red Raiders will benefit from the lessons they learned.

"It was the first time the kids had played before a crowd like that which was loud and chanting on every play," said Worden. "We came so close to winning another game which would have given us a home game. I think we learned how important a home game is in a tourney."

It was a season to remember with satisfaction. The Red Raiders lost eight seniors from last year's team. It was the first varsity trip for many of the players. Despite the inexperience, North set high goals before the season and stepped to the threshold of meeting them.

"We set goals of not losing a home game, making the tourney, and winning our division," said Worden.

North lost once at home to Duxbury who was unbeaten in the league. The Red Raiders made the tourney and took the divisional race with Scituate down to the final day.

Dow, Bulger, McNally, Kristyn Mark, Christine Kelliher, and Therese Rioridan have been an excellent senior class. North will miss their leadership.

"They were a great class," said Worden. "They were always positive, always enthusiastic. At practice, they couldn't wait to get going. They set high expectations for the whole team."

North returns the core of an excellent team. Umoren returns at center and Minton is back to play the point. Junior Haley McKay is an exceptional defender who can shoot. Sophomore Camille Mullaney is a leaper who started for most of the second half of the year. Hannah Donovan showed progress at forward and freshman Marissa McCue is a player to watch.

"We should have the makings of a good team," said Worden. "We need to remember the lesson we learned this year about how important every game is. It makes a difference in the tourney."

After Defeating Randolph In Round One Quincy Boys Give Their All But Fall To Sharon In Div. 2 South Sectionals

By JEFF OHLSON

The Quincy Presidents found themselves in the second round of the MIAA playoff tournament and facing off against a tough Eagles team in Sharon Saturday. The Presidents would play one of their toughest games of the year before ultimately succumbing to the Eagles high-powered offense, 78-61.

Before the Presidents got to face Sharon, they defeated Randolph in the opening round of the Div. 2 South Sectional tournament on the Blue Devils home court, 53-42.

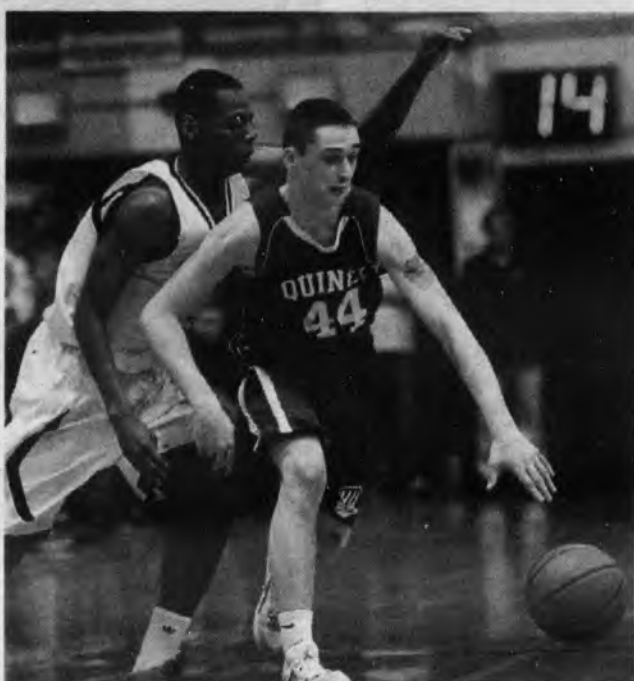

The game against Randolph was all sweat and hard work from the Presidents from beginning to end. Quincy got off to a good start defensively holding Randolph to 10 points in the first quarter, based off a strong defensive effort by Jaquan Harris, who had 5 points in the quarter, and J.T. Bain who dominated the glass with 4 rebounds.

The second quarter of the game was all Randolph as they exploded for 17 points and held Quincy to 10. The Blue Devils dominated from the 3-point line and made the Presidents' life hard on defense as they forced 5 turnovers in the quarter. For Quincy, it was a quarter of missed opportunities as they could not capitalize on open looks from 3 and the Presidents only hit half of their free throws (3-6.)

In the third quarter, the Presidents regained their defensive dominance and held Randolph to a meager 6 points while putting up 15 points of their own. James Lam was huge for the Presidents putting up 6 points and 5 rebounds in the quarter alone. On defense for Quincy Tino Goncalves was all over the floor, forcing 4 turnovers from Randolph.

After the third quarter Quincy would not look back as they continued superior play through the fourth quarter of the game outscoring Randolph 14-9. The end of the game belonged to Jaquan Harris as he finished the game with 11 total points, 5 of which were in the final quarter as Quincy went on to win by a total of 53-42.

In the second round of the tournament, the Presidents faced a steeper challenge against Sharon High School. Sharon boasted two of the top players in their division in Brian Mukasa and Kevin Bartas and Quincy would have to focus a ton of defensive energy on Mukasa all game if they wanted to slow him down. Quincy head coach Dave Parry knows how good Mukasa can be.

"We knew going into this game that he was not going to be stopped, it was more a matter of being able to slow him down enough to keep the game close. He's a very special player and we did everything we could against him, we threw every match up in the book at him and he still went off," said Coach Parry.

The Presidents did not let Sharon's talent intimidate them however, as they came out and stuck with the offensive power house shot for shot to start the game in what was a crazy first quarter that saw Sharon score 25 points followed by Quincy who kept up with 21 points of their own. For the Presidents it was a team effort as four players had 4 or more points. Jaquan Harris had 6 points for Quincy and spent most of the first quarter helping out whoever was guarding Mukasa. Both teams only missed a few shots each in the first quarter which featured an up-tempo shootout that few high school teams can sustain effectively.

In the second quarter, Quincy showed everyone that they belonged in the game and that they were not afraid of the Eagles. Quincy would hold Sharon to only 8 points in the second quarter while scoring 19 of their own to keep up the torrid pace they started the game with. The big difference for Quincy defensively was that Jaquan Harris matched up with Brian Mukasa one-on-one for the whole quarter and gave him fits, holding him to only 2 points in the quarter. Connor Evans and Tina Goncalves did most of the offensive heavy lifting for the Presidents with a combined 13 points. Quincy was looking good, leading Sharon 40-33 heading into the second half. Quincy's blue collar way of grinding out offensive series and playing hardnosed defense was wearing down the Eagles and they looked tired walking off the court after the second quarter ended.

In the third quarter, Sharon proved that they were as resilient as they were talented, coming out and going on a 6-0 run to bring the game to within a point. Before Quincy could blink Sharon hit back to back 3-pointers to go up 45-42 early in the third. Quincy struggled to find rhythm offensively and looked out of sync on defense. Jaquan Harris did all he could to keep Quincy in the game by dropping 8 points in the quarter but it wasn't enough to overcome Sharon as they scored 23 points in the third and went into the fourth quarter up 56-53.

In the fourth quarter, Sharon separated from Quincy with another 6-0 run to start as the Presidents went ice cold from the floor failing to score on their first 6 possessions of the quarter. By the time Quincy could muster up any offense Sharon was ahead 64-55 with about 6 minutes left in the game. Sharon would pull further ahead before both teams would bring in their benches as Sharon went on to win 78-61.

Coach Parry was disappointed in the loss but not in his team.

"This is a very young group of kids here, and I think that we over achieved this year. Our goal was to make the tournament and the kids all believed it would happen and it did, and then we were playing in the second round and in it until the very end," said Parry. "We believe that next year we can build off of all this experience. Obviously, losing Jaquan and Tino, those guys are going to be impossible to replace, we will have some holes to fill but I believe that we will be better next year and that we can really take a lot from this season."

ALMOST AS COMMON AS A COLD

Did you know that low back pain is second only to the common cold as a leading cause of doctor visits and missed work days? If you are one of the four out of every five people who experience low back pain at some point in their lives, you probably knew that. While most episodes of acute low back pain resolve on their own, symptoms that include lower extremity pain/weakness, numbness, tingling, and/or loss of bladder/bowel control warrant a visit to the chiropractor. Pain that comes on suddenly is likely to get better by itself, but pain that develops gradually and remains chronic, without any real accounting of specific cause, will often drag on without intervening treatment.

It's easy to understand why chronic pain patients want quick results. Virtually all human beings are subject to health problems. The fact that humans walk upright, on two legs, puts great pressure on the spine, and the muscles that support it. Maybe it's time you give chiropractic a try. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we provide safe and gentle chiropractic care for the entire family. Call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment and let us help you feel better the natural way, the chiropractic way. Why not give us a call and start living a healthier life, free of pain and discomfort. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

1,000 See Red Raiders Defeat Braintree In Round 2

By BILL GRIFFIN

The atmosphere at North Quincy was electric.

The grandstands were half full 75 minutes before tip-off. Lines for tickets snaked out onto Hunt Street for over an hour. Full temporary bleachers were set up under one basket for the first time since the early 1980s and the great wars with future NBA star Patrick Ewing.

When the game began, there were no more seats, yet the fans still streamed though the doors. They stood four and five deep circling the court in a sea of blue and red. People waited in line at halftime trying to buy tickets.

Over 1,000 tickets were sold. Sections rocked and swayed with noise from Braintree. Others rocked and swayed with noise from North Quincy. Fans stood up in the first quarter and did not sit down. It was March 2, and it was March Madness making a call on the north side of Quincy.

North Quincy played a game worthy of the great day. Marquis McClendon played the defensive game of a lifetime and Dan Gould proved the best shooters shoot their best in the big games to lead the Red Raiders past Braintree, 56-42 in the second round of the Division 1 South Sectionals Saturday night.

"What an atmosphere for basketball," said North coach Kevin Barrett with a shake of the head. "I haven't seen anything like it in my 10 years here. The feeling about a team has never been this strong. I told the kids we're in the midst of something special."

The No. 6 seeded Red Raiders played No. 2 seed Newton North in the sectional semifinals Tuesday.

McClendon guarded Braintree star Steve Murphy. Murphy scored 26 in North's overtime win over Braintree in the regular season. Murphy scored 26 in the Wamps' stunning upset of BC High in the opening round. McClendon shut him out. No points. McClendon played one of the most respected scorers on the South Shore straight up and he blanked him. There wasn't a lot of help, not a lot of gimmicks. It was no-frills, man-to-man and Murphy did not score.

"It's the most important defensive game I've ever played. I knew I had to be at my top," said McClendon. "I knew if he scored a lot, we lose. I tried to be aggressive, take away his left hand and make him bring the ball back to me when he shot."

It wasn't as if Murphy was missing a fistful of open shots. McClendon not only gave no points, he gave few good looks. He didn't allow that many possessions. He battled through endless ball screens. North seldom needs any inspiration to play bone-to-bone defense (86 points allowed in two tourney games), but its defense definitely had a little extra hop to it thanks to McClendon's effort.

"A great defensive player can be infectious for the entire team, and that's what Marquis gave us tonight," said Barrett who coached a terrific game. "A defensive player can set a tone. He gets a couple of stops and gets the offensive player to change his pace, work out of his comfort zone. Murphy is the epitome of a great high school player, but that's what Marquis did tonight."

Gould led all scorers with 28 and it was not just how many, but when he scored them. He buried a three to start the game. North never trailed after the opening bucket. He followed with a big-time three with a defender at his throat. He made a no-look, back-flip pass for an Anthony Green fast-break layup. He curled in short jumper and ended the period with layup after being drilled to the floor by two defenders on the break for a 16-4 North lead. He had 10 in the first. Braintree would never get closer than five over the final three periods.

There are nights when a shooter feels it. Dan Gould knew he had his shot and it gave the Red Raiders a jump-start that lasted for four quarters.

"I was here early and my shot felt good," said Gould. "I couldn't wait for the game to start. I just wanted to give my teammates a fast start."

He scored them early and he scored them late. He went 13-14 from the line, all in the second half when North was protecting its lead. He gave North the lead in the first and made it safe in the fourth. Gould shoots 250 free throws a week in practice. His coaches estimate he doubles that count shooting them in his backyard and on the playground. He shoots them until his arm hurts and he gets tired.

"I shoot them until I'm tired because I want to be able to make them when I'm tired in a game," he said.

Gould and McClendon had plenty of help from their friends. Green, a 6'7" junior, played the game of his career with 10 rebounds, eight blocks and he changed as many shots as he blocked with the intimidation factor. McClendon, Pat Gould, Dan Gould, and Kyle Richardson (Is there a better 5'7" rebounder anywhere?) could afford to be aggressive with Braintree's shooters because Mr. Green was there to deal with any penetration.

"Anthony was unbelievable. I know he cleaned up my messes. I got beat on the drive a lot," said Dan Gould.

Efthim Butka added eight points, 10 rebounds (26 in two games) and along with Green gave North control of the defensive boards. This limited the second and third chances which bothered North against Natick.

DANIEL GOULD scored a game-high 28 points as the North Quincy Red Raiders advanced in the Div. 1 South Sectionals with a 56-42 win over the Braintree Wamps Saturday.

"Our second-shot numbers were a lot better tonight," said Barrett.

And there was Pat Gould. He scored 12, including a straight-on three pointer off glass which he certainly called. That tells about 10 per cent of his contribution. There was more hard defense on Keyshaad Dixon despite giving away four inches. He directed the show against a Braintree defense which pressed, swarmed, reached and chased for four quarters. The Red Raiders had turnovers. They are human. However, with Pat Gould in charge at the point, their poise never wavered in a cauldron of pressure before over a thousand fans.

"There's nobody else I want with the ball," said Barrett whose club went 17-20 from the line. "There are three parts to protecting a lead: Taking care of the ball, getting to the line and making the free throws. We did all three tonight."

When it was over, Barrett looked around the happy locker room on the final home night of the season and said, "I think we gave the capacity crowd a good show."

That you did, coach.

Defense, Rebounding Carry North Quincy Past Natick

By BILL GRIFFIN

There was the joy of watching a terrific player piece together all the parts of his game into a dominating whole under the bright lights of the tournament stage.

There was one of the best point guards on the South Shore playing defense as if every inch was worth thousands of dollars.

There was sweet redemption for a team that had waited a year to show its stuff in a tournament game on its home floor.

Efthim Butka had 16 points, 16 rebounds, and gave the packed gym a glimpse of exactly how good he can be. Pat Gould began with lockdown defense, ran his offense, hit his jumpers, got to the basket and hit the floor more often than the basketball battling for possessions for his team.

No. 6 seed North Quincy wiped away the memory of last year's home tourney loss to New Bedford with a 56-44 decision over No. 11 Natick which was based on the hard principles of rebounding and defense in the first round of the Division 1

South Sectionals last week.

"Tonight, we got back to attacking instead of sitting back," said coach Kevin Barrett. "We attacked on defense and we attacked rebounding. That's when we are at our best."

"This means everything especially after the last two years when we were one-and-done, especially in our home gym" said Gould.

Butka has had games when he shot well, games when he rebounded well, games when he defended well, games when he passed well. He's had games when he combined the skills, but never a night like the Natick night when he wrapped it all together in a bright, shiny package and gave it to his team in the game they had been waiting a year to play.

"A breakthrough game, a coming-out party," said Barrett.

Butka squared up and cashed his mid-range jumper. He used his drop-step and quickness to get to the hoop with authority. Like everyone in a white jersey, he played hard defense. And mostly he took back the defensive boards and fueled a 17-4 third-period run which decided the game and put an end to Natick's offensive rebounding which had kept it a close game for a half.

Nobody sees the entire game as well as a point guard and Butka's point guard was impressed.

"That the best game I've ever seen him play," said Gould. "Think about it. He took away their second leading scorer, led us in scoring, and gave us what we needed most, which was rebounding."

In the third, Butka kissed home two soft jumpers, made a beautiful outside-in feed down the lane for a Pat Gould layup and set a Hall-of-Fame pick to free Dan Gould (12 points) for a three and a 43-31 lead after three. He knocked home another jumper early in then fourth and punctuated his night with one of The Two Plays of the game. He up-faked at the foul line, hesitated and made a complete spin down the lane for an ESPN Highlight drive and a 49-36 lead with 5:20 left that had the building shaking with noise.

"It's no accident that he shines under the bright lights," said Barrett. "It's work. He's a basketball player. He works all year on his game. Tonight, we challenged him. We told him we needed his whole game, and he gave it to us."

And there was Pat Gould. He had 12 points and eight assists, but numbers don't offer a clue to how good he was. He defended Natick's best player Alex Hilger, the MVP of the Herget Division of the Bay State League. Gould gave away at least three inches and 30 pounds to a shooter who feasts at the three-point line. Gould gave nothing. He took away the three. He denied the drive. He gave no clean looks. He fought through about a thousand picks.

Hilger had 13. Two were on transition threes that had nothing to do with Gould. Off Gould, Hilger got seven points. He averages nearly 18 per game. North won by 12. You do the math.

"I wanted to chase him off the three-point line because he shoots so well," said Gould. "I crowded him because I knew I had help with any penetration."

Like Butka, Gould had a memorable conclusion to his night. With 1:20 left left, he circled the entire offensive zone dribbling out the clock. He finished his little tour by slipping down the right baseline. He came up directly under the basket, got lost for a second in a tangle of arms, ducked under the hoop and spun home a lefty finish for a 55-42 lead and it was over.

"I got under there and said: Whoa, what am I going to do now," he smiled.

Dan Gould had 12, Marquis McClendon added nine and a strong floor game, but this was not a night for points, this was a night for defense. Anthony Green defended the basket. North sets a goal of 48 points every night. Take away offensive rebounds and Natick doesn't crack 40 for the game or 20 for the first half. The defense was that good. However, the offensive rebounding called up ghosts of the Scituate loss and had Natick up, 27-26 at intermission.

"We were getting crowded too far under the basket in the first half. We talked about it at halftime and cleaned it up," said Barrett.

Butka and Kyle Richardson, all 5'7" of him, retook the glass and freed North for its memorable finish.

"Tonight means everything. I'll always remember every play that happened in the entire game," said Gould.

North Quincy Hockey Shocks Sandwich In Round One ..

By BILL GRIFFIN

More than two weeks ago, North Quincy hockey coach Matt Gibbons stood in front of his locker room after the Red Raiders lost to Quincy by three goals. There were not a lot of happy faces in the area.

"I kind of like where we are," said Gibbons.

He said this because as important as the Quincy games are to city pride, North plays for the tournament. Gibbons liked the way his club was getting ready for the post-season dance. North would lose five straight to end the season, but Gibbons knew what he was seeing and doing.

The No. 14-seeded Red Raiders proved him correct as Robbie Cameron, Timmy Glynn and Rudy Tryon scored goals and Nolan Greene backboned an air-tight defense to shock No. 3 Sandwich, 3-1 in the first round of the Division 2 South Sectionals at Gallo Arena in Bourne Feb. 28.

"I actually thought we were playing better at the end of the year. The difference against Sandwich is we finished our scoring chances," said Gibbons.

Defense is North's calling card. The Red Raiders have given just 30 goals in 19 games. Greene's goal-against is under a goal per game. They protect a lead like it was the crown jewel. Scoring first is a huge deal for them and Cameron set North on the right path with an early goal from defenseman Josh Hayward and Shawn Grady.

Grady cruised into the zone, held the puck and slowed down the play. Hayward saw an opening from the blue line and shot the gap. Grady hit him with a pass and Hayward fired a tester on net. Cameron was in position to bury the rebound and North had its early lead.

"It was huge to get on the board first. It got everybody excited and into the game early," said Gibbons. "Josh made a great play. He saw a hole and created a chance which gave us a goal."

It was Grady's first game back after missing most of the season with an injured shoulder. The importance of adding an All League playmaker to a team which struggled scoring goals is obvious. Grady assisted on two of the goals against Sandwich.

"When he came back, you could feel our confidence go up," said Gibbons. "It sets up our second and third lines better. We have players in the right spots with him back."

Glynn, a freshman left wing, upped it to 2-0 in the second. Nick McGaughey made a nice breakout pass to John Ross McEvilly. McEvilly found Glynn flying towards the net. Glynn fired a hard drive, collected his own rebound and slipped it home for a 2-0 edge.

"Nobody deserved a goal more than Glynn," said Gibbons. "He's the smallest player on the ice. He gets hit so hard, I don't think he's getting up. But he always does."

After Sandwich (14-4-2) cut it to 2-1, North connected on the power play late in the second period for an insurance goal. Glynn did the heavy work in the corner and dug out the puck for Rudy Tryon at the blue line. Tryon moved to the center of the ice and drove a wrist shot through a screen for a 3-1 lead for the Red Raiders. Grady also drew an assist on the play.

Sandwich tested Greene with 10 shots in the final period but couldn't beat him. Tryon, freshman Matt McDonald, and Brendan Brady had standout games on defense.

"Matt's only a freshman, but he was very steady and played a ton of minutes," said Gibbons.

North has made the tournament four times in five years under Gibbons. It is habit he would like to continue.

"We would like to be one of those teams who keeps coming back and advancing every year. Slowly, I think we're getting there," said Gibbons.

.. But Stung By Hornets In Rd. 2

By JEFF OHLSON

The North Quincy hockey team came into this season with high expectations and hopes of going deep into the MIAA playoff tournament.

After shocking Sandwich in the first round, North Quincy drew Mansfield in the second round of the Div. 1 South Sectional tournament. Mansfield is the same team they met last year and lost to in the tournament.

Unfortunately for North Quincy and its fans, North would once again fall to Mansfield, this time 2-1.

The game was full of strong play on North Quincy's side and Mansfield was there to match the Raiders strong play. North players Rudy Tryon, Sean Grady, and Martin Blake played well all night for the Raiders.

In the first period, North came out swinging and spent most of the period pushing Mansfield around and pretty much having their way. The Raiders had 5 more shots on net in the period than the Hornets did and spent a majority of the period in Mansfield's zone. Neither team would go on to score in the first but North would squander a few good opportunities in front of the net.

The second period would be much different than the first as North would come out and look like almost a different team. Mansfield came out strong after a poor showing in the first period and spent more time in the Raiders zone taking nearly twice as many shots on net as the Raiders in the second period.

North Quincy goalie Nolan Greene stood on his head all night for North, making over 20 saves on the night with most of them being extremely difficult. Rudy Tryon, a defender for North, played very well for the Raiders often throwing his own body in the way of Mansfield shots to try and lessen the load on Greene.

However, for North

Quincy, the second period wasn't all bad as Freshman Matt McDonald scored the Raiders only goal of the night on a rebound early on. The goal caused the roaring Quincy crowd to cheer "He's a freshman, he's a freshman" as they celebrated their team being in position to win.

Unfortunately for the Red Raiders, the third period was more like the second than the first as the Hornets spent a ton of time in North Quincy's zone and scored in the middle of the period to tie the game at 1-1. For North, wings Sean Grady and Martin Blake played very well as they were key in killing penalties all night and killed a 2-minute penalty in the third period.

Neither team would come close to breaking the tie as the game headed to overtime tied 1-1.

Track Teams Show Their Talent

By JOE REARDON

For years, the untapped talent has been walking the corridors of both Quincy and North Quincy High. And with a new, state-of-the-art track beckoning, the hopes are that the numbers for the outdoor teams increase drastically, bringing with them some much-needed depth.

Both Quincy and North Quincy were hurt by low turnouts during the indoor campaign, but there were definite glimpses of talent. "The talent's there," said Quincy head coach Jim Hogan. "There was a demographic shift, but there are a lot of talented athletes walking through the hall. The kids this season was great. The ground work was there."

The Presidents had a huge talent in Lakuan Mason, a Patriot League All-Star Honorable Mention, who clocked a quick 6.99 for the 55-meter dash. Mason was also a standout 300 sprinter for Quincy and was a big earner when it came to picking up team points. Quinton Hurd, Ahmad Hamdi and Anthony Gustin were also consistent competitors in the 55 alongside Mason.

Freshman Aidan Smyth showed that he has a boatload of potential through his performances at the Reggie Lewis Center. A soccer player during the fall, Smyth was thrown into battle almost immediately indoors and responded like a veteran. "He just showed up and the next day was his first meet," said Hogan.

The girls' team had talent in the distance events with cross country runners Victoria Deery and Inayah

Paul, who showed promise in the 1000 and 2 mile, respectively. Kayla Neuman had a strong season in the mile and Michelle Chen was solid in the 1000 as well. Julie Devico was a presence for the Presidents all season in the shot put circle.

Matt MacPhail was the top male for the Red Raiders with several strong outings on the Reggie Lewis infield in the 55 hurdles.

Emily Bryson continued to improve and be a presence at the state level. Bryson ran superb mile times of 5:28.30 and 5:24.48 and ran under the 12-minute mark in the 2 mile eight times during the winter, with a personal best coming at the Auerbach Freshman-Sophomore Championships where she rattled off a personal best of 11:35.13. Bryson sprinted to an eighth-place finish and earned a medal at the Div. 1 championships with an 11:45.97 in her specialty. Julia Bryson improved her mile time to 5:42.53 and clocked a 12:03.15 personal best in the 2 mile.

Leona Tu had a successful season in the 55 dash, while Hailey Houlihan was a consistent shot putter for the Red Raiders. Rose Bennett had a huge day at the Coaches Invitational where she cleared 5-0 in the high jump. The leap was a personal best for Bennett and was also good for a seventh-place finish against a tough field. Bennett also excelled in the 300, running a personal best of 48.14 in January.

Shot-putter Vanessa Bolden's personal best came in early January when her 27-5 heave bettered her previous mark by an inch.

Woodward Wins Conference Title

The Woodward School Wildcats lost a heartbreaker to Brimmer and May School Feb. 7th in its last regular game of the season, by a score of 44-43.

All-League Forward Ava Small '14 had to leave the game with a knee injury, and starting Center Queenette Odum '13 fouled out in the second half, after dominating the boards and scoring 10 points. Guard Meg Donovan '17 tossed in 14 points to keep Woodward in the game. The Wildcats fought tooth and nail as the game came down to the last shot. The Wildcats ended the season at 12-4 with a third seed heading into the IGC tournament.

The Wildcats returned to Brimmer and May School Feb. 13th to play in the Semi Final Championship game. The Wildcats started fast with tremendous energy, leading to a 26-12 half time lead. The second half featured the Gators cutting into the Wildcats lead.

Woodward stayed strong and determined, turning the Gators surge back, ultimately winning the game 53-40. A healthy Ava Small '14 poured in 22 points before fouling out with 5 minutes remaining. Guard Cassie Wesner '16 hit for 18 points, as Meg Donovan '17 directed the offense. Center Queenette Odum '13 went down with an ankle injury, but senior co-captains Imani Graham and Adreyanua Jean-Louis stepped up so that the Wildcats ended the game with seven different players scoring.

The Championship game was at home Feb. 20 at the National Guard Armory, pitting Woodward against the reigning champions from Montrose School, in an epic battle between two class teams, each with great players. Montrose had just come off a 60-51 win over top seeded Gann Academy. The Montrose team is loaded with talented players and a great coach.

The Wildcats started fast, leading to a 28-17 halftime score. Montrose surged at the start of the second half, with the lead dropping to a single point. Woodward had no quit in them, and rose to the occasion. Co-captain Ava Small's "refuse to lose" attitude set the standard, as she drove down the court and dived for loose balls on a bad knee, rallying her teammates to victory, with a game-high 26 points.

Coach Bob Giordano said "Congratulations to the 2012-2013 Independent Girls Conference Champions - The Woodward School Wildcats! You have hearts of true champions! It has been an honor to be your coach."

This championship marks the ninth for Woodward in the last 15 years. Congratulations Woodward Wildcats and coaches.

On Monday, Feb. 25, at approximately 12:10 p.m., Officer Jim Cassidy, along with his K-9 partner Khiya, a trained and certified narcotics detection dog, were on patrol. As Officer Cassidy traveled southbound on Arthur St., he observed a Mercedes ahead of him fail to stop at the stop sign located at the intersection of Arthur St. and Garfield St. The suspect vehicle turned right onto Copeland St. in a northerly direction.

Officer Cassidy activated his emergency lights in front of 75 Copeland St. but the Mercedes didn't stop. It wasn't until the Officer activated his siren that the Mercedes pulled over in front of 139 Copeland St.

The Officer approached the driver and sole occupant, asked him for license and registration and advised him why he was being stopped. The driver gave the Officer his license and a Thrifty car rental agreement for the vehicle. When asked if he was on the rental agreement to drive the vehicle, the driver said, "No English." Officer Cassidy noticed that the driver would not make eye contact and his hands were trembling.

Officer Matthew Pantazelos arrived on scene to assist. A status check on the registration and license was initiated. According to the rental agreement for the vehicle, the person listed as the renter was a man out of Braintree. Under the additional driver section it stated, "NONE." QPD Communications advised that the driver had an active Driver's License with a residential address in Dorchester. Communications also advised that the driver has an open case out of Norfolk Superior for "Trafficking Heroin."

Officer Cassidy advised the driver that he was not on the rental agreement and was not authorized to drive the vehicle. The driver responded in broken English that he was coming from his home in Stoughton, works as a painter and that he was going to Home Depot in Quincy.

A Job Well Done

By QUINCY POLICE LT. DAN MINTON

Officer Cassidy scanned the vehicle but did not see any painting clothes or materials that would lead one to believe that the driver was a painter. In addition, the route that the driver traversed was not consistent with someone heading to either Home Depot in Quincy.

A check of QPD in house computer system showed that the driver was arrested by the Quincy Police Drug Unit on September 17, 2012 pertaining to the sales of illegal narcotics. Detective Coen, who was knowledgeable about the case, was in the area at the time and responded to assist. The driver was removed from the vehicle and placed into custody for the violation of "Using a Motor Vehicle Without Authority."

Based on the statements by the driver/now suspect, his demeanor, his driving route and the past arrests for drug trafficking, Officer Cassidy performed an exterior scan of the suspect vehicle with his K-9 partner, Khiya. The K-9 passed the rear passenger side brake light housing and became energized, indicating the presence of a narcotic odor in the same area. Khiya was placed inside the suspect vehicle and once inside the rear cargo area she indicated the presence of a narcotic odor, more specifically the tire jack compartment on the passenger side of the vehicle.

Detective Coen stated that on the previous arrest of the suspect, he used a magnetic hide-a-key out of view in the trunk of his vehicle, which was discovered with the assistance of K-9 Officer Mahoney and his narcotics detection K-9, Shagi. Detective Coen stated that this hide-a-key was attached to the metal sidewall and could only be accessed by reaching into the sidewall of the vehicle. Inside the hide-a-key were a number of individually packaged plastic corner bags (clear and blue balloons) containing a brown powder substance.

Detective Coen removed some white insulation, reached into the hollow area behind the tail lamp and felt a magnetic hide-a-key attached to the metal of the frame. Detective Coen removed this and found numerous individually packaged corner bags (clear plastic, blue and white balloons). The corner bags contained a brown powder substance believed to be heroin.

Inside the hide-a-key box were coffee grinds that are believed to have been used to mask the smell of the narcotics. Coffee grinds were also located inside the hide-a-key box from the previous arrest.

Once back at the station, it was determined that a total of 23 individually packaged bags were recovered. There were seven blue balloons inside clear plastic bags contained approximately one gram each of a brown powder alleged to be Heroin. This brown powder field-tested positive for Heroin. The 15 clear plastic bags contained approximately one-third of a gram of Heroin. There was also one white balloon that contained Cocaine.

The suspect, a 27-year-old Dorchester resident, was charged with, "Stop Sign Violation (probable cause), Unauthorized Use of a Motor Vehicle, Possession of Class A Drug with Intent to Distribute, and Possession of Class B with Intent to Distribute."

Nice Work!

RULES OF THE ROAD: School Buses

Yellow school buses have flashing red lights and stop signs that fold out from the driver's side. School pupil transport vehicles, like vans, station wagons, or family sedans, have flashing red lights and SCHOOL BUS signs on top. Drivers use these warning signals when letting pupils on and off. If a school bus or a school pupil transport vehicle has its lights flashing and a stop sign extended, you must stop. It is the law. It does not matter which side of the road you are traveling on. Remain stopped until the lights stop flashing or the stop sign folds back.

A first violation of this law can cause a license suspension and a $250 fine. Even after the warning signals have stopped, you should proceed slowly and continue to look for children. The only exception to this law is if a school bus has stopped on the other side of a divided highway with a barrier between travel directions. In this case, you do not have to stop.

Residents Work To Build Food Security Through The Walk for Hunger Quincy Named 9th Most Generous City In MA

Quincy has again been named a "most generous city" by Project Bread, the state's leading antihunger organization, for its contribution of over $44,000 and 722 Walkers to the 2012 Walk for Hunger.

Last year, Quincy was named the 10th "most generous city," and this year moved up to ninth place.

The funds raised through The Walk for Hunger allow Project Bread to provide people with sustainable, reliable access to nutritious food—because the opposite of hungry is not simply full, but healthy. From community-based meal programs, to early childhood and school nutrition initiatives, to improved access to farm-to-table and local food resources, Project Bread funds more than 430 community food programs throughout Massachusetts.

The Walk for Hunger is a community event that brings people together to inspire and support one another. "My friend got me to join her for the Walk back in 1994," says Colleen Zammer who works in Quincy at Bay State Milling. "We talked the whole time, so 20 miles went by easily and we really enjoyed the day."

As a Heart & Sole Walker, Zammer has participated in six Walks, and has raised over $2,000 during that time. She is proud to be a Heart & Sole Walker, a Walker who raises more than $500 each Walk. Collectively, Heart & Sole Walkers contributed over $1.5 million of the $3.6 million raised at The Walk for Hunger in 2012.

Zammer explains how she raised so much: "Using the statistics supplied by Project Bread tells the story itself. It is hard to argue with facts, and when people are presented with the facts of how many people in our state have real needs, and that a small donation can go a long way, it makes it easy

This year, Project Bread hopes to raise even more funds at the 45th Walk for Hunger on Sunday, May 5th. "We can end hunger in Massachusetts, and we are working actively toward that goal," says Ellen Parker, executive director of Project Bread. "Everyone who takes part in our efforts—through walking, donating, or volunteering—helps us do that much more."

The cities and towns that placed on the top ten most generous list are, in rank order: 1) Boston, 2) Newton, 3) Cambridge, 4) Brookline, 5) Wellesley, 6) Somerville, 7) Arlington, 8) Belmont, 9) Quincy, and 10) Medford.

Registration is open to walk, volunteer, and donate at www.projectbread.org/walk or call 617-723-5000.

Plant Four Trees; Discuss Natural Resources With Staples Energy And American Landscape Co.

Point Webster Students Learn Energy Conservation

Grade five students at Point Webster Middle School were visited last fall by representatives from the Staples Energy and Environmental Management Program and American Landscape Company in Sharon.

During the visit, students were spoken to about the importance of conserving energy, and they were given many examples of ways to conserve energy in their homes. Also, there was much interactive discussion and questions and answers about other ways we should take care of our planet.

In addition, students learned about how valuable our natural resources are and how critical plants are in helping to maintain the proper balance of oxygen and carbon-dioxide in our atmosphere and beautifying our environment. To help drive home this point and with assistance from American Landscape personnel, students planted four trees in front of Point Webster.

It was a wonderful visit for all involved, and the staff at Point Webster is looking forward to another visit during the fall of 2013.

Support, Opposition On C-Mart Proposal

By SCOTT JACKSON

Dozens of individuals voiced their opinions on the proposed C-Mart in North Quincy – a project supporters say would be a boon to Quincy's economy and Asian community but opponents fear would be a boondoggle that would only exacerbate the area's traffic woes.

C-Mart owner Michael Fang wants to open a new supermarket at 10 Hayward Ave., formerly the Boston Gear Works building. His plan calls for 25,000 square feet of retail space and a 6,400 square-foot warehouse. He would also use the existing two-story office building on the site as his new C-Mart headquarters.

Fang proposed a similar project in 2009. The City Council, sitting in its capacity as Quincy's Special Permit Granting Authority (SPGA) rejected that plan by an 8-1 vote. Fang appealed, and the decision was remanded back to the council per an agreement between Fang's attorneys and City Solicitor Jim Timmins reached early last year. That agreement barred Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee from voting on the proposal this time around.

National Grid To Address Infrastructure Concerns

By SCOTT JACKSON

National Grid officials will be before the City Council on April 1 to address concerns over the company's infrastructure in Quincy.

At the Feb. 25 council meeting, Councillors Kevin Coughlin, Brad Croall, Doug Gutro, Kirsten Hughes, Margaret Laforest, and Brian Palmucci introduced a resolution asking for the hearing with National Grid officials. Coughlin explained that his concerns over the utility giant's infrastructure predate February's blackout, which he said was the first time the entirety of Quincy lost power since 1965.

"Consistently here in the City of Quincy we've had concerns about their gas infrastructure and their electric infrastructure. One of the concerns we've had is about the operation and maintenance of it and improvements to it to obviate situations like we just had where the whole city lost power," Coughlin said.

As an example, Coughlin pointed out that National

New Director Megan Allen No Stranger To Library

By SCOTT JACKSON

Megan Allen, the Thomas Crane Library's new director, is no stranger to the library system.

Allen was fresh out of library school in 1986 when she was hired by then-director Warren Watson. In her tenure Allen has been involved with many aspects of the library including working as a reference librarian, helping launch the library's website, and helping move the library's catalogue to an online system. She had been assistant director at the library for nine years, and served as acting director following the retirement of Harry Williams earlier this year.

"I've worked as a reference librarian, I've worked as at the North Quincy branch, I've worked in the interlibrary loan department," Allen said. "I've done a variety of things since I've been there. I was involved in starting the library's first website way back when. I was there when we went from the card catalogue to having everything be online - I was involved in that transition as well."

Allen was appointed library director by Mayor Tom Koch on March 6 after receiving the backing of the library's trustees. The mayor said he's known Allen for years and feels her experience makes her the right person to run the library going forward.

"I've been in government for a long time and she has too so we've crossed paths from time-to-time. The library board of trustees recommends the name to me and I interview and make the final decision," Koch said. "I'm delighted with her experience and her knowledge of our libraries. She's been a dedicated employee for a long time, 26 years, and I know she's going to take us to the next level in our library service."

Allen's first goal as director will be to focus on the library's new strategy plan, a document written by a group of community leaders outlining objectives for the next five years.

"We've just developed a new strategic plan for the library that we've been working on for the last year or so. My job will be to guide the staff in meeting the goals and the priorities in the plan," Allen said.

The plan, unveiled last July, calls for expanding the library's collection by continually adding new and popular materials, doubling the circulation of items in digital formats annually, focusing on teens and increasing their participation in library activities, increasing enrollment in technology classes for adults and seniors, and hosting 5,200 children and 2,700 parents and caregivers in literacy classes each year, among other goals.

Technology has changed greatly since Allen first started working in Quincy

MEGAN ALLEN (second from right) was sworn in March 6 as the new director of the Thomas Crane Public Library after being appointed to succeed Harry Williams by Mayor Thomas Koch (right). Williams retired earlier this year. Allen has worked in Quincy's libraries since 1986, including the last nine years as assistant director. Among those congratulating Allen on her new appointment were colleagues Janet P. DiTullio (left), a library trustee; and Reference Librarian Linda Beeler (second from left).

in 1986. She said the library always made sure to incorporate new technology into its operations, and will continue to do so under her watch.

"As long as I've been in the business libraries have been changing and incorporating new technology and providing service in ways that use technology. We'll be continuing to do that because as you know, technology changes rapidly and it will keep changing," Allen said.

While technology is important, Allen said the library will continue to serve Quincy in its traditional role as a place for people to study, read, and attend community activities.

"The library as a physical place is still important to people. It's a place people like to come to and meet and study and go to concerts and all the things people do in the building," Allen said.

$4,925 In DARE Donations

The Quincy Police DARE program has received $4,925 in donations so far this year.

The City Council accepted $1,300 during their March 4 meeting. The Quincy Police Patrol Officers Association donated $500, Russell Affsa d/b/a Hairplace One and Rembi Inc. d/b/a Assembly each donated $250, and Regal Begal Liquors, Kam Man Food, and Lydon Chapel for Funerals each donated $100.

During the council's Feb. 25 meeting, the council accepted a total of $3,100 in donations. That total includes $1,000 each from Boston Financial Data Services and Patrick J. Kennedy & Sons, Inc. Quincy Credit Union donated $500, Colonial Federal Savings Bank and Burgin, Platner & Hurley Insurance each donated $250, and the Quincy Education Association donated $100.

On Feb. 4 the council accepted a $200 gift from Eco Muffler Centers. And during their Jan. 22 meeting, the council accepted $300 from Yellow Cab, $200 from Marina Bay Management Services, and $25 from resident Eugene Dixon.

New Central On Track For September Opening

By EMILY TAFT

Central Building Committee Chairperson Anne Mahoney reported to the school committee on March 6th that the new middle school is still on track to be completed in time for students and teachers to move in by the next school year.

"We are actually on schedule. Luckily with all of the snow we have had, we have not fallen behind schedule. It won't be completely 100 percent done just like Quincy High School, but we're on schedule and we might even be surprised to find out we are a little bit further along than we are," said Mahoney.

"The meeting itself was to really take a look at the colors and the textures that will be going on to the final plan."

Mahoney said that there has been some discussion on the Central Middle School logo, which is a ram. Some sketches and designs are being drawn up in hopes to make the logo a little friendlier according to Mahoney. Nothing has been finalized on the logo and Mahoney said the logo would continue to be a ram in the new school. It just might have different look from what it is now. The logo will appear on the new gym floor, among other areas of the building.

School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro said that the project is more than halfway complete, and it is on time and on budget. DeCristofaro added that they are meeting with teachers and setting up timeline for all of the moves that will take place once construction is complete.

Mahoney added that teachers would be able to move in by mid-August, which is a little later than they had hoped.

"It was a very exciting meeting on Feb. 25th. We had a presentation on what the materials are going to be looking like in the building. It's very exciting when you retary to be," said Mahoney. "There are ways, much like Quincy High School, to close off the rest of the building, so that is being taken into consideration."

DeCristofaro said the school logo will remain a ram but they are looking at changing the design of it, but nothing has been finalized.

get to a point in the building when your actually talking about what the tiles are going to look like and the color of the paints in the room and we actually got to take a look, too, at the furniture we are going to purchase for the building."

Mahoney said that security features were also discussed at the meeting and they were informed that the main entrance would be set up so that there are ways to close off the rest of the building from visitors, just like Quincy High School.

"We went through how when you come through the main entrance there will be a separate place for the sec-

National Grid To Address Infrastructure Concerns

Grid has yet to upgrade two power supply stations – one on Fields Street and the other in North Quincy – despite the fact that the company has identified the projects as needed to accommodate growth in the city for several years.

"Each September National Grid releases an annual LSP – a local service plan. I try to get those every year," Coughlin said. "I looked at the last five years, National Grid talks about the fact that they need to do work at the Fields Street/North Quincy supply stations and they outlined what the project consists of."

"For the last five years it's been in this LSP and every year in the LSP when they talk about the project and the status of it and the projected in service, when it would be completed, every year it would be the next year. In their 2012 LSP, they're talking about completing this necessary work – work that they'd identified as necessary to provide service to the residents of the City of Quincy – it won't happen until 2015."

Regarding the blackout, Coughlin wants to know why a transmission line coming over the Neponset River that was installed to serve as a backup to transmission lines in the Fore River didn't work when the Fore River lines failed.

"We talked about a transmission line coming across the Neponset River. It was supposed to be a redundant line just for purposes like circumstances we had in the storm," Coughlin said. "Clearly there's a failure I believe on National Grid's part to adequately service the citizens of Quincy and to do the improvements that are necessary to their infrastructure."

Coughlin has also heard from residents on Wollaston Hill and elsewhere that National Grid's natural gas lines have had fluctuations in pressure that can cause heating systems to fail.

"There's been fluctuations in gas pressure. Why is that important? Because it's impacting heating systems. It's been reported to me that there was a 103-year old woman on Highland Avenue who lost heat for a couple days and was discovered by family members wrapped in blankets,"

Coughlin said. "The reason it happened was not that her heating system failed, but the pressure in the gas line feeding into her house was insufficient."

Town Brook Park Project Meeting Topic March 19

The City will host a community meeting to present preliminary design plans for the parkland associated with the new daylight areas of Town Brook at 6 p.m. on Tuesday, March 19, in the community room of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

The landscape architects hired by the City to design the park space around 200 feet of newly open brook channel in the Quincy Center area will present designs and answer questions from residents.

Water is now flowing through the relocated Brook, a project that marked a key component of the infrastructure work for the $1.6 billion redevelopment of Quincy Center.

Moving On

An acquittal, a mistrial and a dismissal.

That's the end result of former state treasurer Tim Cahill's alleged public corruption saga that lasted nearly a year and cost the state perhaps millions of dollars in taxpayer money to prosecute.

The Quincy Three, as one observer put it, are free.

Scott Campbell, one of Cahill's former aides, was acquitted last fall. Another aide, Al Grazioso, agreed to pay $10,000 in court costs after his case was dismissed last week.

Cahill's case ended in a mistrial after a jury failed to reach a verdict on two counts of conspiracy. One news report indicated Cahill was only one or two jurors short of a full acquittal.

The former state treasurer did agree to pay a $100,000 penalty. He did not admit to any wrongdoing, but agreed that there may have been a perception of impropriety after he authorized $1.65 million in lottery ads to defend the lottery from attacks leveled by the Republican Governors Association during his failed gubernatorial campaign in 2010.

Attorney General Martha Coakley contended that those ads gave Cahill a boost while running as an independent candidate. But Cahill -- and others including as many as 10 or 11 jurors -- saw it differently.

"I will go to my grave saying I did my job in the best way I thought I could," Cahill told The Sun during a recent interview. "The fact was the lottery was under attack, and the staff was under attack and I felt that I needed to defend them."

"Could I have waited until after the governor's election? All things being equal, that probably would have been a smarter move under the circumstances, to just wait until after the election to run the ad. But, we're on a fiscal year -- you don't have the luxury of waiting when the (sales revenue) numbers are down."

"The lottery is unique. It's a business. If they (RGA) had attacked the state pension fund, an ad would not have changed anything. If they had attacked the School Building Authority, it would not have changed anything but attacking the lottery has an impact on sales. And it did have an impact on sales," Cahill says.

The ad in question did not include Cahill's name nor his likeness. In fact, it was the same lottery ad that ran for six years. Some of ad's language was changed to respond to the RGA's negative attacks.

"It was an ad that had worked (to boost lottery sales). It wasn't me standing in front of the lottery trying to get promotion. We also spent money in the campaign to defend the lottery and obviously we did promote me at that point so they crossed over and that's where you have the perception."

Cahill said he's happy the case is over, especially for his former aides.

"I'm really happy for Al and Scott because they got dragged into this because of me. I was the elected official. I was the one who made the decision (to run the ads) and they had nothing to do with it."

So, the Cahill case is over.

But we still have lingering questions.

We wonder how much taxpayer money the state attorney general's office spent prosecuting the case. We've heard one estimate of $5 million.

We wonder what court-cases were "back-burnered" and what impact that may have had on the public?

We wonder what happens the next time a state treasurer decides to run for governor -- and that candidate is attacked by negative ads. And lottery sales dip.

Do you dial up a marketing campaign to stop slumping sales or do you just take it on the chin and hope things will get better?

Or, in a more general sense, what happens when any of the state's Constitutional officers -- governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer and receiver general, attorney general and state auditor -- decide he or she wants to seek another office?

Will wearing two hats -- one being the elected official and the other the candidate -- project a perception of political gain and therefore subject him or her to the expanded state ethics law?

For instance, can the state unclaimed money's list be considered campaign literature? One could argue that putting your name and face on those lists -- as the state treasurer -- boosts your political profile and therefore could provide a candidate who is running for another office an edge in a field of lesser-known candidates.

And how about those public service announcements on TV encouraging people to register to vote? Couldn't the same argument be made that those tax-payer funded PSA's also give a public official a boost if he or she chooses to run for another office?

The line separating a job description from a perceived state ethics violation can be blurred.

But how about this idea for maintaining focus and establishing clear boundaries?

Pass a state law that prevents a state Constitutional officer from running for another office unless that individual steps down from their current office.

That could make things all neat and tidy.

No apparent conflict of interest, no perceived political gain.

You go back to being a private citizen first before you make your pitch to voters for the next office you really want.

Simple.

Maybe the deal should be this:

If you are elected to one of the six state-wide offices, you serve out that four year term. You go to work and do the job you are elected to do. You earn your taxpayer-funded salary by working 40 hours a week and fulfilling your job description.

Furthermore, while holding that office, you can't announce that you're a candidate for another office unless you resign that office. And you certainly can't campaign for another office -- no bumper stickers, no fundraisers, no photo ops -- unless you step down from office first.

If you've campaigned and told the voters that you wanted to be the attorney general, and you get elected attorney general, then serve four years as attorney general. If an open seat for Senate opens up, for example, you resign as AG before you campaign for a loftier office.

We think Tim Cahill did an admirable job as state treasurer. He played by the rules and he defended the lottery when he was forced into a corner. He also paid a hefty price -- both political and financial -- for it. But he doesn't want pity. He's upbeat and transitioning well into the private sector while harboring no bitterness towards Martha Coakley.

Tim Cahill's "political obituary" contains plenty of accomplishments and shouldn't dwell on the indictment and trial he and his family had to endure.

During his 23 years in public life, Cahill was a fair and independently-minded city councillor who was elected seven times. He was a competent Norfolk County treasurer who rolled political dice when he ran for state treasurer, vacating a well-paying county job while supporting a wife and growing family.

He also proved the so-called experts wrong when "Tim for Treasurer" -- a campaign slogan coined by one of his four daughters -- was elected and four years later re-elected to the state's fourth-highest office.

As state treasurer, it was Cahill who filed legislation reforming the Massachusetts School Building Authority. His innovative approach has saved taxpayers millions because all new school buildings must follow a model, cost-efficient concept in order to receive state reimbursement for construction costs.

He was also among the first public officials to rail against the state's health care reform initiative, calling it a "fiscal train wreck." Many would agree: the healthcare system has cost more than $4 billion.

Some have wondered if Coakley had a motive in seeking the indictment. One theory: it was a trial balloon to see if the conspiracy charges would stick under the new ethics law.

That outcome we can clearly see.

They didn't.

And the outcome -- an acquittal, mistrial and dismissal -- makes a stronger case that the indictment was groundless in the first place.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1926 real photo postcard of Arnold Road looking west from Quincy Shore Drive in Atlantic. Before the Boulevard was built along the shoreline here in 1908, the area between Apthorp Street and Bayfield Road was marshland and flooded with high tides. The Boulevard, essentially a dike, ended the flooding to some degree so the land was subdivided into house lots and roads were laid out, but they were unpaved and not accepted by the city until the 1920's. Here in this view

Arnold Road was still dirt. Then the first seawall, built in 1926, was another big improvement but it took the larger 1960 seawall to pretty much end the flooding. Now with increasing predictions of worldwide rising sea levels a new even larger seawall may someday be needed along here. ### Blames City Hall For Poor Snow Plowing

I was reading with interest in The Quincy Sun (Feb. 28, 2013 edition), the comments from ward councilors about the poor plowing in this city.

The Blizzard was forecast way ahead of time, and the plowing was very sub par, to say the least. I have lived in this great city for over 36 years, and never saw such lousy plowing.

I understand that the people are looking at Commissioner Raymondi for the lousy job of plowing. I asked some plow drivers "what is the story on one lane on these streets?" The answer was "talk to your city hall, we got orders to plow for one car to pass." After hearing from more city officials the same response.

I understand that the plow drivers were told by city hall, how to clear the streets, not Commissioner Raymondi. Now we have a second snow storm, that was not forecast to be a big deal, and we got an even worst plowing job.

The plows and sanders were not on the streets until after 8 a.m. on Friday, when we had five inches and still snowing. We (in West Quincy) had side streets that were not touched, until a call was made to the DPW. I think (as well as others) that city hall should leave the professionals to give the orders on clearing the streets.

Don't blame Commissioner Raymondi.

Supports Cong. Lynch For U.S. Senate

As a working-class Democrat who grew up in the same neighborhood as the legendary James Michael Curley, when it comes to politics, I look for the best candidate out there who represents as close as possible my own views. Back in January 10, that candidate was Republican Scott Brown. This time around when April 30 arrives, I will be voting for Democrat Stephen Lynch in the primary election.

I have known and worked in all his elections going back to his very first upset over an incumbent state rep from South Boston. Lynch has never been afraid of a challenge. In his career as an elected official he has been a state rep, a state senator, a congressman and soon hopefully a U.S. Senator. While Massachusetts remains one of the most blue of states, Lynch has stood out as an independent thinker who does what is right for those who elected him. He is neither a knee-jerk nor a P.C. liberal Democrat.

I may not always agree with him but I always know he votes his conscience and for the best interests of his constituents.

McDonald Presses For Recycling Program

By SCOTT JACKSON

Councillor George B. McDonald said the city should consider selling some of the 250 tons of refuse generated in Quincy – particularly paper, glass bottles, tin cans, springs and refrigerators.

Doing so would not only give extra money to the city, but also would also prolong the lifespan of the Pike's Peak landfill near Willard Street and help conserve important resources. He suggested Quincy take advantage of nearly a half-billion dollars in government grants for available for waste management projects over the next three years.

"The sanitary landfill program we are about to embark upon at Pike's Peak would not qualify by itself for this federal money because it is not innovative and does not reclaim waste products," McDonald said.

The federal government would reimburse a municipality 50 percent of the cost needed to build a waste reclamation facility. If multiple communities partnered on a project, the feds would up the reimbursement rate to 75 percent. McDonald said Quincy should partner with Milton to take advantage of that, noting that Milton's dump was only 500 yards from Pike's Peak.

SURVIVAL, INC. SEEKS LOCATIONS

The leaders of drug rehabilitation group Survival, Inc. asked the City Council for assistance in finding a location for their 'redirection' centers. The requests came in light of opposition to the group's centers in Germantown and on South Street.

Survival, Inc. was founded to help stop Quincy surging drug problem. In 1967 there were a total of 11 narcotics arrests in the city, compared to 194 in the first few months of 1971. Quincy Police Lt. Frank Vallier said Survival, Inc. took a different approach to fighting substance abuse.

"Most of these young people need help badly. One of the things they need is love," Vallier said. "We have tried to bring an organization into this city that operates on that principle."

Survival, Inc. was expected to treat 1,000 patients in 1971 – 90 percent of them for non-opiate problems, according to program coordinator Dr. Ronal Ross.

Organizers of the group appeared before the council because neighborhood opposition they encountered prevented them opening treatment centers. That in turn stifled Survival's fundraising abilities.

QUINCY'S POPULATION NEARS 88,000

The U.S. Commerce Department released the results of their 1970 census, putting Quincy's official population at 87,966. That was an increase of only 808 over the 87,158 residents recorded in the 1965 state census.

Women outnumbered men in Quincy 46,924 to 41,042, a difference of 5,882.

The median home value in the city was $20,300 and the median monthly rent was $152.

Walking The Camino De Santiago Trail Slide Presentation At Library March 20

Walk 500 miles across Spain?! Every year, thousands of modern-day pilgrims walk a centuries-old trail leading to the tomb of St. James in Santiago, Spain. What is the Camino de Santiago, and why are so many drawn to make this journey today?

Hear about the history, culture, and legacy of this ancient pilgrimage from Nancy Nee Hanifin at a free slide presentation on Wednesday, March 20 at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Hanifin is a Jamaica Plain resident who learned of the Camino many years ago during her days as a graduate history student. Many years and three children later she finally got her chance to walk it. In 2010 she and her daughter walked the 500 miles from St Jean Pied de Port in France to Santiago de Compostela in Spain. Since returning, she founded and is co-chair of the Boston Chapter of the American Pilgrims on the Camino as her way of giving back and sharing the gift of The Way.

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich

One of our favorite ways to prepare chicken is a cutlet. And in today's recipe I've made a cutlet sandwich without bread as you will note.

They are made with a mushroom stuffing and are easy to serve and everyone seems to enjoy them.

CHICKEN CUTLET SANDWICH

For the cutlet

¾ cup flour

2 eggs

1-1/2 cups Panko breadcrumbs (Japanese breadcrumbs)

¼ cup Parmesan cheese

4 skinless boneless pieces of chicken

4 or 5 tablespoons olive oil

Shredded favorite cheese for topping.

Combine the flour and Parmesan cheese together. Bread the chicken in the flour mixture, the beaten eggs and the Panko breadcrumbs

In the hot oil, cook the cutlets until golden brown and cooked through. Drain and set aside.

MUSHROOM STUFFING

1 clove of garlic chopped

2 tablespoons butter

2 tablespoons olive oil

1 cup seasoned breadcrumbs

½ pound mushrooms (cut in small pieces)

2 tablespoons lemon juice

¼ cup water

In the hot oil and butter sauté the garlic and then add the mushrooms, cook until done. Add the breadcrumbs, the water and the lemon juice.

In a slightly greased baking pan, layer two of the cutlets. On top of that add the mushroom stuffing and then top it with the remaining two cutlets. Bake in a 300-degree oven until cheese is melted.

New Library Program To Help Residents Lower Electric Bills

To help bring Quincy residents a more energy efficient 2013, the Quincy Climate Action Network (Quincy CAN) and the Thomas Crane Public Library have joined forces to start a new loaner program that makes Kill A Watt meters available to library patrons.

The meters, donated by Quincy CAN members, allow users to identify household appliances that are sucking up excess energy, says Quincy CAN member Merry Perry, who along with the library's acting director, Megan Allen, designed and set up the loaner program.

Appliances that use too much energy fall into two main categories, Perry says. Energy "hogs" are appliances, usually older ones, that require much more electricity than the most efficient models do. They can range from old TVs to washing machines and refrigerators. Replacing energy hogs can pay for itself in energy savings in a relatively short time, especially for residents who take advantage of incentives available from their electric utility.

Other appliances, mainly electronics such as TVs, computers, stereo systems, and radios, may have "phantom loads," meaning that they use a small amount of power, typically two to ten watts, even after you turn them off. Because appliances with phantom loads use power 24 hours a day, putting such devices on a power strip can save enough to pay for the power strip in six months to a year. Further savings, of course, go into the pocket of the ratepayer.

"Electricity usage is a mystery to most of us, and the library is in the business of helping people solve mysteries," says Megan Allen. "So the Kill A Watt program is definitely in line with our mission, and it also supports the Mayor's energy initiative."

"Quincy CAN," adds Perry, "wants to help the Quincy community get in touch with how much energy we're using, so the program is a natural for us. The less electricity people use, the more they will save—and the better for the planet." Founded in 2012 and chaired by Hough's Neck resident Patti Keville, Quincy CAN promotes energy conservation, energy efficiency, and the use of renewable energy by private citizens, businesses, and government. For more information, go to www.qcan.org.

To borrow a Kill-a-Watt meter, ask a librarian at the main library or any branch. The meters come with a carrying case and detailed instructions.

Meters are loaned out for two weeks, with the possibility of renewal. For more information, go to <http://www.thomascranelibrary.org/killawatt-program>.

'Struggle For Women's Equality' Posters Exhibit At Crane Library

An international poster exhibit entitled "The Struggle for Women's Equality" is on display at the Thomas Crane Public Library in the Coletti Reading Room, 40 Washington St., Quincy, now through March 29th.

The posters featured in this exhibit are in recognition of International Women's Day March 8. They come from around the world and show the universality of the problems women face in their quest for equal rights and respect.

Many of the posters were produced by trade unions. They have been in the forefront of these struggles. The issues depicted include equal job opportunity, sexual harassment, equal pay, decent maternity benefits, and also broader issues of human rights and the right to decent jobs for everyone.

The messages of the posters are expressed in a variety of ways, from straight narrative form to more subtle forms in photos and graphic art.

The posters are from a collection of more than 4,000 of Stephen Lewis. He is a long-time activist in the labor movement and is the former treasurer of his union. Lewis has exhibited at a number of public libraries in Massachusetts and two of the state Heritage parks. The posters were contributed by friends, collected at conferences, visits to some of the organizations, and from connections made through the Internet.

A RIVER OF DIAMONDS

Few pieces of jewelry are more breathtaking than a "rivière" necklace that features a single strand of diamonds that completely encircles the neck. Rivière means "river" in French, which is the word used to describe a flowing stream of gemstones that was first popularized in the late 17th or early 18th century. Necklaces of this type are short in length (14 to 16 inches) and are simply strung with a line of faceted gemstones (preferably diamonds) that are often graduated in size. At first, the collet-set (essentially a bezel setting with a rim of precious metal fully encircling each gemstone) were closed-back. In time, later versions opted for open settings that are popular to this day.

The rivière necklace continues to be one of the most chic and timeless of pieces. This style was largely popular during the Georgian period but has not lost any of its appeal over the years. # C-Mart Proposal Draws Support, Opposition

McNamee, however, was allowed to address his council colleagues at Monday night's hearing. In front of nearly 400 people inside North Quincy High's auditorium, McNamee presented a petition signed by 100 residents opposing the project — he said he was trying to track down other copies that went missing from area businesses. He then spoke in opposition to the project for more than 10 minutes. McNamee said the council should consider the needs of the immediate neighborhood when making their decision — the council acting as the SPGA has strict criteria to weigh, one of which is impact on the community.

"Are we going to be making a decision based on community with a capital 'c' or community with a small 'c'?" McNamee said. "We all know that if you're talking about community with a big 'c' there has been a dramatic demographic shift. I think everyone recognizes that the Asian demographic has needs, however, these needs do not exist in a vacuum."

"There are impacts to the community — community here spelled with a small 'c' — within blocks of the store. It's a very small, working-class, fragile community we call Norfolk Downs. This proposal has immediate and significant detrimental impacts on small businesses and small community institutions that have existed for years within that neighborhood."

McNamee added that the proposed supermarket would have a severe impact on the neighborhood, which is already home to a Hannaford supermarket, located right next to the C-Mart site. Hayward Street is actually the designated route for all deliveries to the Hannaford.

"This is an old neighborhood. It has fixed infrastructure and it has very little room to improve capacity. The streets are narrow and we're bounded there by a barrier with the Red Line that just cannot be moved," McNamee said. "The area is hemmed in. Traffic impacts will be severe. There will be increased threats to public safety and pedestrians."

But Ed Fleming, the attorney representing C-Mart this time around, highlighted traffic improvements that would be made to help the flow of traffic. Those improvements include adding a traffic signal to the intersection of Hancock and Hayward Streets, and creating a left-turn only lane on the northbound side of Hancock to Hayward. He also said the market's parking lot would have more spaces than required by ordinance, allowing for overflow parking which would help relieve congestion.

"It provides 91 spaces where about 68 spaces are required. What that allows us to do is to allow for neighboring business — one in particular the Wheelhouse Diner, which is a very congested spot on the corner of Hancock and Hayward Street — to park overflow parking in the lot during their busy hours," Fleming said. "We believe the opportunity presented by this proposal to provide overflow parking at that location will alleviate the congestion at the Wheelhouse Diner and certainly help the flow of Hancock and Hayward Street."

Some supporters of the plan said they felt traffic wasn't an issue in the area. Others, including Carle Road resident Peggy Corbett, called it unfair to judge a proposed business by the traffic it would create.

"I'm a nurse and I have the misfortune of driving around Quincy in the middle of the night and during the day and traffic is an issue. If we base traffic as an issue on opening a business, we're never going to open any businesses," Corbett said. "Traffic is awful and I think to use that as a reason to discourage a business — there aren't going to be any businesses in Quincy."

Quincy Chamber of Commerce President Dean Rizzo read a statement from the group backing the project. It noted in part that the site is in an industrial zone, and could be used for industrial uses by right. The chamber feels those uses would have more of a negative impact than the proposed retail use.

"The existing industrial property has been vacant and/or underutilized for a number of years and it is time that this property is redeveloped into a commercial use that benefits the residents of North Quincy, the local business district, and the city overall," Rizzo said. "The Quincy Chamber feels that the comprehensive conversion of this property into a retail market will meet these objectives, providing that the vehicle and pedestrian impacts of the development are not more of a detriment to the area compared to the many by-right uses that can occur on this property."

"The conversion of this industrial building into a retail use is consistent with the changing character of the area, which has seen several industrial buildings converted to residential, retail, and healthcare uses over the years. Maintaining a commercial use of this site will retain the commercial tax benefit to the city as well as providing numerous employment opportunities for local residents."

Union leaders also backed the project. Jim Howard, a Braintree resident and treasurer for the Norfolk County Labor Council, said the project would create about 150 construction jobs for union workers in Quincy.

"My concern is short," Howard said, "I belong to an umbrella organization — 37 unions with 3,700 members in Quincy alone. Out of those members probably 25 percent are construction trades. Out of that 25 percent, 25 percent of them are out of work for a year, some of them two years. We need these jobs."

Many members of the Asian community turned out to support the project. Several said the new C-Mart would make it easier for them or members of their families to purchase traditional foods they're accustomed to.

"My house is walkable distance to this C-Mart. I am in favor of this opening and the reason is the convenience, obviously. If I want groceries I need to drive 15 minutes, without traffic, into Boston for shopping. Disregard what I have to do, but think about what most people who shop for groceries who are people my mom's age in their 50s. They do not drive so they have to take the train," Flynt Street resident Shirley Chen said. "You have to take the time to walk to the train station, go to Chinatown and walk from the station to the supermarket and then carry the groceries to the train station, wait for the train, take the train, and then walk from the train station to your house."

Residents of the Granite Lofts condominium complex on Holmes Street, which is across Hayward Street from the proposed C-Mart, vehemently opposed the project. Some, like Nicole Taylor, said the street was already hazardous enough while others like Howard Wong cited Hancock Street's congestion problems.

"We have children, babies, elderly that are suffering and aging that want to walk outside and feel safe walking around their neighborhood," Taylor said. "I can't tell you how many times I have tried to walk from the parking lot across the street to get home and almost been hit by cars — people storming down Holmes Street to try to avoid the traffic on Hancock Street. We don't have crosswalks, we don't have proper lights, we don't have proper signage. If we put a business in there, we are just going to compound those issues."

"I live right next to the proposed site and from my experience there is gridlocked traffic every morning when I go to work. There is gridlocked traffic in the afternoon when kids come back from school."

Update On Marina Bay Luxury Apartment Project

By KRIS KALABOKAS

Representatives of Flagship Marina Bay, LLC gave affirmation at last Wednesday's meeting of the Planning Board, which took place at the Kennedy Center to accommodate a larger crowd, indicating they are confident their existing roadway plan will minimize the burden of traffic which may result from the construction of two luxury apartment complexes in Marina Bay containing roughly 380 units in total.

Attorney Bryan Connolly assured the public that "the project has been vetted through extremely thorough peer review processes," and that since the first public meeting which took place last August, several governmental departments have been contacted to ensure all aspects of the development meet local building and environmental codes.

"We've had comments from the planning and community development staff, comments from the department of records and special services, comments from the commissioner of public health, comments from the city's engineering department, and comments from the chief of the Quincy fire department."

"In addition to traffic, we've done detailed technical studies...we studied and examined sewer lines, and sewer pump stations; we studied and examined the water lines and water pressure; we studied storm water impacts and drainage impacts, and as a result we were able to establish what improvements were necessary for the infrastructure at Marina Bay for this project to work," he said.

"Since [August] we've had six additional public meetings," said Connolly. "We've had a lot of opportunity to meet with the folks and talk about our proposal, and hear comments."

Despite the efforts of Flagship Marina Bay, some current residents, who were encouraged to address board members and fellow meeting goers, expressed unease over the possibility of traffic substantially lengthening their morning commute.

Jim Stamos of Squantum, who has spoken at previous meetings of the board, said his concerns reached outside the borders of Marina Bay. "How much more traffic is there going to be coming out onto Squantum Street?" he asked. "We've talked about traffic studies...I have not physically seen one traffic study."

According to Connolly, any backups created by construction vehicles and machinery will be mitigated by a "construction management plan," which is currently in the works.

Testimony wasn't completely in opposition as Ward 6 City Councilor Brian McNamee took to the microphone. He thanked Planning Board Director Dennis Harrington for maintaining transparency throughout the entire process and indicated his hard work had not gone unnoticed.

"Mr. Harrington is without a doubt one of the most knowledgeable people in the city of Quincy," he said. "Thank you for all your hard work."

Audience testimony couldn't be directly addressed due to time restrictions; however, Harrington urged anyone with questions or comments, be they positive or negative, to log onto the Planning Board's website at <http://www.quincyma.gov/Government/PLANNING/index.cfm>, to submit their queries.

C-Mart Proposal Draws Support, Opposition

There's gridlocked traffic in the nighttime when everybody is getting off from work," Wong said. "Before you decide on this application, I would ask you to take two aspirins and take a field trip down there during those rush hour times."

"All you are going to see is people waiting at the stoplights, people jack rabbiting it across the roads - all you'll see are the red lights and the brake lights."

Residents of the Whittemore Mills condominium building on Linden Street, which sits immediately south of the Hannaford Plaza, also opposed the project. Carla Moran said Hayward Street wouldn't be big enough to support a new supermarket.

"I hope there is a time soon that there is an Asian market in Quincy that's going to meet the needs of our community but I don't think this is the right location at this time. The street is not wide enough for trucks and the other traffic that comes with having a store," Moran said. "If this were any other market I would feel the same way. If this were Trader Joe's, or Alfredo's, or Flanagan's or some other place I might be more likely to shop, I would feel the same way."

Other North Quincy residents against the project also cited traffic concerns. Maureen Oldham of Atlantic Street said it was common sense that Hayward Street was a bad choice to build the C-Mart.

"What I know is common sense. You drive down Hancock Street and the traffic is horrendous. This past Saturday at 1:30 in the afternoon traffic was gridlocked north and south. I'm not opposed to a market in Quincy, just that location," Oldham said.

She went on to add that many residents, not just members of the Asian community, have elderly parents who do not drive and instead take the MBTA into Boston.

"We've heard a lot of talk tonight about elderly parents. With all due respect we all have elderly parents. My elderly mother travels back to South Boston. Two times a week she takes the Red Line. She doesn't drive - never has, never will," Oldham said.

In total, 36 residents and others spoke in favor of the C-Mart proposal. Twenty residents, including McNamee, spoke against it. The council also received a letter in support of the project from the owner of the Wheelhouse Diner, and several other letters in opposition.

The council will hold a second meeting on the C-Mart proposal on Monday March 25, at 7 p.m. inside the auditorium at North Quincy High.

At the end of Monday's meeting they requested a laundry list of items to be presented at that meeting, including the square footage of other supermarket in Quincy and how many parking spots those markets have; traffic data for every intersection on Hancock Street from the Neponset Bridge to Furnace Brook Parkway; SPGA, Zoning Board and Planning Board decisions over the past five years for the same stretch of Hancock Street; motor vehicle citations and accident stats for the area; and traffic studies done when the Hannaford first opened as a Shaw's market.

Roberts: 'No One Could Ask For A More Rewarding Career'

changed a thing. Sometimes there are no words to describe how lucky I feel. What a ride," said a teary-eyed Roberts.

"No one could have asked for a more rewarding and meaningful career as being an educator and administrator in QPS. I leave with pride for what I have accomplished. I leave with admiration for those who have chosen this field and wish all who are educators and professional staff in QPS a career full of enthusiasm for working with young people, handled with enthusiasm and dignity."

For Roberts, 62, the reasons for announcing her retirement are things she can't really put into words.

"I wish I had words to tell you exactly what it is, it's family, it's time. I want to leave on a note where they say 'she did a good job,' not 'when is she leaving.' I think you just know when it is time," said Roberts. "It's funny because in my head I'm ready to go, but in my heart, it's hard. It's very bittersweet and I have mixed emotions and all of that stuff, but it's time. And who better to walk out the door with than (retiring Quincy High Principal) Frank Santoro."

Roberts, who announced her retirement at last week's school committee meeting, has worn many hats during her 42-year career. She started out as a student teacher while attending Boston State College (now UMASS Boston), worked as a teacher for 29 years at Lincoln-Hancock and then Broad Meadows until eventually she made her way up the ladder to the position of assistant superintendent, where she landed just three years ago. But if you ask her today if administration was something she always pictured ending up in, her answer is no.

"I never thought I would not be in the classroom. I never envisioned myself in administration and I loved what I did," said Roberts. "My life dream was to be a teacher, and I think that has been my passion."

It wasn't until her mentor Anne Marie Zukauskas, a QPS principal, pushed her to consider an administrative position as assistant principal at Sterling Middle School that she even considered leaving her teaching career.

"My principal at the time, who I adored - Anne Marie Zukauskas - for about four years, said 'you need to be a principal, you need to go into administration'," said Roberts.

"So an opening arose as an assistant principal at Sterling, and my friend was the assistant principal, and Earl (Metzler) was the principal. Anne Marie and Earl were in cahoots and they talked my friend into meeting me for coffee just to put the bug in my ear. So I met with Earl, and if you ever knew Earl, he can talk you into anything, and I had a great conversation with him and I decided to throw my name in the ring, and got the position."

After a year at Sterling, Roberts was again convinced, this time by Superintendent Dr. Richard DeCristofaro, to consider applying for a principal position at Beechwood Knoll Elementary School.

"He encouraged me and I applied for the principal position at the Beechwood Knoll Elementary School, where I had gone for elementary school-- talk about going home," said Roberts.

"I ended up getting hired for that, and loved it."

DeCristofaro said that the reason he pushed Roberts to move up into the administrative role was because she was someone who had always shown leadership capabilities.

"Colleen knows how important relationships are and has tremendous respect for the teachers, students, and families," said DeCristofaro. "She is certainly someone who has always shown leadership capability and would always get involved in things above and beyond the classroom. I thought she would be great in an administrative role because of her love of the kids, which is something she has carried throughout her entire career."

During her year at Beechwood Knoll, the principal position at Broad Meadows opened up.

"During that school year is when Anne Marie Zukauskas passed away," said Roberts. "Knowing that there was going to be a principal position at Broad Meadows, where I had taught for 19 years, knowing the history of the school, knowing the things that worked and the things that had been tried and didn't, I said what's the worst thing that could happen if I go and talk to the superintendent about it."

Roberts was hired for the job and spent a year as the Broad Meadows principal when a position for the Director of Curriculum opened up.

"I got a call from the superintendent and the assistant superintendent to meet with me, and they asked me if I would consider being the acting director of curriculum," said Roberts. "So fourth job in four years, but I had learned so much in those previous three years, with my colleagues, with my mentoring from other principals, it was just incredible, so I stepped into the role of acting director of curriculum, and then I was hired for the position."

Roberts said that leaving the classroom was challenging, and she found that once she left the schools completely is when she missed the kids the most.

"It was just like another chapter in my life, it was very, very challenging but I was still with kids every day when I was principal. I felt like I had maybe as much, if not more of an impact in the classroom when I became an administrator, both assistant and principal, because I was able to work closely with teachers who may not have been able to reach certain kids," said Roberts. "When I really felt like I missed kids was when I moved up and out of the schools."

In 2010 Roberts added to her title, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, taking on more responsibilities, wearing more hats, and working longer hours.

"Rick has just been the best mentor for me. He's trusted me with a lot and I really appreciate that. I never ever saw myself in this role, and I think I've done a great job, I really do. It's challenging, it's different everyday, and it's busy as heck," said Roberts. "I will miss working with him (DeCristofaro). I really got to know him that first year as assistant principal when he recognized something in me. He recognized something in me, I don't know what it was, and I wish I did. He's been absolutely fabulous."

During her career, Roberts has had her hand in a number of different events throughout QPS including the addition of free full day kindergarten, new initiatives for teachers, and education evaluations, among many other initiatives and implementations along the way.

Asst. Supt. Colleen Roberts: 'The Students Come First'

"It's funny, you don't know what's changing around you when you're a teacher, because you're involved in your classroom, you're involved in teaching the frameworks. I would say within the past three years it's all of the initiatives that are coming from the state that has been the biggest change. That has been unbelievable, not that it's bad, it's just a lot to put on the plates of educators," said Roberts.

"All of the data that is collected, all of the stuff about student growth, that wasn't around when I was a teacher. All of the stuff that's researched based, that's made an impact on education, which is a good thing. I think there has been a real change in education, but I think it has really been a positive change."

For Roberts the best part of her career, and what she is most proud of are the relationships she has built along the way and the impact she has had on students.

"I think my impact on students lives is what I am most proud of. You can't ask for anything more than that, that you have impacted someone's life, and helped them, and taught them, and made them feel proud of themselves," said Roberts. "I'll probably cry my eyes out on June 30th. I'll miss my relationships with people. I'm lucky to work with such fabulous, dedicated professionals, and I will miss that. I will miss seeing those young teachers come in and being so excited about being hired for the first time. I love that enthusiasm. I will really miss helping make a difference as part of a team. I will miss having an impact on the educational lives of students, teachers, and parents."

As for advice to whom-ever may take her position and wear the many hats she will take off come June 30th, Roberts says the one thing they must remember is the students come first.

"Always remember that the students come first. That is our first priority," said Roberts. "Remember what it was like to be a teacher, principal or other administrative role. Take pride in what you do and commit to making Quincy Public Schools the best school system it can be."

ASSISTANT QUINCY SCHOOL Supt. Colleen Roberts will be saying goodbye to one of her mentors, School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro (left) when she retires at the end of the school year. Roberts and DeCristofaro have worked together for three years in the superintendent's office and many years before that while Roberts was working in the school system.

Paul Moody Honored With Henry Bosworth Award

family, friends, past and present elected officials and other invited guests.

Moody, the commander of the Sons of the American Legion, Squadron 294, Morrisette Legion Post, received the Henry Bosworth Award for outstanding community service. He was nominated by members of SAL 294 for his vision that created Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square. Moody's vision transformed an ordinary traffic island into an extraordinary patriotic and heart-warming tribute to our veterans by decorating the island with large American flags - each one representing a veteran who has served, is still serving, or who paid the supreme sacrifice.

The final selection for the award was made by a panel of judges from among 19 nominations for the award.

In presenting the award, Quincy Sun Publisher Robert Bosworth, the son of the late newspaper founder, recognized Moody as the founder of Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square and for his innumerable charitable deeds that have spanned decades in the City of Quincy.

"The Quincy Sun recognizes Paul's leadership in establishing the Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square. But the island is only the tip of the iceberg.

"As an active member of the Sons of the American Legion, Paul and the membership conduct fundraising for veterans, host and serve dinner for veterans and visit shut-in veterans during the holidays. They also visit the VA hospitals and sing karaoke and entertain hospitalized veterans with games," Bosworth said.

"Veterans causes are in Paul's blood," the Sun's publisher continued. "His parents were both Army veterans of World War II. But other charitable endeavors have also been near and dear to Paul's heart."

Moody has served as a volunteer youth baseball and youth football coach, he was active for many years with the Boy Scouts at Sacred Heart Church and has helped the Quincy City Club serve the less fortunate in the community or more than 30 years.

"If there's a need, there's Paul Moody," Bosworth said.

Then he added: "Paul sums up his volunteerism this way: 'I just love helping people, especially the kids and veterans. I'll do anything for veterans.'"

In presenting the Henry Bosworth Award (formerly the Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year) Bosworth read the inscription of the plaque: The Quincy Sun Henry W.

Bosworth, Jr. Memorial Citizenship Award Presented to Paul F. Moody, St., founder of Flags for Veterans Island and Dedicated Volunteer for Veterans, Youth and All in Need.

"On behalf of the Quincy Sun - and the family of Henry W. Bosworth - we salute you."

In accepting the award, Moody thanked the committee that selected and recognized the American Legion family for upholding the ideals of good citizenship.

"I am very proud to accept this award and would like to thank the committee that selected me to receive it, and thank you to who anonymously sent in my name (with the nomination). Together, members of the American Legion, the Ladies Auxiliary, and the Sons of the American Legion make up what is known as the Legion Family. All three organizations place a high importance on preserving our American traditions and values improving the quality of life for our children, caring for our veterans and their families and perhaps most important, teaching the fundamentals of good citizenship.

"The Flags on the Island are in honor of all the men and women who have served, continue to serve and those who have answered their final call, so our country remains free. They are in place for our family members, friends, classmates, and city employees Local 1139.

"Always remember," Moody concluded, "if there were no veterans, there would be no America.

"Freedom is not free. God Bless our troops and veterans, and God bless America."

The Bosworth Award was among a host of tributes and presentations made on Moody's behalf. Citations and commendations were presented by Mayor Thomas Koch, the Quincy City Council, the city's State House delegation, former Ward 2 Councillor and current DPW Commissioner Dan Raymondi and the Morrisette American Legion Post.

Other speakers included leaders from local veterans organizations, a member of the Quincy High School Class of 1966 and members of the Moody family.

Karen Moody, Paul's wife of nearly 45 years, said her husband works hard all year long maintaining Veterans Island.

"I would like to thank the committee that chose Paul to receive the Citizen of the Year award. Paul works hard all year to make sure the island is maintained. He paints every flag pole and adds every flag by hand. He takes much pride in the way the island looks."

Karen Moody said the island began with only 10 flags in 2010 but blossomed to 100 by Veterans Day 2012 and could exceed 125 by this Memorial Day.

"All monies received by donations or flag purchases goes back to the veterans - either by dinner at the Post for Brockton VA patients, cash bingo at the Jamaica Plain VA, visiting shut-in vets at the Quincy nursing homes with cash and a card, and gift cards for veterans families at Christmas time.

"This award is for all the people who helped in making Paul's idea of using the island as a place to pay tribute to our veterans," Karen continued:

"Thank you to the Cyril P. Morrisette Post, the Post Color Guards, Ladies Auxiliary, the Sons Color Guard, Quincy Fire and Police Color Guards, and city departments who help set up for the ceremonies for Memorial Day and Veterans Day."

She also recognized the Quincy High School Class of 1966 for donating 40 flags from class donations for friends and family members and for veterans who served from 1966 and The Quincy Sun for their support in publicizing the island and the flags' effort.

"To Bob Bosworth - if it weren't for you and The Quincy Sun coverage the Island I don't know how many flags would be flying today."

Karen also gave special thanks to their grandchildren, Gavin, Caroline and Aiden "for all their help planting flowers, digging and staking flags and raking all the leaves on the Island preparing it for Veterans Day 2012.

"We know that you get what the Flags for Vets Island stands for. We love you and thank you again every one."

One of the Moody's sons, Paul Moody, Jr., congratulated his father on his family's behalf.

"No one in this room has any idea of what this award means to my father. Throughout the years my father has always been involved with many organizations in the city whether it was helping the Koch Club, troop master for the Boy Scouts, Quincy Youth Football he's always been involved in his community. Perhaps most notably has the Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square. The island is just another way him giving back to the community.

"The Flags for Veterans Island is a way for him and others to pay tribute to friends and families of our citizens of Quincy. The island has also shown me and my children how to honor the men and women that sometimes are forgotten. I'm proud of my father for what he has done for the island and for what it means to him. I congratulate him on his award today."

Pat Walsh Matterazzo, representing the Quincy High School Class of 1966, presented Moody with a framed photo of the Flags for Veterans Island. She thanked Moody for his efforts in establishing the island, a place that has brought comfort to her and many of her classmates.

"Fifty years ago, our classmates entered the doors of Quincy High for the first time as 10th graders from various sections of Quincy and beyond. We were 14 (years old) and we had our heroes: President Kennedy, baseball Hall-of-Famer Ted Williams, Astronaut John Glenn, NBA Champ Bill Russell, and our own WWII fathers and uncles to name a few.

"One thing on which we could all agree was that a hero was a very, very special person. No one suspected there were heroes within our ranks, but too soon after our 1966 graduation there would be.

"We would lose five classmates in Vietnam, and many more would return changed in ways no one could possibly foresee.

"For many years," she continued, "our class has sought a way to honor our classmate veteran heroes. Yes, there is a monument to those killed in the line of duty in Vietnam on which five of our classmate names are inscribed, but that wasn't enough. We needed a way to honor our servicemen and women, to pay our respects in one special place to each and every one of our veteran classmates.

"Thanks to the efforts of Paul Moody, there is such a place now - The flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square."

Walsh Matterazzo also read a touching note from Gail Peterson Livingstone, the widow of Gerry Peterson who was killed in Vietnam.

"I would like to thank Paul Moody for his tireless efforts on behalf of our veterans. I am especially grateful for his work with Flags for Veterans Island. My husband, Cpl. Gerald R. (Jerry) Peterson, was killed in action in Vietnam on Nov. 6, 1968. In addition to me, his parents, sister and four brothers, he left behind a year-old daughter, Lisa.

"Last year, a representative of the QHS Class of 1966 contacted me about adding his name to the island memorial. After all this time, I was so very pleased that Jerry would be so honored. It is important to remember and honor our fallen heroes.

"On Nov. 11, 2012, as I approached the island to attend the Veterans' Day ceremony, I was overwhelmed by the sight of so many beautiful flags with name tags on them. Thank you, Paul, for making his possible."

Walsh Matterazzo then quoted American songwriter and 1960s icon, Bob Dylan.

"A hero is someone who understands the responsibility that comes with his freedom.

"So, it is with the gratitude of our class members, the friends and families of all the veterans represented at Flags for Veterans Island, that we present you this plaque of appreciation to you, our hero, Paul Moody."

Earlier in the ceremony, Mayor Thomas Koch proclaimed March 7 as Paul Moody Day in the City of Quincy in recognition of his Quincy Sun Photo/Lisa Aimola selection as the recipient of the Henry Bosworth Award. Koch was also representing his family and his father, the late Richard J. Koch, Sr., who received the Sun Award posthumously in 1988.

"I feel very privileged to be here as a long time friend of the Moody family," the mayor said. "Paul's mom and dad were both World War II veterans. His dad Jim grew up in Squantum. Certainly over the years we've had great get-togethers and family reunions over the years and the Moodys have truly been a part of the Koch family. Paul and his family have stood by my family and my dad helping with the Koch Club activities."

The proclamation noted Moody's dedication to volunteerism and support of veterans and youths services.

"All of those who have come to know Paul have benefitted from his endless kindness and generosity and caring spirit," the mayor said.

State Sen. John Keenan presented Moody a citation from the State Senate acknowledging his selection as the Henry Bosworth award recipient.

"I can't help but think how proud you parents would be (as you) continue on the type of work that they did in your generation and I think a true testament to what you do is the fact that you see your family doing it as well. There is generation after generation of your family contributing to the quality of life here in the City of Quincy. We are so grateful for that. We wish you many, many years of continued volunteerism and continued leadership as well as with your family."

State Reps. Bruce Ayers and Tackey Chan presented Moody a House commendation that was also signed by the city's two other legislators, House Majority Leader

Ron Mariano and Rep. Martin Walsh.

"We want to congratulate you for the many, many contributions you've made to the City of Quincy over the years, to our veterans, to coaching and your family," Ayers said. "The city of Quincy is a great place to work and raise a family and you are certainly another example of why the city is a great place to live with all the contributions that you've made."

"The House of Representatives offers its sincerest congratulations to Paul F. Moody, Sr. in recognition of receiving the Henry Bosworth Award. The entire membership extends its very best wishes and expresses their hope for future good fortune and continued success in all endeavors."

Chan added:

"I want to extend my congratulations to Paul Moody for all the good work he's done in the community and most importantly for us to remember all the people who serve our country and keep us safe and protect the freedoms that we have."

Council President Michael McFarland was joined by Councillor Doug Gutro in presenting a City Council citation to Moody.

"I have lived in Quincy my whole life and I love the City of Quincy and the reason I love the City of Quincy is because not so much of where it's located but because of the people who live here, the neighborhoods and the friendships that have evolved over the years," McFarland said. "We have a gentleman here who is the epitome of a volunteer for our community. He's worked hard, he's raised a family, but he found the time to give back to his neighborhood and he continues to give back to the City of Quincy."

Gutro also thanked Moody for his exemplary work as the founder of Flags for Veterans Island.

"Thank you for the extraordinary work you have done with the Flags for Veterans Island in Fort Square in behalf of Quincy's veterans. I think it's a tribute to you and the work that you have done when you look around the room and you see the number of veterans who are here to say thank you to you for the work that you have done," Gutro said.

The citation - signed by all nine councillors - commended Moody as a worthy recipient of the Henry Bosworth Award for "serving the city with great pride, honor and distinction. Your long-lasting and outstanding dedicated community service has made you one of Quincy's most respected citizens. It is a genuine privilege for the Quincy City Council to honor you today for a lifetime of volunteering your services in the service of others. The City of Quincy is in your debt."

DPW Commissioner and former Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymond praised Moody for his more than 20 years of service as the DPW's leak detection supervisor. He also noted the significance of the Henry Bosworth Award.

"It's a pleasure and honor for me to be here tonight. It's one of those events that those of us in public office try not to miss especially those who knew Henry for so many years. I knew Henry for an excess of 40 years. He was a dear friend to many of us in this room," Raymond said. That's why this award is so important Paul not only for what you have done for your family, for your community, for veterans, and for a grateful Department of Public Works.

"There aren't too many aspects of life that are not impacted by your Public Works Department. ... and Paul has been a significant part of that over the past 23 years. He's dedicated each and every day to making sure the rate payers and the tax payers of the City of Quincy are getting their fair shake when it comes to the water department, the water-sewer and in particular the Department of Public Works.

Bosworth Award Reception For Paul Moody On QATV

Quincy Access TV Channel 8 will broadcast The Quincy Sun's presentation of its Henry W. Bosworth, Jr. Memorial Citizenship Award

"This award is special, Paul. Not only for what you've done for family, friends, veterans and the Department of Public Works but there are awards and there are awards. You look behind this award done by Quincy's community newspaper of long-standing named after an individual with an impeccable reputation within the City - the heart and soul of Quincy news spanning many, many decades.

"To be honored tonight, to be the 29th recipient of the Henry Award is a tremendous accomplishment," Raymond added.

The commissioner noted Moody is the first DPW employee to receive the Bosworth-Sun Award and presented Moody a DPW citation acknowledging his selection.

"With appreciation for his outstanding service to the Department of Public Works for over 23 years, to all our veterans, and to the City of Quincy. Paul, congratulations to you and your family for a job well done," Raymond said.

Moody also received well wishes and congratulations to Paul Moody Friday, March 15 at 7 p.m., Saturday, March 16 at noon and Sunday, March 17 at 7 p.m.

from fellow members of the Morrisette American Legion Post.

Larry Norton, past commander, Morrisette American Legion Post and commander of the Quincy Vietnam Combat Veterans Association, recalled meeting Moody for the first time in 1999 at a square dedication in honor of the Moody family on East Squantum Street in Squantum. Five members of the Moody family - Paul's mother and father and several aunts and uncles - were all members of the Morrisette American Legion Post who had served their country in the Armed Forces.

After Moody joined the Morrisette Legion Post's SAL Squadron, Norton said Moody was a "new kid on the block" who wanted to get involved right away.

"We sort of took (Paul) under our wing but he fell out. He went off on his own. And everything the man said he was going to do he did. He did it to the T. He has made the Morrisette Post a much better organization for doing his charitable work with homeless veterans. We're also at the Brockton VA, and we take a lot of patients down there."

Norton also noted that the Post and the Disabled American Veterans in Quincy has provided $10,000 to veterans in the last two and a half years, a fact that drew applause from reception guests.

Morrisette American Legion Post Commander Fred White said Moody has always been there to help veterans.

"We're all here because of Paul's great work that he's done for the Field of Flags. He started out hoping he'd have a field of flags, now he has a mountain of flags. I said to Paul, 'you're going to have to get a bigger field for all those flags.'

"Whenever I need help with a ceremony or a parade or any kind of honor, Paul is always there," White said. "He's the first one, and he's always there to help and the Post appreciates all that Paul has done for us."

White presented Moody with a plaque in recognition of receiving the Henry Bosworth Award. "The members of the Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post No. 294 congratulate you and gratefully acknowledge your dedication to the ideals of the American Legion and service as commander of the Sons of the American Legion Squadron, 294," he said.

Stephen Fowles, past Morrisette and SAL 294 commander and the Sons adjutant, also congratulated Moody.

"I want to congratulate you Paul on your award tonight. I want to thank you for stepping up to the plate and taking over the commandship of the Sons of the American Legion and for what you have done with the Island. As a matter of fact, Paul was out today canning for that island. I want to thank you. When Paul needs something, he calls me. We do everything together."

The ceremony also featured a new tradition: Moody was presented a gold lapel pin shaped like a sun. Amy Bosworth, wife of Quincy Sun publisher and daughter-in-law of Mr. Bosworth, pinned Moody and gave out similar pins to the past recipients of the Bosworth-Sun award who were present that evening.

Future award recipients will also receive the sun-shaped lapel pin that symbolizes the outstanding community service recipients give and for "shining" in the City of Quincy.

The final presentation of the evening was made by Maralin Manning, business development director of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce and one of the judges who selected Moody for the award. Manning presented a bouquet of flowers to Karen Moody.

North Quincy Gives Its Fans A Great Ride In Sectionals

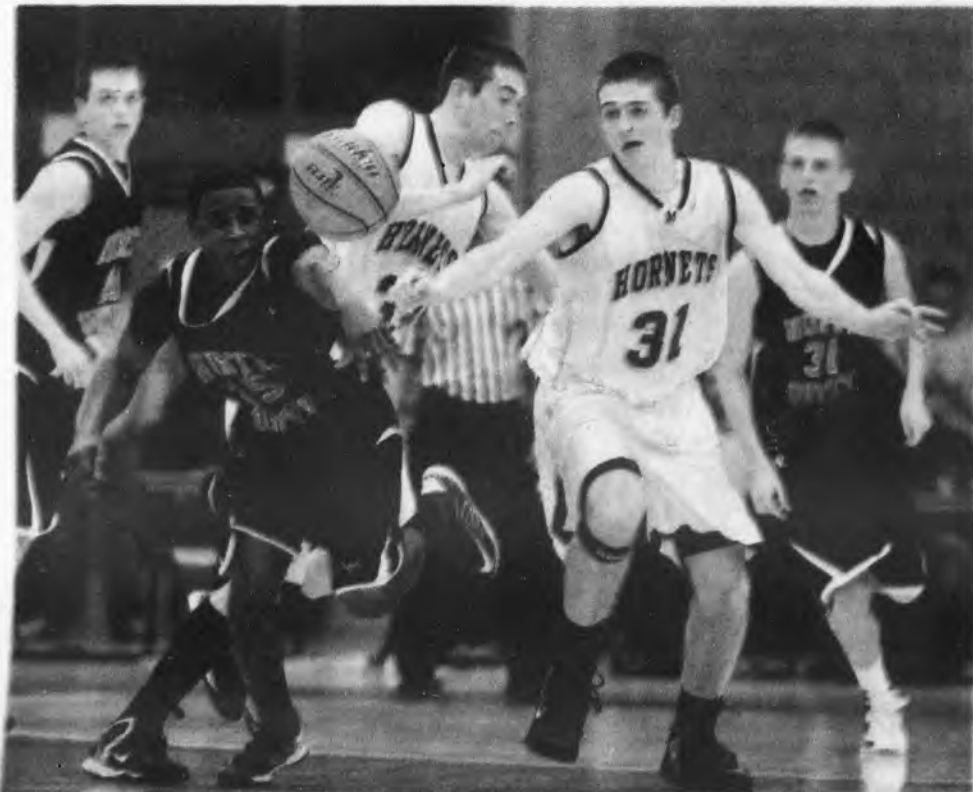

A VERY PROUD North Quincy High School boys' basketball team holds the runner-up trophy after bowing in the Div. 1 South Sectional Tournament Final Saturday night at UMass-Boston to top seed Mansfield, 57-45. This year's Red Raiders were the first boys' basketball team to reach the finals in 41 years. Story, other coverage begins on Page 19.

BIG BUCKETS scored by North Quincy's Anthony Green (#33) and Daniel Gould (#5) gave the Red Raider team bench and its red-and-black clad fans (photos right) plenty to cheer about against Mansfield. Green contributed 10 points, 10 rebounds and six blocked shots while Gould scored a team-high 16 points in North Quincy's 57-45 loss to the top-seeded Hornets.

Reaching Sectionals Final 'An Incredible Accomplishment'

Red Raiders Leave Basketball Legacy

By BILL GRIFFIN

The great joy of the tournament is the two-week ride North Quincy took which captured the hearts of a city and woke up the echoes of teams from decades past.

The hard truth of the tournament is that only one team wins its final game, only one team goes home a champion.

Mansfield prove well its advance billing as the best team in the state by snapping open a close game with three three-point jumpers early in the fourth period to eliminate North Quincy, 57-45 in the championship match of the Division 1 South Sectionals at UMass Boston Saturday night.

"We came over here to win, not come close," said coach Kevin Barret whose club finished the season at 18-6. "Give Mansfield credit. No team gets to 24-2 and goes through the Hockomock League with one loss without being very good. It was no surprise. They played great, but I couldn't be prouder of my kids."

Perspective is hard at these moments, but is worthwhile. The senior class led by tri-captains Marquis McClendon, Pat Gould, and Dan Gould won more games than any senior class in the history of the school. They won 10 as sophomores, 17 as juniors, 18 as seniors. Add them up. Take a good look at the total. Nobody can match it. Not one class in the history of the school.

"It's an incredible accomplishment," said Barrett. "We threw them in as sophomores and they built on their experience. They made themselves and everyone around them better. It culminated in the last two weeks. They put our program back on the map."

For two weeks, people talked about North basketball. People cared. People jumped on board for the ride. Fans packed gyms. Over 1000 squeezed into the North gym to see the Braintree game. Both games at UMass were overflow sell-outs. People stood for two hours to watch North play. The mayor, a state senator, public officials, teachers, students, and anyone who cared about basketball watched, cheered and celebrated.

"Look at the game tonight," said Barrett. "We had over half the gym. There were administrators, teachers, family, friends and North Quincy fans everywhere. I saw more red and black than I've ever seen before."

It was not a 12-point game. North was within four at the half, six after three, and three at 40-37 early in the fourth. They were within two in the third. Then came the threes. Mansfield made nine for the night. Ryan Boulter had a pair and Kyle Wisniewski added one to stretch it to 51-37 with 4:30 left. The Hornets made seven of their first nine threes against Brookline in the semis, so this was no surprise.

"We knew a lot about the threes," said Barrett.

The frustrating part of the Mansfield run is that it didn't come off turnovers or mistakes. North ran its offense well at the other end. They moved the ball. They had good looks. They took shots they normally would make. They just didn't fall. There was a feel to the game that if North could stay within two or four until the final two minutes, the Red Raiders would have a great shot. It was not to be. The tournament can be a hard master.

"I liked our effort and the way we moved the ball. For a stretch there we couldn't get a shot to fall," said Barrett.

Dan Gould led North with 16 on a three and four beautiful floaters off the drive. Eftim Butka worked the inside well for 10 points and 11 rebounds. Junior center Anthony Green had 7 points, 10 rebounds, six blocks and those numbers grow higher if he didn't play in foul trouble. Ironically, North's big worry for most of the season was offensive rebounding and in the last three tourney games, Butka and Green, both juniors, controlled the defensive glass. Pat Gould and McClendon, once again, played terrific defense.

"We gave up a couple of offensive rebounds early, but that was about it," said Barrett. "Dan did everything humanly possible. Teams focus on him so much. I loved that we never stopped fighting or scrapping until the end."

It was a season of fine moments. The Red Raiders beat Quincy three times. They gave Wareham its only regular-season loss. They won their Christmas tourney. They belted Scituate on the road and then played an unforgettable thriller at home, rallying from down 20 in the final six minutes, only to lose by one. They were within a point of their second straight division crown. Then in the tourney, they quieted the doubters who joked about the size of their bodies without understanding the size of their hearts.

"We heard a lot about one-and-done North Quincy. I think we answered all of that," said Barrett.

When it was over, McClendon, Pat Gould, and Dan Gould stepped out of the locker room and did the one thing all athletes hate to do after a loss. Talk to reporters. They were well-spoken, intelligent, and gracious. They were a tribute to their coach, team, families, and school.

"Three special kids," said Barrett.

"It's hard now because it hurts, but when I look back, I'll always remember that we had one of the best teams in Division 1 in my senior year," said Pat Gould.

"We left a legacy. It wouldn't have meant anything without these two twins," said McClendon as he wrapped his arms around Pat and Dan Gould. "All through the tournament, I kept saying: One more day. Make it last. Give me one more day with my teammates."

"After every practice, before every game, we'd say: See you tomorrow," said Dan Gould.

There will not be hoop tomorrow at North Quincy, but this team will grow rich and fond in the memory and will be talked of as long there is a basketball and people who care about it.

North Quincy In Elite Company

By BILL GRIFFIN

They are walking with kings.

When North Quincy defeated Newton North last week, the Red Raiders joined a rare and select circle of friends. They became the first team from North Quincy to advance to the Division 1 South Sectional finals since the great 1971-72 team which went 20-1 under coach Bob "Knobby" Nolan.

"Each member of the starting five individually and the team as a unit has been inducted into the North Quincy Hall of Fame," said Paul Bregoli, who is on the selection committee for the hall of fame.

Like the current team, Nolan's club won three games to advance to the sectional final. The Red Raiders defeated Framingham South, New Bedford and Dedham on their run through the sectional.

North defeated Dedham, who entered the game 19-0, in the old Boston Garden. Dedham was coached by Braintree native Jim Calhoun who went on to coach at Northeastern and win three national championships at the University of Connecticut.

In the sectional finals, North fell 73-62 in the Garden to a great Catholic Memorial team and King Gaskins, who scored over 2,500 points in his high-school career and went on to play for Holy Cross.

"There was no superstar, they worked well as a unit. Every player had a job and he did it," said Bregoli who coached the freshman basketball team for three years and the JV team for four years at North Quincy.

Dave Nelson was the leading scorer for the Red Raiders. He was a versatile 6'3" forward who could score inside and out. Jamie Doherty was the second leading scorer. He was glider who got to the basket and finished well.

"Dave could shoot from outside and in. Jamie drove well and was a real leaper," said Bregoli.

Ken Marsters was the shooting guard who averaged 11 points per game with an accurate outside touch. Bob McKay played the point and strong defense for the Red Raiders.

"Marsters was a good shooter and McKay was a tough, hard-nosed kid," said Bregoli. "He had good size and was an excellent all-around athlete. He played quarterback on the football team and pitched for the baseball team."

John Stephens was a rugged, undersized center at 6'0". Jimmy Driscoll at 6'5" was the first player off the bench for North.

"Stephens was a good positional rebounder," said Bregoli. "He boxed you out, he didn't out-jump you. He did all the dirty work inside for the team."

North's current team dropped Natick, Braintree, and Newton North to make the finals. Bregoli sees similarities between the 2013 and the 1972 teams.

"The 1972 team had camaraderie. They liked each other. So does this team," said Bregoli. "They are both undersized. On the 1972 team, every player had a niche and knew how to fill it. That's true of this year's team. Both teams earn your respect with the way they play the game."

Future Bright For Presidents After Successful '13 Campaign

By JEFF OHLSON

Over-achieving is what most people would say about the Presidents boys' basketball team 2013 campaign. Quincy High went 14-10 this year and made the tournament with three sophomores starting. They advanced to the second round and gave the powerhouse Sharon Eagles a run for their money.

With a great combination of leadership in the form of stars Jaquan Harris and Tino Goncalves, the Presidents were able to ride a young varsity team to heights that few saw coming. Quincy looked in the preseason like a team that might struggle due to their youth but by season's end Coach David Parry had his team playing a real hard-nosed style of basketball that involved the whole team playing together and making life hard on the opposing teams, holding opponents to 57.9 points a game.

"I mean, the obvious goal, was to finish this season in the Garden with this team and finish the ultimate goal," said Tino Goncalves, the Presidents' point guard who averaged 10.9 points and 8.7 assists a game in his senior year. "This was a special team, we really all came together to play cohesively."

For the Presidents, playing cohesively happened from the beginning of the season, when they won four of their first five games, to the end when they made noise in the MIAA tournament by beating Randolph and narrowly losing to the Sharon Eagles. Coach Parry placed an emphasis on team play before the season started and was pleased to see his team gel together so well.

"As a coach, I always wanna see my team play like a family and really get out there and get at it together. With leaders like Jaquan and Tino, I never had any doubts that this team would mesh, but we are a young team and we played better than I expected throughout the year," said Parry.

One of the young players Coach Parry is talking about is sophomore Collin Evans, who averaged 8 points a game for the Presidents and hit 34 three pointers. Junior J.T. Bain also played very well for Quincy as a down low presence and was often paired with Sophomore James Lam. Lam and Bain accounted for over 250 rebounds over the course of the season for the Presidents, which adds up to almost ten a game for the tandem.

"J.T. is definitely a 'lunch pale' player, he shows up to every game and you know

'I NEVER HAD any doubts that this team would mesh, but we are a young team and we played better than I expected throughout the year,' said Quincy High School boys' basketball coach David Parry in assessing this year's recently completed campaign.

that you're going to get a full on effort and that he's leaving it out there on the floor," said Coach Parry. "James Lam was terrific for us second half of the season. He really came on strong and established himself as one of our more tenacious defenders and aggressive rebounders."

Senior Jaquan Harris lead the Presidents in scoring averaging 13.5 points per game and really doing a little of everything with 88 rebounds on the season and 48 assists. Harris was often seen guarding the opposing team's best scorer and carrying Quincy's offense on his back during stretches of time. Harris would do most of his damage against the opposition at the free throw line, where he could always be found late in games, as he hit 68% of his attempts.

"Jaquan is a special player, we will miss him and Tino tremendously. The leadership late in games, and just the ability to get to the line and play tough for four quarters... You can't replace that. You can put another player in the lineup to play the position but you can't replace the intangibles, the heart," said Coach Parry.

Jaquan and Tino's leadership doesn't just apply to the basketball court as both players plan on attending college. Harris will have the privilege of choosing between basketball, football, and track, for sports to play while attending school and may even receive multiplied scholarship offers. Tino will be looking to go wherever he can continue his basketball career. Both players are role models according to their Coach.

"Those guys are why we do this every year. Players like that, make this all work. We play these sports for the competition but we do it more so that our kids can achieve something and while in the process potentially find themselves earning a free education," said Parry.

As far as next year goes for Quincy, the future is bright as the team is only graduating three players and most of the returning players saw a ton of meaningful minutes this year. Getting to the second round of the tournament will only leave the team expecting more out of themselves next year. Coach Parry thinks that next year could be another good year for Quincy basketball.

"Going into this year, we looked at the team and thought it was young and for this year we didn't know how that would translate, but we did know that in terms of the future we could really build for next year. So now, after a successful season we will look at next year and see only good things," said Coach Parry. "We will have to change around how we play now that we are losing Jaquan and Tino but we as a coaching staff are definitely already looking forward to next year and we think it will be a good year."

NQ 2013 Hoopsters: A Closer Look

By BILL GRIFFIN

It is 40 years in the future. A robot brings you a cup of coffee and this newspaper. The robot has questions about North Quincy's 2013 basketball team just like you had questions about the 1972 club this past week.

"What were they like? Could they play defense?"

"They started three players under 5'10" and brought a 5'7" kid off the bench. They played you chest-to-chest, man-to-man. In three tourney wins in Division 1, they gave 42, 44 and 47 points."

"Who was the best defensive player?"

"Hard to say. Marquis McClendon was great. In the Braintree game, he shut out their best player. Kid had scored 26 against BC High. McClendon shut him out. Against Newton, he guarded their top scorer for three periods and gave up one point. Then they switched him to the hot shooter in the fourth quarter and he shut him out. He was a great athlete, fast, relentless on defense, and he prepared himself for every player he had to guard."

"Could he score?"

"He could, and if he were selfish, he could have scored a lot more. He had 25 against Quincy. North was down 18 and came back to win. In the tourney, Newton tied it in the fourth period. Marquis got to the hoop, drew two fouls and made four free throws. Huge."

"Who was the best shooter?"

"Danny Gould. Had the purest stroke you ever saw. Head up, eyes on rim, released at top of his jump, followed through to the basket. Pure. I used to think about how many jumpers he shot. I thought about how many hours in a day, how many days in a week, weeks in a month and months in a year. I gave up counting. I was getting near how many stars there are in the sky."

"Could he shoot in the big games?"

"He loved them. He had 67 points in North's final three tourney games. He had 28 against Braintree at home when fans were lined up out on Hunt Street. He shot his team leads against Braintree and Natick and went 17-18 from the line to protect the lead. You know what I'll always remember, though? Against Mansfield when the game was lost, he ran back as hard on defense as he would in a one-point game.

I liked that"

"Who played the point?"

"Dan's twin brother Pat. I loved point guards, thought they played the hardest position in sports. Quarterback can huddle up every play and talk about what to do. Goaltenders spend half the game drinking water and cleaning their crease. Pitchers have eight guys to catch the ball for them, take two minutes between pitches, and chew sunflower seeds on the bench."

"The point guard is out there every second making decisions at full speed. Pat was great. He handled so well that Newton and Mansfield didn't even try to press North. Didn't even try. He had a great shot. Scored 26 against Scituate when Dan was hurt. He always guarded a big scorer. He did great against Natick's Alex Hilger and Newton's Tommy Mobley. Against Mansfield, he held Ryan DeAndrade to seven, two after the first three minutes. Most unselfish player I ever saw. Should have shot more."

"He made my favorite play of the tourney. He was dribbling out the clock against Natick and got swallowed up by big men under the hoop. Didn't have a clue of what to do. He just kept floating, and spun it in left handed. After the game, his coach called it: Jordanesque."

"Jordanesque?"

"Yeah, after Michael Jordan."

"Who's Michael Jordan?"

"We'll talk later."

"Who played center?"

"Anthony Green, a 6'7" junior. What a story! Started the season on the bench and by the end of the tourney, nobody could get to the basket against North. He had 22 blocks in three tourney games. Showed some good offensive instincts too. I'll tell you later about his senior year. There were college scouts at every game."

"Did they have any other good big men?"

"Efthim Butka. I was never happier for a kid than I was for him in the Natick game. He worked so hard on his game all year and it all came together for him in a tourney game. 16 points and 16 rebounds. It wasn't just Natick. He had 44 rebounds in four tourney games. Against Natick, he made a hesitation-spin drive to the bucket. He had a smile on his face which lit up the whole gym. It should have been on ESPN."

"What's ESPN?"

"We'll talk later."

"How was their depth?"

"They brought this kid Kyle Richardson off the bench. He was 5'7". Played like he was 6'3". No kid was tougher, no kid played harder. He was a beast on defense and he could score. He stole an offensive rebound for the winning hoop in the comeback over Quincy. In the Scituate game for the division, he had nine points and three assists in the last six minutes. North came from 20 down and lost by one. Still think if he had got one more touch in that game, North would have won."

"Anybody else?"

"Aaron Anderson. Danny hurt his ankle and missed five or six games. Richardson wasn't even playing. He comes in, averages double figures and makes like 40 threes. He was making them from the street. He had seven in the comeback over Quincy. One of the smartest kids in his class."

"Greg Clarke played well off the bench. Everybody helped. Solomon Umoren, Kevin Pillone, Matt Gerakis, Matt Donovan, Jackie Chen, Vinny Tran and Conor Pound all practiced hard and took advantages of their chances."

"What did you like best about them?"

"I loved the way they played. I love basketball and they played it the way the games is supposed to be played. Man-to-man. I don't like zones. I love straight-up, tough man-to-man. They talked on defense and helped each other. On offense, they ran these great off-ball screens to free their jump shooters. They ball moved, they shared touches, everybody scored. I've never seen a high school team move the ball like they did against Newton in the first period. It just flew to the open man. They passed up good shots for better shots. They were up by 14 midway through the quarter. One of the best things I've ever seen on a basketball floor. Perfect basketball!"

"I wish I could see it."

"I put it on tape so I could watch it. Watch it all the time. I'll show you. It's around here somewhere. Can't remember anything these days. Where is it? Let's talk some more while I look."

No. 6 NQ Topples No. 2 Newton North In Semi-Finals

By BILL GRIFFIN

For a moment, the locker room was draped in quiet. For a moment, nobody talked, nobody moved, nobody looked at Danny Gould as he walked into the small closet of a room tucked inside the Clark Center at UMass Boston. The sounds of silence.

Then it all exploded like the fireworks on the Fourth of July. The room lit up in a riot of noise, laughter and joy as Gould's mates mobbed him in celebration of North Quincy's biggest basketball win in 40 years.

Gould scored 23 points, turned the game North Quincy's way with a decisive steal, and made four stake-in-the-heart free throws to lift the No. 6 seeded Red Raiders past No. 2 seed Newton North, 51-47 in the sectional semifinals at UMass Boston last week.

"We showed composure in a crazy tournament atmosphere," said coach Kevin Barrett. "Danny wanted the ball at the end. Great players want the ball. We had it in the right hands."

It is furthest North had gone in the tourney since the 1971-72 team. It was no fluke. It came against Newton North, as in 20-3 Newton North, winners of 15 of 16 coming into the game. North Quincy was the better team, noticeably the better team.

"That is why we're here," said Barrett. "We don't want to make a good showing, we don't want to come close, we want to compete for a sectional championship."

For the second straight tourney game, North never trailed. Newton North forced one tie in the game. However, it came at 39-39 with 7:00 left. Despite dominating most of the night, North's season would come down to seven wild closing minutes. It would be the best of tournament madness. There would be mistakes and great plays. Shots would cut cleanly through the net, shots would trickle off the rim. The crowd would roar. The building would shake with the sound of it all. Stomachs would churn. Hearts would be in the throat. Pulses would race. It would test will as much as ability.

The ride of crazy twists and turns began with Marquis McClendon who played superlative defense for the second straight game. With Newton on a 6-0 run, with the momentum of the game in doubt for the first time, with the Tigers one North miss away from the ball and a chance at the lead, McClendon grabbed the game by the throat. He flew to the bucket twice, forced two shooting fouls, and softly knocked home four free throws for a 43-39 North lead with 5:30 left. Pressure? What pressure? Down the stretch when the game was there to be won, North Quincy was 8-8 from the line.

"I think the crowd packed to the rafters at home against Braintree may have prepared us for tonight," said Barrett.

"Marquis has been making plays like that for three years," said Gould.

The story tumbled to its conclusion. Each side missed clean looks. North turned up the defensive fire. There were bone-jarring collisions. Efthim Butka (eight points, eight rebounds) and Gould kissed home soft jumpers. McClendon forced a five-second violation, the defense had Newton on lockdown, and North was up 47-43 with 1:12 left. However, Newton's Korey Mui cashed two free throws off a steal and Newton was within 47-45 with possession of the ball and 34 seconds left.

With the whole world crashing down around him in a wall of noise, Gould was able to think his way through to making the play of the game. He didn't rush, the game slowed down for him, he saw the play, the man and the moment. He made a steal he has made on the playground a thousand times because he knew what he was doing. He read the passer near midcourt, saw a shadow of doubt, a flicker of nerves, jumped the passing lane and tipped away the ball for the steal.

"I knew he had to worry about a backcourt violation," said Gould. "He seemed a little nervous. I read him, cheated a little and just tipped the pass away."

Gould, who finished Braintree by going 13-14 from the line, was fouled with 31 seconds left. Swish. Swish. He was fouled with nine seconds left and North up, 49-47. Swish. Swish. Nothing but net. Game over. The form forged by shooting free throws on darkened playgrounds held firm. Gould was money again.

"He has shot a million free throws," said Barrett.

"I just tried to remember my form. See the rim, keep my arm straight, follow through," said Gould.

Pat Gould had six points and five rebounds for North. McClendon and Butka each had eight points and eight rebounds. Butka had 34 rebounds in three tourney games. Anthony Green, a 6'7" junior center, had five points, eight rebounds and eight blocks. He had 16 blocks in two tournament games against Braintree and Newton and emerged as A Force for North.

"He's a game-changer. He changes as many shots as he blocks. I can't take him out of there," said Barrett.

For the second straight game, North started fast. The Red Raiders jumped on Braintree, 16-4 and they rattled off the first 11 points of the game against Newton. This was basketball for the purist. The ball moved. The Red Raiders popped it around the perimeter for clean looks and feeds down to the bucket for layups. They drained jumpers and made passes which should be frozen in a time capsule. It was a beautiful thing to see.

"We came out and attacked with our offense. We passed it so well it open up everything for us," said Barrett.

Dan Gould hit two threes, Pat Gould had a jumper and a drive. McClendon slashed to the bucket. Butka had six. He hit two drives. He finished a passing gem from McClendon at the top of the key to a flying Pat Gould along the right wing to Butka for the layup which looked like they were playing basketball with the ball tied to a string. At one point in the first, the Red Raiders were up 14, 19-5.

"The big lead was huge because we knew they could put up 15 straight at any time," said Gould.

North was ahead 19-11 after one, 30-22 at the half, and 39-33 after three. The defense, which yielded 44, 42, and 47 points in the first three tourney games, was the rock for North again. North sets a goal of 48 for points allowed every game. Natick, Braintree, and Newton North could not touch it.

"We're no mystery. For us, it all starts with the defense," said Barrett.

When it was over, Dan Gould stood among a crowd of reporters, microphones, TV cameras and recorders. He was asked his reaction to those who said "Little North Quincy didn't have a chance to make the sectionals finals."

"We knew we'd be here," said Gould and he said it firmly.

Red Raiders Bond During Tournament Time

By BILL GRIFFIN

One of the best parts of a tournament run is watching a team come closer together. Off the court there are laughs, highlights on television, and memories will be shared and last for a lifetime.

On the court, five become one. The whole is greater than the sum of the parts. The team is better than the combination of the individual talents. Why? The thrill of the ride brings them closer. They form an unseen sense of where each other is and what each other needs. They trust and help each other, they give the team what it needs, they play as if they have been joined together since pre-school.

"I'll go to war with the Goulds (Pat and Dan), Anthony (Green), Marquis (McClendon), and Efthim (Butka) any day. They have come together and it's something special," said coach Kevin Barrett after his club edged Newton North, 51-47 in the sectional semifinals last week.

Let's start with McClendon. North must have man-to-man defense. Without it, they have nothing. McClendon strung together two defensive performances against Braintree and Newton which will not soon be matched. Against Braintree, he shut out Steve Murphy who had ended BC High's season with 26 points. He didn't limit him. He gave no points. The next time a team's top scorer is shut out in the second round of a state tournament, goats will fly.

He may have topped himself against Newton North. He guarded Newton's top scorer Korey Mui. He gave away five inches. In the first half, Mui did not score. Through three periods, Mui scored one point.

In the fourth period, Barrett switched McClendon to Liam Bruno, a brute of a 6'3" guard who bruised North for 10 through three periods and finished Taunton in the second round with 26, 17 in the second half. In the fourth period, he did not score, he had trouble pushing a drive past the foul line. McClendon, giving away five inches and 40 pounds, did not give Bruno one good look. Not one.

"That's Marquis when he is lockdown mode," said Barrett. "He's quick, strong, and he has anticipation on defense you can't teach."

Add it up. He gave Murphy no points. He gave Mui and Bruno a total of one point. These are three of the best scorers in the sectional. In two games, Marquis McClendon gave them one point. Why the unending effort it takes to play defense? It is what his team needs. The whole is more important than any one part.

"I just want this to last a little longer. I just want to spend more time with my friends," he said.

Next there is Anthony Green. He had 16 blocks in two games. He changed about 25 shots. There were hints of this all season, but it has all blossomed for the

TREATING PREGNANCY SCIATICA

If there is any patient who may benefit from chiropractic treatment it is the person unaccustomed to carrying 30 or so extra pounds of weight (primarily in her midsection) over a nine-month period. As a pregnant woman's uterus expands, pressure may be exerted on the lower spine, resulting in lower-back and leg pain. The sciatic nerve, which runs under the uterus to the legs, is most vulnerable to pressure during the third trimester as the baby begins to shift into the proper birth position. Resting directly on the nerve, the baby may cause impingement, which may result in intermittent or constant pain in the back, buttocks, and legs. Chiropractic treatment can help by relieving pressure on the sciatic nerve.

Today's column has been brought to you as a public service. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we feel periodic checks by your doctor of chiropractic can help identify problems and treat the cause, not just the symptoms. Through the use of conservative, safe, non-surgical, drug-free chiropractic, we can provide solutions from acute symptomatic relief to wellness care throughout your pregnancy. We're currently accepting new patients and ask you to please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment and start feeling better. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. We offer computerized spinal scans. We can adjust the patient sitting and standing. Also, we have a high success rate of turning breeched babies, safely and painfree. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

P.S. To relieve painful pressure on the sciatic nerve, women might try lying on the side opposite the pain and doing some pelvic tilts (after first checking with their doctors).

NQ Hockey Turned Up The Intensity At Tourney Time

By BILL GRIFFIN

For North Quincy's hockey team, the ending came suddenly, by the slimmest of margins and without the sense of closure that should accompany the finish of a season.

Mansfield eliminated the Red Raiders, 2-1 in a shootout in the second round of the state tourney. Last year, North Quincy edged Canton in a shootout in the second round of the state tournament.

Coach Matt Gibbons is perfectly consistent on the subject of shootouts. He doesn't like them when he wins and he doesn't like them he loses. By any standard, it is a terrible way to decide not just one game, but an entire season.

"Even when we beat Canton, it didn't feel like we beat them. It felt like we escaped," said Gibbons. "I know it's exciting and it's the same for everyone. I just don't think it's the right way to end a tournament hockey game."

Think about it. The NHL uses the shootout, but in the regular season, not in the playoffs. In the NCAA tournament, teams play until someone wins on a regulation goal. However, in high school, months, years, daily practices, summer workouts, a season, a career are decided by something that is not a hockey play.

Pick five shooters. Give them the puck. Let them take aim. And that decides an entire year? Something is not right here.

"There were a lot more shootouts this year, so I think there might be some push back from the coaches," said Gibbons. "By the time teams go to a shootout, everybody is tired. Someone is going to make a mistake and someone is going to score a regulation goal."

Mansfield won the shootout, 2-1. Timmy Glynn scored for North. Senior defenseman Rudy Tryon skated in, deked out the goalie, the puck hopped a bit and he hit the post. A patch of bad ice? A post? Season over? It would seem possible to do better.

"They don't make new ice for the shootout, so you're dealing with same ice. The puck can take a funny bounce," said Gibbons.

North finished the season at 9-9-4. The highlight of the regular season was winning the Christmas Tourney. It was an uneven season with injuries and absences which hurt North up front. However, the main measuring stick North uses is the tournament, and Gibbons felt his team did just fine in the post-season.

"I couldn't be prouder of them for the way they played in the tourney," said Gibbons whose team has made the tourney four of the last five years. "I've never seen a team turn up the intensity for the tourney so quickly and so well. These kids know what a tournament hockey game is all about and they showed it."

Shawn Grady returned from a shoulder injury, which sidelined him for all but six games, and had two assists in the upset of Sandwich in the first round. He narrowly missed a goal in the second period which would have put North up, 2-0 on Mansfield. Andrew Currie created scoring chances. The second line of Timmy Glynn, Nick McGaughey and John Ross McEvelly had a terrific tournament. Pat Verhault flew all over the ice for two games.

North scored first in the second period against Mansfield who eliminated the Red Raiders a year ago. Mansfield tied it 5:00 into the third, and it was North's defense and goalie Nolan Greene who forced the overtime.

"Josh Hayward, Ryan Martin and Brendan Brady played great on defense," said Gibbons. "Hayward must have blocked 10 shots. Ryan Martin saved sure goals with good checks in front of the net. Nolan was unbelievable for us"

The best story of the season was Greene, who in one year went from the bench to the best goalie in the league. His goals against average for the season was under one goal. To a man, opposing coaches named him as the best goalie they had faced all season. He was spectacular when he needed to be, but what impressed Gibbons most was Greene's consistency and his work ethic.

"We looked back and tried to find a bad game he had. We couldn't find one. I've never seen a goalie who didn't play at least one bad one, but Nolan didn't," said Gibbons. "It shows what work will do. He worked all summer. He works preparing himself for each game. He'll play college hockey some day and it's because of the work he's put in."

Gibbons had a high praise for the work and leadership of Ryan Martin and Hayward who had a fine season as North's second pairing on defense.

"Hayward plays at 1000 miles and hour and Ryan really emerged this year. They played every other shift," said Gibbons. "They're good kids and they were good leaders for us."

North loses 11 seniors and the Red Raiders will be hit hard on defense with the departure of Martin, Hayward, Brady, and Tryon. This was a strength for North all season. The Red Raiders only gave up 37 goals in 20 games.

"The biggest challenge will be piecing together a defense," said Gibbons.

However, there is quality coming back. Greene is back. Freshman Matt McDonald, who scored his first goal against Mansfield, and sophomore Matt Monahan gained experience on defense.

There is a core of good forwards back led by Glynn, Currie, McEvelly, Robbie Cameron, James Doherty, Brendan Cox, Mike Finn, and Sean Farnham.

"Our goals will be the same as this year," said Gibbons. "We want to be a team that's tough to play, we want to make the tourney and advance when we get there."

6'7" junior center in the tournament and the truth is, North would not be here without him.

"He changes the whole game with his defense," said Dan Gould.

The great Bill Russell once said: block shots in the first and fourth periods. Block them in the first to make shooters think twice all night, block them in the fourth to win the game. Green had a rejection on the first play of the game. He had three blocks in North's 19-5 opening burst. In the fourth he put a lid on a basket. If Newton North was going to win, the Tigers would win with jump shots not drives. That changes the whole game.

"I want to rest him, but I can't take him out of the game," said Barrett.

There is Efthim Butka. His night on center stage was a 16-point, 16-rebound production against Natick, but he has also been invaluable in the Braintree and Natick games. He has worked inside for his points, but more importantly, he has rebounded. He had 34 rebounds in three games. Why so important? When the Red Raiders get any kind of even break rebounding, they usually win. There were some issues with offensive rebounds against Natick, fewer against Braintree, and Butka and Green swept clean the defensive glass against Newton North.

"The key for us the whole season has been defensive rebounding. Anthony and Efthim gave it to us tonight," said Danny Gould.

What about Danny Gould? He had 51 points in two games against Braintree and Newton. He started North on an opening blitz in each game with his three-point howitzers and ended each game with flawless, clutch free throws. He plays hard on defense, shares the ball, and is unselfish to a fault for shooters. Most shooters are looking to launch. Gould is looking to win.

"Sometimes I wish he would take a bad shot, just so he'd shoot more," said Barrett.

There is Pat Gould. Start with defense. He limited Natick's Alex Hilger to 13 and made Newton's bomber Tommy Mobley sweat for each one of his 18. He can score. Witness his 26 against Scituate when his brother was out with an ankle injury.

Mostly, he takes care of the ball. It is impossible to win in the tourney with a point guard who gives up the ball. With Pat Gould, it is extremely difficult to press North. That's one big weapon out of an opponents' arsenal. The Red Raiders get the ball inbounds, bounce it back to Pat Gould, and that is it. There are no 10-second violations, few turnovers. Not only does he protect the ball, he gets North into its offense.

"Think of all we ask of Pat. Guard a top scorer, take care of the ball, start our offense, hit his shot. It's a lot," said Barrett.

How does it all fit together? Because Green can guard the basket, North's perimeter defense can be more aggressive with less worry of penetration. Because Green and Butka can work the boards, North can run. Because Pat and Dan Gould are so unselfish, everybody gets touches, everybody gets a chance to score.

"Anthony starts it because he lets us get right up on our men on defense. From there, we all fit together," said Dan Gould.

Tips For Making Home Repairs

In 2012, home builders, roofing contractors, construction and remodeling services, plumbers and general contractors made the top 10 list of most inquired about industries.

Before selecting your next contractor, BBB offers the following advice to homeowners:

- Use BBB.org to find trustworthy businesses. Start your search with BBB Accredited Contractors in your area. If you are referred to a business through friends, family or an advertisement, verify the business is in good standing at bbb.org before contacting them.

- Compare costs. Get at least three bids from prospective contractors based on the same specifications, materials, labor and time needed to complete the project. BBB's Request-a-Quote service is free to use and will allow BBB Accredited Businesses to send you quotes via email. Understand variations in price may be associated with higher quality of materials.

- Call for references. Ask all contractors to provide local references and find out if those customers were satisfied with the work performed. If possible, visit a completed project to inspect the quality of the workmanship.

- Check licensing.
- Beware of high up-front fees. Contractors may require a down payment before work begins, but it should not be a significant portion of the total cost. Instead, make payments that align with the progress of the work completed. Make sure you are satisfied with the work before making a final payment.

- Review your contract thoroughly. Make sure it includes all the materials needed to complete the job, an itemized list of all costs involved, any subcontracted labor and a warranty for all work performed.

- Verify insurance coverage. Find out if the company is insured against claims covering worker's compensation, property damage and personal liability in case of accidents. Verify coverage directly with the business' insurance company if possible. If you've decided it's time to give your home a facelift, or if you are just in need of repairs, Better Business Bureau bbb.org can help you find a trustworthy contractor.

Shingles Are Least Of Roof's Problems

This Is A Hammer By Samantha Mazzotta

Q: My dad is pretty stubborn about doing home repairs himself. A couple days ago, however, I found out that his roof has some serious problems. He's been patching up leaks in the roof by just slapping a couple of shingles over problem spots as they crop up. Yesterday he called and said when he tried to spot-shingle yet another leaky section, his hand went right through the roof. When I went into the attic to check it out, I found that the sheathing is mostly rotted. What are his options? He's on a fixed income, and this repair looks expensive. -- Rick in Portsmouth, N.H.

A: Unfortunately, it sounds like an expensive repair. The rotted sheathing will need to be removed and replaced, and if the damage is extensive, a complete roof replacement may be needed.

The first step is to contact a roof inspector or roofing contractor to view the damage and to look for additional problems in the roof structure. While you're waiting for the inspection, protect the interior of the house from potential water damage while you and your dad figure this out. Working from the attic for safety, affix a lightweight sheet of plywood against the hole your dad accidentally punched in the roof, using screws rather than nails to try and hold the plywood against the weakened sheathing. Keep in mind that this is not a long-term fix, but a temporary solution to keep rainwater out for a few days until stronger protection measures can be put in place.

Get a written report of the extent of damage from the inspector or contractor. If the contractor wants to repair the roof, ask for a written estimate. It's a good idea to call in two or three contractors and get written estimates from each before deciding whom to hire.

Paying for the repair is another hurdle. Check your dad's home insurance -- does it cover roof replacement, and under what circumstances? Also check local and state assistance programs for the elderly to see what, if any, financial help or discounts are available.

Some federal agencies offer assistance for home repairs. The U.S. Department of Agriculture, for example, has a program that provides loans or grants to rural homeowners with very low incomes. The Department of Energy offers some funds under a program to help homeowners weatherize their houses.

HOME TIP: Inspect your roof regularly for minor damage and tackle torn shingles and small leaks as soon as possible to prevent more extensive damage from occurring over time.

On Friday, March 1, Community Policing Officers Sean Glennon and Greg Mar were conducting surveillance in Squantum due to daytime housebreaks over the past few months. At approximately 3:41 p.m., a citizen called the Quincy Police Department to report two suspicious males walking in and out of driveways in the area of Pratt Road. The caller added that both suspects were wearing backpacks.

Due to the increased likelihood that a break could occur, the two officers responded to the area, along with Officers Jim Sullivan, Ron McKim, and Sgt. Dan Flaherty. Upon arrival, Officer Glennon found a male on Pratt Road and stopped him. Officer Glennon recognized the male as a person of interest in past breaks. When asked where he was headed, the male (suspect #1) said he was going to see his friend. When asked if he had been walking in the area checking out houses, suspect #1 said he was in the area with another named male and they had stopped to say hello to a friend's mother. This second male (suspect #2) identified by suspect #1 is also a person of interest in the breaks.

Suspect #1 denied any wrongdoing and he was sent on his way. Officers Glennon and Mar decided to keep suspect #1 under surveillance. It should be noted that suspect #1, suspect #2, and the friend that suspect #1 was going to visit are all known narcotics abusers.

At approximately 5 p.m. Officers Glennon and Mar observed a green Chrysler minivan pull up in front of suspect #1's residence. At that time, Officer Mar observed a dark skinned Hispanic male exit the van and enter suspect #1's residence and quickly return to the van (less than 30 seconds.) Officer Mar alerted Officer Glennon that the van was on the move, on Huckins Avenue. Through training and experience, officers know that street level narcotics distribution in the City of Quincy often occurs as the user calls for a purchase and a residential drop off is arranged. The courier will then arrive at the residence, enter the home, make his exchange and re-enter the vehicle and continue on, often in under a minutes time.

Officer Glennon pulled two vehicles behind suspect #1's van and watches as the van, approaching the intersection at Huckins Avenue roll through the stop sign, failing to come to a complete stop prior to entering the intersection. Officer Glennon observed the van turn left onto the causeway, heading out of Squantum. As the van approached Victory Road, Officer Glennon activated his emergency lights, passed safely around the vehicle in front of him, and attempted to pull over the van. The van slowed down and suddenly drifted to the right. The van then traveled approximately 50-75 yards before pulling over. It should be noted that the van had no other vehicles in front of it and ample room to pull to the side of the road but continued at a slow pace.

Officer Glennon knew that this was not common for a routine traffic stop. It is common, however, when someone is attempting to destroy or secrete contraband or evidence of criminal activity. As Officer Glennon approached the driver's side door, he observed the sole operator/suspect #3 making a swallowing gesture with his mouth and throat. Inside the van on the center console was a plastic drinking cup, bottle of water, and bottle of Coke. This behavior, coupled with the elongated stop, cup and beverages, and the quick visit at suspect #1's house led the officer to believe the operator/suspect #3 was swallowing narcotics. This is a common technique used by drug couriers to destroy narcotics evidence in an attempt to avoid arrest.

Officer Glennon opened the door and led suspect #3 out of the vehicle where he checked his mouth for contraband with negative results. The officer repeatedly asked suspect #3 "what did you swallow?" to which his only reply was "no English, no English." Officer Glennon then pat frisked suspect #3 for officer safety with negative results. Suspect #3 provided his license and the van's registration, which indicated that the van was a rental.

Officer Mike Kelly arrived on scene as back up and then Officer Glennon requested a narcotics K-9 unit to either confirm or refute his suspicion of a drug violation. A check with Thrifty Car Rental of Lawrence provided the name of an entirely different person, but the rental agreement allowed for any licensed driver over 21 to operate the vehicle. Officer Glennon contacted detectives in the Quincy Police Drug Control Unit (DCU) and learned that a citizen had complained about the same van in Squantum. The complaint stated that a Hispanic male who has been operating a green minivan has been making daily drop offs.

Braintree Police Officer Seibert and his K-9 partner Lucky arrived on scene and conducted a search of suspect #3. Lucky alerted the officers to suspect #3's front left pants pocket. Although the drugs were no longer in that pocket, there was $304. Officer Seibert then deployed Lucky into the vehicle where he positively responded around to the rear passenger's side, front seat, and rear cargo area. Officer Mar then entered the vehicle and conducted a search of that area, where he discovered a "hide a key" container which contained nine bags of heroin. At this time, suspect #3 was placed under arrest. The nine plastic bags of heroin were seized as evidence as was a T-Mobile cellular telephone and a Tom Tom GPS. It is believed that the cell phone and GPS were used to facilitate drug sales.

Suspect #3, a 24-year old Brockton resident, was charged with "possession of Class A (heroin) with intent to distribute, possession of a controlled substance within 1,000 feet of a school, and stop sign violation." Nice Work!

In this case, it was the combined proactive efforts of the Quincy Police Department and the citizens of Squantum who helped not only catch this drug dealer, but assist in establishing additional information about other suspects. City Councillor Brian McNamee, through Police/community meetings and website updates, was very influential in this success. Since our last meetings, numerous trips and reports of suspicious activity have helped keep Squantum safe!

RULES OF THE ROAD: Crossing Guards

In recent years several crossing guards, protecting students in Massachusetts, have been killed or injured on the job when struck by vehicles. As a driver, you should look for warning signs that crossing guards and children may be in the road and be prepared to stop. Crossing guards depend on drivers to be aware and obey their signals. Use caution when you see the following signs:

Crosswalks/Pedestrian Crossing Signs - these will be white crosswalks painted on the street. There may be pedestrian crossing signs placed in the middle or the side of the road along with signs posted on nearby poles. If there is a school crossing sign, expect a crossing guard to be in the area.

Reflective Vest - crossing guards wear brightly colored and highly reflective clothing so they will be highly visible.

Stop Paddles - These are handheld stop signs that crossing guards hold up while walking out into the street to warn drivers of children crossing.

Norma Wismar, 93
Homemaker, Worked In Banking Industry

Services for Norma Meta Adela Just Wismar, age 93, of Quincy, were held March 9th at Wollaston Lutheran Church, 550 Hancock St.

Mrs. Wismar died March 6 at the John Adams Health Center in Quincy.

She was born Nov. 26, 1919 to Arthur and Concordia (Schaefer) Just as the middle child in her family in Providence, RI. She enjoyed reminiscing about helping her father in his house building endeavors and spending time with her grandparents, all of whom lived in her home town.

An apt student, she attended public schools in Providence and graduated from Central High School in 1936, having been voted "Miss Central" by her classmates. Secretarial studies at Bryant College led her to employment in the banking industry in Providence.

One of her favorite stories was telling of how she escaped the inundation of the city center of Providence during the Great Storm of 1938.

Mrs. Wismar's public working career ended when she married the love of her life, Adolph Wismar, on Aug. 1, 1942. Their first home as newlyweds was in the parsonage of St. John's Lutheran Church in Hoboken, New Jersey, where the young Pastor Wismar was serving his first call as a Lutheran pastor.

The next years of her life would be devoted to her husband and children. Two sons were born to Norma and Adolph while living in Hoboken - Adolph Harold, Jr., in 1943 and Gregory Just in 1946. In the years that followed, Adolph's church career would take the family to Peekskill, New York, Meriden, Connecticut, and Akron, Ohio. In each setting, Norma found ways to support the life of the local congregation, whether through leading Sunday School sessions, participating in women's activities or by singing in the choir, which she greatly enjoyed.

Mrs. Wismar's personal

warmth and diverse capabilities brought care and help to many people through the years. In 1968 and 1969, her family expanded as two daughters-in-law were added to the family circle as Adolph, Jr. (Bus) married Barbara Fulling in New York City and Greg married Priscilla Ames in Akron. Before long, Norma was the grandmother of seven grandchildren. She had come into what became in many ways the favorite role of her life, being a grandmother. She is survived by grandchildren Timothy (Eliane) Wismar, Eric (Miharu) Wismar, Sarah (Mark) Nace, Kathryn (Aaron) Burke, Elizabeth (Hugo) Rojas, Julie (Rob) Blaikie and Jessica Wismar (Kelly Burger).

Opening her home to her grandkids and spending extended periods of time with them at her summer residence in Connecticut each year was a favorite activity, one she happily continued even after the death of her husband Adolph in 1979.

In the winter season each year for decades, she was in residence in Florida with her older sister Connie Smith, who survives her. In her later years Norma joyfully noted the arrival of each great-grandchild, of which there are now 20—seven girls and 13 boys.

A woman of solid Christian faith, practical wisdom and limitless hospitality, Mrs. Wismar found contentment in her life and leaves behind a legacy of lasting love and the fondest of memories to her family and friends.

A springtime commitment service will be held at Grassy Hill Cemetery in Falls Village, CT on Memorial Day weekend.

LEGAL NOTICE

CITY OF QUINCY, MASSACHUSETTS
Mayor James R. McIntyre City Hall
1305 Hancock Street
Quincy, Massachusetts 02169

2013-034

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Quincy that the Municipal Code is amended as follows:

That the Zoning Ordinance be amended by creating a new category:

6.9.1 Moratorium-Medical Marijuana Treatment Centers

6.9.2 Purpose

The Massachusetts Medical Marijuana Initiative, also known as Ballot Question Three, was approved by voters at the Massachusetts State Election on November 6, 2012. The law regulates the cultivation, distribution, possession, and use of marijuana for medical purposes. The law became effective on January 1, 2013 and the State Department of Public Health is directed to promulgate regulations regarding implementation of the law within 120 days after the law's effective date.

Under the City of Quincy current Zoning Ordinance, a medical marijuana treatment center is not defined and is not a permitted use in the City. The Department of Public Health regulations should provide guidance to communities regulating medical marijuana treatment centers at the local level. As this is a new type of land use in the state, there will be unique and new aspects to the use that could require oversight and regulations. These local impacts, which could be legal, land use, public safety, and public health should be evaluated and addresses in a comprehensive manner in the Zoning Ordinance prior to the permitting of a medical marijuana treatment center. The moratorium, of a finite duration, will allow the City to carefully study the potential impacts, both primary and secondary, of such centers and, through a directed planning process and recommend zoning ordinance amendments to address the city's concerns in the context of the planning goals and objectives.

6.9.3 Definition

"Medical Marijuana Treatment Center" shall mean a "not-for-profit entity", as directed by Massachusetts law only, registered by the Department of Public Health, that acquires, cultivates, possesses, processes (including development of related products such as food, tinctures, aerosols, oil or ointments), transfer, transports, sells, distributes, dispenses, or administers marijuana, products containing marijuana, related supplies, or educational materials to qualifying patients or their personal caregivers."

6.9.4 Establishment and Durations

- A. No building permit, special permit, variance, site plan or other permit may be issued under this zoning ordinance, and no use of land or structures shall be allowed for the purpose of establishing a medical marijuana treatment center or associated activities.
- B. The moratorium shall be effect through and including December 1, 2013, or for a period of nine (9) months from passage of this ordinance amendment or until such time as zoning amendments are adopted that address medical marijuana treatment centers and associated activities, whichever shall be sooner.

6.9.5 Applicability

This ordinance shall be effective in all zoning districts in the city.

7,000 Celebrate Lunar New Year

as her young ones watched a martial arts performance with awe. "It's a great experience for the kids and we come to the August Moon Festival as well because it's such a great representation of the ethnic diversity we have here in Quincy which we are so very fortunate to have."

Before festival-goers made their way through the gymnasium lined with vendors' stalls, or upstairs to participate in kids' activities such as a scavenger hunt, Mayor Thomas Koch addressed the crowd and offered his well wishes for a happy and prosperous new year.

"Thank you to all the volunteers and participants today; our sponsors who make this all possible," he said. "It's a great day for the Asian community and a great day for the community of Quincy and a great day for the Commonwealth. We in Quincy show the rest of the world how we do it, coming together as a community and supporting one another."

State Rep. Tackey Chan of Quincy, one of the first Asian Americans to be elected to the House, was happy to see such a tremendous turnout despite the date change due to inclement weather.

"It's great to see such a large crowd here given the change of date and the change of weather, and our hard working volunteers and Quincy Asian Resources, and of course with the work by the school department and the City of Quincy," LEONA DICKERSON, 2, enjoys the festivities in a traditional Chinese dress.

said Chan.

Quincy Asian Resources, headed by Executive Director John Brothers since 2004, provides Asian American members of the Quincy community with services such as academic mentoring, English classes, free legal clinics assisting with immigration and U.S. citizenship, and a scholarship program.

"We're really happy. Look at how many people are here!" said Brothers, who anticipated at least 8,000 people would show up for the celebration.

He went on to praise the volunteers, who could be seen walking throughout the school assisting and directing performers and spectators alike. "We have over 200 volunteers and they do so many things here," he said. "One of the things we focus on is matching up the volunteer with their passion and interest, and so many people are passionate about what we're doing here that it's not hard."

Preparations for the Lunar New Year celebration begin well beforehand. "We start preparing a year in advance," he said. "First step is setting a date."

"For 25 years now, this is a testament to how the Asian community in Quincy has grown and become such a part of the fabric of Quincy, and it also is an enormous source of pride for Asian members of the community to be able to share their culture and their art with everybody here in Quincy, so it builds bridges," said Brothers, who emphasized the importance of unifying a community through cultural understanding and acceptance.

"This is a great event that brings together everybody in Quincy."

Council OKs Deferment Of $2.3 Million Until Beal/Street-Works Closes On Ross Garage

Affordable Housing Trust Fund To Receive $700K From Developer

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy's Affordable Housing Trust Fund is set to receive $700,000 when developer Beal/Street-Works receives building permits for its Merchants Row project.

Under the land disposition agreement (LDA) between the city and the developer, Beal/Street-Works must pay $10,000 into the fund for every new unit of housing it will create at the time building permits are issued. Merchants Row, also known as Block 4, contains 306 housing units, meaning the developer will end up paying more than $3 million into the trust fund for that project alone.

Rev. Corea's connection with the church started in September of 1947, when her late husband Peter was asked to serve as a guest pastor - he was ordained as the church's full-time pastor in December of that year. Rev. Corea was still in seminary school at Andover-New-

Local Catholics Rejoice Election Of Pope Francis

By SCOTT JACKSON

Local leaders of the Catholic Church are excited about the election of Pope Francis, and believe he will be able to bring a new perspective to the Vatican.

The College of Cardinals elected the new pope last Wednesday in the second day of voting in the papal conclave. The 76-year old, formerly Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio of Buenos Aires, Argentina, is the first Latin American to serve as head of the Catholic Church and is the first pope born outside Europe since the eighth century. Robert P. Deeley, auxiliary bishop and vicar general moderator of the Curia for the Archdiocese of Boston said the conclave was a success because of whom the cardinals elected.

"I think it's an extraordinary process which was very successful in that the cardinals met, talked, prayed, and picked a candidate who is very thoughtful and very prayerful," said Deeley, who previously served as pastor at Saint Ann Parish in Wollaston.

Rev. Peter Casey, pastor at Saint Agatha Parish, had been watching televised coverage of the conclave. He was excited to see white smoke appear over the Sistine Chapel, signaling that a new pope had been elected, and even more excited when the new pope was introduced to the large crowd gathered in Saint Peter's Square.

"My first reaction was wow!" Casey said. "I just shared in the excitement."

Francis replaces Benedict XVI, who retired at the end of February. When Benedict, formerly Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, was elected pope in 2005 Deeley was working in the Vatican in the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith under Ratzinger. Bergoglio attended that conclave, and took a bus between the hotel he stayed at in Rome and the Vatican - an act he repeated this year that didn't go unnoticed at the time.

"It's quite remarkable that he took a bus to the Vatican," Deeley said. "His humility and concern for others was noted at the time."

Casey said Bergoglio's sense of humility was shown by his choice of Francis as his papal name. The new pope took that name to honor Saint Francis of Assisi, who renounced his wealth and chose to preach while living in poverty.

"If that's his model - great," Casey said Francis' choice of name. "He just seems like a very humble, very spiritual man."

As Archbishop of Buenos Aires, Bergoglio was known for taking public transportation. He also lived in small apartment instead of the archdiocese's suburban estate, and cooked his own meals. Rev. Bob Carr, the pastor at Holy Trinity Parish, noted that Francis of Assisi was called on to make changes to the Church, and said that desire could be reflected by the new pope's choice of name.

Carr, who works in the Latino community here in the U.S. and through a communications ministry, also explained there is a different style between European pastors and ones from Latin America. European pastors are more strict and authoritative, while Latin American ones are more open and expressive.

"Latinos tend to be more open with speaking, very expressive. It's a different style," Carr said.

Members of the Latino community are very excited to see one of their own elected pope, according to Carr. He was also happy, because of the different perspective a pope from the Americas would bring.

"I'm happy because he's an American, all Americans think differently than Europeans," Carr said.

Deeley said that new perspective is a good thing. He noted that attendance in Catholic Churches has fallen in most Europe, while in Latin America it has flourished.

"I think it's a good thing because he'll have another perspective. In Europe the Catholic Church, the Christian faith, is tired. In Italy there's still vibrancy but in other countries that's not the case," Deeley said. "In Latin America we have a vibrant church."

In addition to being the first pope from Latin America, Francis is also the first Jesuit to serve as head of the Catholic Church. The Jesuits, formally the Society of Jesus, a religious order known mainly for their work education - Boston College and Georgetown University are two of the schools they founded.

"The Jesuit background says loudly and clearly he's a teacher," Casey said.

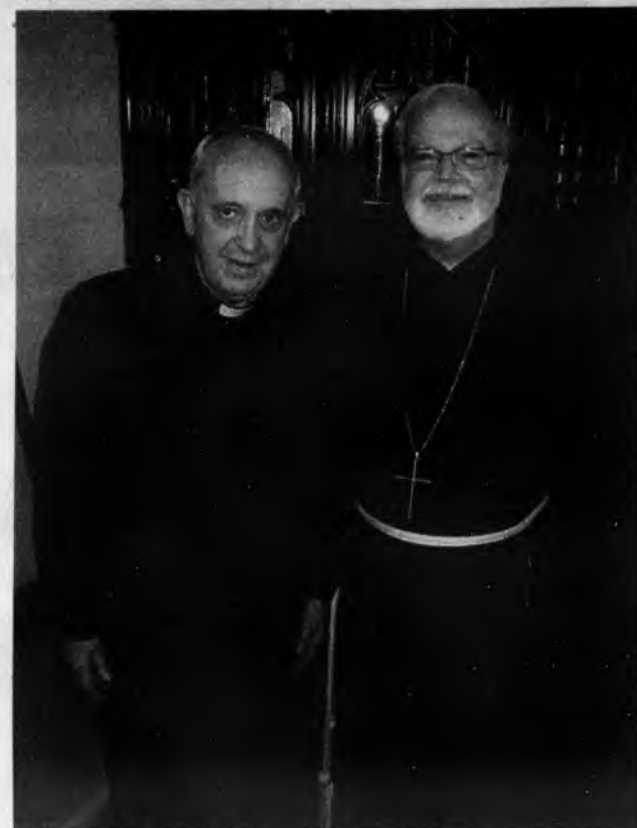

The Jesuits have one of the lengthiest training periods of any religious order, requiring at least two degrees in theological studies; in addition to those two in theology, Bergoglio earned a degree in chemistry. Deeley said the training required of Jesuits will serve the new pope well.

"He would be well prepared for life through his Jesuit training," Deeley said. "The rigorous intellectual and spiritual training will be helpful."

Carr said the selection of a Jesuit as pope is significant, but said it's too early to know what that will mean for the Church.

"I think it's very significant. How it's significant will have to play out," Carr said.

In the days leading up to the conclave, there was much speculation that Cardinal Sean O'Malley, the archbishop of Boston, was considered a candidate, if not the front-runner, for the papacy. While many believed the United States' position as a world power would prevent a U.S. citizen from becoming pope, Deeley said O'Malley met all the criteria the cardinals would be looking for in their choice for pope.

CARDINAL JORGE MARIO BERGOGLIO (left) met Boston Archbishop Cardinal Sean O'Malley during O'Malley's visit to Buenos Aires in December of 2010. O'Malley had been considered a front-runner for the papacy by some in the Italian press before Bergoglio was elected pope by the College of Cardinals last week, taking the name Pope Francis.

"I feel the notion of having someone from the U.S. as pope has generally been seen as something that's not going to happen for a while," Deeley explained. "That being said, Cardinal Sean had those gifts they were looking for. I'm sure he was in consideration of the cardinals."

"We may never find out if he was a runner-up, but I think he had a shot," Carr added.

Leaders of the Catholic Church aren't the only ones excited about the new pope. Mayor Tom Koch, a parishioner at Sacred Heart Church, said he was delighted with the selection of Bergoglio.

"As a Roman Catholic, I am delighted with the selection; it appears the Holy Spirit was truly present at the conclave," the mayor said. "Pope Francis is a man of great intellect, but also one who understands the needs of God's people. His choice of Pope Francis speaks volumes, for Saint Francis was called by God to rebuild his Church. My prayers are with him as he assumes the role as successor to Peter."

$700K For Affordable Housing Fund

The trust fund will only receive $700,000 when the Merchants Row permits are issued because the City Council voted 8-0 Monday night to defer the rest of the payment until the developer closes on the Ross Garage, which is expected to happen this fall. Assistant City Solicitor Paul Hines asked the council to defer the bulk of the payment because the new Block 4 plan includes more than four times as many units than originally planned – 306 compared to 70 – and will be the first phase of downtown development, with construction expected to start next month when work in the area was originally scheduled for 2018 or later.

"Under the original proposal it was originally 70 units at $10,000 a unit as provided for in the LDA, that would be a $700,000 payment to the city's affordable housing trust fund which would be anticipated in about five or six years. With the accelerated program, the payments to that fund are going to happen this year," Hines explained. "With the redesign of Merchants Row and a significant increase in housing units, it puts a substantial burden that was not necessarily contemplated at the time we presented Block 4.

"The proposal is that the developers pay the $700,000 that was anticipated for the geography that is Block 4 and pay it at the time of the building permit issuance. Again it will be paid this year and not five years out. We defer the additional $2.3 million, because under the new proposal for Block 4 there's approximately 300 housing units so there will be a total of $3 million paid only for Block 4 to the Affordable Housing Trust Fund. The additional $2.3 million windfall for the additional housing unit payments to the trust fund, ones that were not anticipated, will be happening at the time of the purchase of the Ross Garage."

Hines added that the Affordable Housing Trust Fund Committee had unanimously approved deferring $2.3 million of the payment.

Before the vote Councilor Doug Gutro, chairman of the council's downtown committee, endorsed the deferral, saying all it would do is give the developer more time to pay the money.

"It seems clear to me that this is just an opportunity for Street-Works to essentially buy a little bit of time because there was an unanticipated substantial increase in housing units in Block 4, which by the way is substantially ahead of schedule according to the LDA that we signed off on several years ago," Gutro said. "The fact that Block 4 is moving is great news, the fact that there is substantially more housing units is great news."

GOV. DEVAL PATRICK recently honored 16-year-old Quincy resident Dylan Hughes for helping save the life of his 103-year-old Penn's Hill neighbor during last month's blizzard. "I am deeply humbled by Dylan's courage and deeply encouraged by his example," Gov. Patrick said in presenting a gubernatorial commendation to Hughes at the Governor's Office at the State House. ## Fore River Bridge Project Information Meeting March 26

A public information meeting on the Fore River Bridge Replacement Project will be held Tuesday, March 26 from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the Fore River Clubhouse, 16 Nevada Road, Quincy.

The purpose of this meeting is to provide an overview of the construction plans and traffic impacts for the replacement of the Fore River Bridge, which carries Route 3A over the Fore River between Quincy and Weymouth.

The meeting will also provide residents and other stakeholders within the project area with an opportunity to meet MassDOT's design/build team for the construction phase of the project. Following the presentation, MassDOT staff will lead a discussion to answer questions.

The Fore River Bridge Replacement is part of the $3 billion Patrick-Murray Administration's Accelerated Bridge Program, which restores, repairs or replaces structurally deficient bridges across the Commonwealth. The Fore River Bridge project includes the complete replacement and eventual removal of the existing temporary span. The project, already underway, will run through 2016.

C-Mart Hearing Monday

The City Council, acting as the Special Permit Granting Authority, will hold another public hearing on a proposal to build a C-Mart supermarket in North Quincy next week.

The second public hearing on the proposal is scheduled for Monday, March 25 at 7 p.m. in the auditorium at North Quincy High School, 316 Hancock St. Council President Michael McFarland said he anticipates closing the public comment period after the meeting. The SPGA will meet again on Monday, April 8 at 7 p.m. at City Hall. That meeting will focus on a review of reports by city department heads, consultants, and peer reviewers.

The proposed C-Mart would be located at 10 Hayward St., a site that was formerly home to Boston Gear Works. Under the plan, the supermarket would have 25,000 square-feet of retail space and a 6,400-square-foot warehouse. Developer Michael Fang also plans to use an existing two-story office building on the site as his new C-Mart headquarters. The first public hearing on the plan, held last Monday, was attended by about 400 residents, including 56 who commented on the proposal.

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows – a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized...or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get:
  - > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required
  - > A mortgage with a competitive rate
  - > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home
  - > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity – most likely once-in-a-lifetime – for first-time homebuyers. Is that you...or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

Mike Bellotti: Quincy's Funny Man

His comedy routine starts before he's even on stage. Michael Bellotti, the high sheriff of Norfolk County, is moments away from serving as a master of ceremonies at the City of Quincy's St. Patrick's Day Luncheon at the Quincy Lodge of Elks Tirrell Room.

He's wearing a dark suit with a green vest and matching bow tie. In his hand is an oversized brown envelope containing material that will entertain the capacity crowd.

I stop and ask him if he was the family cut-up when he was young.

Au contraire, he insists.

"I didn't speak until I was six years old. Seriously, I did not speak. I was shy.

"There would be 12 of us at the (dinner) table and I never said a word. My parents didn't even know they had me. It was like a Chinese restaurant. I was number 11."

Mike Bellotti — one of Frank and Maggie Bellotti's 12 kids — could be called Quincy's funny man. If his name is listed as an entertainer at a fundraiser, auction or an event like the St. Patrick's Day luncheon, you know you're in for some laughs.

"I think I have fun with it and people recognize that," Bellotti says about the luncheon. "I try not to over think when I'm speaking in front of a group and try to keep it light in the appropriate setting."

For St. Patrick's Day, he prepares for about 15 hours, gathering material and writing down jokes on oversized index cards. He's a crammer — waiting until a week or so before the event before his prep work goes into over-drive.

"Over the last couple of weeks I'm talking to people, seeing things, writing things down, bouncing material off people. I take all my old notes out from other years and I try not to recycle too much. I go to the Nickerson Post in Quincy and the Alumni Café and I bounce material off of those guys."

Is St. Patrick's Day the highlight of his entertainment calendar?

"I'd call it a lowlight but if you want to call it a highlight, go right ahead," he deadpans. "Seriously, I always look forward to this. It's a little stressful, it kind of ruins your week leading up to St. Patrick's Day because you're a little intense preparing. But it's a great day and I do enjoy it."

Bellotti is a "ready for prime-time player." He is the king of the one-liners, political barbs and good-natured needling at the St. Patrick's Day luncheon. He is as much a part of the tradition of the luncheon — which marked its 18th anniversary last Friday — as the boiled dinner, Guinness beer and some bad jokes offered by some of the comedically-challenged guest speakers.

The "cast of thousands" may change year to year — and there are some regular staples at the event — but you can always count on Mike Bellotti to do his best stand-up in March.

He is, one might say, the straw that stirs Quincy's St. Patrick's Day celebration.

Even before he gets rolling into a monologue laced with jokes and impersonations (a few too R-rated for this family newspaper) he quickly launches into his unique brand of comedy before anyone really knows it.

"I'm going to tell you something that I tell my wife every night," the self-deprecating Bellotti confides to the sold-out audience.

"Don't get your hopes up."

With that, the crowd roared and the comedy is officially underway.

During time on stage, Bellotti will manage to take a humorous swipe after virtually anyone in the public or private sector, including this newspaper and this writer. (If he were Mayor for the Day, Bellotti said he would make me the city's Minister of Propaganda. I laughed because he's funny. Of course I wonder if the gig comes with a pension.)

He also suggested that The Quincy Sun sometimes prints news that's a little stale.

"I saw a birth announcement of a family I knew in The Quincy Sun, so I dropped a gift off at their front door. Later that week, the kid drove over with a 'thank you' note."

So while Bellotti had a little fun at the Sun's expense, his favorite targets remain public officials. While introducing state Treasurer Steve Grossman, Bellotti warned the likely gubernatorial candidate of any potential conflict of interest during his campaign for higher office.

"I would suggest to you that you call Mad Magazine and get your face off their front cover," the sheriff said to the Alfred E. Newmansque Grossman.

That one got a pretty good rise out of the crowd.

Bellotti is at his best when he's unscripted and spontaneous. He can "bail" out a gag or jab when it goes over like a lead balloon. He's there to right the comedy ship when it clearly appears to be going down.

A few more Bellotti one-liners:

• If I Were Mayor for the Day, I'd roll around on my expensive rug and watch the Spice Channel on my big flat screen TV.

• If I were Mayor for the Day, I'd appoint myself Sheriff. Keep both jobs. I have a lot of time.

• Margaret Laforest just got a smart phone. You can tell it's smart. Every time she talks it turns off.

• Tim Cahill gave a kidney to his sister. Steve Lynch gave his liver to his brother-in-law. And Ron Mariano gave half his brain to Speaker Bob DeLeo.

• Steve Grossman is running for governor. You know Steve, state treasurer has been a real springboard to becoming governor," the droll Bellotti says. "I saw him discussing it with Joe Malone, Shannon O'Brien and Tim Cahill in the parking lot of Joe Malone's defunct restaurant."

Bellotti wasn't the only speaker who shot off some amusing lines.

• State Rep. Bruce Ayers: "I was with Mike Bellotti the other night at the Alumni and I am still feeling a little groggy. Mike ordered two beers ... and when they came I raised my glass and said 'what should we drink to?'"

"Mike said, 'Well ... how about 2:30 this morning?'"

• Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci noted he was nervous about attending his pre-school's 30th reunion. "I've put on 100 pounds," he cracked.

This year's event also featured other introductions, highlights and a special remembrance.

Former state treasurer Tim Cahill and two of his former aides — Scott Campbell and Al Grazioso — were introduced by Bellotti and received a rousing round of applause from those gathered.

Philip Keenan, father of Police Chief Paul Keenan, state Sen. John Keenan and Christine Koch, wife of Mayor Thomas Koch, was remembered by his son-in-law and others at the event. Mr. Keenan, a retired newspaper mailer and World War II Navy veteran, died last Wednesday.

"Phil Keenan was a part of that Greatest Generation," the mayor said. "He was so proud of his family and his family's accomplishments. Phil gave away a lot of kindness."

City Clerk Joseph Shea was honored as the "Irishman of the Year." Story and other photos from the event appear on Pages 18 and 19.

Shipyard Workers On Strike

By SCOTT JACKSON

Eighteen hundred members of the Shipbuilding Workers Union Local 5 went on strike after negotiations with shipyard owner General Dynamics came to an impasse.

During negotiations the company offered a 34-cent per hour pay increase for first class mechanics in the first year of the new contract and up to a 90-cent per hour increase in the third year. Local 5 asked for a $1.50 increase plus a 25-cent an hour cost of living adjustment. The rate for first class mechanics at Fore River under the old contract was $4.19.

"We were the lowest paid shipyard in the United States at the termination of the contract," Local 5 President Arthur Batson said. "Their proposal for 34 cents an hour would have only put us ahead of one - Bath, Maine."

There was no word on when negotiations would start again. Batson said the strike would last as long as management wanted it to.

"It's going to last as long as they want it to," he said. "There aren't any negotiations going on now. We told the company we're ready when they're ready. They've been saying all over TV that they're ready but they won't say it to me."

Batson accused General Dynamics of playing games during negotiations, saying they refused to submit their final package until the eleventh hour. The company said they held off on doing so until bargaining took place on other issues, which they called 'productivity improvements.'

TEEN COUNCIL SEEKS HELP FROM PARENTS

The South-West Teen Council blamed juvenile delinquency on a 'clear lack of activities for teenagers.'

The group said there was a clear need for a drop-in center and parents and other adults were needed to help curb delinquency. The group's findings were released in a report prior to a scheduled meeting on the topic.

"Juvenile delinquency can not be curbed without the interested involvement of parents and other adults," the group's report said. "As long as these people can't relate to teenagers and/or don't know or care what teenagers are indulging in, we can not expect to reach our goal."

The report found that the Rent-a-Kid Program had been successful, placing many area teenagers in new jobs. Dances had also been a success, though some teens had abused dances in the past. Movie nights, on the other hand, had been unsuccessful.

SONS OF ITALY CELEBRATE 50TH

The Sons of Italy Quincy Lodge 1295 celebrated their 50th anniversary at a gala with 300 guests in attendance at their new Quarry Street home.

Venerable John Brown, the lodge's 27th venerable, served as keynote speaker for the golden anniversary celebration. He said Gaetano Carpano and his friends who founded the lodge 50 years prior had tremendous pride in their Italian roots.

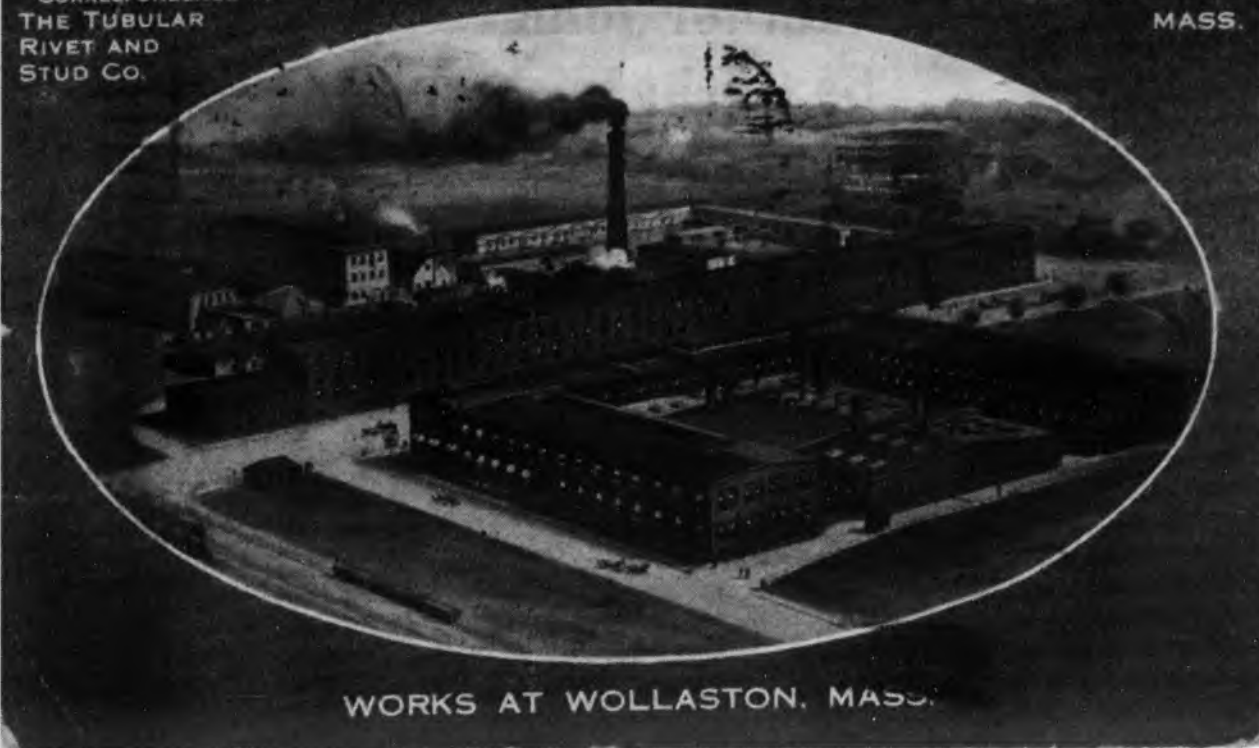

"They had a tremendous amount of pride in their heritage. They had the determination to someday make the Quincy lodge the best in the world. And they had the guts to make decisions and fight for them with all their heart and soul," Brown said.

WORKS AT WOLLASTON, MASS.

THIS POSTCARD dated 1911 was used by the Tubular Rivet and Stud Company of Wollaston to acknowledge orders from their customers. This aerial view of their factory is looking north with Linden Street running across the center and Weston Avenue in the foreground. In later years, more buildings were added here and it became the largest factory of its kind in the world. Here for over 70 years, they made millions upon millions of lacing studs for shoes, boots and women's gloves. Style changes reduced the market for those studs and by World War II they were primarily manufacturing rivets for all types of uses. Over 1,000 workers were employed at its peak. In time, new fastening technologies reduced the use of rivets and the early 1960's the company moved to a smaller building in Braintree. It is now defunct. Some of these Wollaston buildings were sold to the Bargain Center and then to the Boston Gear Works who used them for storage. Today, many of them survive as the Whittemore Mills and Mellon Bray Condominiums. Those names are from the 19th century founders of the company. Long gone, however, are the belching smokestack and the clock-setting noontime whistle that could be heard for miles around Wollaston. ## READERS FORUM

Snow Plowing Not City Hall's Fault

To my good friend, Charles Dennehey, Jr.

I read your readers response in The Quincy Sun, March 14, 2013. You put the blame clearly on City Hall.

Apparently, you didn't see Commissioner Raymond on the local Quincy cable station. Once when he was asked by city councilors and again when he was interviewed by the host of Quincy cable.

The problem with the snow plowing this year was the city negotiated a new contract with a plowing company and unfortunately the new company did not have supervisors following them around making sure they were doing as the city asked.

The previous company did.

I totally agree with you Charles that it was not Commissioner Dan Raymond's fault.

But, neither was it City Hall's fault.

As Commissioner Raymond said in his interview that the new contractor now knows what is expected of them.

Hopefully, we get no more snow.

Author John Kelly To Discuss The Great Irish Famine March 26

It started in 1845 and before it was over more than one million men, women, and children would die and another two million would flee the country. Measured in terms of mortality, the Great Irish Potato Famine was the worst disaster in the 19th century—it claimed twice as many lives as the American Civil War. A perfect storm of bacterial infection, political greed, and religious intolerance sparked this catastrophe. But even more extraordinary than its scope were its political underpinnings.

John Kelly, author of the new book The Graves Are Walking: The Great Fam- ine and the Saga of the Irish People, will discuss this epic tragedy and how it ultimately became an inspiring story of revival for fifty million Americans of Irish heritage. The event will be held on Tuesday, March 26 at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Kelly is the author of the acclaimed bestseller The Great Mortality: An Intimate History of the Black Death, the Most Devastating Plague of All Time and Three on the Edge: The Stories of Ordinary American Families in Search of a Medical Miracle. He has written about medicine, history, and psychology for many years. He lives in New York City and Berkshire County, Massachusetts.

Congressional Art Competition Open

Cong. Stephen F. Lynch announces the opening the Annual Congressional Art Competition open to all high school students who reside in the 8th Congressional District (including Quincy).

The winner will have his or her work displayed in the U.S. Capitol for a full year. Additionally, there will be a reception in Washington, D.C. for all art competition winners and their families to celebrate the opening of the exhibit.

To highlight the talent of art students in the 8th Congressional District, the artwork of all students who enter the competition will be displayed this summer at their local Town Hall or Public Library.

The Annual Congressional Art Competition is now open for submissions, and all entries must be received by Wednesday, April 24. Entries should be sent to Cong. Lynch's Boston District Office and put to the attention of Araba Adjei-Koranteng.

Contact Congressman Lynch's office at (617) 428-2000 or refer to his website, <http://lynch.house.gov>, for more information on the competition.

"I hope that every high school student with a passion for art takes part in this exciting competition," said Cong. Lynch. "Last year, we had dozens of outstanding entries, and I am proud to have the artwork of last year's winner, Josh White of South Easton, representing our District in Washington."

Meet Filmmaker Len Morris At Quincy High School March 22

Award winning filmmaker Len Morris is coming to Quincy High School Friday, March 22, at 7 p.m. to show a clip from his newest child labor documentary "The Same Heart." This event is free and open to the public.

Morris was invited by ODW, a Quincy student group from Quincy High and Broad Meadows Middle School.

Morris will take questions from the public. He will also announce that the charity he co-founded more than a decade ago, The Kenyan School House Project, has been chosen to be the Operation: Day's Work "Charity of the Year."

Operation: Day's Work (ODW for short) is a student run after school program which awards a $10,000 annual grant to an organization which educates poor children in a developing country. Four Massachusetts schools participate in ODW: Quincy High; Broad Meadows Middle; Archbishop Williams High and Silver Lake Regional Middle School. Two Vermont schools, Thetford Academy and the Newton School, also have ODW programs at their schools.

Each school year in the Fall, the ODW member schools nominate organizations to invite to compete for the $10,000 grant. In November, the ODW members debate and vote. One organization is thus chosen as the ODW Charity of the Year. The 2013 ODW Charity of the Year is Len Morris' Kenyan School House Project. In past year's, winning grant proposals were submitted by organizations such as: Partners in Health-Haiti; Goodweave-Nepal; and the American Foundation for Children Affected by AIDS-Zimbabwe. Since its founding, ODW has raised and awarded grants totaling a little over $250,000. As a result, hundreds and hundreds of the poorest of the poor children have received education, health care and a chance at a better, healthier life.

ODW members are in grades 6 through 12. ODW was co-founded 14 years ago by students at the Broad Meadows Middle School and by students at Thetford Academy in Vermont.

ODW invites the public to meet Len Morris at 7 at Quincy High on March 22.

Morris, the Editorial Director of Media Voices for Children, is a journalist, documentary filmmaker, lecturer and advocate for children's human rights. In 2012, he received the Iqbal Masih Award from the U.S. Department of Labor for "extraordinary efforts towards the reduction of the worst forms of child labor."

His background is in producing and directing human rights documentaries. Stolen Childhoods (2004), narrated by Meryl Streep, examined child labor in eight countries and was described by The New York Times as "harrowing but hopeful." Rescuing Emmanuel (2009) dealt with 100 million street children, and The Same Heart (2013) examines global funding shortfalls for poverty programs and their impacts on children.

In addition to the feature documentaries, Morris has produced dozens of short films for Media Voices on topics like human trafficking, domestic labor, and child labor in agriculture, access to education and gender equality. In 2002, he established an educational program for child laborers in Kenya. The Kenyan Schoolhouse has supported hundreds of children, removing them from work on the coffee and tea plantations and sending them to school.

His work has been shown at The U.S. Department of Labor, The World Bank, The U.S. State Department, USAID and on dozens of college campuses. He received the Walter Cronkite Award for his work to end child labor and was the recipient of The Images and Voices of Hope Award for his work on behalf of children's rights.

Morris delivered the Frank Porter Graham Human Rights lecture at The University of North Carolina in 2005. He has also lectured at the David Rockefeller Center for Latin American Studies at Harvard University.

Suzie's Greek Salad Dressing, Nancy's Anchovy Pasta

There are two short delicious recipes today-one is for a fresh homemade Greek salad dressing from my daughter Suzie and the other is a pasta and anchovy recipe from my daughter Nancy.

GREEK SALAD DRESSING

4 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons golden Balsamic vinegar
1 teaspoon lemon zest
1 tablespoon minced fresh oregano
1 tablespoon minced fresh mint
1 garlic clove, minced
1/2 teaspoon organic agave nectar
A pinch of sea salt to taste

Fresh ground pepper to taste

Mix all together and blend well. Place in a container or bottle and refrigerate.

PASTA WITH ANCHOVIES

1 can of anchovies (leave oil in)
2 garlic cloves
3 tablespoons olive oil
1/2 pound angel hair pasta
2 tablespoons fresh parsley
Black pepper

'Peace Field' Slide Presentation At Crane Library Tonight

Explore John and Abigail's beloved farm at an enjoyable illustrated presentation by landscape historian Laurie Ellen Pazzano tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

For 30 years, John and Abigail Adams called an ever-expanding piece of land in Southeastern Massachusetts home. Purchased in the autumn of 1787, John and Abigail renovated and added to their newly named home, Peace Field, bit by bit, piece by piece until at its largest it encompassed over 600-acres of land throughout present day Quincy and Braintree. Removed from the Massachusetts landscape in the 1870s, John and Abigail's working farm has been replaced by urban city development and the late 19th century gentleman's country estate of their grandson Charles Francis Adams.

Pazzano completed a M.A. in History from the University of Massachusetts, Boston and a Landscape Design History Certificate from the Landscape Institute of Harvard University (now the Boston Architectural College) in 2011. Her Landscape Institute Project Thesis, Peace field, 1788-1818: The New England Farm of John and Abigail Adams, received the 2011 Award for Professional Excellence from the New England Landscape Design and History Association.

In 2010 Pazzano co-authored with the National Park Service's Olmsted Center for Landscape Preservation, a Cultural Landscape Report for Peacefield, Adams National Historical Park.

The presentation is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Sen. John Keenan's Thoughts On Governor's Budget

By JOHN KEENAN
State Senator

I have heard from many constituents over the past couple of weeks regarding the Governor's proposed $34.8 billion budget for Fiscal Year 2014, which begins on July 1st.

Let me say at the outset that I am opposed to the Governor's proposal, but I do think it's helpful to provide a brief outline of his proposal and to address some concerns that people have raised.

First, Governor Patrick proposes a mix of revenue changes, which include decreasing the sales tax from 6.25% to 4.5% and doubling the personal exemption that can be claimed by taxpayers. These tax cuts are offset by his proposal to increase the income tax rate from 5.25% to 6.25%, by taxing candy and soda, by increasing the cigarette tax, and by reducing several tax breaks for individuals and businesses. All told, these proposals result in a net revenue increase of approximately $1.9 billion per year. Relying on this new revenue, the Governor's budget increases spending in several areas, including early and higher education, and transportation.

Citing a high tax burden and lack of reforms, many constituents have urged me to vote against any new taxes. Others have urged me to support new revenues, pointing out that funding for human services, education, and transportation infrastructure have been devastated.

As to taxes, there have been several tax cuts over the past few years. In particular, the income tax rate has been cut from 5.95% to the current rate of 5.25%. The tax rate on dividend and interest income has been reduced from 12% to 5.3%.

JOHN KEENAN

Also, the value of personal exemptions has doubled. Considering all revenue changes since 1998, the result has been a cut of $3.8 billion in annual tax revenue.

As to the issue of spending and reform, past tax cuts have led to across-the-board budget cuts. For instance, since 2001 local aid to cities and towns, used for schools, police, fire, libraries and other local functions, has been cut 46%; public health spending has been cut 25%; higher education spending has been reduced by 31%; spending on the environment has been cut by 38%; early education spending is down 28%; and, infrastructure spending is down 17%. On the reform side, health care and pension changes enacted over the past two years are projected to save the Commonwealth billions of dollars over the next several years.

As many know, state government provides a wide-range of essential services. The clear challenge is balancing the Commonwealth's obligations while not overburdening the taxpayers. It is not an easy task, but Massachusetts now ranks about in the middle of the pack when compared with all other states on the total burden of state and local taxes, and the overall tax rate in Massachusetts is significantly below what it was in the late 1970s. While cutting taxes and instituting reforms, Massachusetts has done a decent job of meeting many of its obligations. Compared to other states, we are fiscally stable.

Our unemployment rate compares favorably to other states, our tax rates compare favorably, our bond rating was recently raised, and we have been able to put some funds in reserve. However, at the same time, many pressing infrastructure and service demands have gone unmet.

It is my belief that over the next couple of years, as we emerge from these difficult financial times, our focus should be on better meeting our current obligations, rather than taking on new obligations.

As stated above, I am opposed to the Governor's budget proposal. I cannot support a budget that proposes nearly $1.9 billion in a combination of net new taxes and revenue anticipation notes (based on full year projections of those new taxes), and yet still relies on significant one time revenues, thus creating a structural deficit.

I have already met with the Chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee and expressed my concerns regarding the Governor's budget. I have also conveyed to him that while it is important that we as a Commonwealth invest in our future, in such areas as transportation infrastructure, education, and social services, we must do so in a fiscally responsible manner. The challenge remains meeting the Commonwealth's obligations while not overburdening the taxpayers. As the State Senate prepares its proposed budget, please be assured striking that this balance will be my goal.

If you have any thoughts or concerns regarding the budget, or any other matter, please do not hesitate to contact me at my Senate office, at (617) 722-1494, or by email at John.Keenan@masenate.gov. Thank you.

DO THE MATH!

When it comes to selecting a pair of pendant earrings for your jewelry wardrobe, you may have already considered lean drops and long chandeliers. If so, the time has come for you to take a look at the new "rhombus" styles. For those of you who may not have been paying strict attention to your high school math teacher, a rhombus is a special type of parallelogram (a four-sided polygon with opposite sides that are parallel) with all four sides that are the same length. Think of it as a "leaning square" or diamond or lozenge shape. Also think of it as absolutely elegant and beautiful. Rhombus pendant earrings match perfectly with designer dresses that require a sophisticated look. Rhombus style earrings will add a bold statement to any outfit. These elegant and beautiful earrings with classic style are suitable for wearing on any occasion. Our store is conveniently located at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center where our professional and knowledgeable staff will work with you to make sure you have the best buying experience possible. ## Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1926 real photo postcard of Arnold Road looking west from Quincy Shore Drive in Atlantic. Before the Boulevard was built along the shoreline here in 1908, the area between Aphorpe Street and Bayfield Road was marshland and flooded with high tides. The Boulevard, essentially a dike, ended the flooding to some degree so the land was subdivided into house lots and roads were laid out, but they were unpaved and not accepted by the city until the 1920's. Here in this view

Arnold Road was still dirt. Then the first seawall, built in 1926, was another big improvement but it took the larger 1960 seawall to pretty much end the flooding. Now with increasing predictions of worldwide rising sea levels a new even larger seawall may someday be needed along here. ## A Message From Impact Quincy Community Police Part Of The Mission To End Substance Abuse

My name is Lieutenant Tim Sorgi. I am the supervisor of the Quincy Police Community Police Unit. Currently there are 7 officers assigned to the unit: 1 in each ward and 1 in Quincy Square. My officers handle a wide range of calls, but the common element of all their assignments is trying to improve the quality of life in their respective areas.

At the close of 2012, our unit was nominated by Marilyn Manning of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce and Impact Quincy to receive a "Community Hero" award for our dedication to ending substance abuse in the city. While I had heard of Impact Quincy, I had never met any of the people involved in its mission. At the awards presentation, I kept asking myself why the Community Police Unit was not more involved with this organization. It seemed like a logical fit.

With the encouragement of Lt. Pat Glynn and Lt. Peter Turowski, 2 co-workers and current IQ board members, I asked Arlene Goldstein what it would take to get on the board. Arlene gave me her blessing and said, "See you at next month's meeting."

On Jan. 30, I attended my first IQ board meeting and was impressed by the number of groups represented, as well as the spirit of communication and cooperation evident there. It is that same spirit of communication and networking that is the lifeblood of community policing. It allows us to take the time to look objectively at a problem, and decide on an appropriate course of action. Sometimes it might even result in an arrest! But the initial focus is on resolving the issue in a manner that best addresses the cause of the problem, not a symptom, which in many cases is why the police become involved in the first place.

Substance abuse is a prime example of that type of problem. Its symptoms can manifest themselves as physical and mental health issues, loss of work, nuisance behavior, homelessness, domestic violence, petty and/or serious crime, and suicide. While these issues in and of themselves certainly deserve the attention of the police and courts, it is a waste of precious resources not to look into the underlying cause of the problem. Many times that cause cannot be addressed; sometimes, people just choose to do the wrong thing. But I am happy to say that in the case of substance abuse, that does not have to be the case. Through the work of Impact Quincy, substance abusers can receive the help they need to defeat their reliance on drugs and/or alcohol and move toward leading a productive life.

The work of Impact Quincy truly represents the direction we need to move in if we are to put a dent in this plague. I am honored and excited to represent the Community Police Unit on the board of IQ. As part of the real solution, we pledge our dedication to helping anyone that reaches out to us with a substance abuse problem.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

TREATING CANCER PATIENTS

Aside from other well-known side effects of radiation and chemotherapy (hair loss, nausea, etc.), cancer patients also may endure oral side effects from their treatments. For instance, the most common side effect of simultaneously receiving radiation and chemotherapy involves inflammation of the mucous membranes of the mouth. Symptoms of "mucositis" are ulcer-like sores in the mouth. In addition, cancer patients receiving treatment may experience dry mouth, which increases the risk of tooth decay and gum disease. With all this in mind, those facing the prospect of undergoing cancer treatment should schedule a visit with the dentist beforehand to address any existing problems and lay the groundwork for preventive care. It is also important to promptly treat any future complications.

This informative column has been brought you in the interest of better dental health. We believe in preventive dentistry. We know that you wish to receive your general dental care from a highly trained, caring staff; therefore, professionalism is very important to you. Our promise to you is that our office will provide you with dental care of the highest quality available, utilizing the most modern procedures and an extremely qualified staff. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology and a full trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Low white blood cell counts often render cancer patients receiving treatment vulnerable to infection. The dentists can help both identify and treat bacterial, fungal, and viral infections of the mouth.

Interest In New South Shore Chess Club Soaring

Founder Dan Racine Finds Way To Give Back To The Community

By SCOTT JACKSON

Two years ago when Dan Racine moved to Quincy from Everett he felt something was missing in the community.

That something was a chess club.

Racine, a stockbroker in Boston, has been playing chess since he was a child growing up in New Jersey. He wanted to give back to his new hometown by founding a chess club right here in Quincy.

"I love chess. I've been playing chess all my life and also there was a want to give back to the community in some way and I thought starting a chess club would be a way I could give back to the community and also do something that I have a passion for," Racine said. "There wasn't a club in Quincy, or even the South Shore."

In August, he did give back by launching the South Shore Chess Club.

Interest in the club has soared since its inception. About a dozen people attended the club's first meeting, and new people continue to come to the weekly meetings. All told, about 100 people from Quincy, the South Shore, and beyond have either attended a meeting or expressed interest in doing so.

"We have more interest than we can handle," Racine said. "Our first meeting we had maybe 12, 15 people show up. But every meeting since we've had two or three new people. We have a database of over 100 people in Quincy and the South Shore area that have either come to our meetings or expressed an interest in coming."

The level in interest in the new chess club came as a surprise to Jill Starbard, Racine's girlfriend who started playing chess just a few months ago and has helped organize the club.

"I didn't play chess before. When Dan said he wanted to start a chess club, I was very supportive because I'm supportive of Dan. But I seriously thought there would be one or two people that showed up to the first meeting," Starbard said. "When 12 people showed up you probably could have knocked me over because we just put flyers up in supermarkets and sent notices that were published in The Quincy Sun. That's how we advertised. Since then it's just snowballed."

She believes many of the people in the club remember the 1970s, when the best chess players from the United States – including the enigmatic Bobby Fischer – and the Soviet Union faced off during the height of the Cold War.

"I think people are hungry for it. I think people remember the day when chess used to be more than what it was now – with Bobby Fischer and the competitiveness between countries," Starbard said. "People long to see chess comeback."

During that time there was a Quincy Chess Club, which operated for 30 or 40 years, maybe even longer. The club folded a few years ago, but many of its former members have started attending meetings of the South Shore Chess Club.

"There used to be a Quincy Chess Club. It had been around for many years, I'm talking about 30-40 years. It dissolved before I came here," Racine said. "A lot of those people are coming back."

Membership in the new club is free, and meetings are held Monday evenings from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Houghs Neck Community Center, 1193 Sea Street, in Quincy.

Each meeting has a tournament for players who wish to participate, as well as social matches. The meetings all begin with a lesson from Farzad Abdi, a Rockland resident who obtained the

New Meeting Location For South Shore Chess Club

Starting Monday, March 25th, the free South Shore Chess Club will meet Monday evenings from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Houghs Neck Community Center, 1193 Sea St., in Quincy.

The South Shore Chess Club will also host an open house Monday, March 25 beginning at 7 p.m. with free pizza and free refreshments.

Admission is free and everyone is welcome.

For more information, call Dan Racine at 857-888-1531, email southshorechess@gmail.com or visit www.southshorechess.com.

title of national master from the United States Chess Federation. Abdi volunteered to provide instruction at the meetings after showing up at one of the club's earlier meetings.

"Our resident master will give a lecture, or go over a famous game or talk about something else chess related in front of the room and people can ask questions," Racine explained.

Unlike other chess clubs, the South Shore Chess Club focuses on social events. Part of that is through group movie nights, where they watch films about chess like a documentary of Fischer and another called "Brooklyn Castle" about an inner-city chess team that persevered despite budget cuts.

"Once every two or three months we do a movie night where we screen a movie that is somehow chess related," Starbard said. "That's purely social. A lot of the clubs around here are purely tournament-based clubs, they don't have a lot of social aspects."

The club has attracted members as young as four years old. Racine and Starbard hope to one day organize a chess club for children and teenagers.

"We looked at Quincy high schools, Quincy middle schools – you'll find a video game club. You'll find a computer club. Those are great clubs, but there's not a chess club," Racine said. "That's actually something we're thinking about pursuing. I'm not sure with the schools or not, but starting a scholastic program... it's something we like as a goal."

Racine added that they've had some discussions with the YMCA about having a scholastic chess club there when their new facility is completed. His lifelong love of chess was fostered in part by time he spent in chess clubs in school.

"When I was in middle school my mother married a guy who was a chess expert – he had played all his life and he taught me how to play," Racine said. "But also we had chess in our schools. Where I grew up in New Jersey, there was an afterschool program and a lot of people did it. It was a combination where my stepdad was teaching me how to play but they also had it in schools as well."

Playing chess helps with important skills, like critical thinking, Racine said. In his own experience, he's benefited greatly from playing.

"It's helped me all my life – applying to college, looking for a job, my day-to-day activities, trading stocks," Racine said.

Starbard feels chess has helped her mental skills since she first started learning the game five months ago.

"It's definitely sharpened my mental thinking and reasoning," Starbard said. "It's been interesting, but a struggle."

South Shore Chess Club's meetings are open to the public, and the club has chessboards and pieces, though they ask that anyone with pieces or boards bring them so there's enough to go around. They're also hosting the 2013 Boston Open Chess Tournament May 11 at the Hyatt in Braintree.

More information on the club is available online at southshorechess.com, through email at southshorechess@gmail.com, or call 857-888-1531.

Go Green By Going Paperless

By KRISTEN ALBERINO

Social Security Public Affairs Specialist

With St. Patrick's Day at its heart, March is a very green month. People celebrating the luck of the Irish wear green clothing, drink green beverages, and can even be found enjoying a shamrock milkshake from time to time.

We'd like to encourage you to go green in another way, too. Being environmentally friendly isn't an elusive pot of gold at the end of some rainbow — it is something everyone can work toward with little steps. Reusing and recycling, planting a tree, and using Social Security's online services.

When you use Social Security's online services, there's no paper, printing, postage, or travel needed. Here are a few of our most popular online services:

- Try out our expanded my Social Security services, available at www.socialsecurity.gov/myaccount. It's a one-stop shop to obtain a Social Security Statement for checking your earnings record or estimated future benefits, or (if you already get benefits) for checking your payment amount, changing your address and telephone number in our records, getting a benefit verification letter, and starting or changing your direct deposit information.

- Use our Retirement Estimator to get a quick and accurate estimate of your future Social Security retirement benefits. www.socialsecurity.gov/estimator

- Prepare for your retirement by visiting our Benefits Planner page. You also can go here to use the disability and survivors planners to find out how much you or your family might qualify for if the need arises. www.socialsecurity.gov/planners

- Retire online! You can complete and submit your retirement application in as little as 15 minutes. www.socialsecurity.gov/retireonline

- Apply online for disability benefits. www.socialsecurity.gov/applyfordisability

- Apply online for Medicare benefits. www.socialsecurity.gov/medicareonly

Go green with Social Security's online services this month and throughout the year. For a complete list of our online services, visit www.socialsecurity.gov/online-services.

Over 220 Students Compete At Quincy High School Science, Engineering Fair

Over 220 students presented to approximately 400 spectators at the sixth annual Quincy High School STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics) Fair Feb. 27.

The event featured 182 projects from grades 9-12 and spanned fields of biology, chemistry, environmental science, physics, and engineering. Students worked individually or as a team to investigate topics such as heart rates, solar cells, robotic trash management, and innovative ways to floss.

The in-depth project work has helped Quincy High School students build career and life skills for success in 21st century careers, such as critical and creative thinking, communication, teamwork, and ethical decision-making. Students work one-on-one with teachers and professionals year round to follow their natural curiosity and explore "real world" science and engineering problems.

the compost to grow swiss chard they discovered it had a higher iron content than commercially grown swiss chard. This is an exciting green project which could be the key to some of our environmental concerns and agriculture.

The second place project by Marisa Abundis investigated the effect of oil spills on the marine environment and the method to clean spills without further harming the environment. Marisa utilized aerobic oil eating bacteria and discovered those bacteria can consume hydrocarbon based on the size of the hydrocarbon chains.

The third place project by Sophia Mac monitored the heart rate of daphnia, a water free crustacean, and upon subjecting them to various types of medication she was able to collect an enormous amount of data. This was clearly displayed in a simple graphical presentation making it easy to see her findings that some over the counter medication are highly toxic to the daphnia.

Much of the science fair's success is due to the overwhelming support from our community with over 100 volunteers from science and technology fields donating their time to assist in STEM Fair operations and project judging. Project scores were tallied and weighting based on scientific approach, creativity, understanding, and presentation.

Each year Quincy High School shows a great diversity of projects and the student's enthusiasm carries the evening as they get to celebrate their accomplishments with the community.

At the recent South Shore Regional Science Fair, sophomore Marisa Abundis received a first place award for her exhibit, "Oil eating bacteria effectiveness on the marine pollution."

Receiving second place awards were senior Chan Yuh (Solar Cell Energy from Fruits and leaves) and junior Allan Wong (ThermoX).

Third place awards were presented to sophomores Amira Abdelaziz (Isolation of Bacteria from various species of New England salt water fish); and Ursula Biba (the affect of temperature on T4r phage growth).

The award winners and three other students have qualified for the state fair set for May 2-4 at MIT.

The other students qualifying are Kun Yi Li and Anna Nguyen (Harvest of the Sea - Improving Nutritional Values Using Kelp) and Sophia Mac (Natural or Modern Medicine: Heart Rate of Daphnia).

Crooked Door Needs Repair

Question: The antique door to our bathroom is solid oak. Unfortunately, it's no longer closing straight -- the door latch is lower than the hardware on the frame. It's also scraping the floor when it's opened and closed. How can we repair this? -- Cliff, West Hartford, Conn.

Answer: Fixing this problem can be as simple as adjusting the hinge pins of the door, or as complex as resetting them (which isn't too complex, it's just a two-person job).

Sticking, dragging doors -- or doors that won't close completely -- can have a number of causes. In newer houses, a door's hinges might have been placed incorrectly, or the mortise of the door might not be deep enough (or too deep). Checking the depth of the mortise is simple: run a finger along the hinge leaf that's set into the door. If the leaf isn't flush with the wood, the trouble may lie there. The new wood might have swollen slightly, as well.

Because you're in an older home, the door probably opened and shut for years with no problem, meaning the hinges are (or were) set just fine. However, the door frames of aging homes typically settle as time passes, and the frame could be slightly warped. The hinges also might have worked loose.

The first (and easiest) fix is to check all the hinges -- tap them down into place if necessary -- and tighten the screws holding the hinges to the door. If a screw won't tighten down, remove it, insert a wooden toothpick (or several) into the hole, and reinsert the screw.

If the door still sags, try putting a shim between the bottom hinge and the door.

Remove the door completely from its hinges (this is where that second person comes in handy). Then, unscrew the bottom hinge leaf from the door. Using the leaf (the flat part) as a template, cut a piece of noncompressible cardboard, particle board or sheet brass (available in various pre-cut sizes at the hardware store) to match. Punch out screw holes in the same area as on the leaf. Lay the shim against the door first, then fasten the hinge leaf to it. Rehang the door and check the fit.

Conversely, if the door latch were higher than it should be, you would place a shim in the top hinge.

Now, what if the latch lines up but the door still scrapes or sticks? Try covering the sticking edge with chalk, and open and close the door. Mark spots on the door edge where the chalk has rubbed away. Lightly sticking doors can be repaired by sanding the contact points. Don't sand too much, or the door won't fit tightly.

HOME TIP: To easily sand away sticky spots from the bottom of the door, tape a piece of sandpaper to the floor and briskly move the door back and forth across it. Elevate the sandpaper with thin pieces of cardboard as the sanding process continues.

On Saturday March 9 at approximately 3:15 a.m., Officers Dan Church and Chris Klier were dispatched to a Nelson Street apartment complex for a disorder between the caller and her brother. Upon arrival, the officers observed that the front door was open and the storm door was slightly ajar. As they entered into the hallway, the officers heard a male and a female yelling. The female said "get out of my apartment, you're breaking my s@#$." The male was yelling over her, but he was undecipherable.

Officer Church knocked on the door and called out "Quincy Police" at least three times but there was no response and the yelling did not subside. The officers opened the unlocked door and entered the apartment, where they came across the brother and sister engaged in a tumultuous argument. The brother, upon seeing the officers, focused his rage at them, demanding that the officers leave. The officers tried to explain to the brother numerous times that they were there to resolve the conflict, but the brother kept raising his voice over theirs while flailing his arms about. The officers attempted to speak with the brother but he became more agitated and attempted to push his way by the officers.

Officer Klier observed two folding knives clipped to the brother's pants pocket, so he began to remove the knives while explaining that he would give them back after he (the brother) calmed down. The brother became enraged, pushed Officer Klier and yelled out, "I know martial arts, I'm a black belt." The officers grabbed the brother's arms and sat him in a chair, but he refused to stay seated and rushed at the officers. Due to his volatile behavior, the officers decided to handcuff him.

When told to place his hands behind his back, the brother began waving his arms in front of him as if demonstrating martial arts type actions while again telling the officers that he was trained in martial arts. As the officers attempted to handcuff the brother, he struggled. They all suddenly fell to the floor because it was very slippery. I was learned later that cooking oil covered the kitchen floor. The brother, now on the ground, refused to place his hands on his back. A several second struggle ensued until Officer Church warned the brother that he would be sprayed. He complied.

During the struggle, the caller/sister ran into the room and began yelling at the officers that she didn't call the cops to "beat up her brother" and that "everything was being taped." Once he was handcuffed, the brother was brought to his feet, where he immediately rotated his arms over his head and positioned the handcuffs in the front of his body. He then blurted out "if I ever see you without your badge and gun..." and then stopped. He then looked at Officer Klier and said "take off your badge and gun and go out back and we'll see how tough you are."

The brother was placed in a chair. With the situation now stabilized, Officer Church attempted to speak to the caller, who was now siding with her brother and demanding that the handcuffs be taken off her brother. Officer Church requested that the caller/sister move to another room so they could talk about what occurred.

The brother then started yelling at his sister in a foreign language that clearly changed his sister's facial expression from angry to worried as she stopped yelling and began pleading with the officers not to take him to jail. The brother then jumped up from his chair and again pushed Officer Klier. As Officer Church approached, he too was pushed. Officer Church extended his arm to create distance, but the brother pushed the officer's aside and reached in the vicinity of the officer's duty belt. During this time, the brother told the officers that, "because of my years of martial arts training, it was a reaction that I could not turn off to defend myself when attacked."

After being seated again, the brother bolted out of the chair as he attempted to flee, banging into the officers. The brother was led out of the house fighting and struggling to get free. He continued to contort his body and his arms the officers attempted to maneuver the iced-over steps from the recent snowstorm. Once down the stairs, the handcuffs were repositioned and the brother was led to a cruiser, where he refused to get inside. The suspect was eventually forced into the cruiser.

Officer Church then spoke with the victim again, who now said that she did not want her brother arrested because, "now there is no one to take my son to school on Monday." Officer Klier suffered a hand injury during the multiple scuffles with the brother/suspect, which resulted in stitches at Quincy Medical Center.

The suspect, a 24-year old Quincy resident, was charged with "assault and battery on a police officer (Officer Klier), assault and battery on a police officer (Officer Church), and resisting arrest. Nice Work!

RECENT SCAM

A citizen called to let readers know about a possible scam. He received a telephone call from 1-800-947-0915. The caller said he represented "Police and Troopers Relief Foundation" and was looking for a donation. The citizen said that he was watching QATV's show on scams, presented by the Quincy Police, when the call came in. The citizen asked how much of the donation goes to services and how much goes to salaries and overhead. The caller couldn't answer the question, so the citizen hung up and called me.

I conducted some research on the company and learned the following: the solicitation came from Outreach Calling, located in Nevada and New Jersey. They are telemarketers raising funds for "Police and Troopers Relief Foundation," also known as "Law Enforcement Officers Relief Fund," seeks donations for law enforcement families who have suffered from a disaster.

According to Washington Secretary of State's website: http://www.sos.wa.gov/charities/search\_detail.aspx?charity\_id=28236 this organization "devoted one percent of its total expenses to program services during the year reported." Most likely, the telemarketers kept a major portion of donations and the rest, minus one percent may have gone to salaries.

$219,606 Grant Creates ELL Summer Program

The grant, which was awarded to 24 gateway city schools, is to help close the achievement gaps by operating an English language enrichment full-day academy. Gateway cities are home to most of the immigration population, low-income students, and English language learners.

"There will be two programs, one middle school program for students entering grades 6-8, and one high school section for grade 9-10. The program will run for a full day model, with a boxed lunch included, for a total of 18 days," said Hallett.

"Students will be grouped by low, middle and high fluency for English acquisition, and appropriate instruction and support will be at each level. The program will focus primarily on English Language production, which is speaking and writing.

"Part of the reason for such a strong focus on speaking and writing is that listening, understanding and reading are all skills and parts of learning a language that come much more easily to learners," Hallett said. "Speaking and writing are more difficult especially when it involved academic language. So we saw speaking and writing were where ELL's needed the most support, also in regards to feeling confident and taking risks with their new language in speaking and writing."

Hallett said that the focus and subjects during the academy would be on Quincy's history and marine environment.

"In thinking about what we wanted students to speak and write about we felt that it was important to encourage ELL's to really understand and connect with the rich history of Quincy, hence the social studies sessions and the unique marine environment in Quincy as well, which is the science piece," she said.

In each classroom during the academy there will be an ELL teacher and a QARI (Quincy Asian Resources Inc.) partner/mentor. Hallett said that they also collaborated with teachers, QARI, and the Quincy Historical Society to plan for the academy, and that some teachers will be writing the curriculum for the program.

"We want teachers to be the ones to really create the lessons and the projects and field experiences. In the program design phase we came up with the idea of having three key collaborators in every classroom, the ELL teacher, the content area teacher, and a QARI partner/mentor who could provide native language assistance, where necessary, and act as a non-teaching motivational role model for program participants," said Hallett.

"We envision that each of these collaborators will be present for the duration of the day but will have different moments in the day where they will have a stronger part and more emphatic role in the learning process."

There are approximately 261 students who will be invited to the summer academy, and Hallett said they expect 100-120 students to participate. Facilitators and teachers for the academy are already being recruited, and students will begin to be invited to attend by mid-April.

ton - where the couple had met - and spent two years completing her studies while assisting her husband before she was ordained at HNCC on May 5, 1949. Rev. John Castricum, the current pastor at the Houghs Neck Congregational Church, said she persevered in school despite resistance from professors and others who felt she should be a pastor's wife and not a pastor.

"The United Church of Christ has been ordaining women since the 1800s, but it was wasn't always easy. When Alicia was going through seminary she met a lot of opposition from professors," Castricum said. "So many told her she shouldn't look to be a pastor but she should be a good pastor's wife. She got ordained and was an inspiration for many women after her. She was a groundbreaker with a strong will."

Rev. Corea went on to serve as pastor at the church until retiring in 2003; her husband had passed away a few years prior to that. She remained active in the church and in the Massachusetts chapter of the UCC after retiring until moving to California in 2010 to be closer to her son William; at that time a special service was held and the church's hall was dedicated as the M. Alicia Corea Fellowship Hall. Castricum succeeded her as full-time pastor after an interim pastor served at the church, and called his predecessor an amazing woman who did her work with love.

"She was just an incredible woman. She was co-pastor at our church for over 55 years," Castricum said. "She did it with so much love and care and built so many relationships and was there for so many in Quincy."

Castricum added that

HOUGHS NECK CONGREGATIONAL Church Pastor John Castricum presented Rev. M. Alicia Corea with a plaque after the church hall was dedicated as the "Rev. M. Alicia Corea Fellowship Hall" in September, 2010.

Rev. Corea was delighted and supportive when he was named pastor.

"She was a wonderful woman. She was so happy when I took over. She was warm and supportive," Castricum said.

One of Rev. Corea's lasting legacies is her belief in education, according to Castricum. The church has a scholarship named after her, and the local UCC chapter offers a scholarship name for her to students attending seminary.

"It's amazing how many scholarship funds are named for her," Castricum said. "She was a really big advocate for education - getting all kids educated, in colleges or seminary."

Former Mayor Frank McCauley, a longtime congregant at the Houghs Neck Congregational Church, said Rev. Corea's influence was felt beyond the church. She helped establish an ecumenical service for Thanksgiving where members of Holy Trinity Parish, Bethel Church of the Nazarene, and HNCC come together for a joint service that rotates between the churches. Rev. Corea also led worship services in nursing homes and senior centers in the city.

"She was just a wonderful individual. She and Peter married our three daughters and baptized a number of our grandchildren," McCauley said. "She was a very active member of the community."

One of McCauley's daughters, Jennifer Logue, said generations of families and community members will miss Rev. Corea.

"For more than half a century, Alicia Corea was the heart and soul of our church community. She was a kind and gentle presence who personified the teachings of the church to love and care for one another," Logue said. "She will be greatly missed by the generations of families and community members to whom she ministered."

Castricum said a memorial service for Rev. Corea is likely to be held at the church in June.

At Annual St. Patrick's Day Luncheon

Joe Shea Honored As City's Irishman Of The Year

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

City Clerk Joseph Shea was honored as the city's "Irishman of the Year" at the Quincy St. Patrick's Day Celebration last Friday at the Quincy Lodge of Elks Tirrell Room.

Shea, who has been a mainstay and one of the featured performers for 17 years at the celebration, received a wooden walking stick or shillelagh for his contributions to the event.

He also received a frame with photos of some of his well-known St. Patrick's Day characters, including the "Amazing Shea-Zak" and impersonation of the pope.

The honor also noted Shea's many years of service to the city, including executive secretary to former Mayor Walter J. Hannon, assistant city clerk to John Gillis and in his present capacity as Quincy's city clerk, license board chairman and official keeper of the records.

"Joe Shea is someone who takes his work truly seriously. No one loves the city more than Joe and no one understands the city more than Joe," said Mayor Thomas Koch.

"Joe never turns away anybody. He has truly followed in the footsteps of (former city clerk) John Gills."

JOSEPH SHEA, Quincy's Irishman of the Year, with his son, Joseph D. Shea (left), Mayor Thomas Koch (second from right) and Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti (far right) at this year's St. Patrick's Day Celebration. Koch and Bellotti served as the co-emcees for the event.

Shea said he has been honored to be a part of the St. Patrick's Day Luncheon in Quincy. The event has become a tradition in the city and serves as the unofficial kick-off to the political campaign season.

"I'm happy to be associated with it and I want to thank everyone because the tradition has taken on a life of its own. It's not easy being funny," he said, alluding to the guest speakers who try their luck with humor.

While Shea sat this year's event out and left the emcee duties to Sheriff Michael Bellotti and Mayor Koch, he managed to get some good one-liners in nonetheless.

"I grew up in West Quincy and my mom couldn't cook. I always wanted to be Italian," he said. "Why? Because the Italians had the best food and they were the best looking girls at St. Mary's School."

Shea went on to marry an Italian girl, Josephine Brillo, "the best cook and the best looking woman in West Quincy," he added.

Shea mentioned all the years he has worked in the City of Quincy and noted another city hallmark: people's tolerance and acceptance of all nationalities in ever-changing demographics.

"We should all be so proud of the evolution of this city and those who have worked hard to keep it. We are a world class city," Shea said.

"The city's demographics have changed but the hard-working people have not. We have to embrace our ethnicity and our changing demographics. It's what going to continue to make this city great."

Shea thanked his family for their love and support over the years as well as the "great crew" in the City Clerk's Office.

"I inherited a style from the great John Gillis - never turn anyone away and always treat people the way you want to be treated."

"Thank you very much and I love you all very much. Remember your traditions and realize we are all one," Shea added as the crowd stood in sustained applause.

Proceeds from this year's St. Patrick's Day Luncheon will help support two other cultural traditions in Quincy: the Flag Day Parade and Quincy Christmas Parade.

MAYOR THOMAS KOCH offered some kind words about his father-in-law, the late Philip J. Keenan, who passed away March 13 - two days before this year's St. Patrick's Day Luncheon. Mr. Keenan was among five brothers who served this country as servicemen during World War II. "Phil was part of that Greatest Generation," the mayor said. He was so proud of his family and their accomplishments. Phil gave away a lot of kindness."

FR. JAMES HAWKER delivered a funny one-liner: "The Vatican's new song is 'Don't Cry for Me Argentina,'" alluding to the recent election of Pope Francis, a native of Argentina and formerly the Archbishop of Buenos Aires. Fr. Hawker said the new pontiff is a great example of the church sending a message of hope and peace to others.

Europe Soccer Experience A Kick For Connor Dane, James O'Shea

Quincy High Juniors Play Three Matches In Portugal And Spain

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was a week in soccer heaven.

Connor Dane and James O'Shea savored the religious enthusiasm for the sport for a week in Portugal and Spain where soccer is less a game and more a way of life.

"What I'll remember most is being surrounded by people who have spent their entire lives playing soccer. They grew up with it. They live for the game," said Dane.

"All the love they have for soccer, the enthusiasm is inspirational," said O'Shea. "No matter where we went, the support for the game was unbelievable."

O'Shea and Dane are both juniors who play for the Quincy High soccer team. Dane is a goal keeper. O'Shea is a striker. They each earned spots on the Massachusetts Olympic Development Program's 17-and under team. They played three matches for the ODP squad in their week in Portugal and Spain, winning two and losing one to academy clubs which are also developing players for their national team.

"It's a different game over there," said O'Shea. "It's more highly skilled. There's more passing and dribbling and less kicking and chasing."

There was great interest in the three matches O'Shea and Dane played, but the most crazed atmosphere the two witnessed was as spectators in a Europa League match between a club from Portugal and a club from Germany. Dane and O'Shea have spent their lives around soccer, but this was a brave, new world for them.

"They had SWAT teams to control the fans. SWAT teams. Imagine that over here," said Dane. "I've never seen anything as passionate. They sang and chanted the whole game. You could feel the stadium rock. There were 40,000 people there it felt like twice that many."

"I've never seen anything like it," added O'Shea. "From the start of the match until the finish, nobody sat down. They waved flags, they really got involved in the match and that just made everything more exciting."

The passion was found not just in packed, wild stadiums, but in scenes from everyday life. No matter where the two went, there was soccer. Everywhere.

"You saw so many playing and enjoying the game," said O'Shea. "We did a lot of sightseeing. We'd be on a bus or walking around and you'd see a father and son kicking the ball around. Just making passes and working on skills with each other, having fun with the game. We saw it all the time. It was like everyone shooting hoops over here, only more of it."

Even during their time in Spain, even during siesta when the whole country sleeps, soccer is awake and breathing.

"We walked around this small Spanish town during siesta when everybody was asleep," said Dane. "We saw

Quincy High Soccer Benefit For Bai Kanu April 27

The Quincy High soccer team will sponsor an all-day benefit Saturday, April 27 at Veterans' Memorial Stadium from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. to help teammate Bai Kanu who was struck by an automobile last fall.

The QHS Boys Soccer Team is hosting the benefit entitled "Battle for Bai." Proceeds from the event will go towards Bai Kanu's long-term recovery needs.

Bai, a QHS student and varsity soccer player, was struck by a car back in early October 2012 that left him with severe head trauma. He is currently in rehab recovering from another surgery.

The is community-wide event featuring concessions, raffles, silent auction, Penalty Kick Competition and a high-school-age mini tournament.

There will be no admission charge, but there will be entry fees for a penalty kick competition and a high-school age tournament in the afternoon.

There will also be raffles, an auction and concessions.

this small stone courtyard tucked away in the corner of the town. There were kids in there playing soccer, kicking the ball off the wall, making plays, enjoying the game."

The two landed in Lisbon and along with touring the city, saw much of Portugal's beautiful seashore. They traveled to Algarve where the ODP played two games. They visited the Spanish town of Ayamonte where they competed against a Spanish academy team.

"The beaches were clean, beautiful spots. The weather was great. The locals were complaining because the temperature was only 65 degrees," smiled Dane.

They walked through the cities and towns and met friendly, helpful people who grew more friendly and helpful when they discovered O'Shea and Dane were soccer players from America.

"The people were very friendly and a surprising number knew English," said O'Shea. "We just made small talk. They helped us with directions and asked about what the game was like back in the states."

The ODP team won its first game in Portugal, 5-1 and earned a 4-1 victory over the Spanish academy team. In the finale, a second academy team from Portugal edged the Massachusetts club, 4-3. Dane had a fine trip in goal and felt the experience clearly made him a better keeper.

"You improve playing against high caliber teams," said Dane. "The skill level is definitely higher over there, much higher than in high school over here. I've learned a lot through the ODP program."

O'Shea scored twice. The first came in the game in Spain when he drove home a rebound from just outside the 18-yard marker into the bottom corner of the net. In the final game, he intercepted a pass and lobbed a pretty shot over the goalie.

"I can always say I scored a goal overseas," said O'Shea.

A benefit of the ODP program is that it increases opportunities and exposes the players to more college coaches.

"We both did a BU camp over the summer," said Dane. "I did a camp at Franklin and Pierce and I know we're both doing a camp at Hartford. I've received more E-mails from college coaches since I made the ODP program. They know there are good players in the program and they want to see them."

Quincy's Jeremy Cowham, a goal keeper, and Kevin O'Shea, a striker, have also made Massachusetts ODP teams. Cowham is on the 15-and-under team while O'Shea, James' younger brother, is on the 13-and-under club. Recently, Cian Moriarty, a midfielder for Quincy High, tried out and made the 17-and-under team.

"Jeremy is an excellent keeper. He knows the game well and the coaches really like him," said Dane.

"I hope Kevin's learned from playing soccer with me. He hasn't complained yet," smiled O'Shea.

HOW SLOUCHING AFFECTS ATTITUDE

You are probably well acquainted with chiropractors' warnings that poor posture compromises physical health, but did you know that slouching can also have psychological consequences? According to a recent study involving college students, those hunched in slouched positions reported feeling depressed and less energetic. Another study showed that assuming a powerful posture had exactly the opposite effect. When individuals stood with open shoulders and straight spines, their testosterone levels increased 20% and their cortisol levels decreased 25%. Slouching individuals had a 10% decrease in testosterone and a 15% increase in cortisol (the "stress hormone"). Our bodies and minds are connected in surprising ways. Chiropractors treat the whole body and are aware of connections between the nervous system and overall health.

We are a health care center dedicated to help you improve your health naturally. Our goals are simple. We strive to help reduce your pain and restore your lost function. At FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we are dedicated to providing you with a care program designed for you. With chiropractic care you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, especially your health! If your problem is a chiropractic condition we offer you exceptional service.

Dan Visser Named Head Coach Of ENC Men's Soccer, Golf Teams

Dan Visser has been named head coach of the men's soccer and golf teams at Eastern Nazarene College, Athletics Director Dr. Nancy Detwiler has announced.

Visser joins the ENC Lions after a two-year stint as an assistant coach and recruiting coordinator at Eastern University in St. Davids, Pa., where he helped the Eagles post a 21-11-2 overall record with a 7-6-1 mark in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

"Eastern Nazarene College is fortunate to have Dan Visser as our new head coach for men's soccer and golf," Detwiler said. "Dan has a passion for both sports and is committed to taking both programs to the next level of play through discipline and good teaching. Even more important, however, is his desire to use sports to develop solid Christian men."

Visser joins ENC's soccer program after the Lions boasted their best performance in a decade. As head golf coach, he will guide the program during its inaugural season of varsity play. ENC added golf as its 12th sport during the 2012-2013 season, with Quincy's Granite Links Golf Club serving as the Lions' home course.

"I'd like to thank Dr. Detwiler and the entire ENC community for welcoming me into their family," Visser said. "I'll be working hard to live up to the standard established by some very special coaches who have invested in my life over the years, namely Wayne Rasmussen, Dave Brandt, Brad McCarty, Mark Wagner and Jim Henderson."

Visser enjoyed a successful playing career with NCAA Division III powerhouse Messiah College. During his four years, the Falcons won three national championships and participated in four Final Fours. He served as a captain in his junior and senior years and was named to the Regional All-America first team following his senior season. Visser graduated magna cum laude in 2008 with degrees in mathematics and economics.

After graduation, Visser coached at Delaware County Christian School as well as with the Eastern Pennsylvania ODP program. He also spent three years working for Total Soccer Academy in Downingtown, State College and Warminster, Pa. Currently, Visser serves as the director of player development for United Sports in Downingtown, Pa.

'Running Has Given Me A Different Perspective On The World'

Hassan Haydar: The Marathon Man

By BILL GRIFFIN

Think of a Sunday in the summer. Think of a long, cool swim, think of napping on the beach with the ball game on the radio, think of fishing off a pier, relaxing on the boat, flipping burgers on the grill, leisurely cruising through the newspaper. Think of the lazy, hazy days of summer when the living is easy.

Now think of this. Think about getting up at 6:00 a.m. Think of driving to the Hopkinton, the starting point of the Boston Marathon. Think of running the marathon route through the sizzle of summer. Think of weaving through traffic and think of those Newton hills when it is 90 degrees. Think about doing this for 26 straight Sundays. Half the Sundays in a year. 26 of them.

Every Sunday from April through October of 2012 Hassan Haydar, a marathoner from Quincy, ran the historic route from Hopkinton to Boston. It is part of his story, an amazing part, but there is more. As it unfolds, disbelief is almost suspended and thoughts form about what a great movie this would make, who would play the lead role, and how the story would touch those who came to know it.

"The weather was great for those Sundays and I ran with a good friend Bill McCabe," said Haydar. "Friends, the people I've met is what has been the greatest reward of running. I met so many remarkable people, heard so many intriguing stories. I see the enthusiasm and the determination for life."

He began running when he was 50. He ran the 26 Sundays and three official marathons in 2012 which meant a man 62 years old ran the 26.2 mile marathon route 29 times in a calendar year. At age 63, he is preparing for his 13th Boston and 33rd marathon. One of those marathons took him back to his native land of Beirut, Lebanon.

QUINCY'S HASSAN HAYDAR ran 29 marathons last year: Boston 26 times (the race in April and 25 other times), Bay State Marathon, Cape Cod Marathon and Beirut Marathon. He'll run Boston for the 13th time next month at the age of 63.

"It inspires my belief in the blessings from God," said Haydar. "In every marathon I've run, all your plans go out the window after 22 miles. You hurt too much. Only God lets you finish."

In Beirut, there were 33,000 runners. There were runners from the Middle East and Europe. There were United Nations peacekeepers who ran. The route took the runners through the streets of old Lebanon. For one day in a country that has suffered so much, there was a race and a celebration of life. Haydar had come back home again.

"The best part was my family," said Haydar. "My brothers and sisters and their children were in the crowd cheering for me. It was a great experience."

Haydar came to the United States in 1977. One of the first events he watched was the 1978 Boston Marathon. He was an athlete who played soccer as a young boy. He made himself a promise. He would run Boston. However, the busyness of life can swallow time and promises, and Haydar did not fulfill his vow for 23 years.

"I joined the L Street Running Club and finally ran in 2001," said Haydar.

He finished in 3:59 in his first Boston, but it was not a pain-free trip.

"Ignorance of what it took was my biggest friend. I had no idea," said Haydar. "I couldn't walk right for two weeks. My quads were killing me. I promised I would never run another marathon. I learned later every first-time marathoner makes that promise. Then the pain goes away and it draws you back."

Haydar has mixed feeling about Boston. The course is brutal. It is a downhill run which puts great pressure on the legs and the quads. A runner goes from 462 feet above sea level in Hopkinton to nine feet above sea level in Copley Square. The heartbreak hills of Newton are placed at precisely the point in the marathon where the energy and the will begin to fade for every runner.

"The first half of the race is so easy and fast that we get greedy and go out too fast," said Haydar. "We pay the price at the end of the race. Boston is the most challenging, but not my favorite course."

However, he loves the history of it all and the legendary crowds from the women at Wellesley College to the masses who ring the streets of Boston.

"This is the 117th Boston," said Haydar. "It was the first marathon in this country. Think of the hundreds of thousands of runners who have come here. You run through the cities and towns: Hopkinton, Ashland, Framingham, Natick, Wellesley, Newton, Boston and the history is all around you. At the end the crowds make you finish. I get goose bumps when I hear them in Boston. It is a tunnel of inspiration."

Haydar has been blessed with an injury-free running career. He heard a talk from Greg Meyer, the last American runner to win Boston in 1983. Meyer claimed that the human body has between 15 and 20 years of running marathons in it. Haydar is in year 13. At an age when most men are happy to be able to turn over on the couch, Haydar will run marathons until he can run them no more.

"Running has given me a different perspective on the world. The people I've met, the strength and will I've seen has changed me. I honestly think running has made me a better person," he said.

Quincy's Zach Bailey Wins Silver Mittens Title

By BILL GRIFFIN

Quincy's Zach Bailey waited a long time for his first official fight, but he made it one he will always remember.

Bailey began training and sparring when he was eight. He trained tirelessly on weekends with Tim Stanton and Billy Trasf of the T and D Club in Braintree. He fought in exhibitions, but his first match that counted was in the finals of the 16-and-under, 178-pound class of the Silver Mittens Championships.

Bailey wasted no time when the fight started. He stopped Deavon Cruz of the West End Club in Lowell at 49 seconds of the first round on a TKO to win the title recently at UMass Lowell.

"I had worked hard," said Bailey. "I was confident, but a little nervous. I tried to remember what my trainers had taught me."

The Silver Mittens is a class for fighters 16 and under. Fighters 17 and over compete in the Golden Gloves. One of the reasons that Bailey had fought only exhibitions is that it is difficult finding fighters in his weight class who are 16 and under.

"I had fought some exhibitions, but beyond that I just tried to train hard and be ready if a fight came along," said Bailey.

When the fight began, Bailey used his combinations to take control. He trapped Cruz against the ropes and controlled the action until the referee stopped the fight.

ZACH BAILEY

"I have great trainers," said Bailey. "They showed me how to use my jab and combinations and that's what I remembered in the fight. I was excited. My family was there and it was great to win with them watching."

Bailey enjoys the individual challenge of the sport.

"I like to see how I'll do going up one-on-one with an opponent," he said.

He is a honor-roll student at Boston College High and plays for the basketball team for the Eagles. School, basketball and training for a championship fight make for a busy schedule for a young man.

"You need discipline and you need to manage your time, but it's not too bad," said Bailey. "I save most of my training for the weekends, so it doesn't interfere with school."

A typical training session includes work on the heavy bag, jumping rope, situps and running. It usually lasts more than 90 minutes. Bailey will also spar frequently in training.

"As the Silver Mittens fight got closer, I sparred a lot more often," said Bailey.

Bailey will be eligible for the Golden Gloves when he turns 17. He is not sure about his future boxing plans.

"I haven't made up my mind about the Golden Gloves," said Bailey. "Right now, I want to concentrate on my training and be ready for my next fight if it comes up."

Registration Begins April 2 For Sheriff's Summer Youth Academy

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti announces registration for his popular summer Youth Leadership Academy will begin on April 2.

The academy, which uses an aerial ropes course as a teaching tool, is held at the Norfolk County Public Safety Complex, 2015 Washington St., Braintree, and is open to children, ages 10-to-14, who live in Norfolk County.

Specially trained instructors teach teamwork and help the kids build confidence. Attendees meet challenges and accomplish feats they never thought possible.

The registration process will take place on-line. Visit www.norfolksheriff.com any time on April 2 to fill out the application form.

There is a $75-per-child fee to defray the cost of the program. The fee can be reduced to $25 for children who qualify for their school lunch assistance programs.

"The Youth Leadership Academy has become tremendously popular over the years. The kids learn important lessons while having fun," Sheriff Bellotti said. "Last year, more than 900 boys and girls took advantage of the program, and the feedback we got from them and their parents was overwhelmingly positive."

MICHAEL BELLOTTI

The eight-week academy will be held Monday through Friday from June 24 through Aug. 16. (The week of July 4 will be a four-day session.) Each session is capped off on Friday with an awards and graduation ceremony.

This year, Sheriff Bellotti also established a new Facebook page under the heading "Norfolk County Sheriff's Office Youth Leadership Academy." People with questions about the program can visit that page or Sheriff Bellotti's official website, www.norfolksheriff.com, or they can call the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 781-751-3501.

Basketball Standouts Also Serve The Community

The Gould Brothers: Playing Basketball For The Love Of The Game

By BILL GRIFFIN

Always there was basketball.

From the moment they were old enough to bounce a ball off the ground to the magical ride which took North Quincy to the finals of the sectionals for the first time in 40 years, little that is important has changed for Pat and Danny Gould. They play for the love of the game.

"All I can remember is how much fun it was, how I couldn't get enough of it," said Pat.

As soon as they could walk they played with their older brothers Ned and Paul in the driveway. They learned at ten-foot baskets. There was no tyke baskets, no training-wheels basketball. There were no easy rides for the little ones. The games were battles and they settled them as only twin brothers can. They would play until it was dark, and then sometimes they would sneak the basketball into the house for more hoop.

"We never did. Our mother wouldn't allow it," said Dan.

"Yeah, we did," admitted Pat.

They started youth leagues when they were five. They played through eighth grade for Sacred Heart. They won a state championship in the fifth grade. Now, there is the North season, a fall league, three spring leagues, a summer league, and just so they won't grow weary or their game become stale, there is a mental vacation for a few weeks in August.

"For those weeks, we just go to camp and work on our individual skills," smiled Dan.

Always there is basketball, but there is also much more. They are great kids. There is no other truthful way to express it. They are both National Honor Society students. They both enjoy history. Pat would like to teach history and coach basketball. Both would like to play basketball in college. Both show the quiet leadership of example that made North a team of friends, a remarkably close team, a team which likes each other.

Pat is the president and Dan the vice president of the Rotary Interact Club at school. They do volunteer work. Last Sunday, they helped prepare and serve a pancake breakfast for senior citizens at 1000 Southern Artery. They volunteer at the Quantum Elderly Community. They work with Dan McHugh on the Special Olympics. They help Mark Jaehnig with basketball clinics for younger kids. They coach at Sacred Heart. They have learned at a young age what many never learn: It is important to give back.

"To have one come through would be the foundation for a program, to have them both come through at the same time is a privilege," said North coach Kevin Barrett.

They walked into history this year. They were like little kids in an amusement park enjoying the ride of a lifetime. They are seniors. They will not pass this way again, but this march of theirs through the tourney will always live and grow in the memory. In 40 years, they will talk about Pat and Dan Gould the way they now talk of Dave Nelson and Jamie Doherty from the 1972 team. It is fitting in this fine moment which few experience, that the brothers thought of others as much as they thought of themselves.

"It's been the best experience of my life," said Pat. "To see what it means to the school, the community and the city is what makes it so exciting. The support we've received is unbelievable. The rewarding part is to see how much enjoyment people got from what we did."

Dan Gould talked about his teachers.

"The day after the Newton game was pretty electric around here," he said. "It's been, what, 40 years? I look at my teachers and I think they never got to experience this when they were kids. Now they were excited along with us. It was fun to see."

The Goulds are a throw-back to a simpler time in basketball. They are guards. Just guards. In today's game, there are point guards and shooting guards. The two shall never meet. They might as well play different planets. The Goulds are guards. Pat plays the point, Dan is the shooter. However, their skills are so sound and deep, they could swap roles tomorrow. Dan passes better than most point guards. Pat shoots better than most shooting guards.

"When they came in, I couldn't tell one from the other, so I just threw them out there together," said Barrett.

"I don't know when I became the shooting guard and Pat played the point," said Dan. "In sophomore year we played in a tournament in Lowell and I got hot. Maybe it was then. I honestly don't remember."

"We just always played guard," said Pat. "I love the point because I love to pass the ball. It's the most exciting part of the game for me."

They each had brilliant runs in the tourney wins over Natick, Braintree, and Newton North. Pat's defense on Natick's Alex Hilger and Newton's Tommy Mobley was relentless, but mostly he took care of the basketball. Teams had two choices against North. They could press and watch Pat weave and dribble his way through the army of arms, through the bumping, reaching, and grabbing for open offensive chances. Or, they could give up the press and give up one of the biggest weapons of the post-season, forcing mistakes under tourney pressure. This is the influence a great point guard has on a game. In difficult moments at North, the ball went to Pat Gould.

"The word is trust. I trust him and his teammates trust him with the ball," said Barrett. "That didn't come overnight. That trust has built up from three years starting at point guard and all the work Pat has put into his game."

Dan did what all great shooters want, shoot the ball in the big games. He loved the packed gym against Braintree. He shot his team to big leads against Braintree and Newton and then made 17 of 18 free throws down the stretch in the two games when he simply had to make them. He saved his team from having to make big stops because he kept the lead safe from the line. There were no worries about a defensive mistake, an offensive rebound, a bad foul, a tough call because he kept North's advantage secure. That is the influence a great shooter has on a game. It is what a shooter does.

"These are the games I practice for, the games I want to play," he said. "I want the ball down the stretch, I love taking the big shot for my team in the big games."

Love is the perfect word. From the driveway to Sacred Heart, to North to three spring leagues to this wonderful time in the tourney, it is what inspires Dan and Pat Gould.

For the love of the game.

HOLY WEEK and EASTER SERVICES

Quincy Community United Methodist Church

Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Quincy, will hold a Passover Seder Supper Thursday, March 28. The reading of the Hagadah will begin at 6:30 p.m.

This is the eighth year the church has held a Seder.

"Holding a Seder is a way to learn about and to honor Christianity's Jewish roots," said Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, church pastor. "Quincy Community United Methodist Church encourages the participation of everyone, and so the Hagadah used is very 'hands on.' Everyone who wishes to do so has the opportunity to read and to lead the group."

The meal will be Pot Luck, so everyone is asked to bring a salad, main course, or dessert to share. To ensure the table is set properly, reservations are required. Call the church office at 617-773-3319. Deadline for reservations is Sunday, March 24.

Sacred Heart Parish Seder Dinner March 26

Sacred Heart Parish, 385 Hancock St., North Quincy, is planning a full Jewish Seder dinner for March 26th, Tuesday of Holy Week, at 6 p.m. in the rectory conference room.

Leading the Seder dinner will be Mr. Bruce Fader, a past president and current lay leader at Temple Beth David in Canton and a regular singer with the parish's adult choir for Christmas-time and Holy Week liturgies.

The cost is $15 per person, and reservations are needed by calling Sacred Heart rectory at 617-328-8666 by Friday, March 22nd. The meal will feature roasted turkey breast with matzo stuffing, potato kugel, tsimmes, peas and carrots, honey cake with strawberries and whipped topping, macaroons, and coffee/tea/soda.

"The Seder," which literally translated means "The Order," is the fulfillment of God's commandment found in the book of Leviticus, "...and you will teach them to your children..." It is a combination of the telling of the story of the Exodus from Egypt at a feast where traditional and symbolic foods and wines are consumed. The readings are from a book called the Haggadah, which has as many varied forms as there are temples and congregations. However there are prayers and symbols that are common to all Haggadot.

The telling of the Exodus is a remembrance of oneness of God as witness through His powers. However the Seder also calls upon people to remember and rejoice for their freedom. Not only the physical freedom from bondage, but the religious freedom to worship and bless God.

As depicted in the Institution Narrative at Mass, Jesus offers His body and blood to His disciples at the first Eucharist, which took place during the Seder. This historically is why Easter and Passover are celebrated during the same time of year.

4th Annual Way Of The Cross To Stop At 7 Local Catholic Churches On Good Friday

On Good Friday, March 29, Quincy Catholics will carry the cross throughout the City of Quincy, stopping at each of its seven Catholic Churches.

At each Church, the group will pray two Stations of the Cross before moving on to the next Church.

All are welcome to join in the prayerful journey of remembrance on Good Friday. The group encourages participation of any kind, whether participants are able to walk part of the journey, all of the journey, or not at all.

Many choose to participate by greeting the walkers upon their arrival at a Church, and then staying to pray the two Stations of the Cross.

There is no need to sign up. The Quincy Way of the Cross is not a fundraiser; no money is collected, and no money is spent. The total route of the Way of the Cross covers approximately 12 miles.

The Quincy Way of the Cross steps off from Sacred Heart Church, 386 Hancock St. in North Quincy at 9 a.m.

After leaving Sacred Heart, the itinerary is as follows:

Quincy Community United Methodist Church

Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston, will celebrate the Easter Vigil Saturday, March 30 at 7:30 p.m.

"With the exception of the Episcopalians, very few Protestants have had the opportunity to experience the Easter Vigil," said Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of Quincy Community. "I think this is really unfortunate. The Vigil is one of the most ancient and certainly one of the most dramatic celebrations of the Church year. It's my very favorite worship service."

Dating from the earliest years of the Christian Church, the Vigil literally leads the congregation from Lent to Easter. It does so through word, song, and, most importantly, symbols that refer to Scripture. Because many people today are unfamiliar with symbolic interpretation, explanatory notes are provided in the text of the Vigil service.

"I hope people will take the time to read the explanations," said Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden. "The Vigil is a rich, wonderful service on its own, but when a person understands the meaning behind the ritual, it becomes even richer."

The Easter Vigil is a service unlike any other. For example, everyone planning to attend the Easter Vigil is asked to bring a flashlight and to wear comfortable walking shoes.

Flashlights are used instead of candles for safety reasons.

"Comfortable shoes are also important, because some walking is involved - a short staircase," Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden said. "People then have the option of continuing with the traditional Vigil, which includes more walking, or the non-traditional in which people remain seated in one place. Both groups then join together for the major portion of the service."

The Easter Vigil is very much a participatory worship experience and the more a person puts into the Vigil, the more that person will get out of it, Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden said.

"I think a friend of mine put it best when he said, 'I used to think I "got" Easter here' - and he pointed to his forehead. 'But now,' he continued, 'I get Easter here' - and he pointed to his heart."

"That's what the Easter Vigil is all about, and everyone is cordially invited to share in this wonderful experience," she added.

AFTER 52 YEARS as a fixture in Wollaston Center, Barry's Deli closed its doors on March 12th. The Beale Street deli was opened in 1961 by owner Dan Barry and his family. Recent owner Armand Veliaj and his family owned the business for 10 years before deciding recently to sell it.

Barry's Deli Closing Signals End Of An Era In Wollaston

By EMILY TAFT

Local residents said goodbye to another long time business in Wollaston Center March 12th with the closing of Barry's Deli on Beale Street.

"Barry's Deli was as much a part of the fabric of Wollaston Center as the Wollaston Theater and Blackwood Pharmacy. It almost gave it that Mayberry feel," said Councillor at-Large and former Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro. "It's the fabric of evolution, and it looks like Wollaston Center in some regards is following the path of Quincy Center. The businesses might be changing, but we still have entrepreneurs and business owners who believe in Quincy and Wollaston."

After 52 years of service, the deli's recent owner Armand Veliaj, who has owned the business for 10 years, said that he decided to put the business on the market six months ago because he wanted to move in a different direction and do something a little easier.

"It is a family-owned business and we decided that we wanted to move in a different direction," Veliaj said. "It has been a tough business to be in and we wanted to do something a little easier. We will be taking some time off before we begin to move forward."

For Walter Stanziani, a Merrymount Road resident, and frequent visitor of Barry's Deli, the closing of the deli has left him, along with many of his friends, wondering where they will go for their morning cup of coffee and breakfast.

"We would go seven days a week in the morning and have breakfast," Stanziani said. "There were about eight to 10 of us that would go every morning and we stayed until about 11 a.m. There are not many places around that would let you stay that long. I feel kind of bad about them leaving, they were all nice people."

Stanziani has been going to breakfast at Barry's for over 30 years and has seen the business change hands at least three times. For Stanziani Barry's Deli wasn't just a place to grab breakfast every morning, it was a place where he celebrated his 90th birthday, and where they knew his order and had it ready before he even stepped inside.

"They were all good to me. They treated me well," said Stanziani. "Most of the time if they saw me coming they would already be cooking up my usual as I was walking in the door. Sometimes they would already have it ready for me. Everyone hates to see it close up."

After the deli closed, Stanziani along with many of his friends have been looking for a new place to go, but he said they have been unsuccessful in their search.

"This morning I went to Panera Bread for breakfast but it wasn't the same," said Stanziani. "We kind of split up and only a few of us were there and others went to Friendly's. It is a big difference from what we were used to."

Original owner, Dan Barry, opened the deli in 1961 after he and his family moved from Dorchester where they owned and operated Ann's Lunch in the 1950's.

Colonial Federal Bank President and Councillor at-Large Michael McFarland bought the business from the original owner in 1978 after working for them for many years while he was in high school and college.

"I worked for the Barry family when I was in high school and then in college as a part time employee," said McFarland. "My parents use to shop there and eat there when I was a child, and when Dan (the original owner) decided to sell I bought it from him. I had a lot of fun there and we had a lot of wonderful customers. It gave me the opportunity to live and work in the same area. It was a very enjoyable experience."

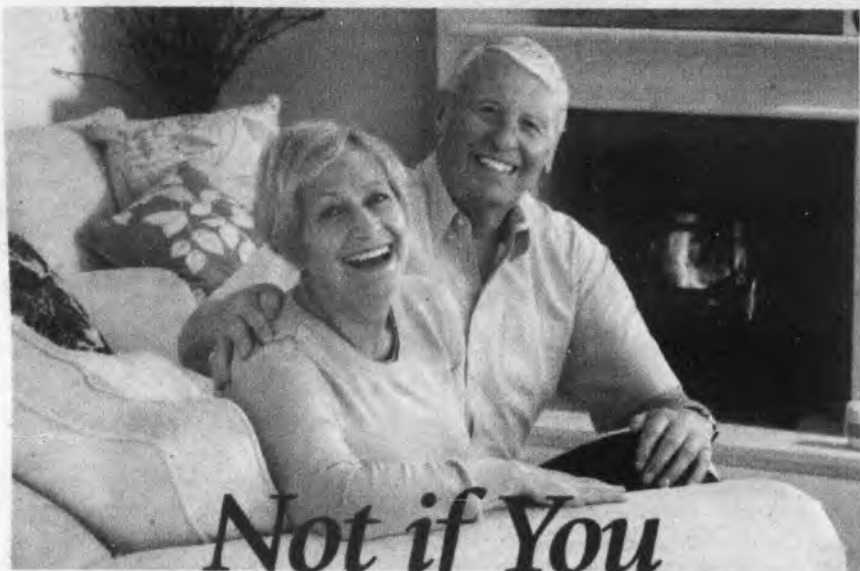

McFarland, who owned the business for 23 years, said that it is unusual for a business such as Barry's to have lasted as long as it did.

"Over the years people's eating habits change, and the neighborhood around them has changed," said McFarland. "It is unusual for it to have lasted this long, it is a rare exception."

The business has changed ownership at least four times according to McFarland, who said he went there often after he sold it in 2002.

"I actually had breakfast there last Thursday," McFarland said during a phone interview with The Sun on March 13th. "I went there often and I've met a lot of wonderful people there."

Built This Summer Both Sides Of Mechanic St.

New 'Pocket' Parks To Line Town Brook

By SCOTT JACKSON

With water now flowing through the Town Brook's new culvert, the city has shifted its focus to designing the two new pocket parks that will line the brook.

The city is planning to build the parks along the brook on both sides of Mechanic Street. They are expected to cost a total of $200,000 to build and $30,000 to design and engineer, an amount that will be paid for using the $10.1 million MassWorks grant Quincy received to relocate the Brook. The parks will be built this summer, since the city needs to use the MassWorks grant by the end of August.

City officials and representatives from Ulrich Bachand Landscape Architecture and EBI Consulting – the two firms overseeing the parks' design – hosted a public meeting to gather input on the design at the Thomas Crane Library Wednesday night. At the meeting, UBLA's Matt Ulrich outlined the general concepts behind the plan – showcasing Quincy and the brook's history and provide information on the overall downtown development that reconstructing of the brook is part of.

"We wanted to do something that respected the history of the area and also provided for a sense of discovery of exactly what's going on here," Ulrich said. "There's obviously some big engineering feat going

QPS Implementing New Student Info System

By EMILY TAFT

Students and parents of the Quincy Public Schools System can expect to return to school this fall with a new student and information system implemented on-line.

The new system, titled Aspen, maximizes teacher effectiveness and learning by continually integrating system efficiencies, instruction, curriculum and on-line learning management that benefits the each user. Access to Aspen will be tailored to the users needs and their Quincy Public School role.

Data Processing Coordinator Ellen Garofalo said that Aspen would be fully implemented by Aug. 12 for the 2013-14 school year.

The program offers nine different modules and components three of which will be brand new to the QPS student information system. One of the new additions will allow students and parents to access their grades, classes, submit class work, and check their attendance, through the student and parent portal. The pages that show a student's individual classes will be as creative and informative as the classes each respective teacher chooses to make it.

"Aspen attendance has available a seating chart with student pictures which would assist a substitute that comes into the building," said Garofalo. "Daily

To Expand Nurse Care Management Program Manet Community Health Receives $125,000 Grant

By EMILY TAFT

Manet Community Health Center received a $125,000 grant Tuesday through the Partnership for Community Health, which will be used to expand its Nurse Care Management and Care Coordination Program.

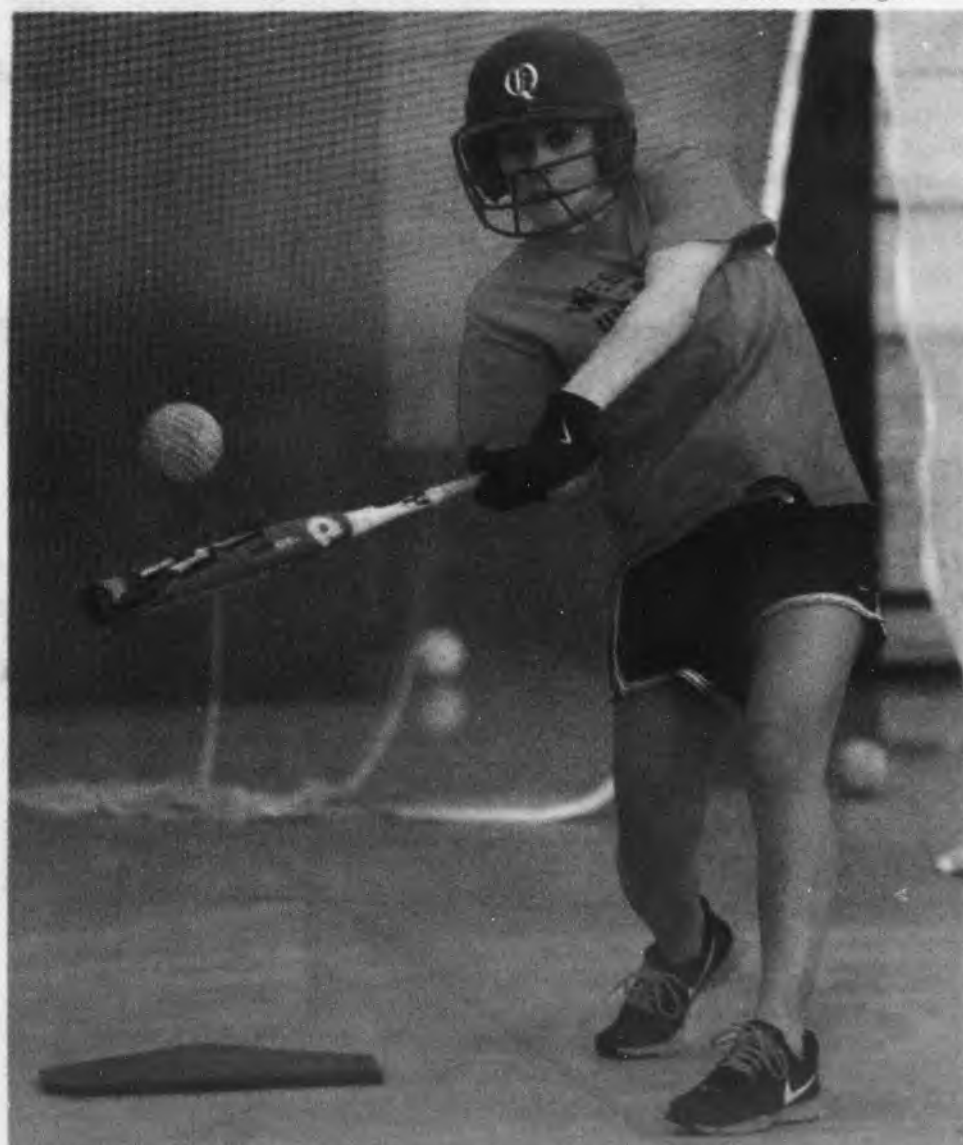

"With this investment we will advance our mission to provide high quality low cost care close to home that is accessible, affordable, culturally confident, and linguistically appropriate," said Manet Community Health Center CEO Henry Tuttle. "In doing this not only will we be providing this care that is needed now, but that in which our future patients require. By improving and maintaining our patients health outcomes with health promotion and disease prevention, intervention and mitigation this will last and make a profound difference in our patients today and in days to come."

'Wonderful' Tribute To Art Association Founder

Arts Center To Be Dedicated To Antoinette Paglierani

By EMILY TAFT

This spring the city will dedicate the Quincy Arts Center in memory of Antoinette Paglierani, one of the founding members of the Quincy Art Association, who died on Jan. 16.

The members of the City Council voted unanimously recently to approve the dedication.

Paglierani was a founding member of both the Quincy Art Association and the Quincy Art Festival, along with being the past President of the Quincy Art Association. In 2007, her painted ornament of the John Adams Houses was displayed on the White House Christmas tree.

"I can't imagine anything more wonderful than for the art center to be dedicated to Annette," said Marilyn Reisberg, a long-time friend, former Quincy Art Association president, and member of the Arts Affair Committee. "She certainly was the Quincy Art Association. She was just so dedicated to it. She was just an unbelievable person and unbelievable artist."

Paglierani helped open the doors to the Quincy Art Association, located at 26 High School Ave., in 1986. Since its opening it has offered classes, education forums, and hosted a number of special events for the Quincy community.

Reisberg said that before settling in the building the association is in now, meetings were held in the back of a store on McGrath Highway. After the owner of the shop moved and no longer had the space for the meetings, the association began to hold meeting in city facilities.

"Where ever we could hold a meeting we did," said Reisberg. "We had a meeting in front of city hall with the mayor at the time and he agreed that we could rent out an old World War II storage building, which prior to that was a school."

Reisberg said that her and Paglierani shared the duty of president when the association was first formed.

"She was the president, and then I would take it for a year and she would take it after that," said Reisberg. "It was hard to find a president. No one was as good as she was that's for sure. She was fabulous."

QUINCY ARTS CENTER at 26 High School Ave. in Quincy Center will be dedicated in memory of Antoinette Paglierani, one of the founding members of the Quincy Art Association. A ceremony will take place this spring.

New 'Pocket' Parks To Line Town Brook

on and it makes you wonder what's happening there. We wanted to invite people into these two spaces and provide some opportunities to really carry through the space and overlook this area and signage opportunities that would tie in with that and provide some educational information as to what the project is all about."

In terms of design, Ulrich said they want the parks to look like meandering streams, with banks and islands, when viewed from above.

"We envision these two parks as being basically tributaries of the original brook. We use these organic shapes and organic forms to really create almost like another stream bed effect," Ulrich explained. "We gave a lot of thought to linking the two pieces together. These organic forms carry through to both parks, and we provided planted islands within. There's no lawn in either of these parks. They're both heavily planted, but they're planted with very low species to keep everything very open, very secure."

"In the center of these two areas there will be two rain gardens," he continued. "Basically a rain garden is just a shallow depression that's heavily planted that provides an opportunity for any storm water to just settle in it and slowly drain back into the water table. We're also providing some opportunities for lights. There will be some acorn-style street lights throughout the park located in three locations."

In lieu of traditional wooden park benches, the two pocket parks will have granite blocks taken from the old brook wall that can be used for seating.

"There were all these great granite blocks taken out of the original Town Brook wall," Ulrich said. "Some of those are really cool slabs of granite we thought we could meander and use as informal seating opportunities that we could place within these areas."

The designers are also looking into ways to incorporate the keystone from the American Legion Post 95, which was razed to make way for construction of the new culvert, into the design of the park on the Revere Road side of Mechanic Street where the Legion building was. Revere Road resident Arline Goodman had asked the city to preserve that cornerstone last summer, at the suggestion of resident William Zamzow.

"We also have a keystone that's also left over from the Legion building that we plan on incorporating into the park somewhere. We really like this idea of tying into the history of the site by repurposing that keystone piece," Ulrich said.

The new parks will have river birch and maple trees overhanging Town Brook to provide shade necessary to promote the spawning of smelt in the water below. While the designers have already identified what trees to use, they haven't chosen what flowers will be planted. They do want plants that won't require much upkeep in terms of pruning and irrigation.

"We're not there yet as far as exactly what we're planting but I can tell you the pallet will be definitely comprised of some natives. We're looking for drought tolerance - it's about planting the right plant in the right spot," Ulrich said. "We're looking for security and for things to be open so it's probably things that only max out at two feet or whatever we decide so that the city is not going back every year and drastically pruning these things five years down the road or they're not ripping things out three years down the road because of overcrowding.

"There's going to be some initial irrigation here but eventually we'd like to get to the point where after it's established - as far as water-wise - it's like xeriscaping almost where you walk away."

Ulrich invited members of the Wollaston Garden Club, who were present at the meeting, to submit their input on which plants to use. Residents at the meeting, including Goodman, said the parks' lighting fixtures should be designed to minimize the amount of light pollution that bleeds into the residential areas near the park.

"I had the personal experience of having the all-night football field lighting light up my whole house for the whole night there two weeks ago," Goodman said. "Hopefully the lighting is going to take into account that there are residents in the homes right next door on both sides."

Goodman also suggested the parks be named after Paul J. Revere - the Civil War hero for whom Revere Road is named - and the American Legion Post that needed to be torn down.

C-Mart Traffic Impact Detailed At Public Hearing

By SCOTT JACKSON

Members of the City Council heard details about the traffic impact of a proposed C-Mart during a second public hearing on the plan.

BSC Group President Charles Kalauskas, who conducted a traffic study on behalf of C-Mart owner Michael Fang, presented data from the study during Monday night's meeting at North Quincy High School. According to the study, the C-Mart would generate 83 vehicle trips during the weekday morning peak hour, 324 vehicle trips during the weekday afternoon/evening peak hour, and 262 trips during peak hour on Saturdays.

Fang has proposed opening the C-Mart in the former Boston Gear Works building on Hayward Street in North Quincy, which is in an industrial zoning district. As part of the traffic study, Kalauskas looked at the uses for the building Fang wouldn't need a special permit for — as-of-right uses — and compared their added vehicle trips to C-Mart's. In the study, Kalauskas divided the building into a movie theater, a medical/dental office, an office, a restaurant, and a garden center. He said those as-of-right uses would create 102 vehicle trips during weekday morning peak hours, 192 during weekday afternoon/evening peak hours, and 337 during Saturday peak hours.

"In the morning peak hour there are fewer trips generated — 19 fewer trips — with the C-Mart proposal versus the as-of-right. There are more trips — 132 more trips — in the afternoon peak hour. And then Saturday there'd be fewer trips as well," Kalauskas said.

The City Council rejected the C-Mart proposal in 2009, which was appealed. A settlement reached last year remanded the proposal back to the council with several conditions. One of those was that the council compare C-Mart's traffic impact to as-of-right use traffic impacts, according to attorney Michael Murray, who represented Fang during the appeal.

During the first public meeting two weeks ago, residents had complained about the amount of truck traffic that C-Mart would bring to Hayward Street, which is already the designated truck route to the Hannaford supermarket — the Hannaford's plaza is adjacent to the proposed C-Mart site. But Kalauskas said C-Mart would only need a handful of deliveries a day.

"There were some questions about truck deliveries, the number of trucks, and I think there may be a misperception in terms of the number of trucks coming to and from the site," Kalauskas said. "There'd be three to four trucks a day, during the off peak hours."

The council also heard from Fayssal Husseini and

JAMES COFFEY of Marlboro Street urged the council to vote against the C-Mart planning, citing traffic problems on Hancock Street in North Quincy. Quincy Sun Photos/Scott Jackson

Christine Keches from Nitsch Engineering who were asked to peer review Kalauskas' study for the city. Husseini said the traffic count numbers used as a basis for the study were flawed because traffic congestion at Hancock and Hayward's intersection is so bad it causes the reported numbers to be lower than the actual numbers.

"That backup does extend all the way to the Hannaford driveway. If a vehicle is attempting to leave the intersection and it's really behind in the queue it's not going to go anywhere," Husseini said. "I can sit there with a time clock and try to count those vehicles and then there's nobody going, so basically I would not count them. At the end of the 15-minute interval when we count traffic, the volume would be much less than if there was a free flow of traffic. Basically there's an underestimation of the quantity of traffic — that's what we believe."

As part of the plan, Fang has proposed signaling the intersection Hancock and Hayward, and creating and class period attendance could be done at the high school level while just daily attendance is done at the elementary level. Using electronic daily attendance would significantly enhance communication to parents."

Another new addition will be an area for teachers to sign up and explore different professional development courses in the area.

"The Professional development piece of the system gives the ability for staff to track their own professional development as well as to registry for local professional development offerings," Garofalo said. "Similar to the special education module many teams including the superintendents leadership team and the curriculum team will be responsible for developing an implementation plan."

One thing that Garofalo said was a deciding factor in going with the Aspen system was the scheduling piece.

"Scheduling in ASPEN was one of the key factors during the decision process. ASPEN allows online quest request by students with their parents. ASPEN automates both the high school and middle school teacher recommendation process," said Garofalo. "Rather than paper passing between teachers at the middle school level, or students lining up for recommendations and signatures at the high school level. Online quest requests for high school students will simplify the process, save paper, energy and time, for students, teaching staff, guidance staff, and IT staff. Utilizing the enhanced features of the ASPEN scheduler we hope to send high school students home, with their schedules, when they leave in June."

- On April 14, 1865, John Wilkes Booth, an actor and Confederate sympathizer, fatally shoots President Abraham Lincoln at a play at Ford's Theater in Washington, D.C. The attack came only five days after Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered his army at Appomattox Court House in Virginia.

- On April 8, 1916, at the Boulevard Race in Corona, Calif., an early racing car careens into a crowd of spectators, killing the driver and two others. The fatal accident helped encourage organizers to begin holding races on specially built tracks instead of regular streets.

- On April 13, 1939, the heavy cruiser USS Astoria arrives in Japan under the command of Capt. Richmond Turner in an attempt to photograph the Japanese battleships Yamato and Musashi in a pre-war reconnaissance. The Astoria was sunk during Operation Watchtower in the Solomon Islands in August 1942.

- On April 12, 1945, U.S. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt dies of a cerebral hemorrhage in his home at Warm Springs, Ga. The only man to be elected to four terms as president of the United States, Roosevelt is remembered for his New Deal social policies and his leadership during wartime.

- On April 10, 1953, the horror film "The House of Wax," starring Vincent Price, opens at New York's Paramount Theater. It was the first feature from a major motion-picture studio to be shot using the three-dimensional, or stereoscopic, film process, and one of the first horror films to be shot in color.

- On April 9, 1962, President John F. Kennedy throws out the ceremonial first pitch in Washington D.C.'s new stadium. He continued a long-standing tradition that began in 1910 when President William H. Taft threw out Major League Baseball's first opening-day pitch in Washington D.C.'s old Griffith Stadium.

- On April 11, 1970, Apollo 13, the third lunar landing mission, is successfully launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla. After an oxygen tank exploded on the evening of April 13, however, the new mission objective became to get the Apollo 13 crew home alive.

Kiwanis Heroes Making A Difference

You don't have to look far to find a hero in Quincy.

They live in the community, attend local schools and make a difference with their unselfish deeds and exemplary community service.

And every spring, the Kiwanis Club of Quincy honors these elementary, middle and high school students as "Junior Heroes." Sixteen were recently recognized by the club at the eighth annual Patrick T. White Junior Heroes Award breakfast held at the Tirrell Room, Quincy Lodge of Elks.

The award is named in memory of Patrick White, who was a hero in his own right.

Patrick, who was afflicted with a rare form of cancer, touched many lives, especially children with cancer. He passed away at the much-too-tender age of 15 in 2005.

But Patrick's spirit lives on with the Kiwanis Junior Heroes breakfast and awards ceremony. The recipients – like Patrick – possess the qualities of compassion, honesty and selflessness serving others.

Here are the profiles of this year's award recipients with excerpts taken from the Kiwanis Junior Hero Breakfast program. The recipients are nominated by a teacher, counselor or principal and a Kiwanis committee reviews the submissions and makes the final selections.

"The recipients are a model for all of us," said Kiwanis Club President Fran Wright. "We are proud of each of you and your accomplishments. We too should strive to make each day count for something good and honest."

NICOLE BUCKLEY, fourth grader, Merrymount Elementary School.

"Nicole is a very kind and compassionate girl who works hard at school and is always kind to her classmates. Nicole unofficially volunteers her time at the Quincy Animal Shelter. She spends time on the weekends and Thursday nights playing and training the animals at QAS. She has organized a donation drive and helps with fundraisers for the animal shelter.

"One of her ambitions when she grows up is to open her own animal shelter and to be a judge."

BRENDAN CAVIN, fourth grader, Atherton Hough Elementary School.

"Brendan began raising money for Charity: Water after he learned from his dad how many countries around the world don't have clean drinking water. The non-profit organization brings clean and safe drinking water to people in developing nations. All the money donated goes back into building fresh-water wells, rainwater catchments and sand filters.

"This summer, Brendan created a graphic for t-shirts (it read "I like bugs, but not in my water.") He sold over 400 of these shirts and raised nearly $5,000. He wants to bring clean water to Africa and a well costs about $5,000 to build. He wants to build many wells in a lot of countries and thinks he will do this the rest of his life."

ABIGAIL COUGHLIN, second grader, Squantum School.

"Abigail Coughlin is a wonderful child who is always kind and compassionate. There is never a day when she is not doing her best, thinking about others and helping those around her.

"One day Abigail found out that another student in class lost his mother over the summer. She was so sad for him. She knew that his birthday was the next day and she could not imagine how he felt without his mom. She was so thoughtful that she went home and with her Mom, bought cookies for a treat and got a gift for him.

"Abigail brought in the gifts and gave them to him the next day. Through her act of kindness, she put a big beautiful smile on the boy's face. I know that Abigail made his day so much brighter!

"Abigail is constantly asking if she can help in the classroom in any way whether it is helping a friend or tidying up the room. She has grown her hair and donated it to Locks for Love and is currently growing her hair again."

JOSEPH CRISTIANI, eighth grader, Point Webster Middle School.

"The terrible storm Hurricane Sandy affected Joseph's life and his Boy Scout Troop so they decided they wanted to help. The Boy Scout Troop decided they would go to New Jersey and help get a lot of things on track.

"This was their first year going and the devastation that occurred at their local camp was terrible. There were fallen trees and brush and they really needed help cleaning it up. Some of the people hadn't had power for a long time and the troop really wanted to help these people without things, things that they have.

"It was a great feeling to know that I can give hope to the people in New Jersey affected by the hurricane. Members of the Boy Scout Troop thought it was pretty sad to think about these people who have no food or power. The troop even got food donated and gave it to a local church to distribute.

"Joseph was very inspired by this experience."

CAROL DHIMOGHINI, NICOLE LLUSHI and ILIA KARELLO, fifth graders, Sterling Middle School.

ILIA

"These three students have gone above and beyond the duty of a student. In October, a new student from Albania moved into the fifth grade. She could not speak a word of English. All three students when asked to help her, stepped in immediately and began translating, advocating, and comforting this scared fifth grader.

"Every morning without being prompted both girls visit her homeroom to check in on the student. Ilia helped her every morning at her locker get organized for her day. He also helped within the classes. During class lessons, he chose to sit near her so that he could provide her with help.

"All three students not only answered her questions, but provided comfort to this scared girl. All three students are very thoughtful and would anticipate the girl's needs and provide her with answers before they happen. Quincy is lucky to have three outstanding individuals with impressive qualities in the community."

COURTNEY DONDERO and MADISON DONDERO, fourth and fifth graders respectively, Merrymount Elementary School.

"Last November, in Stitches Sewing and Design Studio hosted Operation Santa's Workshop. In just over five hours, Courtney and Madison and other children who volunteered, successfully made over 200 stockings (cutting, sewing, pressing and stuffing) for

Crackdown On Parking Violators

By SCOTT JACKSON

A towing ordinance, introduced by Councillor John J. Lydon, Jr. and passed by the council authorized the Police Department to crackdown on illegal parking.

The measure, primarily aimed at commuters who park all day near MBTA stations and shipyard employees who block streets around the yard, allowed the police to tow cars in designated tow zones for a laundry list of violations, including parking on sidewalks or crosswalks, blocking driveways, parking too close to an intersection or fire hydrant, and double parking.

The tow zones needed to be proposed by the council and referred to the Quincy's traffic commission before gaining final approval by the council. Residents circulated petitions asking for those tow zones to be established.

Additionally, Councillor-Rep. James A. Sheets filed legislation on Beacon Hill that would permit the city to tow the cars of any scofflaw with at least five outstanding parking tickets. He introduced a resolve to the same effect at the council meeting, saying it was similar to ones in Boston and Brookline.

CONTROVERSIAL LIQUOR LICENSE GRANTED

In an unusual special meeting, the License Board voted 3-1 to approve a transfer of a liquor license to a planned package store at 179-203 Newport Ave. in North Quincy.

The License Board held two public hearings on the proposed store - LG Liquors - before the special meeting. In the first meeting, abutters favored the plan while other liquor store owners opposed in. In the second hearing, however, public sentiment was against the new store. Several dozen residents expressed opposition at that second meeting; the Wollaston Citizens Association organized much of that opposition.

Before the board's vote in the special meeting David Trainor, an attorney representing LG Liquors, reassured the board that traffic problems predicted by residents opposing the plan would not occur. He added that the area could support another liquor store, because there were only one or two others on the Newport Avenue side of North Quincy.

"The law is clear and my client is entitled to a transfer under it," Trainor said.

City Clerk John Gillis, Fire Chief Edward Barry, and Police Chief Francis X. Finn all voted in favor of the transfer. Health Commissioner Samuel Solomon was opposed.

STRAND SEWER FIX A YEAR AWAY

Residents of The Strand area off Wollaston Beach were told they'd need to wait another year before the city could fix sewer problems in the neighborhood.

In February, residents of Watkins Street complained of raw sewage spewing into their yards. Public Works Commissioner Paul Anderson said the sewer line would need replacement, but that would be too expensive. So the city couldn't take action until federal funding became available until the summer of 1978 under a master plan for the whole Wollaston Area.

In the meantime, Anderson said the city would help residents pump out the sewage when necessary.

Questions About Constructing Affordable Housing

Scott Jackson's cover story "Affordable Housing Trust Fund to Receive 700K from Developer" raises more questions than it answers.

I am not a lawyer and do not wish to parse the legalese of "Under the land disposal agreement (LDA) between the city and the developer" versus the precise language of Chapter 40B laws. As a lay person, my understanding is that in lieu of building actual affordable housing units, the developer, Beal/Street-Works is required to contribute $10,000 per new unit of (luxury) housing to the Affordable Housing Trust Fund.

Affordable housing is less profitable and Beal/Street-Works cannot hope to recoup their investment in the downtown development of Quincy otherwise. Fair enough. Since their ultimate payment to the Trust Fund will be $3 million, they are indeed very hopeful of their success. So aren't we all.

My questions concern the construction of actual affordable housing. Who are the members of the Affordable Housing Trust Fund Committee who according to Asst. City Solicitor Paul Hines, "had unanimously approved deferring $2.3 million of payment."

Whether paid now or later, just who are responsible for this Trust Fund? To paraphrase The Watchmen, "Who trusts the Trust Funders?" Do they have any plans to build the affordable housing that this city needs? Is affordable housing even a part of the downtown development master plan? If yes, when will they share their plans with their fellow citi-

Blinking Lights Cheapen City

Many years ago when I was a young City Councillor, I noticed a great many blinking lights in the City of Quincy. I had an Ordinance passed that there would be no blinking lights in the city because blinking lights make a city look cheap.

Recently, I have noticed, zens? If no, why not?

There is a lot of excitement among city officials about the glimmering 21st century Quincy that is coming. Please be realistic. In addition to high-rise apartments and ground floor retail stores, Beal/Street-Works' plan calls for the construction of a big box store, a multiplex cinema, after 50 years, that blinking lights are appearing in the City of Quincy. This is wrong. If the Ordinance has changed, the person who did it should be ashamed of themselves.

George G. Burke

Quincy City Council

restaurants, garages, even a year-round farmers' market.

These employers of the future will provide jobs that will pay at or below minimum wage. These service workers will work very hard to make life very pleasant for the posh inhabitants of the deluxe apartments in the sky.

Where will these tax-paying workers live? Will they be able to afford to live in Quincy? In the final analysis, will the downtown development raise many, many boats or just a few yachts?

I am very curious to learn what Mayor Koch and the City Council have to say about these serious concerns.

Local Author's Second Book Set In Quincy

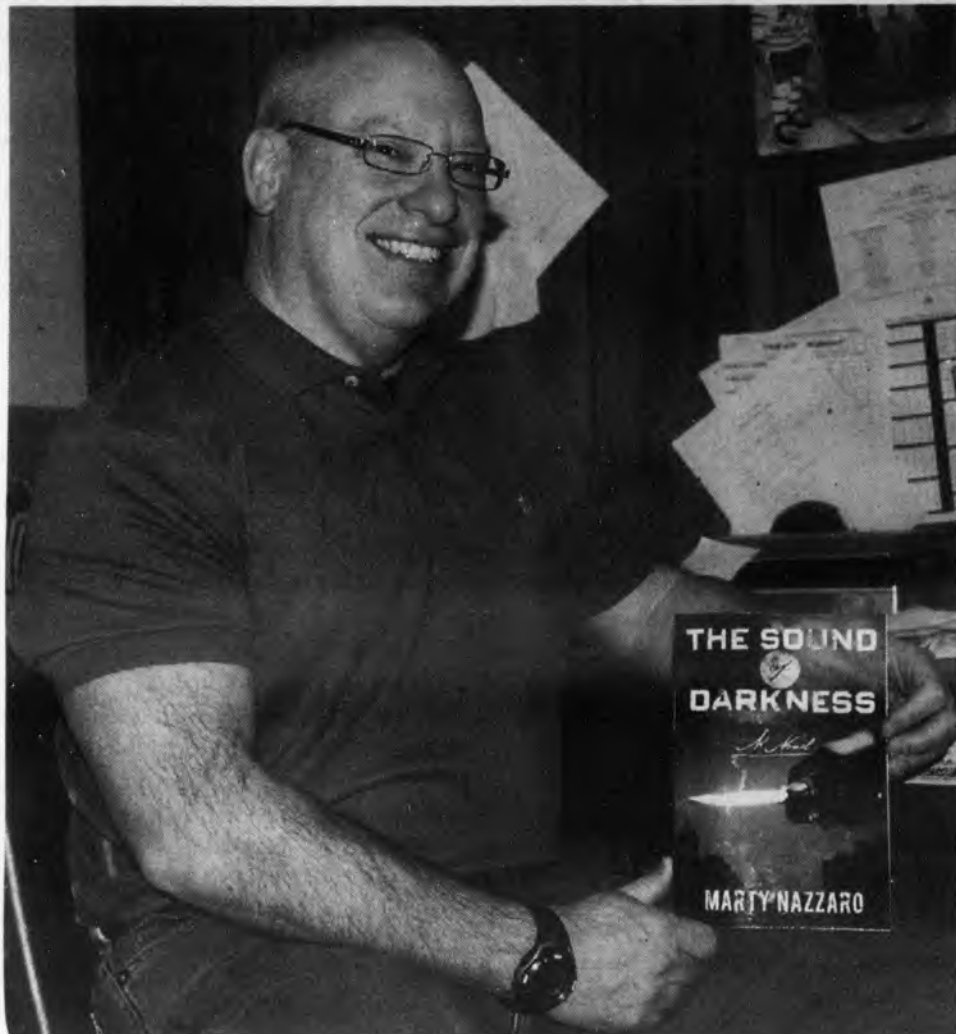

By EMILY TAFT

When life-long Quincy resident and self-published author Marty Nazzaro started writing his second book, "The Sound of Darkness" he knew he wanted to create a story that was completely different from his first book.

"I've always liked writing, I just did it, not to make money or anything. I just enjoyed doing it," said Nazzaro. "I got such a good response from the first book that people were asking me for another book, and that's where 'The Sound of Darkness' came in. I just wrote something completely different. It's a 'who done it' so the reader can sit back and enjoy it."

The book is about a serial killer in Quincy who is killing the homeless. The story explores the mind of a serial killer, along with the trauma he leaves behind and the detectives who are searching for him. Many local places and people in Quincy are mentioned in the story, from Father Bill's Place, to The Quincy Sun, along with a number of well-known resident's names. Nazzaro said he found that after his first book people approached him asking to be in the second book.

"One of the neat things

QUINCY AUTHOR Marty Nazzaro holds a copy of his second book entitled "The Sound of Darkness." The fictional book is set in Quincy. Quincy Sun Photo/Emily Taft

I found with the first book was people like seeing their name in the book. I was really nervous about putting somebody's name I know in it," said Nazzaro.

"Anyone who told me they would love to be in the next book was put in this book. If you read it and think you know who the character is named after you're probably right."

The Adams Shore resident and father of four wrote the book within a year of starting it and said that the hardest part was editing the pages multiple times.

"The whole process is tough," said Nazzaro. "I could write the entire book in a couple of months but it's piecing it all together and editing it that takes time."

So far, Nazzaro has sold over 600 copies since the book went on sale this past November, which is already over the amount he sold of his first book, "The City of Presidents."

"For me it was a personal great success. I am hoping to double the sales of my first book," said Nazzaro. "I think it's a pretty clever 'who done it.' I wanted to make sure I didn't just pull someone out of the hat at the end. I wanted the people who liked the first one to be entertained by this one, and that's why I chose to write a 'who done it' and that's why I chose a serial killer. At the end of the day all I want is for people to enjoy my book."

"The Sound of Darkness" can be found on Amazon.com, and any other online bookstores, along with local Stop & Shop stores in Quincy, Braintree and Dorchester.

Heather Quigley Attends Benefit For Max Warburg Courage Curriculum

The Max Warburg Courage Curriculum recently celebrated its 22nd anniversary at the Liberty Hotel. Nearly 200 supporters and friends attended the event to support the organization's middle and high school literacy and character development programs.

ful reflections on the impact the Courage Curriculum has had on her life. Quigley recently joined over 100 other volunteers serving as essay judges, in preparation for the organization's annual publication The Courage of Boston's Children.

During the event, guests enjoyed wines donated by M.S. Walker, while toasting to the organization's continued growth on a local, national and international level. In addition to partnering with over 60 schools in Boston and surrounding communities, the organization works with schools in cities such as New York, Houston, Seattle, Detroit, Birmingham, Atlanta, and Chicago. "The Max" also has partnerships with educators in eight countries abroad, including Thailand, Cambodia, Mozambique, the United Kingdom, and Pakistan.

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY

The popularity of diamond "eternity rings" seems likely to go on unabated for, well, eternity. These rings remain immense favorites because they are both understated and luxurious. Their name is derived from the fact that the slender gold, white gold, or platinum bands are encrusted with a row of diamonds, usually set pavé, all the way around. Symbolizing the eternal circle of love and life, eternity rings are a favorite wedding-band selection. The beauty of their design also allows eternity rings to be stacked on the finger, which has led to their popularity as gifts for anniversaries and other special moments in couples' lives. With each diamond ring stacked upon the next, thoughts of eternal love become ever stronger.

Eternity rings are symbols of love, commitment, romance and eternity. They are the perfect way to express your love. Not only do they look beautiful from any angle, they also make ideal wedding bands to accompany an engagement ring. You will find exquisite eternity diamond rings in our store. Come explore all we have to offer at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center or call us at 617-773-3636. We have a number of different diamond eternity ring styles that have a wonderful regal quality about them and are truly breathtaking.

North Quincy High School Students Participate In Massachusetts History Day

A group of North Quincy High School 11th grade history students successfully participated in the Regional Massachusetts History Day competition and placed high enough in their categories to move on to the state competition on April 6th.

National History Day is an annual competition much like Science Fair for History. Students are able to choose a research topic of their choice tying it to the N.H.D. theme for the year and this 2013 competition has students showcasing their topic as a "Turning Point in History."

"Massachusetts has always had a wonderful showing of participants and we are hoping that the success of our N.Q.H.S. students will bring them to the national competition in Washington, D.C. in June," said North Quincy High School History Teacher Kristen McCarthy.

"Our group performance, including four students, conducted research, created an annotated bibliography which included at least five primary sources, and wrote a script on the Boston Massacre as a turning point for revolution here in the American Colonies. Their performance was judged at the regional competition by college history professors and experts and was chosen to move on to the State competition as they placed first in their category."

The students who advanced to the state level are Andrew Keezer, Long Gong, Cindi Hazelton and Natasha Sautter.

Declan McGaffigan, a junior at North Quincy High School, will also participate at the state level after his success in the individual documentary category on the Creation of the Secret Service placed second.

"We are extremely proud of our students and wish them luck at the state competition," McCarthy added.

The children will use their new bug knowledge to build their very own model insect to take home.

The workshop will be held on Saturday, April 20th at 10 a.m. at the Main Library.

Registration is required.

Neighborhood Health Plan and Partners HealthCare, will allow for Manet to increase the programs hours of service, secure a Nurse Care Management Leader, and establish a Care Coordination Review Team.

"This is an important step to care for our community health centers. The grants, under the partnership for community health, will allow community health centers the ability to develop measurable programs that enhance outcomes, service, efficiency, and quality of care. During the first phase these projects will specifically focus on expanding programs and improving infrastructure," said President and CEO of Neighborhood Health Plan Deborah Enos.

"Not only will this grant help improve service to the members served but it will also enable the health center to reach level three accreditation of the Massachusetts patient center medical health initiative."

Forty-nine community health centers were awarded grants, totaling $4.25 million, in what is the first round of grants in a 15 year initiative of NHP. Grants were given out in four different categories; health information technology reporting, meaningful use training, medical coding training, and training and capacity building for performance improvement.

President and CEO of the Massachusetts League of Community Health Centers James Hunt, Jr., said that community health centers have become the patient medical care centers of choice.

"Massachusetts health centers grew by 31 percent from 2005 to 2009. I like to say and a lot of people I think believe that we've become the patient center medical home of choice rather than the care of last resort," said Hunt.

"We've grown to 820,000 people in Massachusetts using a community health center as their medical home. That's one of eight residents of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, a very significant achievement. This partnership is so important and so critical. The investments that will come through this grant program are targeted to long term transformation and provide stable and immeasurable support."

a left-turn only lane on the northbound side of Hancock leading into Hayward. Keches said traffic during the busiest hours will create long lines heading into the intersection and blocking access to the left turn lane.

"While the addition of a left turn lane will be great to get the left-turning vehicles over, the through volume is actually so high and the queue is so long that most of the times during peak hours the left turn lane will be blocked," Keches said. "You'll still have to wait in the queue before you get up to that left turn lane."

Officials representing C-Mart also said Monday they would leave five of the 91 parking spaces at site for area residents. In the meeting two weeks ago they said patrons of other business, particularly the Wheelhouse Diner, could also use the parking lot. Keches said that could lead to a situation where there are not enough spots for C-Mart customers.

"While the proponent very admirably is [leaving] five spots for neighborhood residents, they've also said that they may allow the Wheelhouse Diner patrons to park in their lot. We have a big concern when they let too many other people come in," Keches said. "There may not be enough room for C-Mart people. First and foremost, their patrons need to be accommodated because otherwise they'll end up parking on Hayward."

Residents were also afforded a second opportunity to comment on the proposal at this week's meeting. Ten spoke against it, all of them citing traffic concerns.

"Trying to get into Hanaford's, which I do shop at every week, sometimes can be a real test," Marlboro Street resident James Coffey said. "I adamantly oppose the C-Mart for Hayward Street. I don't oppose it because it's C-Mart, I would oppose if it was any other market going in. I do urge C-Mart to find another location, preferably North Quincy."

About three-dozen residents spoke in favor of the project, including some who read prepared statements. Fang also provided a court certified translator, Gar Chiang, after residents complained about the lack of a translator during the meeting two weeks ago. Many people in favor of the project dismissed the traffic concerns.

"The reality is the traffic is a city problem. It's not a C-Mart problem. This petitioner here is not creating the traffic problems that exist and those traffic problems will continue to exist," Oxenbridge Road resident Sean Carpenter said.

"The United States is a great country. We can go to the moon - we can solve a traffic problem," resident Harry Kwan said through the translator.

The council closed the public comment period after meeting, and it now has 90 days to vote. The council will begin reviewing the proposal and related documents on April 8 at City Hall.

City Employee Cleared Of MV Charges

A member of the mayor's staff was cleared Tuesday from charges of operating under the influence and operating to endanger following a one-car accident on the Fore River Bridge March 3.

The two charges against Helen Murphy, an aide to Mayor Thomas Koch, were dismissed after a clerk magistrate determined insufficient evidence during a probable cause hearing Tuesday at Quincy District Court. She was found responsible for driving outside marked lanes, a civil infraction.

According to Weymouth police, the accident occurred around 7:30 p.m. March 3. Authorities said Murphy was driving north when she struck the guard rail. She was taken to the hospital, treated and released.

Haddock With Tomato And Peas, Frittata With Tuna

Here is a tried and true recipe for haddock especially to enjoy during this week (Holy Week) and one I have made so many times. Also a recipe for an easy frittata.

It is one of the easiest ones because it is made in one pan.

HADDOCK WITH TOMATO

1-2 pounds haddock (or any favorite fish)
8 ounces crushed tomatoes
1 medium onion (chopped)
2 cloves garlic
1-2 tablespoons fresh parsley
1 package frozen peas
Salt and pepper
3 tablespoons olive oil

In hot oil, sauté the garlic and onion. Add the tomatoes, parsley salt and pepper and cook for 15-20 minutes.

Gently add the fish turning once easily so the fish doesn't fall apart. Cook until fish is done, then add the peas and heat thoroughly.

It goes well with ½ pound of angel hair pasta or any favorite.

FRITTATA WITH TUNA

6 eggs
2 cans Italian Tuna with oil
¼ cup milk
Fresh tomato for topping
Salt and pepper to taste
3 tablespoons olive oil

Beat the eggs and add the tuna and milk, salt and pepper.

Begin by using a skillet that is oven proof. Heat the oil and then add the egg, tuna mixture. Top it with tomato slices, and cook for a couple of minutes until eggs are getting firm.

Finish it off by placing the skillet in a 400-degree oven for 15 minutes. Slice like a pie when done.

Hancock Park Earns 5-Star Rating

Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group announces that Hancock Park Rehabilitation & Nursing Center in Quincy has received an overall 5-Star Quality Rating from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS).

CMS created the Five-Star Quality Rating System to help consumers, their families, and caregivers compare nursing homes more easily. Nursing homes receiving five stars, the highest quality rating awarded, were evaluated in each of the following three areas: health inspections, staffing and quality measures.

"A 5-Star rating from CMS tells families that Hancock Park has earned the highest possible distinction on quality in all areas of RICHARD COUGHLIN care and service," said Richard Coughlin, administrator of Hancock Park Rehabilitation & Nursing Center. "The staff of Hancock Park also takes great pride in the recognition of families' expressing their appreciation for the attention to quality in every aspect of care they provide," he adds.

To attain a 5-star Quality Rating, for the third year in a row, Hancock Park had a successful 2012 state survey by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (DPH). The regulations for skilled nursing facilities require each facility to be carefully surveyed and evaluated by the DPH on areas such as safety, quality of care, patient rights, food service, administration and nursing care.

Hancock Park Rehabilitation & Nursing Center is a 142-bed skilled center, providing high-level rehabilitative, medical, and nursing care on a short- or long-term basis. Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, a family owned company celebrating over 60 years of quality service to seniors, owns and manages the Quincy center. ## Historic New England Kitchens Presentation At Library April 1

From the colonial period to the present, the kitchen has been a source of nourishment and comfort. As the place where parents nurture children and families gather at breakfast and dinner, share chores, and discuss the world outside, the kitchen gives meaning to family life.

On Monday, April 1, at 7 p.m., author and curator Nancy Carlisle will discuss how the American kitchen has evolved from the seventeenth-century to the present. Drawing on her book "America's Kitchens", Carlisle will tell the story of the nation's kitchens from New England hearths, to Victorian kitchens isolated at the back of the house, to open plan kitchens of 1950s suburbs. America's Kitchens provides new insights into the technological and social changes that have taken place in this room and suggests how these innovations have transformed kitchen work and changed women's lives.

The program will be held in the community meeting room at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Carlisle has been a curator for 25 years at Historic New England where she works with some of the most important historic kitchens in the country. Author of Cherished Possessions: A New England Legacy, she has written and lectured on the material culture of domestic life from the 17th century to the 21st.

The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Honeywell Settlement Would Also Fund New Vehicles, Upgrade School Security

Mayor Earmarks $3.8M For Energy Efficiency Projects

By SCOTT JACKSON

Mayor Tom Koch plans to use the $3.8 million Quincy received as part of a settlement with Honeywell to fund energy efficiency projects for city buildings, upgrade security systems at each of Quincy's public schools, and purchase new vehicles.

In January, Honeywell agreed to pay the state $4 million as part of a settlement to end a long-running dispute between the energy conglomerate and Quincy. The state sent $3.8 million of that money to the city, and kept the remaining $200,000.

The mayor proposed a spending plan for that money during the March 18 City Council meeting. It calls for appropriating $1 million to public buildings repairs, which mayoral spokesman Chris Walker said would primarily go towards energy efficiency projects.

"A large share of it is for energy efficiency projects within the buildings," Walker said in a phone interview. "It could be for boilers, windows, repairs to existing systems. The Public Buildings Department has a working list of issues — they're going to go down that list as far as they can. $1 million sounds like a lot but it's not when you have 40 buildings."

Another $500,000 would go towards upgrading security systems at schools, including installing locks on each classroom door. The push for the security upgrades started in January when Jan Robinson, the mother of a first grade student at the Montclair School, urged the School Committee to install the door locks in the wake of a school shooting in Newtown, Connecticut that left 26 students and teachers dead.

"It started off as isolated at Montclair where parents and teachers raised concerns," Walker said. "The mayor decided not to do it piecemeal and reviewed the options for the schools."

Walker said the goal is to have the new security systems installed over the summer. Each of Quincy's school buildings would have the upgrades installed, except for Central Middle School. The new Central, due to open in the fall, will have a 'state-of-the-art system' installed during construction, according to Walker.

Nearly $800,000 of the Honeywell money would go towards the purchase of new vehicles and equipment. That includes $300,000 for the purchase of a new trash compactor and lawn mowers for the Park Department and another $300,000 for a new street-sweeper and a dump truck for the Public Works Department. The remainder of the money for vehicles would go towards the purchase of a new SUV for the Recreation Department to transport equipment, a new command vehicle — an SUV — for the fire chief to replace a Ford Crown Victoria, a new van for the Council on Aging, and vehicles for the Building Department.

The plan also calls for adding $1 million into the city's stabilization fund, also known as a rainy day fund, which currently has $5 million in it. The remaining $500,000 from the settlement would be reserved for appropriation.

The mayor's proposal was referred to the Finance Committee at the council meeting. Councillor Joe Finn, chairman of the Finance Committee, said he would hold a hearing on the plan to give his colleagues a chance to review and weigh in on the proposal.

Councillor Doug Gutro, who had long pressed the administration to release information on the Honeywell issue, said he is interested in learning more about the proposal going forward. He wants to know if items included in the 2011 capital improvement plan that didn't happen — like the replacing the roof at the Beechwood Knoll School — will be included as part of the $1 million in public buildings improvements.

"There are certain things in that capital improvement plan that have not happened so I'm interested to see if those are going to be tackled first, or if they fell off why, before we spend on other capital improvements," Gutro said.

He also wants to know if Koch and the School Department plan to bring back media specialists in elementary and middle schools. During the School Committee's Jan. 23 meeting, the same where Robinson spoke about the need for locks and other security improvements, 30 residents spoke in favor of bringing the media specialists back.

"I'm anxious and interested, especially in the wake of what happened in Newtown, to see what the security investments are and I suspect the school committee invested substantial amount of time on those issues," Gutro said. "But I also know 2,000 people signed a petition and scores of other people spoke volumes before the School Committee and have reached out to the council to bring media specialists back into the public schools."

"What's the dialogue within the corridors of the school community and the administration around using some of these funds to bring back media specialists? Granted it's one time money, and that's going to be an annual allocation in the budget, but that could be a piece."

On the other hand, Gutro said it might make sense to simply put all of the settlement money into the stabilization fund. He noted that auditors have recommended Quincy increase its reserves to help boost its credit rating.

20 Rally In Support Of Earned Paid Sick Time Bill

By EMILY TAFT

Over 20 workers and Quincy residents rallied outside of the Taco Bell at 707 Hancock St. March 21 in support of earned sick time and to call on the state legislature to pass the Massachusetts Earned Paid Sick Time Bill.

Quincy resident Margaret Menz-Calabro, a retired PCA worker, decided to rally after hearing about the event just hours before.

"I believe in the cause," said Menz-Calabro. "There are too many people who are working when they are sick because they don't have paid sick time and they need those hours on their paycheck."

The 2013 Earned Paid Sick Time Bill would ensure that workers who don't currently have access to paid sick time are able to earn time off to be used when they or their families are ill. Over a million workers in Massachusetts currently don't have access to paid sick time, and one in three American workers have no guarantee of being paid during an illness, including only 25 percent of part-time workers.

"It is very important that workers get sick time," said Sheila Decter, a member of the Jewish Alliance for law and social action. "No one wants someone making their food while they are sick, but some people don't have the choice to stay home when they are sick."

Participants rallied with signs saying "You Know what's LOCO, No sick time," "Sick workers making my taco is not Yum!" along with other signs saying pass earned sick time now, families need earned sick time, and earned sick time, good for workers good for families.

The bill would allow employees to earn one hour of sick time for every 30 hours they work starting when they are hired.

Employees in companies with fewer than six employees can earn up to 40 hours of unpaid, job-protected sick time per year, employees in companies with 6-10 employees can earn up to 40 hours of paid sick time per year, and employees in companies with 11 or more employees can earn up to 56 hours of paid sick time per year.

Portland, Oregon became the fourth city in the country to adopt a paid sick days law, and Philadelphia's City Council voted to pass a paid sick days bill. Bills are also moving forward in New York City, Washington State, and Vermont. Residents of range County, FL will be able to vote for paid sick days in August 2014 after 50,000 voters petitioned for the ballot initiative. Connecticut passed the first statewide paid sick days law in the summer of 2011, which was followed by a citywide law in Seattle. Laws already exist in San Francisco and Washington, D.C.

Lebo Seeking Re-Election To Quincy School Committee

Emily Lebo, 354 Highland Ave., Wollaston, announces her candidacy for re-election to the Quincy School Committee.

In making her announcement, Lebo said her main concern has always been that every student in Quincy has equal access and opportunities in the Quincy Public Schools.

Lebo is currently completing her fourth year as a member of the Quincy School Committee. From 2010 to 2012, she served as Chair of the Special Education Subcommittee and was a member of the Budget and Facilities sub-committees.

Working with the Quincy Parent Advisory Council, Lebo helped to establish improved procedures for safely transporting our special education students. While working on this project, she learned about the valuable work being done by the Quincy Parent Advisory Council (QPAC).

As a member of the School Committee, in 2012, Lebo asked to form a new subcommittee on Teaching and Learning. Realizing that a lot of the discussions at meetings were about budgets, bricks, and buses, she asked that a new subcommittee be formed to discuss Teaching and Learning.

Not wanting to minimize the importance of School Committee discussions about buildings, transportation of students, or the budget needs, she wanted to put an emphasis on what was actually going on in city classrooms. At these Teaching and Learning subcommittee meetings there is dialogue about what is actually going on in the schools and in the district and what policies and procedures exist or need to exist to support these. The Teaching and Learning Subcommittee has brought to light, the many new initiatives coming out of state and federal regulations and assisted the district in ensuring that these items are better understood by parents, taxpayers, and the School Committee.

Lebo recently worked with the Curriculum Coordinator and the Assistant Superintendent to offer parents an overview of the new math program being implemented in the elementary schools. After hearing from many parents that they were uncomfortable assisting their young children with their math homework, she asked the district to arrange this overview. This evening session recently took place and was attended by over 100 interested parents. The session was repeated on Channel 22 and can also be viewed on the district's webpage.

Another issue of great concern to Ms. Lebo is the proposed change to the high school graduation requirements. The state of Massachusetts has recently changed the academic requirements for admission to state colleges and universities. Lebo said she strongly believes that "aligning Quincy's graduation requirements with the state will ensure that all of our graduates will be prepared for acceptance into the state college system. However, adding to existing local requirements, not shared by the university system, may hinder Quincy students from taking and completing other options such as the arts, technical education, or other programming like ROTC.

"I want to be sure that everyone is aware of any unintended consequences of decisions that are made around graduation requirements," she added.

Lebo's Teaching and Learning Subcommittee is also working with the district on the implementation of the new Educator Evaluation System. She served on the negotiation committee with the Quincy Education Association to approve a new contract and will sit on an ad hoc group to work with the union on language and processes around the implementation of the evaluation system in Quincy. Because of her role in the Boston Public School, Lebo said she is in the unique position of having experience, as both an evaluator of teachers and an administrator being evaluated under the new regulation. This has allowed her to use the new evaluation system currently required by the state.

Lebo currently co-chairs the Massachusetts Board of Education's Advisory Council on Career and Technical Education and serves as the Director of Career and Technical Education for the Boston Public Schools. In her role, she has implemented several new career programs and has worked to have programs approved by the state and thus decreasing the cost of out of district tuition. She also serves on the Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education's State Perkins Advisory Council. As a member of this group she collaborates with leaders across the state to respond to proposed initiatives coming out of Washington that will impact Career/Vocational and Technical Education in Massachusetts.

Her work in Boston school system includes serving as a member of the Transition Task Force whose job was to develop a Transition Planning Guide for the district. Ms. Lebo works closely on issues involving students with significant disabilities and their need for pre-vocational and vocational experiences as they transition to adulthood. She has developed work experiences and a summer vocational exploratory program for this population.

As an educator, she said one of her greatest joys is coming in contact with her former Quincy Public School students who are now working and raising families of their own. Recently, she met a young man who had graduated from the Quincy High School plumbing program and was working as a union plumber in one of Boston's schools. He greeted her with affection and appreciation for her support of his education while she was the Director of Career and Technical Education in Quincy, attributing his success, in part, to the high school plumbing program.

Lebo speaks frequently about meeting her former allied health students who also share their accomplishments since graduating.

The Lebo family has been involved in the city for close to 40 years. She and her husband Stu have sons who have recently purchased homes in Quincy and are raising their families here. She has grandchildren attending the Quincy Public Schools.

Lebo said she truly appreciates her work on the Quincy School Committee.

"I have enjoyed learning from my colleagues and the expertise they bring to the School Committee, I hope to continue to work with them, to share my knowledge and skills, and come together with recommendations that will allow our schools to continue to offer quality education to all students," she said.

Adams Montessori Students To Participate In Model UN

Students from Adams Montessori School in Quincy will travel to New York City April 24 to participate in the Montessori Model United Nations (MMUN), a program which allows Montessori students to become delegates of chosen coun-

We live in a nice city where we are for the most part insulated from the nightmares that many people in Boston live as a daily reality. For a short time I worked at a Hell Hole in Roslindale called the Judge Conley Center, it's a kid prison plain and simple.

I tried to set up a carpentry education program, but my efforts were rebuffed by the state as money they didn't want to spend. They could spend $22 billion on a leaky, dangerous and corrupt highway system but couldn't spend about $50,000 a year to keep a few kids from becoming career criminals. The cost of warehousing those kids as adult offenders is probably twice that per person. You should understand where the kids come from and why they have become what they have become. The majority of these kids come from a family where there is only one parent in the home. The one parent is either working like an animal and never available to parent or is him or herself a criminal or addict.

The only successful adult in the neighborhood is the local drug dealer, fence, or pimp! We, for the most part had a working dad and mom at home - we had role models. If the only success we see is criminal then that is what we aspire to become. The tragedy is that most of them do succeed at becoming just that.

We can either choose to create solutions to these tragedies, we can build fences around our homes or move to Montana! The responsible answer is to fix the problem. First, we need to hold parents responsible for their offspring, you pay support or you do major jail time. Two, we need to enforce laws regarding career crime and put the adult offenders in prison for very long stints which makes crime less attractive. Third, when our young offenders (as young as 12) are put in state care, we need to create a structure that insists on milestones towards freedom. They need to achieve milestones such as learning English, math, history, and vocational training. A child applying for a job after his release who speaks clear and acceptable English and has some saleable vocational skills has options other than criminal behavior. They earn their freedom by academic success.

You will not save all of these kids, but if you save only some of them, you have done the morally correct thing and saved yourself a bundle of money in the future by not having to house them in prison and pay for their offspring. You have also created better neighbors and contributors to the society. When they move back to their neighborhood and are productive and successful, they become role models that the next generation needs.

Sides With Dennehey Over Snow Plowing

When you have two of your friends on opposite sides of an issue you try not to intervene.

Mr. Dennehey and Mr. Kusser are two people who worry about what is going on in Quincy.

The fact is Quincy was hit with a major storm with 60 mph winds a few weeks ago. The mayor, in his quest to save a few dollars, hired a company with very little experience in snow removal. I personally witnessed plows going up my street with plows three to four inches off the ground. By the time Public Works came to the rescue it was way too late. The city was already in gridlock.

I'm sorry to say our mayor tried but his inexperience to handle disasters came to light once again. The first time was the Quincy Fair Building deal - he almost let asbestos saturate downtown Quincy.

I think Mr. Dennehey won this battle.

And A Response From Mr. Dennehey

In response to Mr. Kusser's comment:

If Mr Kusser had read the letter correctly, he would have read the part, "the plow drivers told me that blame city hall for the lack of correct plowing."

I, Mr. Dennehey, did not say it was city hall. The plow drivers told me why the lack of control on clearing streets. You, Mr. Kusser, should learn to read all the paper, not just the part you feel is controversial.

Raves About Irish Pub Dinner

I have been a faithful Quincy Sun reader going back to 1983 which is 30 years ago and I probably hold the Guinness Book of Records in the category of letter writing.

I am thankful that Quincy has an independent voice in reporting the news that can often get overlooked in larger media sources. Over the years, I have often ended up using the services of someone or someplace who advertises on the pages of the Quincy Sun.

In years back, I remember a plumber once and another time an electrician. More recently, I noticed an advertisement from The Irish Pub on Billings Road in Norfolk Downs. The pub was pushing their St. Patrick Day dinners over that holiday weekend.

To a first timer, the place might look a dive but I found out years ago it was what I call a joint with class. When I saw the Irish Pub's most recent ad announcing two Irish dinners, one smoked shoulder and the other corned beef, with cabbage and potatoes of course, how could anyone go wrong? Ten bucks each, including tax. I purchased both dinners and mixed them all up together and shared it all with someone. It was the best Irish pub food ever.

As a Sicilian-Irish guy, it was the best St. Patrick's Day dinner to be had.

Morrissey Offers School Safety, Security Assessment

Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael Morrissey is offering Quincy and every town in his district a comprehensive school safety assessment, providing improved planning and security in the event of a violent school incident.

"This is very important work, and I want to make it as easy as possible for towns to have it done," said Morrissey, who recently convened the first meeting of his new Norfolk County School Safety Task Force. The meeting was attended by more than 50 people, including QPS director of security Michael Dracchio, several area police chiefs, principals, superintendents and elected officials.

"We will provide this for whichever school facility the community chooses," Morrissey said. "Then, local police and the school officials can use that assessment report as a template to craft plans to keep safe children in other school buildings in the district as they see the opportunity."

The Metropolitan Law Enforcement Council, or

MetroLEC, is a consortium of 43 local police and sheriff departments that shares resources, equipment and expertise. The organization has developed a comprehensive Incident Management Protocols and Critical Tasks - I.M.P.A.C.T. - program, designed to help schools and police decrease or prevent injuries if a violent school event occurs. Morrissey has negotiated to have the work done for any city or town in Norfolk County, and he will use money forfeited to his office in successful drug prosecutions - and not tax dollars - to fund it.

Braintree Police Sgt. Det. Tim Cahoon and Medway Sgt. Jason Brennan, both active in the MetroLEC consortium, discussed the kind of training and materials towns would receive, all based on the post-incident analyses done in past school shooting and crisis incidents.

Morrissey has overseen a substantial push to improve local school safety since being elected District Attorney in 2010. He has offered local school systems three rounds of grants for capital improvements - from door locks and intruder alarms to video security cameras - to improve student safety. In both November 2012, the month before the Sandy Hook shooting, and February 2013, the Morrissey hosted training for police and school personnel on techniques that can save lives in active shooter situations. The training was provided by Response Options, a Texas-based firm founded by a married couple - she a school principal, he a trained SWAT officer.

"It is important to provide schools systems with the tools to develop safety plans," Morrissey said.

"District attorneys have a responsibility to prevent crime and ensure public safety that extends beyond effective prosecution," Morrissey said. "School age children are one of our most targeted and at-risk populations. I want every chief, every superintendent, every principal and every parent to know that they have a partner in making their children as safe as we can."

Quincy Community Action Annual Meeting, Awards Night

The Quincy Community Action Programs, Inc. (QCAP) Board of Directors will honor its award winners and induct board members and officers at its Annual Meeting and Awards Ceremony Thursday, April 25 at The Tirrell Room, Quincy Lodge of Elks, 254 Quarry St., Quincy.

At the meeting, The Board of Directors will recognize several community members with Extra Mile Community Awards for their dedicated support of QCAP, our clients, and the community.

This year's award recipients include Dr. Arian DiNapoli, Granite Links Golf Club, and a posthumous award will be presented in honor of Dan Scharfman. In addition, Helen Ferullo, Head Start Family Service Worker, will be presented the Lois Craig Employee Award, for her outstanding leadership and exemplary service. Twenty-year Service Awards will also be presented.

"QCAP is especially honored to recognize significant contributions of our Extra Mile award recipients and employees this year," said QCAP Executive Director Beth Ann Strollo. "We have much to celebrate despite the trying times thanks to the extraordinary efforts of our staff, Board, and community partners."

Quincy College, Crane Library Panel Discussion On Domestic Violence

Quincy College and the Crane Public Library will sponsor a panel discussion on "Domestic Violence: Breaking the Silence," tonight (Thursday) from 6 to 8:30 p.m. in the main library's community meeting room (ground floor).

Domestic violence and sexual assault can happen to anyone, anywhere, regardless of size, gender, sexual orientation or race.

According to Law.com, nearly 1.3 million women and about 835,000 men are assaulted by their partner every year in the United States, and most domestic violence cases are never reported to the police. Because of that, domestic violence and sexual assault cases are often overlooked and partner abuse is either excused or denied.

The public is welcome to attend the panel discussion on domestic violence and sexual assault. Local domestic violence advocates, law enforcement officials and survivors will share their stories. Learn about the resources and support that are available in Quincy and the surrounding area, and how you can help a friend or family member get out of a dangerous relationship.

Speakers will include Matthew Delaney, Quincy College Instructor of Criminal Justice; Maureen Flores, Civilian Domestic Violence Advocate/DOVE; Siobhan Foley, Assistant District

Attorney Norfolk County; Detective Andrea Purcell, Criminal Investigations Unit, MBTA Transit Police Dept.; and Detective Sgt. John Hamilton, Sexual Assault Unit, Boston Police Dept.

We are all deeply saddened by the loss of my Aunt, Mary Abraham. We worked together at Tobias Hearing Aids for almost 30 years! She was very popular for her wit and intellect; she could converse on any subject better than most professors, clean and check hearing aids, and even do minor repairs. I caught her one time modifying her own tooth!

Yeah, she was that good. Her best attribute was her huge heart. She cared for many people and we will all miss her so much. Thanks for everything, Auntie.

Each week he was prepared, good-spirited and hard-working. He safely led our other runner through the modified route and did so without looking for attention.

"Little-by-little other students and parents became aware of the partnership between Tristan and this boy. They would approach Tristan with kind words and praise, but Tristan would simply say 'thanks' and continue chatting with the boy or friends.

"Tristan also looked at the 'big picture' and questioned what would happen if the boy's time was better than those kids that ran the entire course. He then came up with a plan to make sure they were not cheating anyone. He also maturely and confidently explained to other coaches and staff why they were taking an alternate route.

"Most importantly, Tristan did what he set out to. In his own words, he 'encouraged this boy during each meet.' He looked after him without being overbearing. Without being told, he ran one step behind him each meet, which made this boy feel like he was faster than one of our most athletic kids. He was an incredible buddy to him."

"Helen is also a camp counselor for the Bay State Community Services in Quincy. She works as a camp counselor for the Corrections program for children who have mental disabilities that affect their social skills. She helps bring the kids on field trips on Wednesdays to local attractions like Houghton's Pond.

"Helen went with 20 of her classmates to Appalachia Pennsylvania to do manual labor for families that couldn't afford to have the work done otherwise. Helen also volunteers for Christmas in the City, Boston. She is involved with Independence Manor Bingo and the Campus Ministry Independence Manor Project.

"Outside of the classroom, Helen has been a leader in the school community. Her presence and assistance are felt throughout the school in many ways. her ability to interact with all kinds of people."

LUCIEN THEBERGE, sixth grader, Central Middle School.

"Luc is a dedicated Boy Scout. When a local troop chose to travel to New Jersey to assist with post-Sandy cleanup, he did not hesitate to volunteer his services. Luc is the type of boy who puts the needs of others first. He is a caring son, a loving brother and a loyal friend. For such a young man, he has the heart of a hero!

"Luc is a great student, an admirable citizen, and an aspiring leader. He is respectful of his teachers, friendly to his peers and a diligent student. Luc is focused on being the best person he can be. He is a remarkable young man."

KATHRYN WHITE, North Quincy High School.

KATIE

"Katie is truly an exceptional young lady and student of outstanding ability and motivation. Perceptive, attentive, insightful and committed to learning are some of the attributes that come to mind when I think of Katie.

"Katie is a quiet young lady who has overcome a personal loss (brother, Patrick from cancer) at a very young age. The ability to develop coping skills in the face of diversity will stand by her in the years to come. Katie and her twin sister, Meagan, were members of my Grief and Loss group at North Quincy High School during their sophomore year.

"The group is not a psychological group but an educational group discussing the stages of grief with adolescents. This can be a very quiet and hard group to be a member of but through this group process the members realize they are not the only teenagers with loss within their own age group. By understanding the stages of grief, members will be able to better understand and cope with further experiences.

"Katie became a very active member and leader of the group. She would offer advice and talk about the ways she has dealt with Patrick's loss.

"Katie has been volunteering many hours with the Jimmy Fund and the Dana Farber Cancer Institute. She has also organized a yearly 'Scoop Bowl' (ice cream) fundraiser to raise money for the Jimmy Fund. This year, Katie was asked to speak at the Dana Farber Cancer Association 'A Gathering to Recognize.' Kathryn was proud and inspired to be asked to speak to over 250 people who have had a family loss."

AMELIA WOOL, Quincy High School.

"Besides being exceptionally talented in her writing ability, Amelia has maintained excellent grades and is an active member in our National Honor Society. She has taken a leadership role in the Student Council, Dance Committee and the publication of our school newspaper.

"Amelia also contributes a great deal of time as an active Docent for the Museum of Fine Arts and the John Adams Orchestra. She was instrumental in establishing the Quincy High School Students Against Destructive Decisions Club and continues to play a leadership role in this organization.

"Amelia's leadership qualities have reached many through her services at the QHS Leadership Camp for incoming freshmen, and the MASC Annual and Summer Conferences. She has taken what she has learned from these experiences and instituted many of the ideas at QHS, especially as it relates to freshmen. She has made it her goal to relieve 9th graders from the anxieties associated with transitioning into high school.

"She has been a guest speaker at Freshmen Parent Orientation and volunteers her time coaching soccer to young children and serving those in need at the American Red Cross and Quincy Crisis Food Drives. She is a recipient of the District Attorney's Peer Leadership Award."

Congratulations, Quincy Kiwanis Junior Heroes.

Sterling School's 'Pennies For Patients' Raises $1,800

Sterling Middle School Students, Faculty and Staff raised $1,800 in its eighth annual Pennies for Patients Drive.

Each year the Sterling Helping Hands Youth Council after-school program organizes this school-wide campaign to not only raise money but inform others about leukemia and lymphoma. Sterling has raised $12,200 over the past eight years.

Sterling's Helping Hands Youth Council, under the direction of teacher Ms. Elise Higgins-Steele, organized the drive into three weeks that kicked off with an informational assembly featuring Randi O'Hara from the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society.

The first week of the drive focused on awareness about blood cancers and the campaign to help those who face them. Helping Hands Youth Council members created posters stating facts about leukemia and lymphoma and posted them around the school. In addition, Sterling's Hot Shots (another afterschool program) in conjunction with the Helping Hands Youth Council students worked together to create a video outlining the 2013 Pennies for Patients Drive.

In the second and third weeks, students were asked to bring in spare change that was collected in homeroom as well as money to participate in various activities. The activities were geared toward student enjoyment and ranged from karaoke, a half-court shot and hula hoop contest, to raffles, and a staff vs. student volleyball game.

As part of the Quincy Police Anti-Crime Task Force, the Officers in the following stories worked in plain clothes, in Quincy Square, on St. Patrick's Day, after the South Boston parade ended on Sunday, March 17th.

The Officers initially set up surveillance at the Quincy Center MBTA station to identify and intercept potential rowdiness from those revelers entering the city. At approximately 6:30 P.M., Officers Kristen Bowes and John Leuchte observed a highly intoxicated male come out of the train station. This male almost fell twice before plopping himself on a bench at McIntyre Mall.

A few minutes later, a female, also highly intoxicated, joined the male on the bench. They stayed there for about ten minutes and then got up. As they tried to walk away, they both appeared unsteady on their feet, stopping several times to catch their balance.

The Officers approached and identified themselves, with badges clearly displayed. The male, reeking of alcohol, responded loudly, "F@#$%^& Quincy Police!" while at the same time shoving his right hand in his pocket. Officer Leuchte told him to take his hand out of his pocket. With an exaggerated motion, the male flung both hands in the air, which caused bystanders to gather. The Officers were concerned that the male was going to assault them, so they attempted to control his arms and hands while instructing him to comply. Instead, the suspect tried pulling away as he swore loudly at the Officers.

The male, a 23 year-old Quincy resident, was controlled and placed under arrest, charged with, "Disorderly Conduct and Resisting Arrest." As the male was being placed under arrest, the female demanded to know why he was being arrested and that he be let go immediately. Officer Bowes told her and advised her strongly to leave the area, but she refused. She was then advised that she would be placed in protective custody due to her intoxication if she didn't leave, but the female retorted, "P.C. me then."

Officer Bowes placed the 19 year-old Milton resident into protective custody. En route to the station, the female was quiet. However, the male began banging his head on the plexi-glass partition in the back of the cruiser. Once in a cell, the male calmed down too. This incident removed two problems from the street.

Soon after, Officers Dan Parisi and Ryan Donnelly, who were also undercover, were checking bar rooms for problem patrons and over-serving, when a doorman told them that someone just smashed a window of a nearby parked motor vehicle. The Officers exited the establishment and heard the sound of breaking glass, looked over and saw a male smashing the rear window of a car. The suspect then ran from the scene with Officers in pursuit as they contacted QPD communications. The foot pursuit went through the Hancock Parking area, crossed Revere Road and wound up in the back yards of Revere Road.

After a lengthy chase, Officer Parisi, who displayed his badge and was yelling "Quincy Police - stop" over and over, caught the suspect and brought him to the ground. The suspect refused to surrender his hands and a struggle ensued with the suspect striking Officer Parisi. Officer Donnelly arrived on scene and the two Officers were able to place the suspect into handcuffs, however he continued to refuse other commands to stand up and walk to the front of the house. Additional Officers arrived to physically carry the non compliant suspect to an awaiting cruiser.

Inside the suspect's wallet were two driver's licenses. One was from Florida and the other from Connecticut with the same name, however, the Florida license was not valid. The suspect, a 19 year old Trumbell, Connecticut resident, was charged with "Malicious Destruction to a Motor Vehicle--2 counts, Assault and Battery on a Police Officer, Resisting Arrest and Disorderly Conduct."

Nice Work!

Stop 'Fido' From 'Fertilizing'

Q: My neighbor walks his dog every day, and routinely allows his beloved pet to eliminate on my front lawn. He almost never picks up the dog's droppings -- it's something I'm left to do when I get home from work. When I confronted him about it, he said that he was doing me a favor because the droppings will fertilize my lawn. How can I get him to stop? -- Carlos G., Phoenix

A: It sounds like you've talked to him already about it, and gotten a pretty unapologetic answer. For the record -- and you probably know this already -- dog droppings and urine are not good lawn fertilizer; they can cause dead spots or yellowed grass.

Many cities have ordinances about picking up after dogs; some will issue tickets to pet owners who are caught in the act of not cleaning up. In other municipalities, enforcement varies.

At any rate, don't get confrontational or pick a fight. Ask him politely one more time to stop leaving dog droppings in your yard. If he doesn't stop, check your options. If you belong to a homeowners association, check its rules or bylaws regarding pets. Check with your city's animal control office or visit its webpage to learn what recourse you have in stopping the daily visits.

Causing a nuisance like letting one's dog soil a neighbor's yard is generally frowned upon. I have a feeling the law will be on your side with this. Stay calm, do your homework, and you should be able to resolve this little dispute.

HOME TIP: Review your homeowners association rules at least once a year to stay on top of any changes and to be familiar with rules that can help solve potential problems between you and your neighbors.

$3.3M Awarded For Homeless Assistance

The Quincy-Weymouth Continuum of Care has been awarded $3,354,525 in homeless assistance funding under the 2012 McKinney-Vento Program, administered by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The money will be allocated three ways:

- $1,481,631 will go to nine renewal "Supportive Housing" projects, which will be used to provide housing and supportive services over the next year for 96 households, consisting of 97 adults and 31 children.

- $1,802,021 will go to three renewal projects under the "Shelter Plus Care" program, which is a rental assistance program through the Quincy Housing Authority. The projects will provide housing vouchers over the next year for 108 households, comprised of 114 adults and 49 children.

- $70,873 is earmarked for local housing providers to continue participating in a program called the Homeless Management Information System (HMIS), which provides homeless assistance data to HUD. HMIS also allows the local Continuum of Care to track homeless individuals and forecast trends in homelessness.

"Quincy is a national leader in answering HUD's challenge to provide rapid re-housing for homeless families and permanent supportive housing for the chronic homeless," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "Since 1996, hundreds of adults and children have been provided safe and decent housing.

Most, if not all of these individuals, would otherwise end up on the street or in an emergency shelter."

The mayor thanked Planning Director Dennis Harrington, Community Development Director Sean Glennon, Continuum Chairperson and Fr. Bill's & MainSpring President John Yazwinski and the city's housing partners Quincy Community Action and Neighborhood Housing Services for their continued efforts toward ending homelessness in the community.

Americans Have Alarming Misconceptions About Fire Safety

A recent nationwide survey conducted by Society of Fire Protection Engineers (SFPE) revealed that 65 percent of Americans feel safer from the dangers of fire at home. Only 10 percent feel safer in a commercial or public building.

"This is an alarming misconception," said Chris Jelenewicz, SFPE's program manager. "Actually, fires in dwellings account for the majority of life loss due to fire."

Federal government statistics report that in 2011, residential fires resulted in 2,450 deaths and 13,900 injuries. Non-residential building fires resulted in 80 deaths and 1,100 injuries.

The survey also revealed that 57 percent of Americans believe changes in materials used for furnishings and building materials over the last 25 years make them feel safer in their homes. At the same time only 4 percent of the respondents felt less safe.

"Many people do not recognize the important role systems engineered by fire protection engineers play in protecting our families from fire in the home," said Jelenewicz. "When properly installed and maintained, these systems can significantly improve your chances of surviving a fire in the home."

Jelenewicz offers the following recommendations to protect you from fires in the home:

- Make sure a smoke alarm is installed on every level of your home, including the basement.

- When installing smoke alarms, always follow the manufacturer's installation instructions.

- Test your smoke alarm monthly.

- The combination of working smoke alarms and home fire sprinklers reduces the likelihood of death from fire by more than 80 percent. So consider installing home fire sprinklers in your home.

- Always use cooking equipment that is tested and approved by a recognized testing facility.

- Follow manufacturers' instructions and code requirements when installing and operating cooking equipment.

- Have furnaces inspected by a heating professional regularly to ensure that it is in good working condition.

The Quincy School Committee recently recognized five winter sports teams for their accomplishments in making it to the state tournament.

Quincy High School girls' and boys' basketball teams along with North Quincy High Schools girls' and boys' basketball and boys hockey teams were all recognized for their accomplishments during the winter sports season.

"It is no secret that there is a direct correlation between sports, extracurricular activities and academic achievement," said QHS Principal Frank Santoro. "These activities develop self confidence, the drive to do better, commitment, self discipline, respect, being part of a team with common goals, not to mention keeping thousands of our high school students busy representing their school communities."

The QHS boys' basketball team had an overall record of 14-10, and went 8-5 in the Patriot League and won the Moscardelli Tournament. They received the Team Sportsmanship Award for the second time, and will be joining Division 1 play next year.

Members of the QHS boys' basketball team are Jaquan Harris, Colin Evans, Tino Goncalves, Brendan Cunningham, J.T. Bain, Johnny Marsinelli, Zach Aglugub, Tyler Beach, James Lam, Kenny Sorensen, Drew Myers, Robbie Munroe, Peter Cedrone, and Christian Callahan. The team's head coach is David Parry and their assistant coaches are Matt Ramponi and John Parry.

The NQHS girls' basketball team had a record of 13-8 making it to the MIAA tournament. The team placed second in the Patriot League Fisher Division with a 10-3 record.

The NQHS girls' basketball team members are Annie Dow, Caitlin Bulger, Jane Minton, Kristyn Mark, Natasha Sautter, Tristine Thong, Christine Kelliher, Samantha McNally, Haley McKay, Theresa Riordan, Hannah Donovan, Camile Mullaney, and Maya Umoren. The head coach is Jessica Worden, and the assistant coaches are Brittney Chappron, Drew Joseph, and Greg Lannon.

The NQHS boys' basketball team won the Patriot League Team Sportsmanship Award for the third consecutive year and four out of the last five years, along with being only the third team in school history to advance to the MIAA Sectional finals.

QHS Boys' Soccer Honored For Epitomizing 'Team'

Teammate Bai Kanu Receives Standing Ovation

By EMILY TAFT

The school committee recognized the Quincy High School boys' soccer team during their March 20th meeting.

"What had happened to the soccer team, that's the epitome there of the word team," said school committee member Dave McCarthy. "They surrounded their teammates and they did what they had to do and you can feel it in this room tonight."

The team endured a number of tragedies throughout the season with the drowning death of teammate Lamar Thompson, the passing of a parent and youth coach Paul Kurtzman, and the pedestrian accident of teammate Bai Kanu who was struck by a car while he was riding his bicycle.

Kanu, who just left rehab, was in attendance and received a standing ovation from the crowd and school committee members when his name was announced to receive a certificate.

"The Quincy High School soccer team is one that is truly deserving of recognition," said QHS Principal

Frank Santoro. "This team has used those tragedies to become stronger and netted a 10-6-4 record. The team went unbeaten for the final seven games of the season to qualify for the state tournament two years in a row after a long run of not making it for 10 years."

Santoro said that the team will be heading to Division 1 play next year and received the MIAA Award of Excellence for Exemplary Display of Sportsmanship, Ethics, and Integrity.

A fundraiser on April 27th titled "Battle for Bai" will be held at Veterans' Memorial Stadium to help Kanu with his long-term recovery needs.

Kanu was struck by a car in early October 2012, which left him with severe head trauma. The daylong event, from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., will feature concessions, raffles, silent auction, Penalty Kick Competition, and a high-school-age mini tournament.

There is no admission charge but there will be entry fees for the penalty kick competition and the mini tournament in the afternoon.

QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL boys' soccer team was recognized by the Quincy School Committee for epitomizing the concept of team especially in overcoming adversity last season. The team also welcomed back one its players, Bai Kanu, who has undergone surgery and rehabilitation after he was injured riding his bicycle last fall. Kanu received a standing ovation from all those attending the meeting after he was introduced.

have and they've both been recognized for," said school committee member Dave McCarthy. "We've come a long, long way."

The three team captains, Dan Gould, Pat Gould, and Marquis McClendon, were league all-stars and three-year starters. During the last three years they started in 45 winning games, more than any other player in NQHS basketball history. The team, which scored more points in a single season than any other team in school history (1,561) had an 18-6 record.

Clendon, Vincent Tran, Efthim Butka, Anthony Green, and the head coach is Kevin Barrett.

"I look out here and I just see the best of the best and it's just a credit, and it doesn't just happen, of strong families and the people on the front line on a daily basis," said School Committee member Paul Bregoli. "We have a great thing going on here in the City of Quincy and we tend to forget because we have two high schools that we are one community.

"When we look out here at the quality of student-athletes and students at both high schools there's no reason to go anywhere else but Quincy Public Schools to get a great education and a great high school experience."

Snowy Winter Sends Spring Teams Indoors

By BILL GRIFFIN

The romantic idea of spring is the sun turns warm, the cold leaves the ground, the trees and flowers bloom, and baseballs fly through the air.

The hard truth of this spring is that snow covered the ground, baseball and softball are practiced inside, fly balls are framed by the gym ceiling instead of blue skies, and teams may play their openers after only two or three days outside on a field.

"I want to get out, the kids want to get out, but we have to wait for the fields," said Quincy baseball coach Pat Bryan whose club opens on the road April 3 at Archbishop Williams. "Nothing matches baseball played outside, but we have to stay upbeat and accomplish what we can."

"We call it one of the 'un-controllable's,'" said North Quincy softball coach Kerry Ginty whose team starts its season April 5 at Archbishop Williams. "We are limited in the gym, but there are things that we can work on and improve."

There are basics skill that can be sharpened indoors. Players can run, throw, catch, hit with some limitations, and pitch in situations which are not ideal, but can be useful. Infielders can take ground balls and outfielders can field popups although a gym ceiling is not the perfect backdrop or height for catching a baseball.

"We can do almost everything off the mound," said Bryan. "The pitchers can throw and the hitters can get their swings in. We can also work on ground bails to the infield. Fly balls are a little tougher."

North's doesn't have the same space or freedom of movement, but Ginty is clear that indoor workouts can offer a solid grounding in the fundamentals.

"We can take grounders, pitch and catch," she said. "We hit off tees or off a machine. We don't use regulations softballs. We used 'softies' which are basically made of cloth. We don't do a lot of live pitching or hitting, but we can work on base running and different situations."

Both coaches are positive in their approach, but baseball and softball are games to meant to be played outside on green grass under a warm sun on a clear patch of ground. Judging a fly ball, surviving that first jolt of hitting a ball off a bat on a cold day, sharpening a sense for the speed of the game, stretching out an arm idled by winter's hibernation can only be done outside. Both coaches can't wait.

"The first thing you worry about is getting their arms loose," said Bryan. "To avoid a sore arm, they have to play long toss from 80-100 feet. The outfielders also have to get used to seeing the ball against the sky and getting used to the space they have to cover."

There are also the "small-ball" skills and the pace of the game which are experienced best outside.

"Bunting, base running, sliding, reacting to fielding situations are what you need to get outside to work on," said Ginty. "Players also have to get used to the speed of the game. If there are runners on second and third and there's hard ground ball, how do you react? You have to be able to think quickly and you can only get that from practice outside."

Both coaches agree the hitting is the biggest challenge.

"When we get out, that will be our first live pitching for our hitters," said Ginty. "Players have to get used to seeing the ball and getting their bat around in time to match its speed."

"The hitters need to be outside to get their timing," said Bryan. "Hitting out of a ten-foot cage and hitting on a baseball field are two different things."

There is a thirst for clear baseball fields. In the gym, the bounce is always hard and true. On a field, there are strange hops from the mud, uneven grass and pebbles. The infielder needs to stay down, work his or her hands from the ground up. The outfielder needs to gauge the wind and the sun. All need to experience baseball in the chill of spring. The game needs to be played outside.

A solution? Take away the snow, dry the ground and drive away all storms. Any more questions?

Spring Sports Start Soon . . . Weather Permitting

By BILL GRIFFIN

If there ever is indeed a spring, Quincy and North Quincy High will offer a wide variety of sports selections for student-athletes and local fans.

The weather is a notorious spoiler of spring schedules, especially in the early stages of the season. Two March snowstorms have left the fields wet and muddy. Athletes, coaches, fans and families will need to be flexible with their schedules which are almost certain to change at least slightly.

Let's start with what we know. Boys volleyball is played indoors. North Quincy's volleyball team will open at Wareham Friday and travel to meet city rival Quincy Monday. The two will meet again on May 10.

Quincy will open its baseball season at Archbishop Williams April 3 while the Red Raiders host Marshfield on April 4. The two will play in tournaments during April vacation on April 16 and April 18. They will meet again on May 16.

The Presidents' softball team is at Scituate Tuesday while North opens at Archbishop Williams on April 5. The rivals clash on May 16 as part of a city doubleheader with the baseball teams.

North's boys lacrosse team is scheduled to host Duxbury Thursday and meet Dedham Tuesday. Quincy is at Sacred Heart Monday. North and Quincy play each other on May 22.

Quincy's girls lacrosse team is scheduled to host Brookline Thursday and will face Silver Lake Monday. North opens at Dedham April 2 and at Duxbury April 3. North and Quincy will face each other on April 25 and May 22.

North's boys tennis team hosts Randolph Tuesday while the Presidents travel to Randolph Wednesday. The two play each other on May 21.

The Red Raiders' girls tennis team hosts Duxbury April 9. The Presidents start

April 5 at home against Fontbonne. North and Quincy play on May 22.

The boys and girls track teams from the two schools host Hanover Tuesday.

North's girls golf team had two matches scheduled earlier this week weather permitting. The team will host Fontbonne Monday and travel to Ursuline Tuesday.

The Quincy Sun has posted schedules for the North Quincy and Quincy High Schools' spring sports teams.

Midgets Ready For National Championships

Quincy's 16-And-Under State Title Team
Heading To Troy, Michigan April 2-7
With High Expectations And Experience

By BILL GRIFFIN

All their bags are packed. They are ready to go.

The benefits, fund-raisers, raffles and sales have been a success. The money has been raised. They have practiced together since the end of the high school season. Most have played together since they were old enough to skate.

For the 16-and-under Midget State Champions from Quincy, it is time to play hockey on the big stage. The Midgets are ready for their trip to the national championships in Troy, Michigan from April 2 to April 7 and they are going with high expectations.

"We want it to be a fun trip, but we are going there to play hockey," said coach Brendan Craig. "The parents have worked hard to get us there. They've raised $30,000. The competition is strong, especially from the Michigan and Minnesota teams, but we're confident we can play with them."

The Midgets will open against Pittsburgh on Wednesday, April 3. They will play the host team from Michigan on April 4 and then meet top-ranked Connecticut on April 5.

Along with a fistful of talent, the Midgets main strengths are a balanced roster and experience playing together. They have two excellent goalies, six solid defensemen and three lines who can check and score.

Most of the team played for the Quincy and North Quincy varsities in the winter. Many have played youth hockey together. There are no mysteries here.

"Practices have been excellent and the players work together well. They've played together for a long time," said Craig. "We have strength throughout the roster from two strong goalies to the defense to three lines. You need depth against tournament teams and we should have it."

There is also experience in the national tournaments with Dan Matisoff and Mike Davis who each had hat tricks in decisive games in the state championships in the fall. "Jimmy Brennick has also played in a national tourney," said Craig.

A hot goalie can carry a team in the tourney and the Midgets have a special one in Nolan Greene of North Quincy who was the top goalie in the Patriot League and according to rival coaches, one of the best on the South Shore. He had a goal against average of under one. He seldom gives a bad goal, can make the spectacular save, has a terrific glove hand and plays with a confidence which lifts an entire team.

"He's the best we've seen this year," said Pembroke coach Mike Duffy. Greene made 42 saves against the Titans to salvage a 1-1 tie for North.

"He's the whole package," continued Duffy. "We didn't see a rebound the whole game. He moves well from side-to-side, makes the big save, and plays the angles so well that he makes himself bigger in the net. He's good in traffic, as good as anyone we've seen."

Ryan Higgins of Quincy High played brilliant hockey over the final 10 games of the high school season and gives the Midgets a wealth of talent in goal.

Brennick, Stephen Ross and Matt Kozlowski were solid in defense for Quincy High who gave only seven goals in its last five games in the varsity season. Matt Monahan had an excellent sectional tourney for North. Ed Riley and Brendan Cox have also shown well on defense. Cox is a fine forward as well.

The multi-talented Jake Hallissey joins Davis and Matisoff on the first line. Patrick Freeman who had 24 goals in the high-school season and led the Patriot League in scoring as a sophomore is a winger on the second line with James Doherty and Brian O'Callaghan. O'Callaghan (hat trick in the third North game) is a big-time scoring threat. Mike Finn, John Ross McEvilly and Robbie Harding form an excellent third line.

"I think the key for us is to play a solid first game. If we can establish ourselves and get used to the level of competition right from the first game, I think we'll be fine," said Craig.

The structure of the tourney will be the same as the state tourney. There will be round-robin play in two divisions. The top two teams from each division will then advance to the semifinals. In the state tourney, Quincy won four elimination games and grew stronger as the tourney progressed to win the title. The experience of playing hockey on the brink should serve them well.

"We know we have to take one game at a time, not to look past the game we're playing," said Craig. "I think the keys for us are on defense. Focus on defense first, get the puck out of the zone, avoid turnovers. We have excellent goaltenders and if we don't make mistakes in front of them, we have a good chance."

A Sensational Year For Quincy High Sophomore Patrick Freeman: A Gifted Goal Scorer

By BILL GRIFFIN

He is a scorer.

Patrick Freeman has all the obvious gifts. He has soft hands. He has a hard shot, accurate enough to find a dime-sized hole in the back of the net. His release is quicksilver quick. He is strong on the puck and hard to move from the sweet scoring spot in the slot. He is fast, breakaway fast enough to find the open space and collect a pass behind the defense. He is tough enough to win the one-on-one battles for the puck and clever enough to move the goalie out and off the crease and open wide the net.

However, the Quincy High sophomore has more than the obvious. He has that natural touch, that sense of the tiniest crack, the understanding of a hockey sniper who always knows where the net is. It can't be taught. A player has it or he doesn't.

His deflections don't sail wide, they find the net. When he has to make the split-second choice between wrist shot or slapper, he makes the right choice. Do you shoot or deke the goalie? He's right again. No matter how crazy the bounce, he anticipates the angle of the rebound and is there to bury it. If there is the smallest opening, he is through it. He is a scorer.

He led the Patriot League in scoring as a sophomore. He finished the season with 22 goals, nine assists and a 14-game, goal-scoring streak. He was a league All Star. He will soon have two fine stages for his abilities. He will take part in the Border Challenge in Milford, Connecticut on March 30 and will be an important part of the 16-and-under Quincy Midget State Champions when they play for the national title in Troy, Michigan beginning April 2.

"He has the uncanny ability to be able to time the reaction of an opponent or a teammate and makes his move," said Quincy High coach Tim Lewis. "We run timing drills in practice and I swear the young man was put on earth to gain an advantage because of his timing and reactions."

"His timing is so good he finds the open spots. This means he gets the good passes and has the good shots. It all gets back to his ability to react to any situation."

"Right place at the right time. At least some of the time," smiled Freeman.

There is more than natural ability. There is hard work. Freeman spends hours on PATRICK FREEMAN had a sensational season for the Quincy High Presidents. In his sophomore campaign, he led the Patriot League in scoring with 22 goals and was a League All-Star.

PATRICK FREEMAN

the rapid shooting machine at the Quincy Youth Hockey Center. The machine lets a player set a target, a speed for the pass he receives, and the quickness of his shot.

"The highest is 33 or 35 miles-per-hour," said Freeman. "I try to keep it at the second highest setting because I want my release to be as quick as possible."

Many scorers float, cheat while looking for the open chance, shy away from the hitting and let slide their checks. Freeman is the direct opposite. He is a hard, honest hockey player. He relishes the individual battles and he wins most of them because he simply refuses to lose. His work ethic has earned the respect of his teammates who elected him assistant captain as a junior for next year's team.

"He may not be the fastest or the biggest, but he's the most tenacious player out there," said Lewis. "He's one of our best at one-on-one battles. His teammates can look at him and know he worked for everything he's achieved. Some players have tenacity, some have great ability. Patrick is one of the few who has both."

"His work ethic is so strong. He's a good student as well. That's the way it works out. If a player works on the ice, he'll work in the classroom. Patrick is a worker."

The Border Challenge is an All Star game between the best hockey players from Massachusetts and Connecticut. Freeman is the first Quincy High player selected for the game. It is the best of the best. Freeman is thrilled with the challenge.

"I've been dying to play in a game like this," he said. "The talent level is amazing. It's a big step for me, to see how I can play against kids who have this kind of ability. I can't wait."

Freeman will then go with the Midgets to Michigan. He had a key goal to put Quincy ahead for good in the state semifinals in the fall. He will play against the best players from two states and then he will play against the players in the country in a space of four days. It is crazy, wonderful stuff.

"I can't believe it. It's happening so fast," said Freeman. "I never expected us to be in the national championship, but we all came together in the state tourney. It's a great opportunity to play with kids I've been playing with all my life against the best players in the country."

Freeman's hockey roots run deep. His father and uncles loved the game. He was on skates by age three and in youth league games by age five. He played in Quincy Youth Hockey for most of his development. The development has worked out well. He has been chosen one of the best players in the state as a sophomore and will play with his friends for a national title.

"I try to set goals," Freeman said. "This year in high school I wanted to score 20 goals. In the Border Challenge, my goal is to prove I can play with the best players. In the nationals, I want to put in a couple to help my team."

Chiropractor

THE CHIROPRACTOR, YOUR GOLF PRO

Have you ever thought about having a chiropractor take a look at your golf swing? Swinging a golf club creates sufficient torque (force) and torsion (twisting) to cause (re-)injury and pain in the lumbar spine. Thus, golfers often consult with a chiropractor to make sure that the stabilization mechanism of their lower back is flexible and strong. Aside from making spinal adjustments that are known to be effective in reducing pain and improving spinal mobility, the chiropractor can demonstrate a number of stabilizing exercises that impart the least amount of stress on the lumbar spine. The chiropractor can also discuss the biomechanics of a golf swing and recommend ways to optimize power while minimizing the risk of injury.

Could you improve your golf swing? We work with you to restore your health and guide you in a personalized approach to overall well-

Atlantic Girls, Broad Meadows Boys Volleyball Champs

Playoffs in middle school volleyball keep getting better in the City of Presidents. If the recent city championships are an indicator of future high school success, Quincy and North Quincy volleyball teams should be in great shape for the foreseeable future.

After six regular season matches, the Wild Card play-offs for the boys matched up Point against Central. The Point boys won an exciting three-game match to advance to the Saturday semifinals. Point had outstanding play from Domenic Coleman and great setting from Kevin Phu that helped them pull off the victory. Central boys were led by 8th graders James O'Leary who had great serving, Will Phelan and Declan Murphy set well and Tom Jaehnig and Kevin McDonald were steady in the outside hitter positions in the effort.

In the Girls' Wildcard match, Sterling defeated Point in another three-game thriller. Sterling saw tremendous play from Dajah Dupree in the middle, and Hilary Valenzuela who set up many of the hits for the Eagles as they advanced to the semi-finals. For Point, Alexandra MacPherson's outstanding hustle and all-around play forced the 3rd game tie breaker. Kaylen Kozlowski had a great passing and serving game as did Tiara Osgood with her serving. Zari Pizzarro's hustle and intensity during all the matches helped Point to the end and Jacklyn Fernandes's passing set up Point for some big points late in the game.

On Saturday, the Sterling girls coming in now as 4th seed had to play the top-seeded Broad Meadows team. A close 3-game match was a crowd pleaser as both teams passed, set and hit in multiple rallies. Sterling came away with the upset thanks to serving by Jessie Lei and defensive efforts of Madison Synan. Shakira Rivas was dominant for Broadmeadows at the net and Jackie Ryan played well offensively and defensively for the match.

In the 2nd girls' semifinal match, Central was pitted against Atlantic. Atlantic came away with the victory and advancement to the finals thanks to Laura Brundige's great service reception and defense. Central was led by 7th and 8th graders Samantha Caldwell, Rebecca Thorne and Bridget Durgin who all served well for the Rams. Alison DellaBarba helped the team out with great passing and Isabelle Flaherty made great plays at the net to help the Rams' effort.

The finals for the girls became a repeat of last season's final, Sterling vs. Atlantic. Although Sterling had tremendous defensive plays from the team and clutch serves by Gabi Gomes, Atlantic had the better passing game and won a three-game nail biter to clinch the title. Mandy Hazelton played well for Atlantic, Kelsie Dyer led her team as the setter and Melody Umoren racked up points from the service line and the net.

The boys' semifinal action saw Atlantic defeating Sterling in two games. Atlantic was led by Eric Huang who had great setting and defense in the advancement to the finals. Brigham McKee played intelligently and had great all-around play in the victory. Michael Tervakoski, and Davi Soares had great setting games while Shorn Hawthorne and John Teixeira hit well for the Eagles. Gredi Zyba had tremendous digs in the effort.

In the second semifinal, Broad Meadows defeated Point to advance to the final. Christ Pham and David Leuchte were powerful forces to be reckoned with from the service line in the victory for Broad Meadows. Point was led by Bu Cao who kept Meadows on their toes with his superb serving as well as Kyle Masone's great defense and passing which kept Point's offensive game alive.

The boys' final matched up Broadmeadows with Atlantic, another championship replay and after two games, Broad Meadows emerged the victor. For Broad Meadows, John Mei and Shamus McBride were outstanding at the net, blocking and spiking multiple times to bring home the trophy. Atlantic's Aidan Golden served well for the team.

The season was a great success with improvement by all 10 middle school teams. Congratulations to Broad Meadows and Atlantic for their victories and to the future of high school volleyball in Quincy!

Quincy Half Marathon Set To Run May 5

By EMILY TAFT

After being postponed due to a heavy unexpected snowfall two days before its original scheduled date of March 10, the fourth annual Half of Quincy half marathon will take place Sunday, May 5.

Event organizer JJ Lerner updated the Board of License Commissioners March 19 saying that the decision to postpone the marathon wasn't an easy one.

"It was a tough decision to postpone the race on March 10th," said Lerner. "All of the runners were disappointed. It's just one of those things, it was an act of God type situation."

The 13.1-mile road race starts at 8 a.m. at Quincy High School and snakes its way through Merrymount, back to Quincy Center, then into Wollaston, North Quincy, and Montclair, before ending at the city's new track next to the high school.

The event raises money for running programs in Quincy Public Schools, the Quincy Track Club, South Shore YMCA, and the Dana-Faber Marathon Challenge.

Over 1,400 runners competed in the half marathon last year, which was assisted by a team of more than 100 volunteers.

"After communicating with several fellow race directors, business leaders, city officials, sponsors, vendors, volunteers and many, many, many runners, race officials have decided that it's best to reschedule the event and a new permit has now been secured from the city," race coordinator JJ. Lerner said.

"The industry standard in this situation is that the event is simply not held and all proceeds remaining after expenses such as advertisements, food, registration costs, shirt production, permitting, and other fees, etc., are speedily, and without ceremony, donated to charity.

"Honoring the wishes of the great majority of the runners and others who communicated with race officials, we will disregard industrial standards and instead move ahead to May 5, allowing us to produce a road race worthy of all our loyal runners and also maximize our donations to Quincy's youth.

"The March 8 snowfall and the subsequent concerns that arose regarding public safety were factors well beyond the control of race officials, but we appreciate the difficult decision the Quincy Police were forced to make for the well-being of runners and the public at-large. We hope you now support our decision."

Lerner said runners who registered for the March 10 date have two options:

- Run Sunday, May 5 or
- Defer entry to next year.

Those wishing to defer are asked to send an email entitled "defer to 2014" to kellyandjj@aol.com no later than 5 p.m. Sunday, March 31.

Race registration for new May 5 entries began March 20.

Quincy Players Contribute To AWHHS State Hoop Title

By BILL GRIFFIN

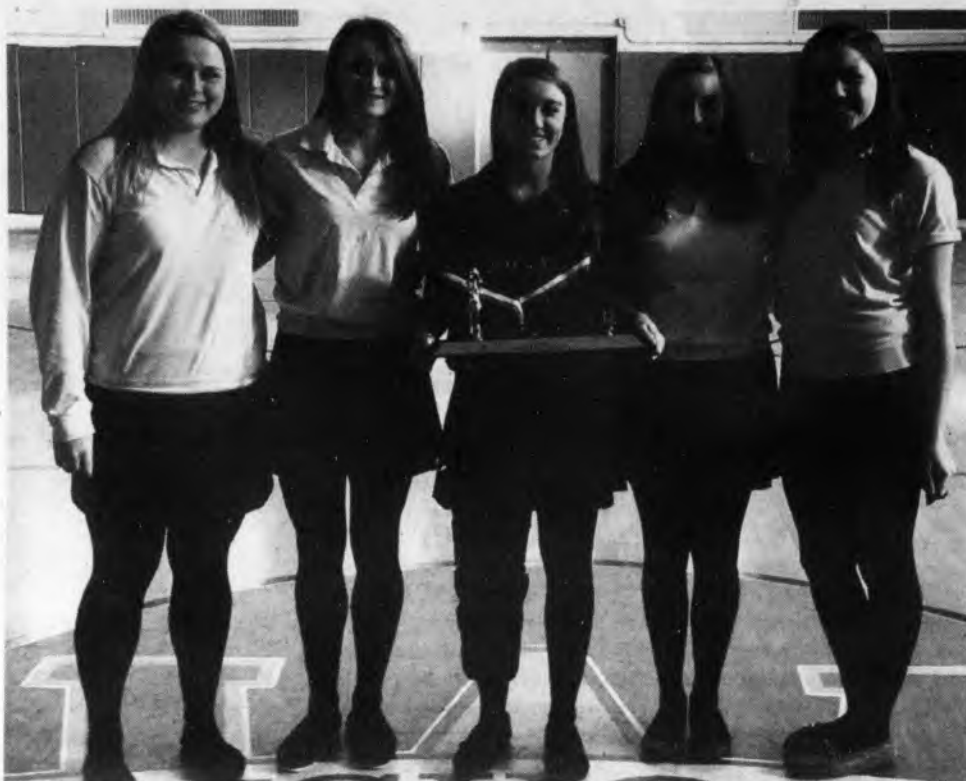

It was a rare team, a team a coach and a player are blessed to experience. It was not only a team bursting with talent, it was a team of friendships and gifted athletes who relished playing together.

And there was a strong Quincy flavor to it all. Five players from Quincy, including both co-captains, contributed to Archbishop Williams Division 3 Girls State Basketball Championship which the Bishops clinched with a 60-33 romp over Lee High in the title game.

"We had a high level of talent, but we also had a strong team chemistry that really made this team a joy to coach," said coach Jim Bancroft. "Everybody got along and I give a lot of the credit for that to our captains."

Both are from Quincy. Co-captain Sara Ryan scored 1000 points and was one of the best players in school history. Co-captain Kayla Free provided energy and talent off the bench along with an unselfishness which was a trademark of the entire team. Junior Julie Bloomer came back from a difficult knee injury to play valuable minutes in the backcourt. Freshman Katrina Veasey showed promise and athleticism as a post player. Sophomore Molly Plunkett moved up to the varsity for the tourney and impressed with her shooting and defense.

Ryan's story is a lot more than points. She was a four-year starter. She started as a freshman at point guard in the challenging Catholic Central League and moved to shooting guard as her career progressed.

"A freshman starting at point guard in the Catholic Central League is something you just don't see," said Bancroft. "She handled the ball and ran the team against some of the toughest teams in Eastern Massachusetts."

Ryan is not a scorer. She is a basketball player. She scores inside and out, defends, rebounds, and is quick enough to get steals without giving up solid defensive position. She is the complete package and will play for Southern New Hampshire next season.

"Sara is the example of the complete basketball player," said Bancroft. "She loves all aspects of the game. She has a nose for the ball and the ability to make the play the team needs. She loves to compete."

Her three-pointer started the rout against Lee and her will to compete was tested in her senior year. She was slowed at the beginning of the year by knee surgery. Just as her knee grew stronger and the tourney approached, she injured her ankle. She sat out a tournament game against Medway. The player, who above all loved to play the game, had to sit. However, she was more than a player. She was a captain.

"Even though she wasn't at her best physically, her leadership was what we needed. She is so open and easy to get along with that it lifted the whole team," said Bancroft.

She ended her varsity career with six points, seven rebounds, five assists, and two steals in the title game. It was not the stat line of a player who looks only to score. It was the state line of the complete player. It was a perfect way to finish her story at Archbishop Williams.

"The title and her team are what mattered to her," said Bancroft.

Perhaps no player exemplifies unselfishness better than Free. The Bishops had an unusual number of gifted young players. This meant Free had to come off the bench and make instant contributions for 8-10 minutes per game. There are two issues. First, it is extremely difficult to enter a game cold and play at full throttle for short stretches. Second, senior co-captains sitting so sophomores can play is frequently not a good situation. Free made it work.

"It worked because with Kayla, it is never about her, it is always about the team," said Bancroft. "It's not easy to come off the bench and give instant energy, but she was a sparkplug for us in every game she played."

At many schools, Free could have started. At many schools, she could have scored a lot of points and seen her name in the newspaper. She can shoot the three, defend, and handle the ball. She can play small forward and both guard positions. She is a blue-chip high school player. She played off the bench because it was best for her team and the reward was that golden moment on the Garden floor sharing the title with her close friend Ryan and her teammates.

"She never complained, not once," said Bancroft. "Kayla and Sara are alike in a lot of ways. Kayla is also open and easy-going and that worked well for us as captains. It was what we needed. She's just a great kid."

Her skills drew notice. College scouts watched her play and Bancroft thinks Free can play and play well in college if that is the path she chooses.

"She definitely can play Division 3 if that's the level of school she chooses to attend," said Bancroft.

Bloomer played important minutes as a freshman and sophomore, but lost nearly half the season to an ACL injury. She contributed towards the end of the season and is an important part of the future for the Bishops. She can play either guard position effectively.

"She handles the ball well enough to play the point, and she is an excellent outside shooter," said Bancroft.

Veasey is a terrific volleyball player and she brings her quickness and leaping ability to the basketball floor. She was at home as a freshman on the varsity with her rebounding and play in the post. She is such a good athlete that Bancroft sees an expanded role for her next year.

"She's very tough inside, but she is such a good athlete, I think she can play facing the basket, make her shot and drive," said Bancroft.

Plunkett played the regular season on JV's and moved to the varsity for the tourney. Bancroft liked what he saw from her shooting and all around-play.

"She fit right in and she worked hard," he said.

Track Season Underway With 130 Athletes From Quincy, North Quincy

The track programs at both high schools began Monday with 130 athletes utilizing the brand new facility at Faxon Field along with the gymnasium at Quincy High, which became the brain center for all sports for most of the week with recent inclement weather.

"There are a lot of moving parts" said North head coach Geoff Hennessy. "The North and Quincy folks are working together but there are shifts and movements that require attention to directions and lot of supervision."

The Quincy staff of Steve Ohlson, Lauren Brooks and John Green begin their athletes in the weight room and gymnasium while the North staff of Hennessy, Carolyn Mullaney and Christian Donovan start on the track and then the two groups switch.

The only exception is the distance runners who all get together and run the roads with a once-weekly track workout. Some also do a field event, which Hennessy, assisted by Peter Chrisom

Jr. supervise on an early and late sequence of workouts.

"It's like double-sessions with a twist," said Hennessy.

Although Chrisom, Green and Hennessy have all spent multiple years coaching, Lauren Brooks is in her second year coaching after a two-year stint at Fontbonne.

Steve Ohlson is in his first year coaching after leading the North indoor team this past winter. Christian Donovan is a newly-minted Quincy patrolman, after a hitch in the Navy. He was a New England Qualifier in the 400 meters at North and was part of a school record Distance medley relay.

Carolyn Mullaney was a former All-American at Norwich and has been working as a fitness instructor. Her children Jake, Mike, Danielle and Brianna are all track stars.

Other volunteer coaches are Brendan Nee of the L Street Running Club, a former Don Bosco Tech runner, and Kevin Ung, a recent Quincy High grad attending Wentworth Institute.

The teams return some starry athletes including Quincy High's Jaquan Harris, Jalen Green, and James Lam of football and basketball fame, North's Emily and Julia Bryson and Danielle Mullaney in the distances, Rose Bennett and

Camille Mullaney from volleyball, Sam McNally and Maya Umoren who both medalled in last spring's class meet and play basketball, and Danny Tran, Don Sharp, Ed Guinto and Antoine Allen who all scored in last spring's track season. "Our biggest plus this year is home meets. We can now run meets where kids can come see what we do. Track helps every athlete in every sport. We have to sell that fact. Nobody sits. And everyone can see themselves improve.

If we get buy-in over time there's no telling what we can do," Hennessy said.

The team hosts Archbishop Williams Saturday in a freshman-sophomore meet (9:30 a.m.), and has home meets against Hanover April 2, Randolph April 23 and Hingham May 6.

Weekday meets start at 3:30pm.

Quincy Community

United Methodist Church

Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston, will celebrate the Easter Vigil Saturday, March 30 at 7:30 p.m.

"With the exception of the Episcopalians, very few Protestants have had the opportunity to experience the Easter Vigil," said Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of Quincy Community. "I think this is really unfortunate. The Vigil is one of the most ancient and certainly one of the most dramatic celebrations of the Church year. It's my very favorite worship service."

Dating from the earliest years of the Christian Church, the Vigil literally leads the congregation from Lent to Easter. It does so through word, song, and, most importantly, symbols that refer to Scripture. Because many people today are unfamiliar with symbolic interpretation, explanatory notes are provided in the text of the Vigil service.

"I hope people will take the time to read the explanations," said Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden. "The Vigil is a rich, wonderful service on its own, but when a person understands the meaning behind the ritual, it becomes even richer."

The Easter Vigil is a service unlike any other. For example, everyone planning to attend the Easter Vigil is asked to bring a flashlight and to wear comfortable walking shoes.

Flashlights are used instead of candles for safety reasons.

"Comfortable shoes are also important, because some walking is involved – a short staircase," Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden said. "People then have the option of continuing with the traditional Vigil, which includes more walking, or the non-traditional in which people remain seated in one place. Both groups then join together for the major portion of the service."

The Easter Vigil is very much a participatory worship experience and the more a person puts into the Vigil, the more that person will get out of it, Rev. Dr. Jarek-Glidden said.

"I think a friend of mine put it best when he said, 'I used to think I "got" Easter here' – and he pointed to his forehead. 'But now,' he continued, 'I get Easter here' – and he pointed to his heart.'

"That's what the Easter Vigil is all about, and everyone is cordially invited to share in this wonderful experience," she added.

A Look Back: Easter Sunday - 1943

Hall of MA.

She believed strongly in improving the profession through ongoing education and as such, she was the driving force behind the re-establishment of the education program at the Insurance Library Assoc. of Boston, which began in 1890. A person who walked the walk as well as talking the talk, Mrs. Thornton taught a class with some 30 students in the first term of the education program's renaissance. In recognition of those efforts, and the respect accorded by her colleagues on the Library's Board of Trustees, the Library established the Barbara Thornton Award, which is presented to an outstanding student annually in her honor.

Rev. M. Alicia Corea, 91

Community Leader; Longtime Pastor At Houghs Neck Congregational Church; First Woman Ordained In Quincy

A memorial service for Rev. M. Alicia Corea, 91, of Walnut Creek, CA and formerly Quincy is planned for June in Quincy.

Rev. Corea died March 17 after a lengthy illness.

She was born in Ashland, ME on Nov. 4, 1921 to Fred and Annie Coffin. Her brother, Charles, was born ten years later. Rev. Corea attended elementary school in Ashland, but her parents moved to Bangor so she could attend Bangor High School, from which she graduated in 1939.

Religion was an important part of her childhood. Her parents were active members of the church, and her mother was pianist and organist for many years. In Bangor she was active in All Souls Congregational Church. Under the guidance of the minister, Frederick Meek, she joined the church. Her religious quest continued throughout her college years when she was influenced by Ruth Seabury, a Christian missionary who interested her in the Danforth Foundation, and encouraged her to become a full time religious worker.

Rev. Corea attended the University of Maine in Orono where she joined the Alpha Omicron Pi sorority. She received her Bachelor of Arts degree with a major in History and Journalism from U. of M. in 1943. The academic year 1943-1944 was spent at the University of Nebraska in Lincoln working under a Danforth Graduate Fellowship. As a traveling Secretary for the World Student Service Fund, in the fall of 1944 she visited campuses in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Kentucky; she spent the summer of 1945 as the student Summer Service Worker in South Dakota on the Cheyenne Reservation.

After her work at the University of Nebraska, Alicia felt the need for more religious study in order to be better able to work with young people. She enrolled at Andover Newton in January 1945 as a part-time student. It was at Andover Newton that she met Peter

V. Corea as a fellow student and they married on June 1, 1946.

In September 1947 Peter came to the Houghs Neck Congregational Church to preach for one Sunday. The congregation liked him so much that on Sunday, Oct. 16, 1947 he was called to be the minister. His ordination to the Christian ministry followed on Sunday, Dec. 8, 1947.

During their first two years in Houghs Neck Church, she continued as a student at Andover Newton. Following her graduation in 1949, and with the strong support and encouragement of her husband and the parish, Rev. Corea was ordained by her former minister, Dr. Meek to the Christian ministry on May 5, 1949. She was the first woman in Quincy, and one of the first in Massachusetts to be ordained.

Over the years the Coreas created and shared a unique team ministry in teaching people through worship and personal counseling. Peter loved teaching and for many years was a Professor of Psychology at Emerson College. As his teaching duties increased, his wife gradually assumed more responsibility within the church. She attended Church Council, played the organ, sang in the choir, taught Bible classes, was involved with the youth of the church, attended Mothers Club, prepared the Newsletter and the church bulletins, and worked closely with the Diaconate. She performed her ministerial responsibilities with grace, compassion,

A Job Well Done

• Blind Spots — It is easy for a car or a motorcycle to be hidden in a large vehicle's blind spots. Therefore, do not follow closely behind a truck or a bus. When driving near a large vehicle, be aware of the driver's blind spots on the right, left, front, and behind.

• Tailgating — If you cannot see a truck's rearview mirrors, you are tailgating. Tailgating is dangerous. By following too closely, you are losing the safety cushion you need if the vehicle in front of you stops short.

• Cutting in Front — Drivers of large vehicles try to keep a safety cushion of space around them. A large truck may need twice as much distance to stop as an automobile or a motorcycle, especially when roads are wet or icy. Do not drive into the space immediately surrounding a large vehicle. Do not pull in front of a large vehicle and slow down or stop suddenly. The driver will have too little room to stop and will crash into you or may risk "jackknifing" by trying to stop suddenly at highway speeds.

Studies by the National Safety Council and the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety show that a fully loaded tractor trailer may take twice as far to stop as a passenger vehicle.

• Driving Too Slowly — On a multiple-lane highway, trucks and buses can only drive in the two right-hand lanes. They use the far right lane for normal travel and the second lane for passing. If you travel in the second lane, stay with the flow of traffic and do not drive below the minimum speed limit. Driving too slowly in this lane can create a bottleneck of large vehicles. This can increase highway traffic hazards. If the driver of a truck or bus wants to pass you, move over when it is safe to do so and let the vehicle pass.

• Passing on the Left — It takes longer to pass a tractor-trailer or a bus than another car or a motorcycle. Be aware that large vehicles travel slower uphill and faster downhill.

• Passing on the Right — Do not pass a truck or bus on the right unless it is absolutely necessary. Large vehicles make wide turns, and sometimes they must move to the left before making a wide turn to the right. If you are next to a truck or bus, you are probably in a blind spot. Watch for possible right-hand turns, and stay safely behind until you know what the driver is doing.

• Truck or Bus Approaching — If a large vehicle is coming toward you on an undivided road, stay to the right. You will avoid being sideswiped or shaken by air turbulence. At intersections, take extra care in judging the speed of the oncoming vehicle. Trucks and buses cannot slow down easily if you cut in front of them to turn.

Not All Is Lost For Republicans

I am writing in response to Chuck Fazio's letter that appeared in the Feb. 21st edition of the Quincy Sun.

First of all I would like to say that I am a Quincy resident (presently in Florida which is why I'm late writing this missive), and have been a Republican since I was old enough to vote. That was 48 years ago. I worked in minor ways for Ed Brooke's, John Volpe's and Frank Sargent's campaigns. All three of these men won elections as moderate Republicans. They did so by presenting a message to the voters which was uplifting and empowering. No voting blocks were offended by being told what they could or couldn't do. Nobody was made to feel like a second class citizen. Nobody was made to feel that he or she was being punished. Their agendas were compassionate, and they didn't feel the need to have their positions of the day approved by William F. Buckley, Jr. or some other conservative icon.

This stands in stark contrast to our most recent election during which the Republican candidates were forced to adopt positions from a most punitive platform. The 2012 platform should have been an embarrassment to every reasonable Republican in this country - it seemed to scream out "Tea Party." There was no compassion in it. It was offensive to women, gays, and immigrants, both legal and illegal. Abortion and same sex unions have become acceptable to a great majority of Americans. We cannot go back to some bygone century and pretend they don't exist.

What bothered me most is that Republicans could have approached these issues in a way that was less mean-spirited. Moderate Republicans could have fashioned a much more compassionate platform. That odious platform caused Republicans all over the country to lose their positions in government at all levels. Many of those who lost their seats were Tea Party candidates.

Despite our poor showing in the 2012 election, not all is lost for Republicans. We have a Democratic President and Democrats predominate in the U.S. Senate. As Democrats they will do what Democrats do best - spend, spend, spend. Democrats love to dispense largesse using other people's money. They will spend until they are giddy. There's nothing more appalling than a giddy Democrat. They will run through the revenue produced by the tax increase that was passed in January and then look for other bail-outs to keep their spending frenzy going.

This is where the Republicans can score points with the voters. They can hold the line on taxes and be fiscally responsible. Eventually, the voters will wake up and put a Republican administration back in the White house that clean house and put the federal government on a strict budget.

As for Scott Brown, I was a supporter of his and will continue to be. It is most unfortunate fro Massachusetts that Scott was denied a full six-year term. His independence and willingness to judge each bill on its merits would have put him on the path to statesmanship. Very few members of Congress can even aspire to attain such lofty status because they are too partisan. I don't see anyone else likely to reach his level of non-partisanship in the near future.

Finally, I too want to wish Kirsten Hughes well on her promotion to Chairwoman of the state Republican Party. Kirsten is a hard worker and I have been delighted to have her as my ward councillor.

As for you, Mr. Fazio, if you ever become the State Republican Chairman, I will sever my longtime relationship to the Massachusetts Republican Party and join the ranks of the unenrolled.

More On Republicans In Name Only

I have been slamming the MA Republican Committee and the RINO's these past several weeks. As expected, I received incoming fire from two readers whose letters both wound up in the Feb. 28th Sun.

One called me a Monday morning QB and worse. For his info, I did work for Scott Brown and that's the last mistake I will ever make. Brown exceeded his promise to be bipartisan. He became a Democrat and cozied up to them. They rewarded his duplicity by replacing him with a part-time Cherokee.

Sal Giaratani told me I should get a grip on myself because things aren't as bad as they seem for the Republicans. That's exactly what I would expect a loyal Democrat to say. The MA Republicans are virtually extinct. I forgot the last time they sent a congressman to Washington and they haven't been represented in the US Senate since Ed Brooke got run out about 35 years ago. His seat was eventually occupied by a washed up ex Naval officer who essentially collaborated with the North Vietnamese and endeared himself to the Democrats. "Ghengis Khan" Kerry continues to carry on the proud traditions of the MA Democrats.

RINO-ism is an insidious disease. It creeps up on Republicans with utopian ideals who think they can get the other side to work with them. Usually, they get brow-beaten into bowing and scraping and begging for crumbs. Eventually, they get full-blown RINO-itis and become useful idiots by attacking fellow Republicans who refuse to buckle under.

John McCain is one of the primary carriers of this infection and his current petty sniping at Rand Paul proves that the sooner McCain and his fellow RINO's are run out of office, the better. The MA Republican party has been decimated by this pandemic of infighting and defeatism. Yet, it still thinks it can be an influence on the national party.

Of the three Republican hopefuls for Kerry's seat, good authority has it that at least one is conservative and the other two may be RINO's. We shall see.

Accusations Made At C-Mart Hearing 'Grossly Unfair, Dishonest,' Koch Says Mayor Rebukes Racism Allegations

Mayor Thomas Koch today issued a sharply worded public rebuke to accusations leveled at the most recent C-Mart public hearing that racism is driving opposition to its proposed North Quincy supermarket location as "grossly unfair, dishonest, and an affront to each and every resident of Quincy."

Mayor Koch made the statements in a letter to City Council President Michael McFarland to be included as part of the record in the ongoing permit hearings for the C-Mart supermarket being conducted by the Council. Specifically, Koch pointed to statements read during the March 25 public

Council To Begin Reviewing C-Mart Proposal April 8

The City Council, acting as the Special Permit Granting Authority, will begin reviewing a proposal to build a C-Mart supermarket in North Quincy next week.

The council's meeting will be held Monday, April 8 at 7 p.m. at City Hall. The meeting will focus on a review of reports by city department heads, consultants, and peer reviewers. Under the plan, C-Mart would have 25,000 square feet of retail space and a 6,400 square foot warehouse. Developer Michael Fang also plans to use an existing two-story office building on the site as his new C-Mart headquarters.

Previously, the council held two public hearings on the plan to open the C-Mart at the former Boston Gear Works building at 10 Hayward Street. More than 90 residents spoke at the two hearings, which lasted a combined eight hours. The public comment period was closed after the second meeting on March 25, and the council has 90 days to vote on the proposal from that date.

$250,000 In Repairs To Cavanagh Field New Grass; Improved Irrigation, Drainage

By SCOTT JACKSON

North Quincy's Cavanagh Stadium could be closed for much of the summer as the city works to repair the field.

The City Council voted Monday night to appropriate $250,000 from Quincy's hotel/motel tax to the Park Department. Chris Casani, the new director of the Park Department, explained that the money would go towards restoration work at Cavanagh Stadium and will also allow for resurfacing of playgrounds.

"The $250,000 is broken up between Cavanagh and the need for additional safety fiber at a number of different playgrounds — any of you that have been out to one of our playgrounds understands it is a chronic need and it's something that immediately addresses safety concerns and so forth that

$3.8M For Building Repairs, New Vehicles, School Safety

By SCOTT JACKSON

The City Council approved spending Honeywell settlement money on building repairs, new vehicles, and school safety by a unanimous vote Monday night.

The spending plan, proposed by Mayor Tom Koch, calls for using $1 million in Honeywell funds for repairs to public buildings, $794,000 on new vehicles and equipment, and $500,000 for school security upgrades, including new locks on classroom doors. Another $1 million was put into the city's stabilization fund and $500,000 was reserved for hearing on C-Mart in which the accusations of racism were made.

Mayor Rebukes Racism Allegations

"These orchestrated statements, implying that racism is the true root of neighborhood opposition to the project, are grossly unfair, dishonest, and an affront to each and every resident of our community," Mayor Koch stated in the letter.

"The City of Quincy is far too proud and its long history as a city of immigrants far too great to allow such defamatory statements to be made with impunity," he continued.

Koch said that the "inflammatory" statements read into the public record in some cases by people who are not Quincy residents "can only be viewed as a highly orchestrated campaign of intimidation devised to potentially white-wash the more tangible concerns of traffic and public safety relative to the C-Mart proposal."

"These allegations do not deserve the respect of a point-by-point response, but I will state that the true nature of Quincy and its people is open for all to see in the great diversity in our business districts, our schools, and our neighborhoods," Koch stated. "Anyone who suggests that Quincy is somehow not open to diverse, multi-cultural business development quite simply has not spent any time here."

Mayor Koch stressed that the traffic concerns relayed by both residents and professional engineers should not be discounted, noting that he has lived in the neighborhood where C-Mart is proposed for his entire life and that he can attest "first-hand to the long-standing traffic flow issues in the area." Those issues, he said, should remain the focus of the Council's deliberations.

"No member of the Special Permit Granting Authority should feel coerced into their vote based on scurrilous accusations of racism," Koch stated.

many parents have," Cassani said.

Located on Birch Street, Cavanagh Stadium has a football field, basketball court, and running track. The field is used by the three public schools in the area - North Quincy High, Atlantic Middle School, and the Parker School - and others like Quincy Catholic Academy. The Quincy Track Club used the field until Quincy's new track at Faxon Field opened.

"Cavanagh Stadium has a tremendous amount of use. Over the course of time it has absorbed the needs of a number of different programs and a number of different schools. It's not just North Quincy High School, it's not just Atlantic, it's not even just Parker. You also have places like Quincy Catholic Academy that are using it," Cassani said. "It has a tremendous amount of use. It has taken a tremendous amount of time. Since the track has opened certainly the need to have the track programs run there is no longer there, so this money will allow us to do a nice job."

The city intends to install new grass and improve the park's irrigation and drainage systems. Work is expected to begin soon, with the Park Department laying down new soil.

"We're going to do some of the work in house. Once we have some of the loam and so forth figured out we have staff in house that will be able to do this with their skill set. We'll be able to get that part of the project going right away. Then we'll have to bid out the irrigation work and get quotes on the sodding and get that taken care of," Cassani said. "Our work in house can begin fairly soon which will be perfect because we'll get a bid out, get the irrigation work going, and this will all sort of happen very quickly."

Cavanagh will not be able to re-open until the new sod is firmly set on the field. Cassani hopes to have the field up and running again by the fall.

"We wouldn't want to jeopardize putting this amount of money into a project and then destroy it the first time [it's used]. Working with our staff who know turf a whole lot better than I do, based on their recommendation we'll determine then. I would anticipate hopefully in the fall we'd be able to utilize it then. But you never know how sod takes," Cassani said.

Members of the council were excited that Cavanagh Stadium would be restored because of how many different groups utilize the field on a recurring basis.

"This is a great way to dedicate some resources within our park system. Cavanagh, as you mentioned, has just been a workhorse in the north end of the city. The Quincy Track Club, the high school programs, the middle school program every Friday has hundreds of kids there every Friday running," Ward 1 Councilor Margaret Laforest said. "It's going to be a great opportunity to bring this back to a space we can be proud of."

"It's what makes Quincy such a wonderful place. If you go to Cavanagh this is what I've seen - I've seen Irish football, I've seen hurling, I've seen soccer, I've seen football, I've seen lacrosse, I think I might have even seen a little bit of cricket there," Council Finance Committee Chairman Joe Finn said. "It's just an incredible public space with a great amount of access. Doing anything to make sure that that's in great shape is fantastic."

Council President Michael McFarland added that a photograph from a rugby game at Cavanagh Stadium was featured in the front page of a Boston newspaper's sports section.

"There was a picture of a rugby match going on at the field down there and they were cut in the face and cut up. I definitely feel the field needs to be done over. There was no better advertising for this appropriation," McFarland said.

No Dispensaries Until 2014 At The Earliest Rx Marijuana Ban OK'd

By SCOTT JACKSON

Medical marijuana dispensaries will not be opening in Quincy until 2014 at the earliest.

The City Council Monday night voted unanimously in favor a moratorium prohibiting dispensaries for nine months. Councillors Doug Gutro and Kevin Coughlin proposed the moratorium in March to allow the council more time to refine a proposal by Councillor Brian Palmucci that would set new zoning regulations for the dispensaries.

"As a city with a difficult issue brought on by the will of the voters we've made a prudent approach here — a moratorium and trying to get the right zoning in place," Gutro said. "We're in a better place today than we were a while back. A lot of credit goes to Councillor Palmucci for driving the issue in the first place."

Palmucci's initial proposal would have banned any dispensaries from opening within 1,500 feet of a residence or school, essentially limiting their possible locations to the Fore River Shipyard, Crown Colony, and Quarry Hills. In February, the council's Ordinance Committee voted against the plan, partly because of concerns over limitations on home cultivation of medical marijuana for patients with a hardship. Palmucci submitted his new plan Monday night. It keeps the same zoning restrictions in place, but the limitations on hardship cultivation and a restriction on home delivery have been removed.

The Department of Public Health proposed a set of statewide regulations last week for medical marijuana. Among other rules, the regulations would require anyone seeking to grow medical marijuana at their home to receive permission from DPH. Palmucci said the new regulations have some good protections, but was still concerned about home delivery.

"The regulations that DPH have promulgated, while they do have some protections that I think will allow for a seamless implementation of the ballot initiative, I think there are gaping issues that need to be addressed relative to zoning," Palmucci said. "In the DPH regulations that they've promulgated for the public comment period, they do allow for delivery by these organizations or these distributors in lieu of home cultivation, which is one of the main concerns that I have and that I think residents have as well."

Palmucci also urged his colleagues to take action on his zoning proposal before the moratorium expires next January.

"These DPH regulations call for compliance with local zoning specifications. As it stands now we have no zoning specifications in the city," Palmucci said. "I know we passed a moratorium, I'm glad we did, but that doesn't mean we should sit back and let the clock tick and the calendar pages fly so that by the time this is implemented we have nothing on the books. We have to have something on the books to protect residential areas...we have to keep them away from schools."

In March, Attorney General Martha Coakley approved a similar measure passed in Burlington that put a moratorium on dispensaries in place until June 30, 2014 to allow that town to craft zoning rules. On that same day, Coakley also ruled an outright ban passed in Wakefield was invalid because it conflicts with state law.

Councillors Propose New Adopt-A-Hydrant Program

Residents Would Purchase Reflective Markers

Under a program proposed at a recent City Council meeting, residents could volunteer to 'adopt' fire hydrants and purchase reflective markers to help locate them.

Councillors Kevin Coughlin, Kirsten Hughes, and Brian Palmucci introduced a resolution asking the DPW to look into the feasibility of such a program at a recent council meeting. Coughlin explained that the Quincy Fire Department has one of the best response times in the state, but snowstorms like February's blizzard can make finding hydrants nearly impossible.

"We know that minutes or even seconds can make a difference in terms of saving life or property when firefighters respond to suppress a fire—I think that's why every fire department places a pretty high premium on their response times," Coughlin said. "We are very fortunate to live in a city that, according to data from the national fire incident reporting system, rates among the best in the Commonwealth in terms of response times.

"But the best response times can be nullified if we don't ensure that fire hydrants are at all times clearly visible and accessible to firefighters upon arrival. When we have significant snows like we did this time, and when we have unfortunately in some instances errant plows that dump snow on to fire hydrants, it makes it a matter of public safety that ought to grab our attention."

The answer, according to Coughlin, is to install markers on top of each hydrant. They stand up above the hydrant, and are able to reflect a firetruck's flashing lights. Tewksbury recently launched their own Adopt-A-Hydrant program, partnering with a private company to allow residents to purchase the markers at a discount.

"Citizens that live in neighborhoods were actually purchasing markers through the city in partnership with a company called Hy-Viz. Markers were available for $14.95, which was half of the price that's common on the market," Coughlin said.

Coughlin said he talked with Fire Chief Joseph Barron, and the chief was supportive of starting program for Quincy's 2,500 hydrants. And Coughlin feels community members would line up to adopt the hydrants in their neighborhoods.

"For $14.95 I'm ready to jump on board. There's a hydrant across the street from me, I'll purchase the marker for my own street," Coughlin said. "I have a feeling that other people might want to do the same thing."

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows — a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized... or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get:
  - > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required
  - > A mortgage with a competitive rate

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On April 18, 1775, Paul Revere and William Dawes set out on horseback from Boston to warn leaders Samuel Adams and John Hancock that British troops were marching on Concord on a mission to confiscate the Massachusetts militia arsenal and capture Adams and Hancock.

• On April 19, 1876, a Wichita, Kan., commission votes not to rehire policeman Wyatt Earp after he beats up a candidate for county sheriff. Earp's Remington pistol made an effective club: Whenever possible, he preferred to pistol-whip his opponents rather than shoot them.

• On April 16, 1897, Frederick Winterbotham, one of Britain's top code breakers, is born. Winterbotham would play a decisive role in the World War II Ultra code-breaking project, enabling British intelligence to intercept top-secret messages (even from Hitler) transmitted to and between German armed forces.

• On April 21, 1930, a fire at an Ohio prison kills 320 inmates, some of whom burn to death when they are not unlocked from their cells. The prison, built to hold 1,500 people, housed 4,300 prisoners at the time of the fire.

• On April 15, 1947, Jackie Robinson, age 28, becomes the first black player in Major League Baseball when he steps onto Ebbets Field in Brooklyn, N.Y., to compete for the Dodgers. Baseball had been segregated for more than 50 years.

• On April 17, 1964, the Ford Mustang is officially unveiled by Henry Ford II at the World's Fair in Flushing Meadows, N.Y. That same day, the new car also debuted in Ford showrooms across America, and almost 22,000 Mustangs were immediately snapped up by buyers. Ford sold more than 400,000 Mustangs in its first year.

• On April 20, 1971, the Pentagon releases figures confirming that "fragging" is on the rise in Vietnam, with hundreds of reported incidents. Fragging was a slang term used to describe U.S. military personnel tossing a fragmentation hand grenade (hence the term "fragging") to kill or wound a fellow soldier, usually a superior officer or NCO.

Tim Cahill: In His Own Words

The case generated headlines and media coverage from local, Boston and national media including The Wall Street Journal.

We've written about it several times and shared our opinions with our readers.

It was the public corruption trial of former state Treasurer Tim Cahill. The case is over and Cahill and his family are moving on. Friends and supporters of Tim and his wife Tina Cahill will also help the family close this chapter when a Night for Tim and Tina is held next Thursday, April 11 at 7 p.m. at the Tirrell Room, Quincy Lodge of Elks, 264 Quarry St., West Quincy. Donations will be accepted at the door.

CAHILL

This week, in this space, we want to share with our readers some of Tim's insights and reflections of the case that ended with a $100,000 civil fine last month following a mistrial last December.

Some of what Tim says may surprise you. Cahill's candid, philosophical and perceptive in discussing the case brought forth by Attorney General Martha Coakley who charged he used his office as treasurer to boost his quixotic gubernatorial campaign in 2010 running as an independent.

At the heart of the case: Cahill's authorization of $1.65 million in lottery ads following political attack ads leveled by the Republican Governors Association. The state treasurer oversees the state lottery and Cahill maintained he had a responsibility to defend the lottery from those attacks. By the way, the ad authorized by Cahill did not mention his name nor did it include his likeness. In fact, it was an ad that had run previously for six or seven years with an altered, updated script.

In the end, most of the jurors — perhaps as many as 11 out of 12 — saw it Cahill's way. The former treasurer did not admit to any wrongdoing but agreed to pay a $100,000 civil fine because the ad may have given the perception of impropriety.

So while his friends will help the Cahill's close this chapter next week, we'll do the same this week.

This is Tim Cahill, in his own words.

NO REGRETS

"I knew that there would be a perception that the ad in question was a political ad. I don't believe it was. I feel strongly that it wasn't. That's why I agreed to that civil terminology that there was a perception of impropriety because there was.

"I'm not regretting any part of it. In lieu of a second trial that was the best outcome.

"I'm happy to go forward. Martha (Coakley) is Martha. The irony of this whole thing is she felt like that this was her duty to do this job. And she's been accused of it being political which is the exact same thing that I was accused of.

"I felt that I was doing my job. I was accused of it being political. It was certainly in my mind and certainly everyone's mind that there was nothing criminal about this at all. I feel really good about where we ended up despite the fact that there's a fine.

"For me, it's the price you have to pay to move on and get this over with.

"I've felt good since the day it happened. It wasn't easy to negotiate the deal — it took three months — but I felt it was okay when it was over and the response I have been getting from people has been great.

"I'm not getting 'too bad's' I'm getting 'congratulations from people as if we won.

"To me it's not winning or losing — it's about moving on."

FIGHTING BACK

"The most important thing was being able to fight back. I can accept the agreement because we fought back on the case. It would have been much harder to accept that before the trial because at least with the trial I was able to defend myself.

"I got to be on the stand for parts of two days and tell my story. I believe the majority of the jurors believed (my side). I feel really good about that. I didn't poll the jury, we don't know exactly what the numbers were but from what people are saying it was pretty well a majority. The fact of the matter is if it wasn't, we probably would have gone back to trial. If it was 11-1 against, there's a good chance she would have retried it and taken another shot at it.

"What I feel good about is now I can move on with my life. And I can look back at my eight years as treasurer as eight good years. When I go by the new Central Middle School or the new Quincy High School, I feel really good about what we accomplished. There could be another 500 buildings in the state that I could walk by and feel like we accomplished something real. We had success with the state pension fund and the lottery. I didn't want to look back and be bitter or feel like it had been diminished because I don't feel like this case diminished my record and I feel good about that because that's important to me."

THE YEAR 2012 'WAS ALL RIGHT'

"I don't miss being in government but I also want to be able to look back at my 23 years on the city council, the county (treasurer) and state (treasurer) as not being 23 wasted years. . . . I also left the treasurer's job with no safety net. I didn't get to go back and do my job as treasurer if I lost.

"I'm proud of the fact that I ran for governor. The campaign, we made a lot of mistakes, no questions about it. I can't look back at that campaign and say we did everything right but we tried. I think we went into it with the right ideas, the right goals and right aspirations but it just wasn't the right time and I wasn't the right candidate and we didn't put the right team together.

"This was part of my life. It was a good part of my life and I even look back on the last year and people have said 'you'll be happy to have 2012 behind you' but I can look back at 2012 and say it was all right.

"My daughter got married. My mother who was sick is now healthy. We fought back on our case and a lot of people didn't give me a very good chance on and we won for all intents and purposes we won."

AN INTERESTING YEAR

"I'm not going to look back at 2012 as a bad year, it was an interesting year. It was a challenging year but I hope it's going to help me succeed in other ways and I think it will because going through what I went through and what we went through I wouldn't wish it on my worst enemy. It was a brutal experience, being indicted, not knowing what that's going to mean and what that's going to do and having to get that clean and that's what this agreement does. It cleans the indictment off my record.

"The old adage 'you can indict a ham sandwich' is true but once you're indicted you face a huge consequence. Getting work, having people shun you or support you and stuff like that because regardless of what the system says that you're innocent until proven guilty, an indictment makes people think you are guilty. It makes you wonder if you are and you have to defend yourself. Despite what they say about the state having to make its case, you have to defend yourself.

"I'm proud that we very aggressively defended ourselves. I got up on the stand, we didn't sit back and just let them not be able to present their case, we had to fight back. I had two great attorneys — Jeff Denner and Brad Bailey — who came to me when there really

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1915 real photo postcard view of Heffernan's Shoe Store when it was located in the Central Building at 1375 Hancock Street in Quincy Square. John Heffernan and his son operated a shoe business in Quincy for almost 70 years. He started making shoes and boots in his home on Washington Street in the 1800's. This store was located next to the Alhambra later the ART Theater in the Square for many years and last operated from a shop on Cottage Avenue. The signs in the window advertised boys and girls shoes priced at $1 to $2.50 a pair. And they also gave Green Stamps with your purchase. ### C-Mart Does Not Promote The Community's Greater Good Life is change. Change that does not promote the greater good of a community is unacceptable. The impending City Council vote on business permit for an Asian Supermarket, C-Mart, (on Hayward Street in Norfolk Downs) is monumental. This location is divisive towards the greater good of all citizens and taxpayers of Quincy.

Norfolk Downs has experienced dramatic change over the past 20 years in keeping with the changing face of the community. Such change has not only been welcomed but embraced. Of nearly 60 "Downs" businesses, over half are Asian owned / Asian-centric, dedicated to providing goods and services.

Mr. Miao Kun Fang of Weston, Mass. has purchased the Boston Gear Works building with the purpose of opening an Asian dedicated supermarket. There was no inherent "right" to open a supermarket with that purchase.

There's an Asian dedicated supermarket 3 blocks away, quite walkable and also handy via MBTA and automobile. There are also 2 major supermarkets within 2 blocks that sell Asian food and products plus several variety stores which cater to those very needs.

Studies presented at the March 25, 2013 public hearing at NQHS, showed well over 500 additional / new auto trips weekly if this permit becomes a reality. At the hearing, I spoke as a 43 year resident (who shops, goes to church, banks, frequents restaurants and much more) in opposition of C mart. Many longtime residents do NOT support C- mart at that location given the added traffic and pedestrian problems it will introduce upon a community long under assault of such issues.

In the meeting, an Asian man of 80, an 8 year resident, spoke through an interpreter and suggested any opposition to C- mart was racially motivated. I was insulted when those words were spoken.

For Mr. Miao Kun Fang to employ people (many were NOT Quincy residents) to play the race card is hideous and disrespectful to all residents and taxpayers. I am appalled that Mr. Fang chooses to employ racism to gain business permit(s). Respect and fairness are character traits Mr. Fang would do well to learn and use when dealing with the entire community.

Mr. Fang is a wealthy businessman looking to become wealthier no matter the cost to the greater good of the community. Would he bring such negative impacts to his own community in the affluent suburb of Weston, MA?

I'm hopeful City Councillors will not be duped nor made feel guilty by Mr. Fang and his mantra of "racism." Such claims themselves are racist in nature. Councillors: please stand by your original decision and do not be bullied into reversing your original position, which was appropriate because it employed common sense and concern for the best interest of all citizens of Quincy.

Volunteers are urgently needed in the towns of Randolph, Quincy, and Milton.

"Meals on Wheels simply would not exist in many towns if not for the volun-

LaRaia Opposes Plan For NQHS Addition

By SCOTT JACKSON

Councillor Joseph LaRaia voted in opposition to taking nine homes for a proposed addition of North Quincy High School, accusing school officials of 'betraying' the City Council.

LaRaia, an announced candidate for mayor, said school officials committed two "violations of trust" by increasing the proposed addition from 100,000 square feet to 150,000 square feet and recommending the taking of homes on Oliver and Hunt Streets. LaRaia said the $12 million bond issue previously stipulated a maximum size of 100,000 square feet and barred the taking of homes.

The proposed area needed to be expanded because of state regulations, according to School Supt. Dr. Lawrence Creedon. Mayor Walter Hannon said that LaRaia should have raised his concerns earlier, until holding off until the council vote.

"It's too bad Mr. LaRaia didn't come up with a better site suggestion until the 11th hour. I don't remember Mr. LaRaia making any suggestions of where the addition could be built, given the state guidelines we were under," Hannon said.

Council President Arthur Tobin cast the other vote in opposition to the plan. He said he did so because residents in the homes to be taken adamantly protested the plan at a public hearing.

"I talked to the fine people in the area and they pleaded 'please don't take my home.' They said no amount of money would be enough compensation. They had made many friends in the neighborhood. I told the people I would vote against home-taking and I kept my word," Tobin said.

QUINN VOWS BUDGET CUTS

Councillor John Quinn predicted the council would cut "at least several hundred thousand dollars" from Mayor Hannon's proposed $69.5 million city budget.

"We are really going to put it through the wringer," Quinn said. "With economic conditions the way they are, if there is an ounce of fat in it, it's coming out. This is a time for necessities only and no frills."

The mayor broke with tradition and personally submitted his budget - an increase of $7.5 million over the prior year's budget - to the council.

"It is absolutely clear that the people of Quincy can't afford more taxes. The budget I'm presenting to you tonight fits the times in which we live," Hannon said. "There are no frills. There is no fat. All extras are gone."

Hannon warned that any across-the-board cuts would curtail services to residents. Quinn said the council's Finance Committee would make departments prove they need money for items that are necessary.

JAPANESE EDUCATOR VISITS QUINCY

Prof. Takahisa Ichimura, a teacher of Western progressive education at Japan's Waseda University, visited Quincy as part of a three-week tour of the U.S. to learn about the country's progressive education movement.

Ichimura visited the city because Col. Francis W. Parker had introduced the 'Quincy movement' - which focused upon the possibilities of human growth through education - while serving as Quincy's school superintendent from 1875-1900. Ichimura toured both the Parker School and the Lincoln-Hancock School, and praised both.

"I think you are one step ahead of us in Japan," he said.

THE GEMSTONE THAT CHANGES COLOR

"Rare" and "unique" are two words that grab the attention of lovers of fine jewelry. Because both of these descriptions apply to Zultanite, many people outside the jewelry world can be forgiven if they have never heard of this remarkable gemstone. Originating solely from a mountain area in Anatolia, Turkey, Zultanite is as beguiling as it is exceptional. Similar to the way that alexandrite changes color, Zultanite can change from kiwi greens in sunlight to raspberry purplish-pinks in candlelight. Unlike alexandrite, Zultanite is not limited to two colors. It may exhibit khaki greens, sage greens, cognac pinks, pinkish champagnes, canary yellows, rich champagnes, and gingers in different light sources. If you are looking for something different, see Zultanite for yourself.

Relatively new to the jewelry world, Zultanite is one gemstone whose amazing natural color changing abilities makes it well suited to savvy jewelry connoisseurs. ## Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Hearty Chicken, Sausage Soup

With this never ending winter upon us, I have been making all kinds of soup. And last week I came across one of my old recipes, a chicken, sausage soup – so hearty and delicious.

I used a chicken sausage but pork sausages work as well, it's all a matter of taste. The combination of the two meats works so well with the different flavors.

CHICKEN, SAUSAGE SOUP

2 legs and thighs
4 chicken sausages (or pork if preferred)
2 stalks celery (cut in pieces)
1 medium onion (cut)
2 large carrots (cut in pieces)
2 cups cooked spinach

salt and pepper
Grated Romano or Parmesan cheese for topping
1 tablespoon fresh parsley
½ pound cheese filled tortellini (optional)

In a large pan filled with boiled water or stock, add the chicken, sausage, celery, onion and carrots and cook for one hour.

Remove the chicken and sausage and when cool, cut them in pieces. Place back in the pan, add the spinach and heat until spinach is done. If you are using the tortellini, cook those according to direction el dente. Add at the last minute and then sprinkle with grated cheese.

Quincy 2000 Collaborative, the economic development agency of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce, is offering a free, six-week workshop series for aspiring entrepreneurs.

Attendees will learn first-hand from experts – many who are small-business owners themselves – who have helped other entrepreneurs along the way.

The program addresses many of the issues and topics that someone starting their first business needs to know. It is being taught by local professionals from the private and public sectors who are eager to share their expertise and experiences to help others with their pursuit of starting a new small business.

The sessions will be held on six consecutive Tuesday evenings from 6 to 7:30 p.m. starting April 23 at the Eastern Nazarene College Old Colony Campus, 180 Old Colony Ave., Quincy.

Space is limited and the registration deadline is April 15. While the program is free, pre-registration is required and participants are asked to commit to attending the entire program.

The guest speaker for the kick-off is Andrea Taber, owner of the Ever So Humble Pie Company. After spending 25 years as a nurse, Taber, at the age of 54, decided to leave nursing and pursue her passion for baking. Her business has gained local and national media attention, including The Food Network that featured Taber's business on the show "Recipe for Success," focusing on people making successful career changes.

Subsequent speakers and covered topics include:

- The Right Legal Structure, the Right Location, and Leasing Options
- Building – Presenting: Executing a Business Plan

At Crane Public Library April 11 Quincy College To Present Author Casey Sherman

Quincy College and the Thomas Crane Library present the latest installment of their ongoing "Author Night" series with the upcoming "Meet the Author: Casey Sherman" on Thursday, April 11 from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Library Community Meeting Room (ground floor).

Sherman is an award winning journalist and acclaimed author of five best-selling books; he will be discussing his upcoming book Animal: The Bloody Rise and Fall of the Mob's Most Feared Assassin.

New Bedford-born Joe Barboza's brutal rise during one of the deadliest mob wars in U.S. history is the stuff of legend, both on the bloodied streets of Boston and in the offices of the FBI and the U.S. Attorney General. Barboza's legacy, buried for years thanks to the murders or deaths of its participants, is finally coming to light and being told in its unvarnished brutality by one of America's most respected true crime writers, Casey Sherman.

Sherman will discuss how Boston's most notorious contract killer forged a Faustian bargain with two unscrupulous FBI agents—a pact that would transform the U.S. criminal justice system. From false testimony and manipulated evidence that sent mob leaders to death row, to the creation of the Witness Protection Program so the feds could protect their prized, cold-blooded witness, this was the horrific, dramatic first act in a story of murder and FBI corruption still being played out today in the news and the courtroom with the capture and trial of Whitey Bulger.

Sherman is a Boston-based journalist and the author of the acclaimed true crime thriller A Rose for Mary: The Hunt for the Real Boston Strangler, as well as two novels and Bad

Blood: Freedom and Death in the White Mountains. He is the coauthor of The Finest Hours: The True Story of the Coast Guard's Most Daring Rescue. Sherman has been nominated for an Emmy Award, has appeared on dozens of national television programs and has been profiled by numerous magazines and newspapers.

Copies of Casey Sherman's new book, Animal: The Bloody Rise and Fall of the Mob's Most Feared Assassin (due to be released on April 9), will be available for sale after his talk.

The program is sponsored by the Thomas Crane Public Library and Quincy College.

New Owners Re-Open Schoolhouse Pizza

By EMILY TAFT

After being closed for three months, Schoolhouse Pizza on School Street in Quincy Center is back open for business after new owners husband and wife Ran and Chilton Dodson purchased the business and reopened it on March 18th to embark on a new adventure in their lives.

Ran and Chilton have been in the restaurant business for over 30 years, working in a number of restaurants in California. The couple met at a California restaurant called Tomatina where Chilton worked as an assistant kitchen manager and Ran as a bar manager.

"We thought we might have one more adventure left in us and Schoolhouse seemed like the best of the best out here," said Ran. "We flew out here and spent a week looking at around 10 different restaurants but Schoolhouse was always at the forefront. It is really unique to itself, and has such a unique look to it."

So far the duo has received a great response from the community and regulars of the pizza shop, and they say they plan on keeping the menu and recipes the same for the time being.

"It has been great meeting the customers and to reassure them that everything is the same as before," said Ran. "We cooked for a week when we got here and then the Thursday, Friday and Saturday before we kept the door open and anyone who came in was able to get food for free. It allowed us to meet the customers and get their opinion on things, and it was nice to meet everyone. We really had a great time with that."

The couple said that their goal is to keep the quality of food that has always been there and become a part of the community.

"We want to keep the quality that has always been here and build the business through reputation," said Ran. "Quincy is a great and beautiful city and we have met some really wonderful people. The experience has just been great, and we want to be a part of the community."

The restaurant is open seven days a week, Monday-Friday 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Sunday 3 p.m. to 9 p.m., and offers a number of special slices each day.

Registered Nurses At QMC Plan One-Day Strike April 11

By SCOTT JACKSON

More than 230 nurses at Quincy Medical Center are planning on going on a one-day strike next Thursday.

On Monday, the hospital's registered nurses gave formal notice of the planned strike to QMC owner Steward Health Care in accordance with federal labor law. The nurses voted 200-13 to authorize a one-day strike last month. Steward and the Massachusetts Nurses Association have been at odds since February when the hospital owner announced plans to close a 40-bed unit and layoff 30 nurses and 40 other employees. The nurses believe the closure has endangered patients because they now have to be boarded in the emergency department.

"The public needs to know how worried we are, that we've been telling management we don't consider this situation to be safe, and they have been refusing to discuss the staffing plan with us," said Stacey McEachern, RN, a nurse in the emergency department.

"The patients who are being boarded in our ED have been admitted to the hospital, but are not receiving an appropriate level of care because they are being placed on stretchers in an emergency room, waiting for a bed on a medical floor that no longer is available to them. The bottom line is patients are being deprived of the services they need."

Officials from Steward, a for-profit firm that purchased QMC in 2011, have maintained closing the 40-bed unit was needed because of the low-volume of patients treated at the hospital, and that the unit could re-open in the future if necessary. Steward spokesman Chris Murphy said Monday that the nurses' planned strike was motivated by money and not concerns over the quality of care.

"This isn't about quality, this is about money," Murphy said. "The Massachusetts Nurses Association wants us to cling to the old ways. The old ways are what drove Quincy Medical Center into bankruptcy two years ago. In the future Quincy Medical Center will not have empty beds in empty units with nurses sitting and reading. No one would or could invest in that."

The planned one-day strike is scheduled to begin at 6 a.m. on Thursday, April 11 and end at 6 a.m. the following day. Murphy said the hospital will be fully staffed and safe for patients despite the strike.

"No patient will be harmed by this action. We will be fully staffed with qualified nurses," Murphy said.

The 236 registered nurses at the hospital have been negotiating with Steward over a new contract since December 2011. The nurses filed an unfair labor practice charge against the hospital with the National Labor Relations Board, saying Steward refused to negotiate staffing issues. According to Murphy, both sides are working with a federal mediator to negotiate a new deal.

Wollaston Garden Club Wins Special Recognition At The Boston Flower Show

The Wollaston Garden Club (WGC) won a red, 2nd place ribbon in the Amateur Horticulture Division: "Structures - Large Window with East Exposure." at the Boston Flower and Garden Show 2013 "Seeds of Change" at the Seaport Trade Center, Boston, held from March 13 through 17th.

The intent of the club's exhibit was to showcase the wide variety of houseplants that can be grown in the medium light exposure of an east window.

The judges noted that the club's exhibit contained a "varied unusual collection of plants, but that overcrowding detracted from the individual plants".

The exhibit received perfect scores in "suitable for stated exposure"; "color effect"; "variety and rarity"; and "correct and suitable labeling."

Two plants received the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's highest award for "Cultural Commendation": Cindy O'Meara's Neomarica caerulea (Walking Iris) and Carol Fischer's Platynerium bifurcatum (Staghorn Fern).

Many club members volunteered their mature east window houseplants or volunteered to adopt plants that were included in the club's east window exhibit.

Cynthia Lewis, WGC Horticulture chairperson, commended the participants and recognized the horticulture skills they had acquired by growing and nurturing show-ready, medium light plants.

Participating club members are:

Pat Artis, Mimi Balsamo, Kay Borek, Anne Marie Brady, Mary Cassidy, Jan Clifford, Kathy Ceurvels, Rebecca Dinsmore, Anita Fasano, Carol Fischer, Claire Fitzmaurice, Ruth Griffin, Anneli Johnson, David Kalman, Cynthia Lewis, Gail Morganelli, Cindy O'Meara, Kathleen Roach, Leah Shea, Marylynn Sullivan, and Trudy Sullivan.

Three Wollaston Garden Club members also received awards for their entries into the Individual Amateur Horticulture competition: Marylynn Sullivan received a 1st place blue ribbon for her Kalanchoe thyrsiflora; Claire Fitzmaurice received a 2nd place red ribbon for her Aspidistra elatior; and Gail Morganelli received a 3rd place yellow ribbon for her Dracaena fragrans massangeana variegata.

The club's East Window Steering Committee of Pat Artis, Rebecca Dinsmore, Colleen Lawler, and Cynthia Lewis, were pleased with their exhibit and excited to be participating in such a prestigious flower show. ### Senior City Officials Responsible For Snow Plowing Frequent Quincy scene commentator and QATV show host Don Kusser would appear to not understand rather basic notions of managerial responsibility, at least not as regards the serious snow plowing shortfalls in Quincy this winter.

DPW Commissioner Dan Raymondi, the Purchasing Department in City Hall and, ultimately, Mayor Koch are responsible for arranging for outside contractors to help plow city streets during snow storms.

The mayor, in particular, has long made much about his self-proclaimed innovative per inch of snowfall payment model as a national model. So what, apparently, that many private property owners have long contracted out their snow plowing needs on per inch payment basis.

In any event, senior city officials cannot claim credit on one hand for innovative contracting while on the other denying responsibility when they failed to duly specify within their contract documents that outside contractors must have supervision of their workers.

Mr. Kusser further appears to not appreciate the fact that the mayor's brother, the City Tree Warden, was a - if not the - key point person between the city and its outside snow plowing contractors during this season's snowstorms. Where was the communication among ALL concerned when things went badly as well as early on?

Simply put, it is up to senior city officials to see that proper value is received for the city expenses. This did not happen when it came to snow plowing in Quincy this winter.

Even more appalling, however, is that city officials are pointing fingers of blame at others instead of themselves.

$3.8M For Building Repairs, New Vehicles, School Safety

future appropriation.

Most of Monday night's discussion focused on how much money the city would need to spend to maintain the $32 million in equipment Honeywell installed. Councillor Joe Finn, chairman of the Finance Committee, asked repeatedly for the information. He wanted to know the maintenance costs so he could judge whether or not the equipment paid for itself in energy savings.

"The premise behind these improvements and the financing was the savings and efficiencies produced by that would more than pay for those improvements. A piece that was a critical part of that obviously was the maintenance," Finn said. "It seems to me that the premise around the financing falls flat if we can't maintain it."

Koch's Executive Secretary Jim Fatseas said the city would be maintaining the equipment, and all other equipment, going forward. But there is no dollar figure for just the Honeywell items because calculating how much would be spent on just those was complicated because the company installed a variety of items — boilers, vents, and weather stripping, among others — that were tied into other systems.

"The Honeywell infrastructure that was invested in and installed in the city does not necessarily stand alone," Fatseas said. "To suggest that we could apply moneys to just the Honeywell component as installed, without taking into consideration the integration of that component with other existing components, is very difficult."

Councillor Doug Gutro noted Honeywell had said upward of $22 million would be needed to maintain the equipment over 20 years. A maintenance contract in that amount was voided as part of the settlement with Honeywell.

"Three months ago there was a celebration to get us out from under the burden of a $22 million maintenance contract for the equipment that was installed," Gutro said. "We're looking to have specificity — dollars, explanation — as to how that equipment that we're still on the hook for — the $32 million lease — is going to be maintained. How much it's going to cost over the life of that contract so that we can draw a parallel to what Honeywell proposed to see if in fact the city is going to have a substantial savings as we've read is going to be the case."

Fatseas reiterated that

ISS South Shore Walk April 20

Interfaith Social Service's 39th annual South Shore Walk will take place Saturday April 20.

Check-in for the walk begins and 11:30 a.m. and the race starts at noon at the Kennedy Center, 440 East Squantum Street. The route heads up East Squantum Street, circling around Squantum before returning to the Kennedy Center.

Following the walk, ISS will be hosting a family fun celebration featuring a photo booth, food, face painting, kids games, balloon animals, a bouncy house, a DJ, silent auction, and raffles.

Pre-registration for the walk is required.

Registration can be done online by visiting southshorewalk2013.eventbrite.com or by calling 617-773-6203 and asking for Paula.

Funds raised through the walk allow ISS to assist needy residents throughout the South Shore. Donations may be made online through their website at interfaithsocialservices.org.

maintenance is most often done on an as needed basis so it's hard to say what will be spent where.

"Something can go down in any building within the city and we address those maintenance needs immediately. To be able to specifically plan every bit of maintenance across the system and to be able to anticipate where the next dollars need to be spent is difficult," Fatseas said.

Gutro tried to cut the $1 million in the appropriation for the Building Department's repair line, because he felt Building Director Gary Cuniff wasn't specific enough about what the money would go towards.

"I support the use of the $1 million for stabilization. I think we all concur that school investment, the safety of the kids, is the right thing to do. I'll respect the rationale of Mr. Fatseas about the $506,000 for the reserve for appropriation," Gutro said. "I'll tell you what gives me trepidation. I was honestly, and I say this with due respect, I was underwhelmed with Mr. Cuniff's presentation and the lack of specificity — dollars, breakdowns, how we're going to use that $1 million."

Gutro's attempt to cut that line item failed when no other councillor would second the motion. That part of the spending will go towards a new control system for equipment, putting glycol in hot water pumps, HVAC repairs, emergency generator replacement, and building code compliance inspections.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee said using nearly $800,000 from the settlement on vehicles wasn't orthodox because Quincy is paying for the equipment over 20 years. But he supported the plan because of the need for the new vehicles.

"Given the size of what's coming back and the need to address some of these items I'm going to break with orthodoxy and vote for them," McNamee said.

*** NOTICE ***

Massachusetts Workers' Rights Board Hearing on Quality of Care at Quincy Medical Center

Tuesday, April 9, 9-10 AM
Quincy Community United Methodist Church
40 Beale St., Wollaston, MA 02170

Members of the Quincy-area community are invited to hear testimony from nurses at the Cerberus/Steward Quincy Medical Center (QMC) regarding the impact of working conditions on the quality of care at the hospital.

Throughout 2012 and 2013, RNs have presented urgent pleas to QMC management that they considered the declining staff to patient levels to be increasingly unsafe. The hospital is now owned by Cerberus, one of the country's largest private equity groups.

This situation worsened dramatically on February 17th when management shut down a 40 bed nursing unit. Since that time, RNs have been reporting staffing conditions to be of such concern as to cause them to warn that serious negative patient outcomes may result.

A word from the RNs of QMC:

Among us are people who were born at QMC, whose children were born at QMC, whose families have been cared for at QMC, and who have provided care here for up to 35 years. We and our Union, the Mass. Nurses Association-NNU, are deeply committed to the mission of this institution that we have helped to build and which we urgently want to see succeed. Recent facts paint a disturbing portrait of the effects of recent decisions of the hospital's owners. We present them out of a sense of duty to defend our patients and this institution. This is our hospital, and speaking out for the quality of patient care and defending the hospital from harm so that it can thrive for decades into the future are, in our view, one in the same.

Kelly O'Brien Collecting Hats For 'Hats4Happiness' Drive

For Children Who Are Losing Their Hair Due To Illness

By EMILY TAFT

Quincy resident Kelly O'Brien is teaming up with local businesses as well as three Quincy Fire Stations, to collect hats for the Hats4Happiness drive.

Hats4Happiness is a non-profit organization that collects hats for children who are losing their hair due to illness. O'Brien became involved in the drive after finding out a family friend recently started losing his hair, at a rapid pace, due to an unknown cause.

"Dustin, who is eight years old, is my aunt's neighbor. They kind of live in a Mayberry type neighborhood, so I've known him since he was an infant and he has been to every family event. He's a part of my family, and when family needs help it's just the right thing to do," said O'Brien.

"In the last week of January he started to lose his hair and they didn't know why, and he then was subsequently picked on at school for his new appearance. On Feb. 1st, coming home from a doctor's appointment, he decided that he wasn't going to feel bad for himself and that he was going to collect hats for other kids so they wouldn't get picked on."

Nearly 200 hats have been collected at the seven-drop boxes that have been available since the beginning of February.

"He's just shown such remarkable strength and he's really put himself outside of it. He has really made it about helping others. It has really been remarkable how people just jump on a good cause, especially when it's a kid just trying to do good," said O'Brien. "The maturity he is showing at eight years old I think has really inspired people to want to help."

O'Brien, with the help of Dustin's family and her cousins, will be holding a fundraiser on May 18th at the Union Congregational Church on 136 Rawson Rd. in Wollaston. The fundraiser, held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., will include face painting, cake pops, hot dogs, a Disc Jockey, bouncy house, animal expo, an art expo, and a station for kids to make cards for patients in surrounding hospitals. Over a hundred people are expected to attend the event, which is free with the donation of a new hat.

"My original goal was like 50 people and I thought that was really reaching, but now that we have gotten so many hats we are going to be prepared for a couple of hundred people," O'Brien

Erika Djerf Running Boston Marathon For JDRF

First-Timer Raising Money For Juvenile Diabetes Research

By SCOTT JACKSON

Thousands of runners will be taking part in the 117th Boston Marathon on April 15.

Many of the runners have raced the 26.2-mile route before. For others, this will be their first time running the full length of the course, which stretches from Hopkinton in the west to its finish in Boston's Back Bay.

Erika Djerf is one of those first-timers.

The 25-year old North Quincy High graduate was on the winter track team in high school and has run in 5K and 10K races before. She is racing in this month's marathon, her first marathon, to raise money for JDRF (the Juvenile Diabetes Research Fund). Djerf decided to do so after completing the Boston Half Marathon in October.

"I ran the Boston Half Marathon in October and I started training for that in May or June - That's when I started to up my mileage. I got through the half marathon and I thought that was a great accomplishment and I wanted to set another goal," Djerf said. "I applied through JDRF and within a week they came back and they said 'you're accepted' and I said 'I guess I'm running the Boston Marathon.'"

Runners can qualify to run in the marathon by applying to raise funds for one of nearly three-dozen charities. Djerf only applied to raise funds for JDRF; she wanted to raise money for them because four of her family members have been diagnosed with type one diabetes.

"My grandfather had been diagnosed with type one diabetes at a young age, and he's still with us today. He's in his 80s, and that's pretty amazing. My uncle, same thing, diagnosed actually at age one and he's in his late 40s," Djerf said. "My cousin was just diagnosed at 25 - he was actually medically discharged from the Navy because of his diagnosis - he's been working and going to school now. And my other cousin was diagnosed at 25 too.

It's just been a lot for my family so I felt that it was a great cause."

By the time the marathon starts on Patriots' Day, Djerf hopes to raise $4,000 for the charity. She's closing in on her target as the marathon approaches, and raised more than $2,000 during a fundraiser in January.

"I had a fundraiser in January at the Commonwealth Restaurant. We had a lot of family and friends come - my whole family helped me with the fundraiser. We had a lot of raffles, donations from local restaurants in Boston and South Boston and this city too," Djerf said. "We had a ton of donations and a great turnout, about 100 to 150 people showed up."

Djerf went through an intense training regime to ready herself for the marathon. She and other members of the JDRF team went on long runs, at least 10 miles, every other Sunday morning. And she runs on weekdays too, following a training routine drawn up by the team's coaches Neil Wallack and Mary Tolland.

"We meet every other week on Sundays when we do our long runs. And then they gave us kind of a set schedule to do on the off weeks. I try to run one middle distance run, which ranged from six to ten miles, a week. And I try to do a shorter run, which is three miles or so, two days a week. I try to do four days of running and then just two days of cross training at the gym. It's a huge time commitment, especially for Sunday mornings when you have to be there at 8 o'clock and not go out on Saturday nights. But I think it's worth it and I feel good. I think we did it right and so far I've been injury free - knock on wood - and everything's been good."

Djerf capped off her training by running 22 miles - from the start of the course in Hopkinton to Boston College - and is now in her tapering period, when runners ease up on their mileage to prepare for a big race. She said the key to running such long distances is preparing herself mentally.

"Everything past 15 miles is a challenge - it's definitely a struggle. I think a huge percentage of it is mental, you have to be prepared for it. You know the whole weekend going into it that you're running that long of a distance. You want to eat a good breakfast before, and you want to make sure you have the right amount of water," Djerf said. "At 22 miles, a lot of friends have said to me 'I don't think I can run more than that.' I know what they mean, but it's the crowds that get you. There are crowds for 26 miles. When people are cheering for you the whole way you're going to keep going."

Djerf finished the half marathon in October in less than two hours. She hopes to complete this month's marathon in under four-and-a-half hours.

"Everyone has a different way they race. I've always started off slow and picked it up as I go - It's easier to do that with a 10K," Djerf said. "With a marathon, my time is a lot slower than I normally run. I start out really slow and stay at that pace. It's important to finish, I'm not trying to go for a record because I don't have a record and I'm not going to win it. As long as you finish with everyone else I think that's an accomplishment in itself."

Throughout the training process, Djerf has a lot of support from her team members and her family. But she wants to see how she does in the marathon before committing to run another one.

"It's easy to say after the long run that I want to do this because it's nice to do it and people are really supportive and impressed that you're doing a marathon. It is nice, especially where I have a team who is supportive and family that's supportive. But it is hard to raise the money - it's a lot of work," Djerf said. "I am going to keep on running, but talk to me after April 15th about whether I'm going to do another 26.2 miles."

Groundbreaking Today For New Duplex At 1116 Sea St. Affordable Housing For Veterans At Site Of Former HN Legion Post

The longtime site of an American Legion post will once again serve our nation's veterans when Neighborhood Housing Services of the South Shore breaks ground on a new project that will provide affordable housing to two returning veterans and their families.

Neighborhood Housing and the City of Quincy will hold a ground breaking ceremony today (Thursday) at 4 p.m. at 1116 Sea St. in Houghs Neck. The former location of American Legion Post 380, the site will be razed to make way for construction of a new duplex featuring two, three-bedroom townhouse units that will be rented to returning veterans and their families.

"We're pleased that this location, which for so many years served our veterans, will continue to serve veterans in the form of new, affordable housing," said Neighborhood Housing Executive Director Robert Corley. "Today's veterans returning from Afghanistan are different than the soldiers who returned home from World War II, Korea, or even Vietnam. They tend to be older, and many are married and have children. So there's a real need out there for affordable veterans' housing that can accommodate families."

Financed with funding from the federal HOME program, the Affordable Housing Trust Fund and community preservation funds, the $800,000 Sea St. project marks the fourth home for veterans Neighborhood Housing has completed in recent years.

"Creating this kind of affordable family housing for our veterans is precisely why federal block grant programs are such vital tools for our city," Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch said, adding that the groundbreaking ceremony is being held as part of the City of Quincy's Community Development Week activities.

Planning Director and Affordable Housing Trust Fund Chair Dennis Harrington agreed. "Affordable housing is a crucial element on the path toward self-sufficiency," Harrington said.

"We are delighted to provide these funds in order to make this project possible."

The groundbreaking ceremony will also serve as the formal announcement of Neighborhood Housing's new name: Henceforth, the non-profit housing agency will be known as Neighborhood Works Southern Mass.

"Our new name reflects the natural evolution that has occurred in the three decades since we were first founded to serve Quincy residents," Corley said. "Since then, we've expanded to offer a wide array of affordable housing services across the South Shore and have opened new offices in Brockton and New Bedford."

Meeting Tonight On Crown Colony Proposed Development

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. in the meeting room at the Marriott Hotel.

All neighbors are invited and encouraged to attend and participate.

The development is proposed for 600 Crown Colony Drive on a 20 acre site. Representatives will be on hand to discuss the proposal in further detail with interested neighbors. Additionally, representatives from the City's Traffic Department will be on hand to address issues related to traffic on Centre Street and Burgin Parkway.

Morrissey Offering Communities Support For Safe Graduation Events

Norfolk County Dist. Atty. Michael W. Morrissey is renewing his support for local communities that provide safe and substance-free high school graduation events.

A request for grant applications was sent to all Norfolk County superintendents this week, offering to help purchase food, supplies, entertainment or other necessities. Morrissey supplied "Operation Graduation" grants to help communities organize safe and substance-free after-graduation parties to all 15 Norfolk County schools that applied last year.

"The parents and educators who work together to organize these events are doing their communities and their children a very important service," Morrissey said. "Graduation night should not include parents worrying where their kids are and what is happening around them. Providing new graduates with a safe, substance-free place to celebrate with their classmates means they are not on the roads and not in situations where alcohol or other high-risk behaviors are present."

Morrissey has also provided similar support for pre- and post-prom events since taking office, as well as Operation Graduation. The funds awarded are not tax dollars, but are drawn from the monies that judges have ordered forfeited in successful narcotics prosecutions.

"We respect the enormous amount of work and resources it takes for communities to come together and hold these events, and we encourage parents and organizers to apply if they believe an Operation Graduation grant would assist them," Morrissey added.

DENTISTRY
for the 21st Century
by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.
MAKING TEETH WHOLE AGAIN
A tooth restoration known as a "crown" (or "cap") is used to replace the visible portion of the tooth when either a cracked tooth would otherwise fall apart or a tooth is too eroded or broken to accept a lesser repair. Crowns are also used to replace teeth that are so riddled with fillings that there is virtually not enough natural tooth material remaining to hold the collection of fillings together. In all such cases, patients can welcome the replacement of a deteriorated tooth with a crown as an opportunity to enjoy fuller chewing and biting function. As far as appearances go, a crown has the look of a brand new tooth, which makes for considerable aesthetic improvement as well.
We feel that cosmetic dentistry cannot only change the way other people see you, but it can also greatly improve the way you see yourself. We are currently accepting new patients. We offer you a full range of dental services including crowns. If you know of anyone in need of quality dental care we would appreciate your referrals. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where our purpose is to help people reach and commit to the highest level of dental health personally appropriate to them. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. We offer the services of anesthesiology and a full trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.
P.S. Because "bruxism" (nightly tooth grinding) can wear a crown away prematurely, it should be addressed with the wearing of a night guard specially fabricated by the dentist.

Red Raiders Down Presidents In Boys' Volleyball Opener

By BILL GRIFFIN

Power, touch and teamwork are a difficult triple threat to handle.

Junior Eftim Butka supplied the power, senior Mike Tran played with a beautiful touch around the net and North Quincy showed the special connection a gifted, veteran team shares en route to a 3-1 win over Quincy in the volleyball opener for both teams at Quincy High Monday afternoon.

North took a 2-0 lead by sweeping the first two sets, 25-10 and 25-14 before the Presidents fought back into the match with a gritty 26-24 victory in the third. The Red Raiders put it away with a 25-15 advantage in the fourth set.

"I have high hopes for this year's team," said North's coach Jason Cai whose club went 16-0 in the South Alliance last year before losing to Newton South in the semifinals of the South Sectionals. North only lost two players from last year's club.

"In this match," Cai continued. "I thought our hitting was good. Our serving was strong at times, but it can be more consistent. We need to improve our setting so the ball is at the right height for our hitters. When we got all three areas working together, we'll be in good shape."

Butka is a 6'3" powerhouse who starred for North's hoop team which went to the sectionals finals.

He was deadly with drives and kills around the net and also pinned back Quincy with a heavy, hard serve.

"This is Eftim's first year on varsity," said Cai. "But he has height and you can't teach height. His height and timing gives us the power hitting we need."

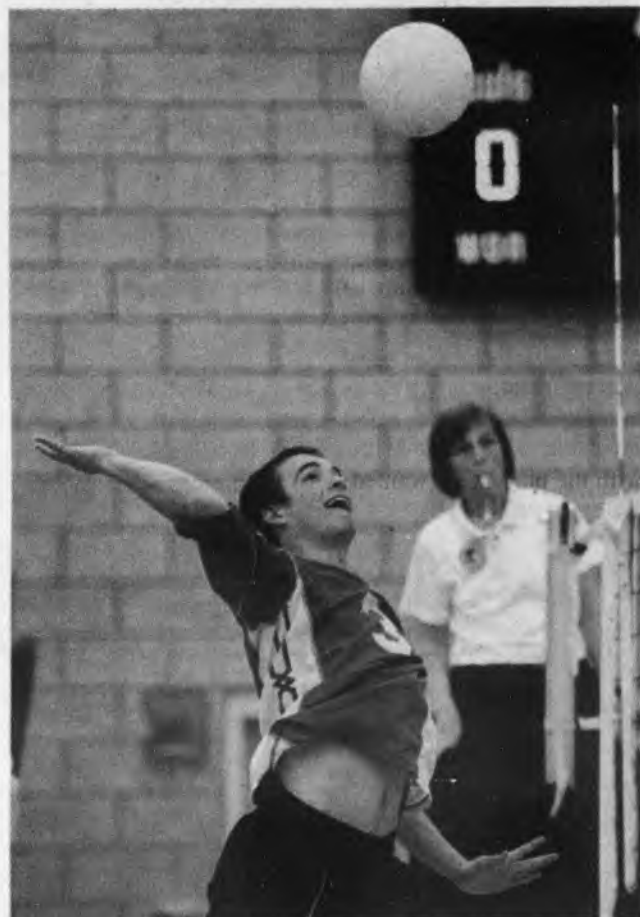

Tran also showed power and a difficult serve, but mostly he excelled at finding the open spot for soft finishes. Time and again, he took sets, sometimes difficult, low sets, and found the vacant area with soft, well-place drops over the net. He knew when to hit it hard and he knew when to hit it easy.

"Mike's been around volleyball his whole life and he knows the game," said Cai. "He's started since he was a sophomore and he knows what to do. Today, he did a good job spotting the ball. He has as good touch."

This a team to watch. The Red Raiders have made the tourney for four straight years. They have five senior captains in Tran, Felix Man, Sebastien Francois, Matthew MacPhail, and Andrew Sok. They have two experienced juniors. They are loaded. Along with the talent, they play together like they've been joined since first grade. Six players moves as one with an almost unseen sense of where each other is going to be.

"The more you play volleyball with each other, the better you know each other," said Cai who received strong defensive games from Sok and Man. "We have experience playing volleyball together and it shows in our passing and teamwork. We have good leaders. We have five captains because I think they all deserve it."

Quincy showed the stuff of a team which can contend for the tourney. Javier Smith was a force up front, Joan Palo settled the offense with good digs, Jerod Lin played a solid game on defense.

"I think our defense should be one of our strengths this year," said second-year coach Lok-Tin Yao.

Unlike North, Quincy is a young team with only two seniors. Three sophomores: Jackson Le, Henry Lip and Lin will see plenty of action. The Presidents missed the tourney with a 6-10 record last year, but Yao feels his team can contend for the post season this spring.

"I think we can definitely be a playoff-caliber team," said Yao. "We will improve as the season goes on and I think we can compete with any team in our conference by the end of the year."

Quincy showed its stuff in the third. After falling behind two sets and 11-3 in the third, Le, Lin, Palo, Smith and Christian Fuller led the Presidents back into the set on good hitting and hustling digs. The Presidents took the lead at 21-20 on a fine play at the net by Brian Sullivan and captured the set off a strong serve from Palo.

"I thought we might have been a little nervous to start," said Yao. "As the match wore on, we got loose and played with focus. I thought we played well in the third set."

Man, Tran and Sok all served well in North's 25-10 victory in the first. Butka took over the net and MacPhail set, served and finished points in the second as North rolled, 24-14. The Red Raiders put it away with a 25-15 decision in the fourth behind Tran's touch at the net and the hitting and blocking of Francois.

Strong Effort For Quincy Girls' Lacrosse In Opener

Brookline Rallies To Edge Presidents, 6-5

By BILL GRIFFIN

It was so close to being the perfect opener for Quincy's girls lacrosse team.

The Presidents jumped out to a two-goal lead at halftime and played a terrific defensive match. However, Brookline rallied for two late goals to edge the Presidents, 6-5 in the non-league opener for both clubs Friday at Varsity Field in Quincy.

"The effort was there from start to finish which is what you look for in the opening match of season," said coach Tim Lewis. "Our defense was very good. The girls played hard. If the game had gone another minute we might have scored the tying goal. We had our chances".

Quincy was ahead, 4-2 at the half. After Brookline tied it 4-4, Quincy scored to grabbed a 5-4 lead. Brookline then scored twice to take the lead with 5:00 left and held off a strong rush by the Presidents in the closing minutes to earn the win.

"It's true of all teams, but it was only our second or third day playing on grass and I think that might have hurt us," said Lewis. "However, we had the ball in the offensive end and we had it with the players we wanted. We just couldn't get one through to tie the game."

Junior Gabbie Zorkers and Courtney Ryan each scored twice for the Presidents. Emily Hatfield, playing in her first varsity game, also scored. Sophomore Kerry Phelan had a pair of assists. Sam McArdle and Jenny Scarnici played strong defensive games in front of goalie Maddie Kamb.

"Maddie was excellent and our seniors Sam and Jenny played strong games," said Lewis.

Defense figures to be the strong point early in the season for Quincy in the challenging Patriot League.

"Six goals is not a lot to give up in an opener and I think we'll play good defense all season," said Lewis. "With Sam and Jenny we have good experience back there."

Quincy also has offensive weapons. The best is Zorkers who has a strong tradition of lacrosse in her family, knows the game well, and has a good touch in close to the net.

"Her brother was a Division 1 college lacrosse player," said Lewis. "She's well-schooled in lacrosse at home. We'll lean heavily on her. She'll probably play 49 of 50 minutes. She can score for us."

Ryan also has a nice touch. Hatfield brings energy to her first varsity year and Phelan should also be a productive offensive player for Quincy.

"Kerry has a lot of potential. She should help us with our scoring," said Lewis.

Eileen Skudris, Olivia Wallace, and Kayla McArdle join Scarnici and Sam McArdle on defense. Lindsey Nazzaro, Rachel Mullin, Patricia Brennan, Noreen Plabutong, and Marleina Forster will work up front with Phelan and Zorkers.

"I think the potential is there," said Lewis. "We have experience on defense and the players up from the JVs give us energy."

Nicole Lee, Colleen Madden and Jillian O'Leary supply depth for the Presidents in the tough Patriot League.

"It's early to have expectations for the league," said Lewis. "My goal as a coach is to have my team ready to play the next opponent and I think the girls will respond to that. The leadership of Scarnici, Sam McArdle, and Zorkers has been excellent."

Quincy is at Brookline Wednesday and hosts Fontbonne Academy Saturday at 10 a.m.

Pitching And Defense Keys For Quincy Girls' Softball

By BILL GRIFFIN

If the other team doesn't score, you can't lose. Simple enough.

Pitching and defense is a formula which has succeeded for more than a century on all levels of softball and baseball and Quincy hopes that it works well in its season this spring.

"I think our pitching and defense will be strong," said Greg Sommers, second-year softball coach for the Presidents. "We didn't give away many runs last year and I think we'll have the same type of team this year. We have good balance with our defense. I don't see weak spots. We should play well defensively all over the field."

Quincy returns six starters from last year's team which went 12-7 and made the state tourney before losing a 1-0 thriller to Brockton in the opening round. There is a veteran flavor to the team, but Sommers also likes the speed and enthusiasm of his underclassmen.

"It's a good blend," he said. "We have veterans who have experience playing our style of softball, but we also want to bring along some talented underclassmen."

The first task will be to replace ace pitcher Nicole Parry, a Patriot League All Star who is now playing for Salve Regina. Quincy will look to sophomore Faxon Bresnahan who has more experience than one would expect, good stuff and excellent control.

"She hasn't pitched a lot on the high school level," said Sommers. "But she has a lot of experience pitching for club teams and in summer leagues, so she knows what she is doing on the mound. Her control is good and I think our team defense will help her a lot."

Angelina Avitable is a smart, promising catcher and should work well with Bresnahan in their sophomore year.

If Bresnahan doesn't walk hitters and the defense makes opponents earn their runs with hits, Sommers will have the stingy defense he wants. In a power-hitting conference like the Patriot League, one of the most important parts of a solid defense is the outfield which needs fast players who can track long fly balls. If they reach them, it's an out. If they don't, it's at least two bases.

"We have good athletes and good speed out there," said Sommers. "I think we'll get to a lot of fly balls."

Senior Devon Varmahmoodi will be the anchor in centerfield. She moves to the outfield from catcher and should be solid defensively. Sophomore Emma Kelly, an excellent athlete who starred in volleyball, has speed, gets a good jump on the ball and has a strong arm in left. Senior Ashley Faiella is an experienced, dependable player in right.

"Devon should also swing a good bat for us," said Sommers. "Ashley is a hustler. She gets after a fly ball and has good speed."

A pair of juniors, Taylor Parry and Rachel Papile, are two full-throttle athletes at second and short. They have good range and play the game hard. Parry is also a basketball player while Papile played volleyball.

"I call them my dirt dogs. They never stop hustling," said Sommers. "They dive after everything."

Freshman Nicole Jorgensen, who had strong seasons in basketball and volleyball, will be at first while Devon McMahon is an experienced performer at third. Bethany Walker will also see action in the infield.

"Nicole at 6'4" gives a good target at first and Devon played well at third for us last year," said Sommers.

This should be an enjoyable team to watch. Any club that plays solid defense on the high-school level brings a crispness to the game. Errors and walks are little fun. In addition, Sommers plans to play a good deal of "smallball". The Presidents, will bunt, move the runner along, and hit-and-run. This should make for sharp, exciting softball.

"I'd like to think every player in the lineup can put down a bunt," said Sommers. "It's how we're going to score runs. We have players who can swing the bats, but we're going to have to do the little things to score which is similar to what we did last year."

Sommers sees Silver Lake, Duxbury and Whitman-Hanson as talented teams in a strong Patriot League. Quincy hosts Fontbonne Thursday at 3:30.

Chiropractic treatment largely focuses its efforts on the spine because it is concerned with the free flow of nerve energy that travels through the spinal cord and branches out between openings in the vertebrae. However, that does not mean that chiropractors are limited to treating the spine and back. Quite the contrary, chiropractic treatment can exert its healthful effects anywhere in the body that is controlled and managed by nerve energy, including the extremities. For instance, nerves exiting at the top of the thoracic region of the spine serve the hands, and those leaving through the lumbar area help control the legs. By concentrating their efforts on resolving impingements at these specific exit points, chiropractic can have far-reaching results.

Red Raiders Ready For Challenge In Boys' Lacrosse

By BILL GRIFFIN

The world of boys lacrosse in the Patriot League is a land of giants. There is balanced strength throughout the league. There is two-time defending state champion Duxbury and perpetual powerhouse Hingham.

It is not an easy place to build a program with young players, but North Quincy and coach Michael Joyce are ready for the challenge.

"We only have three seniors and two of them are out for the first year," said Joyce. "We have a good group of sophomores and freshmen. We have to school them in the fundamentals and build the base of a solid program."

The strength of the team is in the midfield, and the Red Raiders also have a gifted offensive player on the forward line in sophomore Mike Finn.

"Mike can dominate the offensive end," said Joyce. "He has great vision, he protects the ball with his stickwork and he has a great scoring touch. He could be a big scorer for us."

Junior Nolan Greene, who was a standout goalie for the hockey team, anchors the group at midfield. He is an excellent athlete, handles well, has good speed, and knows the game.

"His passing is excellent. He moves the ball well to the attackers," said Joyce.

Sophomore Evan Aimola and freshman Corey Hernandez join Greene in the middle of the field.

"Evan has very good speed and Corey will be the center for us," said Joyce. "He's strong and athletic, and he will handle the faceoffs."

Sophomore Chris Gorman and freshman Timmy Glynn, one of several of hockey players on the squad, will play on attack with Finn.

"Greene, Finn, Glynn, Brendan Cox were all hockey players," said Joyce. "The toughness and skills of hockey translate well into lacrosse."

Cox, junior Pat Janeiro and sophomore Cornelius Koch will play on defense in front of sophomore goalie Benson Chau.

"Benson has the potential to be an excellent goalie and as they grow and improve, this should be a good defensive group," said Joyce.

Senior Pierre St. Marc is playing his first varsity season and Joyce likes what he has seen from him.

"He's showed a lot of determination. He'll see some action for us," said Joyce.

There is great potential for growth here. This should be a much improved team from early April until late May.

"I think you'll see a different team by the end of the year," said Joyce. "Our young players will get better, we have good strength in the middle of the field and we have three or four players who are coming back from injury. They should return as the season goes on."

Joyce is well aware of the difficult test his team will face building in a league that produces state champions. However, he sees an advantage to the challenge.

"It will get us used to playing at a high level," said Joyce. "We have every opportunity to get better. To improve, you have to play the best. I don't want us playing in awe of anybody and I don't think we will."

North had a difficult opener against Duxbury and lost, 23-0. The result was obviously not what Joyce and his team wanted, but he was pleased with the effort.

"We played hard until the end," said Joyce. "It showed us the challenge we face. The kids were frustrated, but they played with a lot of class, as did the kids from Duxbury. The key for us is to keep learning from these games."

Chau made 13 saves in goal for North.

"The score doesn't show it, but most of those saves were on point-blank shots.

North Quincy Girls' Softball Tested, Experienced

By BILL GRIFFIN

For the past two years, North Quincy has tested and developed young, talented softball players in the fires of the Patriot League. This spring, the Red Raiders hope to enjoy the results of their hard-won experience.

"We hope this is a turnaround year for us," said coach Kerry Ginty. "We've tried to build the program by using a lot of young players over the past few years. They have the experience and we have excellent underclassmen coming along as well."

"It's early, but I like what I see so far," said Ginty. "They're a great group and the senior leadership has been excellent."

Ginty sees the early strength of her team on defense. The Red Raiders are strong up the middle which is exactly the right place for defensive excellence.

"To begin the season, our strength will be our defense," she said.

There are few better than senior shortstop Liz Kelly who has started since freshman year. Kelly is a three-time league all star and batted .341 last year. She is that rare player a team can build around both offensively and defensively. Her range, arm, and hands are excellent at short. She has power, drives in runs and hits for average. That about covers it.

"She's batted lead off and cleanup for us over the last three years," said Ginty. "She is an outstanding shortstop. Liz has done everything we've asked. Her leadership this year has been tremendous."

Her defensive partner is senior Kelly Thompson who brings experience and steadiness to second base. Sophomore Christine Campo has the speed to run down fly balls in center and freshman Sarah Franklin has showed promise behind the plate.

Centerfield, shortstop, second base, catcher. Strength up the middle. A team can build its defense around this core and Ginty hopes this is the case for North.

"Kelly also chips in with timely hits," said Ginty. "Christine is a threat with her speed when she gets on base. Sarah has a good arm and works hard. I also think she will hit as she adjusts to the speed of varsity pitching."

Junior lefty Natasha Sautter returns as North's starter and should be a solid pitcher for the Red Raiders. She has worked hard in the off season and it shows in both her control and speed.

"She's stronger," said Ginty. "She has greater strength in her push-off which should mean better control and velocity. She pitched a little varsity as a freshman, so this is her third year. That experience will help."

Senior Christine Kelliher and junior Lauren Magoon will shift between first and third depending on the situation. Kelliher could give North the big bat it needs while Magoon is an excellent, versatile defensive player."

"Christine has a quick bat and power. I'm hoping for big things from her," said Ginty. "Lauren has a good glove and a strong arm."

Senior Caitlin Bulger, a three-sport standout, will start in left. Bulger hit .468 last year. She has good speed and a quick bat. She is one of the fastest players on the team and runs the bases well. Junior Abby Mayo is a solid athlete in right.

"Caitlin is a big threat to steal and I think Abby will swing a good bat for us," said Ginty.

Sophomore Madison Hally is a versatile performer who can play the infield, the outfield and can also catch. She batted .324 as a freshman and Ginty will surely find a spot and playing time for her.

"We lost Taylor McKay, our starting catcher, last year to injury for a few games," said Ginty. "We really didn't have a backup so we just threw Maddy in there. It was a baptism by fire. Put on the catching gear and get in there. She was great. She showed no fear. She will play a lot for us this year."

Like all teams, North has been slowed by the lack of outside playing time. Ginty feels her club will improve over the course of the season as it becomes used to the speed and pace of softball in a traditionally powerful Patriot League which placed seven teams in the tourney last year.

"I think we'll get better as we build on our softball knowledge," said Ginty whose club finished 2-15 last year. "I think we'll be a smarter, quicker team as the season develops."

North has moved from the Keenan to the Fisher Division in the league. Silver Lake, Middleboro, and Whitman-Hanson are traditional powers, but North's seniors have had years of experience playing against the best. Ginty likes the attitude of her team as it approaches a challenging year.

"They're having fun. They enjoy softball. I don't think we'll be intimidated by anyone we play. These kids have experience playing the powers in the league," she said.

North is at Archbishop Williams Friday.

Sacred Heart 5th Grade Boys Win March Madness Title

The 5th grade Sacred Heart Travel Basketball team recently won the March Madness Tournament held at North Quincy High School.

Teams from New York and surrounding South Shore communities participated in the two week-long event.

The team is coached by Kyle Costa, a former high school basketball star and 1,000-point scorer at North Quincy High School.

"These kids really worked hard all year, and hard work really pays off... we finally won a championship," Costa said.

The team is also coached by Frank Calabro and John Cristiani. Coach Costa stressed that this team played in two tough travel leagues, the Metro West A division and the South Shore Prep League. Coach Costa emphasized team play and transitional offense/defense this year. Many of the players referred to that style of play as "KyleBall."

"We run our 5th grade practices like my old high school practices....The kids are running offensive sets, boxing out, and taking charges like the high school kids," Costa said. "Only difference is that they are in 5th grade."

The team has great depth at the guard position. Guards Eoin Gormley, Johnny Cristiani, David Ryan, Ethan McDevitt, Zach Mar, and Franco Calabro all excelled this year. Forwards Frank Yhombi, Brendan Donovan, Michael Levine, Landon Pierron, Will Farrell, and CJ Jaehnig helped control the boards during the tournament and throughout the year.

Coach Costa said he is very excited about this team moving forward.

"We are a very deep team, and next year we can press full time. We have very quick guards....Good luck trying to break it."

Quincy Youth Basketball Girls Play At Harvard 'Pink Zone' Game

Each basketball season, the Harvard Women's Basketball team hosts an Ivy League "Pink Zone" game. The Pink Zone game is an effort to raise awareness and funding in the fight against breast cancer.

Recently, a team of girls from Quincy Youth Basketball participated in an intra-squad scrimmage at halftime of the Harvard Women's basketball game versus Yale.

On the roster for QYB girls were Ashley Totten, Joanna Rafti, Madelyn Gill, Lindsay Sheridan, Mary Kate McAleavey, Riley McLaughlin, Ashley Moniz, Kayla Larkin Goldman, Jillian O'Toole, Samantha Brown, Megan Piquette and Journey Strouble. Coached by Dan Totten, QYB's Girls Grades 6-8 Coach and Coordinator for the Girls Program Tournaments and Clinics.

All of the QYB girls played an excellent game and were cheered on by the sold out crowd at Harvard's Laviettes Pavilion. The QYB girls had a tremendous evening playing on a college basketball court with a very lively environment at halftime of a sold out major college women's basketball game. After playing, the QYB girls were treated to pizza by the Harvard Women's basketball team, along with photos and an autograph session with the Harvard team players.

Last season, the Harvard Women's basketball team came to Quincy and conducted an exciting and informative basketball clinic for all registered QYB girls players.

Quincy-North Track Host Inaugural Meet At Faxon Track

The Quincy and North track teams lifted the lid on a new track season and a new track hosting Archbishop Williams on Saturday for their annual freshman-sophomore meet.

The meet has had several homes over the years. First starting at Veterans' Memorial Stadium, then to Archies' old track at Storrs Avenue in Braintree then more recently at their new state-of-the-art 400-meter facility and now at Faxon Field.

Many parents and friends were on hand including Dr. Carmen Mariano, former assistant superintendent of Quincy Public Schools and now Principal of Archbishop Williams. While no score was kept and many athletes exceeded event limitations to gain valuable experience, many Quincy and North Quincy athletes won their events. Including some who were in their first ever track meet.

"This is a fun event," said Head Coach Geoff Hennessey. "Every year someone we had no idea about comes out and puts on a show." None were as impressive as Quincy freshman Kenny Garcia. Garcia won the 400, ran on the winning 4 x 100 relay, won his heat in the 200, although a clock malfunction prevented him from getting his time, took 2nd in the 100, and third in the longjump.

Not to be outdone was freshman teammate Garrett Cronin who won the 100-meter hurdles and Longjump, took third in the 100, ran on the winning relay and was third in the javelin.

North's Mike Mullaney won the 800 and mile and was 2nd in the 200. Freddie Flynn was 2nd in the shot and Jason Gong was 2nd in the javelin. Brandon Zeng was 2nd in the 800. Anthony Crumbley was 2nd and Rei Kula 3rd in the 400 for the Raiders. For the Presidents, Chris Silva took 3rd in the longjump and was a member of the winning 4 x 100 relay. Calvin Jusme won the highjump and anchored the winning relay.

won the 800, Inaya Paul took the mile for the Presidents, North's Hailey Houlihan and Egista Gjini were 2-3 in the shot, Gjini took a third in the discus and a second in the javelin, Quincy's LaQueen Arias won the javelin and took 2nd in the 800.

The 4 x 100 relay team of Alice Chen, Xhona Ferro, Naika Louis and Gabby Flaherty took 2nd for the Raiders. Quincy-North opened up their Patriot League schedule Tuesday hosting Hanover.

Tim Cahill: In His Own Words

wasn't anyone else and they fought tremendously hard for me. That's something I take away from all of this. Two great bosses who hired me with the cloud of the investigation going on and then stayed with me after the indictment. Compass Securities – John Ahern and Tim Shanahan – They didn't blink, they didn't put me on leave or put me in the penalty box.

THE AGREEMENT

"The agreement that I came to with the attorney general allows me to keep my job. I got four stock brokerage licenses that I worked hard for during the 2012 calendar year and I get to keep those and practice and be in the investment world which was the key part of this agreement. I didn't admit to any guilt regarding the case. What I admitted to was a perception of impropriety which is a civil infraction.

"I believe there clearly was a perception and I admit I should have been more sensitive to that perception given how intense the campaign was. I was being criticized for everything I did. I was under attack constantly. The Republicans – every time they hit me I could go down I'd come back up, it was relentless.

"I don't say that I didn't do anything because that's part of your job in politics to be sensitive to that. It's interesting that I had a similar experience over High-Point 15 years ago where I was advised to step away from the process because you may have conflicts with your family owning property. I chose not to step back because first off I believed I did not have a conflict and second of all of I wanted to vote.

"That's what I was elected to do and I felt the same way in this case. I could have stepped back, it would have been the safe thing to do to just say there's nothing I can do about it. It's out of my hands and I didn't and I paid a price for that but in the end I did what I felt I had to do that at the time was the right thing to do.

"I'm okay with the fact that other people can disagree and there are laws on the books that sanction people for creating these appearances or not being able to deflect these appearances. Could I have run it by Ethics to make sure? I could have, maybe I should have.

"It's not the way I governed. I never asked for permission to do things whether it's the press or agencies. I felt I was on solid ground given the realities that we were facing and that came out in court. Were sales down? Absolutely. Did the ads help sales go up? Absolutely. Was the commercial supposed to run through Thanksgiving which was five weeks after the election? Absolutely. Was there overlap? Absolutely but at the end of the day I think we defended our position very, very well. We came up a couple short on the jury pool but I feel okay about that."

A FAIR TRIAL

"I said the day of the mistrial as much as you want to get all 12 (jurors) I don't think in 23 years in government I got everybody and I have to respect someone who held their ground because in some cases that could have been one juror who was holding his ground in favor of me. At the time I didn't know if it was one juror in favor of me or one against but at the end of the day that's what the jury pool is all about.

"I got a fair trial. I think the judge was exceptional because it was a complicated, difficult case and you had the AG's office fighting like hell with all their attorneys and all their resources and you had two very good attorneys from a private law office fighting just as hard on the other side.

THE JUDICIARY SYSTEM WORKED

"I did think about this and it's probably because I am from Quincy but thank God John Adams set up the system way back when. I thought about him defending the Boston Massacre people when no one else would do it and establishing the rule of law and I was praying that it would play out. I knew I had the government against me – all of them. Every leader in the Democratic establishment seemed to be against me or ready to cut me loose – the governor, the treasurer, the attorney general, I didn't hear from anybody in elected office other than the guy across the street (Mayor Thomas Koch) and a few others. Publicly, I think he was the only one.

"When I went in there I was just praying the system would work and it did. That's encouraging and I want that to be a message out there. For me, for Al Grazioso, for Scott Campbell, the judicial system worked. I came away from this case with a great deal of respect for the judiciary. It's a tougher job than people think it is. They're like a referee in a high-stakes basketball game where you have two teams just killing each other. Fighting for every foul, fighting for every charge, that's what it's like because every five minutes there's a side-bar and they're going at it with two diametrically opposed positions on evidence, on witnesses, and the judge has to be on her game. She's taken work home at night, the job doesn't end at four o'clock when the jury gets to go home.

"That to me was an eye opener because the perception on TV is you have these quirky judges who are just sitting there day-dreaming. She was into the case and again she had to be because the instructions to the jury were key because at the end of the day that really determines what your chances are going in.

"All in all, between my defense attorneys, my bosses, the friends and supporters I do have, my family, the judiciary system and good old John Adams, I feel really lucky and blessed and I'm looking forward to writing a new chapter in my life.

NOT A PARTY GUY

"When I ran for governor, I had made the determination it was either up or out. I wanted to try to take what I had done in the treasury, especially the economic reforms that we had instituted and apply those to state government which was in need of it, do it as an independent so I don't regret that because I feel that I don't fit even today I'm still a registered independent (unenrolled) and I probably always will be because when I try to figure out who's right in these debates whether it's in Washington or Beacon Hill some days it's the Democrats and some days it's the Republicans and some days it's neither.

"The grounding I got on the City Council always made me think I was never a party guy. It was always about representing the folks who elected me. I know that's naive and maybe not realistic but I always took that with me to Norfolk County and the state Treasurer's Office and tried to take it to the governor's office and it didn't work. I'm okay with that but it tells me it's time to move on. I don't want to repeat myself.

"I went to the restaurant to government and now I want to go into the investment and finance world on the private side and if were to go active politically it would be more on an appointed or a volunteer position."

A POLITICAL DECISION

"The line (between perception and reality) is blurry but the line will always be blurry. If prosecutors continue to prosecute these vague laws that are out there on the books, I think it will be a loss for government decision-making because everyone is going to be looking over their shoulder.

"We must have cut ribbons and delivered checks to 100 schools (as part of the Massachusetts School Building Authority established by Cahill) over the last year of my term and that overlapped the campaign. Should I have not gone to those? Should we have not cut those ribbons? Should we have not let people know? We let people know because we had a great program here and we wanted them to participate and we wanted to help the local process move forward but at the same time should I have stepped back from that? Should we have not done that?

"I'm sure there were some people who said what a coincidence that he's doing all this in 2010. Well, the law wouldn't allow us to even start building these schools until 2007. If we could have started building schools in 2004, hell, we would have done it. But the process took a long time and we couldn't start until 2007. They're still doing this – there's been a 100 new schools since I left office so at the end of the day it's up the public.

"I think it's a political decision, not a legal decision to determine whether someone has used his office incorrectly but to use your office, you have to. It's the same thing in the private sector? Why should someone be promoted if you haven't done a good job and you have to tell that story because no one else is going to tell it."

WHY INDICTED?

"It's hard to speculate and people will speculate but that's not my job. There were times during this whole process that I wondered 'why me?' Is this a message to other people? It's hard to say.

"This wasn't a typical corruption case where someone was lining their pockets with money. I never took anything from anybody and that obviously was true. They certainly looked at everything I had ever done over the last eight years. My entire life was investigated and turned over.

I'm not bitter but I'm sure there will probably be days when I wished I was farther along. I'm 54 years old but no I don't have any bitterness. It happened for whatever reason. I'm not going to wonder why it happened. We were able to fight back. I feel really good about the outcome. I would have loved 12-0 but life isn't always neat."

PERSPECTIVE

"You just learn to appreciate what you have and appreciate the good things in life and know there's a ton of people with a lot worse situations, terminal illnesses, problems with their children, or all the things you see. If you still fell sorry for yourself or you feel bitter, then she wins and that's what I won't be bitter or show malice towards her.

"I respect the fact that she felt that she had to do this. As long as people respect the fact that I had to do what I had to do, then I'm okay with it and I think most people do.

I know I do."

On Tuesday, March 26 at approximately 4:20 p.m., Officers Dan Francis and Bill Lanergan were dispatched to South Shore Check Cashing at 418 Hancock St. for a person reportedly trying to cash a fraudulent check. Officer Matt Tobin, who was in the area, also responded. The officers arrived simultaneously, entered the business and spotted a sole male suspect standing on the customer side of the counter engaged in conversation with the female clerk.

LT. DAN MINTON

Without the customer's knowledge that the officers were behind him, Officer Tobin pointed to the man and the clerk nodded. Officer Tobin introduced himself to the suspect and explained why they were there. Officer Francis interviewed the clerk while Officers Tobin and Lanergan questioned the suspect. The suspect provided identification and the check in question, which listed him as the payee and was endorsed by him.

The suspect said he wanted to tell the story behind the check. He said that he recently applied for a job online and was contacted through email by "someone who works for them" as he pointed at the name on the check. The check was drawn on a business account for the "Rejoice Christian School" in Owasso, Oklahoma. The suspect stated that he agreed to "clean a house out for people who live in Holland - I know it sounds ridiculous." He said he received the check as prepayment for his services in the amount of $400 that he was to spend up to $50 for cleaning supplies and then give the balance to a person delivering art to the home.

The check was written in the amount of $2,110. The suspect gave the officers a UPS delivery pouch that the check arrived in at his residence in Quincy. The shipping from address was listed as 14700 E. Indiana Ave., Spokane, Washington.

Officer Francis learned from the clerk that she immediately became suspicious of the check based on the amount, the location of the business, the quality of the paper not being consistent with authentic checks, and the memo line stated "payment for cash" which she characterized as highly unusual. Officer Francis was able to make contact with an employee of the actual school in Oklahoma, who said that she was aware that over the past few years some fraudulent checks have circulated in the school's name. She confirmed with Officer Francis that the check the suspect possessed was in fact fraudulent.

While standing with the suspect, a male carrying a case of beer started to enter the business and then upon seeing inside, walked away south on Hancock Street. When asked who that male was, the suspect said it was his son who was with him but went to buy beer. A short time later, the same male walked by again but didn't turn his head as he walked by. Officer Lanergan encountered this male a short distance from the business and asked him why he didn't enter the building his father was in. The son said, "because the police were in there." He was questioned and said that his father was "working for some people he met on the computer and they sent him a check prior to doing any work."

Officer Tobin advised the suspect that this was a variation of a frequent scam, when a person is mailed a check in their name for any amount of money, usually significantly higher than they were supposed to receive in order to either purchase an item or for services not yet performed, as in this case. The person cashing the check is then supposed to meet with a person involved with the scam (in this case the art dealer) to provide payment of the excess amount totaling nearly $1,700. In most cases, the person cashing the check does so with their own bank and it is typically not until a later date that the check is discovered as fraudulent.

This scenario would have likely labeled the suspect as an unknowing victim of circumstance, however he made no mention of the possibility of the check being bad to the clerk as he attempted to cash it. Furthermore, he did not

Slow Garage Door Is Unbearable

Question: My garage door has been opening very slowly for the past few days. I've already had problems opening and closing it -- I have to mash the remote button several times to get it to move. Are these problems related? Are they easy or difficult to fix? -- Jim K., Gulfport, Miss.

Answer: They're related in the sense that your garage door probably needs some overall maintenance, but the two issues are otherwise likely not from the same cause.

Having to mash the remote operating button several times could indicate that the garage door's sensor eye is dirty or misaligned. Or, the battery on the remote might need changing.

The door's slow opening speed indicates a more serious problem. One of the door's torsion springs -- a pair of large coils straddling the horizontal bar at the top of the door that helps control opening and closing -- may be broken or on their way out. A broken spring can't be repaired; it must be replaced.

You'll probably read plenty of warnings on the Internet about attempting to replace them yourself. Since the coils are under tension, especially when the garage door is closed, removing them can be dangerous. I don't have enough space to tell you how to do it safely, but if you're interested in what it takes to change these out, a detailed description can be found at DDMGarageDoors.com. DIY'er Richard Kinch provides even more good info in "How I Replaced Deadly Garage Door Torsion Springs and Lived to Tell the Tale," found here: www.truetex.com/garage.htm.

If you decide against repairing the door yourself, contact a licensed garage-door repair professional to inspect the door and its hardware and estimate the cost of repairs. As with any repair that you need to hire someone for, follow the "rule of three" -- contact three different professionals and get a written estimate from each before allowing any work to be done.

While you're waiting for the repair, do not open or close the door. Park your car in the driveway for now. Operating the door with a broken torsion spring can cause further damage, including misalignment or derailment.

HOME TIP: To reduce squeaking of the garage door, lubricate the rollers, bearings and hinges with 3-in-1 oil.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A little woolgathering is OK. But don't let that dreamy state linger beyond midweek, when you'll want to be ready to take on new workplace responsibilities.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Love rules the week for single Bovines seeking romance. Attached pairs also find new joy in their relationships. Friday should bring news about a business opportunity.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Home becomes the center of a new social whirl, as you show your talent for hosting great parties. You can expect to impress a lot of people who've never seen this side of you.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The Moon Child might have to raise those powers of persuasion a notch to get a still-wary colleague to agree to go along. Finding more facts to back up your position helps.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Hold off trying to fix the blame for an apparent mishandling of a work situation. A full investigation could reveal surprising facts on how and why it really happened.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Your ability to find details others might overlook gives you an advantage in assessing a possibly too-good-to-be-true offer. A trusted colleague has advice.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Expect to be called on once again to act as peacemaker in a long-simmering dispute that suddenly flares up. Offer advice, but be careful to stay out of the fray. SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your organizational skills help you line up your priorities so that you get things done without added pressure. The weekend could hold a special surprise.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) New ventures are favored. But don't launch yours before rechecking all facts and sources. Also, be sure you can rely on support from certain people.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Don't be pushed into renegotiating an agreement, even though it might help avoid a potential impasse. Get legal advice before you sign or agree to anything.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Helping others is what Aquarians do so well. But this time, someone wants to help you. Expect to hear some news that will both surprise and delight you.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Things go so swimmingly that you're tempted to take on more tasks. Best advice: Finish what you have now, then enjoy a well-earned relaxing weekend.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your understanding of human nature helps you make wise decisions that are appreciated by all. You would make a fine judge.

Social Security's 'Final 4'

By KRISTEN ALBERINO

Social Security Public Affairs Specialist

It's that time of year! Basketball fans are gearing up for March Madness — a time when the final four teams in the NCAA fight for the title of national champion.

While basketball fans are excited about March Madness, Social Security already has a winning "final four" of online services to cheer about: our new my Social Security service, the Retirement Estimator, online Benefit Application, and online Extra Help application!

Let's take a look at the lineup.

1. My Social Security is an online account that allows you quick access to your personal Social Security information. During your working years, once you create your online account, you can use my Social Security to obtain a copy of your Social Security Statement to check your earnings record and see estimates of the future retirement, disability, and survivor benefits you and your family may receive. If you already receive Social Security benefits, you can now sign into your account to view, save, and print your benefit verification letter, check your benefit payment information, and even change your address and phone number in our records. You also can start or change your direct deposit information. Check it out at www.socialsecurity.gov/myaccount.

2. The Retirement Estimator is an easy way to get an instant, personalized estimate of your future Social Security benefits. Just key in some basic information and the Estimator will use information on your Social Security record, along with what you input, to give you a benefit estimate on the spot. You even can experiment with different scenarios, such as changing your future earnings and retirement date. Check it out in English at www.socialsecurity.gov/estimator or in Spanish at www.segurosocial.gov/calculador.

3. The online Benefit Application is the most convenient way to apply for Social Security retirement benefits. You can apply from the comfort of your home — it's fast, easy, and secure. It's so easy, in fact, it can take you as little as 15 minutes to apply online. In most cases, once your application is submitted electronically, you're done. There are no forms to sign and usually no documentation is required. Social Security will process your application and contact you if any further information is needed. Try it out when you're ready to retire at www.socialsecurity.gov/applyonline.

4. The online Extra Help application is an easy way to save about $4,000 a year on your Medicare prescription drug costs. To qualify for the Extra Help, you must be on Medicare, have limited income and resources, and live in one of the 50 states or the District of Columbia. Learn more about it at www.socialsecurity.gov/prescriptionhelp.

Social Security's online services continue to hold the top spots for customer satisfaction. In the recent American Customer Satisfaction Index quarterly report, Social Security continued to score higher than the best private online services, including Amazon.

A Job Well Done

know where he was supposed to perform any cleaning services, and said "they were going to tell me once I cashed the check." Any reasonable person in this situation should have at the very least disclosed the possibility of the check being fraudulent to the business/bank they were trying to cash it at. The suspect made no attempt to contact the actual business on the check, which officers were able to do in minutes to confirm that it was fraudulent.

Based on all the circumstances of this case, sufficient probable cause was established that the suspect at the very least knew the check's authenticity was in question and yet still presented it as real and authentic to the clerk to be cashed. The suspect, a 51-year old Quincy resident, was placed under arrest for "uttering a forged instrument," placed into handcuffs and transported to the station for booking.

Nice Work!

DOOR-TO-DOOR SOLICITATION:

Companies seeking to conduct door-to-door business in Quincy are required to submit their employees to a background investigation first. Once cleared, each employee will be provided with a photo I.D., which they are to wear in the neighborhoods. Keep in mind that due to a $50 fee, what often occurs is that a few representatives will be checked but the company will send out others too. This is usually when we are called — when a solicitor acts overly aggressive or suspiciously. Strong advice — never let these people in your house, especially when they request to use your bathroom, where medications are often stored. If there are two solicitors at your door seeking entry, one ruse is to keep you preoccupied while the other "uses the bathroom" but goes into the bedroom for the jewelry box.

According to Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest, there have been numerous complaints from residents solely about the tactics of solicitors from a company called "Just Energy." Although there is no city violation at this time, the Quincy Police Crime Prevention Unit recommends the following pertaining to door-to-door solicitations: Do not open your door, instead talk through the door and ask what the person wants. Once you open the door, it is often difficult to close it on the solicitor. In addition, opening the door to a stranger leaves you vulnerable. If you are interested in the offer, have the solicitor leave a brochure in your mailbox. This way you can check online into the company using the company's name with the word "scam" after it to see if others have reported problems. If you have any suspicions, call "911" and let us check the person out. You will be protecting yourself as well as your neighbors by making the call. As for door-to-door solicitations, in general, consider then why do sales people have to go to your home to sell it?

RULES OF THE ROAD:

Parking regulations are generally determined by state law and usually enforced by the local police. If you park in a business or residential district, your vehicle must be no more than 12 inches from the curb. The only exception is if angled parking is allowed. Parking spaces are often marked by white road lines. You must park your vehicle between these lines. You may not take part of two spaces. In Massachusetts, you may not park your vehicle in certain places:

- In a zone with a NO PARKING, NO STANDING, or NO STOPPING sign.
- In a bus stop (as of April 2009, the penalty for parking in a bus stop is $100).
- In a taxi stand.
- In a zone and at a time posted for street cleaning.
- In a posted loading zone.
- Within 20 feet of an intersection.
- In a crosswalk, in front of a driveway, or in front of a handicap-access ramp.
- In a zone posted for HP-DV parking only (unless you have disabled person placards or placards or disabled veteran plates). The fine for a first offense is $300. The fine for wrongful use of a disabled person or veteran plate or placard is a minimum of $500.
- Within 10 feet of a fire hydrant or fire lane.
- On a sidewalk, curb, center traffic island, or median.
- During a weather or roadway emergency.
- Facing the wrong way against traffic.
- On a state or an interstate highway, unless authorized.
- On the Massachusetts Turnpike (fines range from $15-$100).
- On a roadway in a rural area or outside a thickly settled district.
- In a traffic lane next to a row of parked vehicles ("double parked").
- To make non-emergency repairs to your vehicles.
- You may get a citation with a fine for violating a parking regulation. The fines for most of the violations listed above are set by city or town ordinance and will vary depending on the city or town. Unpaid parking tickets can stop you from renewing your license or vehicle registration.

said. "I don't want kids to come and think they are simply just exchanging a hat to get their face painted, or to bounce in the bouncy house. This is an act of compassion and I think compassion is our biggest tool in combating bullying."

O'Brien said her main goal for the fundraiser is to help kids understand compassion, and to bring it to those children who are losing their hair.

"I want to help the kids that come to understand, or plant that seed, so that when they do think about mocking someone for the way they look, down the road they think about Dusty, they think about this event, and they think about the fact that they already contributed to something positive, so why take a step backwards," said O'Brien.

"I want to plant the seeds of the thought of compassion in these kids minds when they go to the event and donate a hat, that's really my goal. I want to bring compassion to the patients that are losing their hair, by giving them cards and let them know we are thinking about them. I want them to feel strong in the hats that we collect and know that they might not be able to have a hairdo that they love, but they do have a hat that they can feel confident in."

All of the hats donated, along with the cards made at the fundraiser, will be given to children at Boston Children's Hospital, The Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, and Tufts Floating Hospital.

Councillors Raise Questions About Proposed N.Q. Market

Traffic Top C-Mart Concern

By SCOTT JACKSON

Members of the City Council had their first chance to raise questions about a proposed North Quincy C-Mart Monday night after two lengthy public hearings, and questions regarding the supermarket's traffic impact dominated the discussion.

C-Mart owner Michael Fang is asking the council, acting as Quincy's Special Permit Granting Authority (SPGA), for permission to convert the former Boston Gear Works building on Hayward Street into a new headquarters for his company. His plan calls for 25,000 square feet of retail space, a 6,400 square foot warehouse, and also has room for his corporate offices. In 2009, the council rejected a similar plan by a 7-1 vote, with those opposed citing traffic concerns.

Fang appealed that deci-

Responsible For Each High School After Current AD Retires School Committee Considering 2 Part-Time Athletic Directors

By EMILY TAFT

The school committee is discussing the possibility of hiring a part-time Athletic Director for both high schools after current AD Jim Rendle retires at the end of the school year.

"The Athletic Director (position), I think it's still in discussion to some point where we would be looking at trying to establish two positions, a part time position at each high school for two AD's who could hold this position in conjunction with another teaching or administrative position," said School Committee member Dave McCarthy, the chairman of the Ad Hoc Athletic Rules Subcommittee. "Also we haven't ruled out the ability to go outside and hire someone to take care of solely Quincy High and solely North Quincy High and also I think that what's still on the table is the present formula we have right now with one AD.

"I myself think it's a strong idea to have someone in the building and have someone concentrating on one high school. At the same time you want to make sure logistically that the job can

Cleaner, Greener Cleanup May 4

The 24th annual Cleaner, Greener Quincy celebration will be held on Saturday, May 4th.

The cleanup will occur at beaches, marshes, neighborhood parks, playgrounds, schoolyards and open space areas citywide from 9 a.m. to noon.

Mayor Thomas Koch will host an appreciation cookout at Pageant Field following the cleanup.

"Cleaner, Greener is an event that has become a cornerstone of community spirit for so many of our neighborhoods, schools, businesses and youth organizations across our city," Koch said. "A day where our residents, young and old, roll up their sleeves alongside business owners and city employees for the betterment of our city is something to celebrate and we should all be proud that this tradition has endured for more than two decades."

The annual cleanup draws close to 1,500 volunteers each year. Last year, more than 20 various public areas were designated as cleanup sites, many at the suggestion of residents who worked together in targeting areas in their neighborhoods ultimately improving the aesthetic conditions of their surroundings.

Residents are encouraged to designate neighborhood cleanup sites. Contact the Quincy Park Department at (617) 376-1251 or mbrillo@quincyma.gov.

Leaders Highlight Washington Street Economic Growth

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy officials and business leaders came together to highlight economic development happening along the Washington Street corridor in Quincy Point as part of the city's celebration of National Community Development Week.

Speaking at a press conference at Cagney's Restaurant & Pub on Washington Street, Quincy Chamber of Commerce President Dean Rizzo touted the growth along Washington Street, which connects the Fore River Bridge to Quincy Center. He pointed to a new Wild Willy's restaurant and a new daycare center both opened since 2011, and the South Cove Manor nursing home being built, as examples of economic development.

"It's an exciting district, going from Quincy Center to Quincy Point with all the work that's happening in downtown Quincy with the $1.6 billion redevelopment of the center, and the future redevelopment of the 110-acre Fore River Shipyard. This stretch right in between is just naturally going to continue to grow. It's the grassroots efforts that are really making a difference and I'm excited to be a part of that and to work with the city to administer these funds in an effective manor to create jobs and to create new businesses," Rizzo said.

The Chamber's economic development arm, the Quincy 2000 Collaborative, has helped businesses in the area expand by providing low interest loans. The funding from those loans comes from Community Development Block Grants (CDBG), which Quincy 2000 disburses to qualifying businesses.

Cagney's was one such recipient. New owner Mark DiBona used a loan he received to pick up part of the tab for remodeling the bar. Business at Cagney's has taken off since the renovation was completed, allowing DiBona to hire new employees to keep up with the increase in customers.

"Last year the opportunity came up for me to purchase this property and do some remodeling, revitalize this part of the block, get things moving again. With the help of Dean and the Chamber I was able to secure a small business loan to help get things moving," DiBona said. "It's been great for business, its been great for the community, its created a lot of new traffic outside, its been great for my staff, we've created five or six new jobs within the last six or eight months, and we are going to be adding one or two more on this year.

"If any other small businesses in this corridor or other parts of the city are even thinking about it, take advantage of it."

Polygraphix Printing also received a loan from the Chamber. Owner Robert Sholla used the loan to relocate his business from Fed-

QMC Nurses Voice Concerns Over Patient Care, Staffing

By EMILY TAFT

The frontline nurses from Steward-Quincy Medical Center shared their concerns about patient safety, staffing cuts, and the effect the cuts have on the quality of care patients are receiving, during a hearing held by the Massachusetts Workers Rights Board on Tuesday morning at Quincy Community United Methodist Church in Wollaston.

Over 10 nurses, patients, and retired medical personnel spoke of many instances that have occurred at the hospital that has them concerned about the quality of care patients and have led them to announce a one-day strike that will occur on Thursday. The strike would be the first nurses' strike at a Greater Boston hospital in more than 25 years, which has been sanctioned by the most overwhelming nurses strike vote (94 percent in favor) in Massachusetts history.

"We are dictated and mandated by the license that we hold to advocate for our patients and the care that we give," said Joan Harte, who currently works in the recovery room at QMC. "We had an on-going staffing crisis at the hospital for many years. So, when Steward first came in they did start to do physical changes to the hospital, and there were some nurses that had left and we could slowly see they were not being replaced and so the staffing crisis continued to worsen.

"In addition they opened a new orthopedic unit, it's a 14-bed unit, and this was a

City To Plant 200 Trees

The City will plant 200 new trees throughout the city's six wards, the first extensive new tree planting program in more than three years, Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday.

Over the past five years Forestry staff have responded to thousands of tree requests across the City, including many takedowns, without being able to begin to rebuild lost inventory.

Park & Forestry will continue to compile requests for tree planting in anticipation of another round of plantings in the fall. Residents should submit requests directly through the Park & Forestry Department website via www.quincyma.gov

There's never been a better time to buy a first home

Three reasons why:

- 1) Rates are at all-time lows – a huge advantage for first-time homebuyers. Your money goes further. And you get to lock in historically-low monthly mortgage payments.
- 2) The eastern Massachusetts real estate market tends to be resilient. Prices here have stabilized... or are starting to move up. Waiting now could cost you later.
- 3) With Colonial Federal's First-Time Homebuyer Program, you get: > A reduced downpayment with no PMI required > A mortgage with a competitive rate > You work one-to-one with our responsive lenders, professionals who want to help you get into your first home > All from a local neighborhood bank specializing in helping people buy homes since 1889.

This is an outstanding opportunity – most likely once-in-a-lifetime – for first-time homebuyers. Is that you...or someone you know? Come see us. Or call VP/Retail Lending Angela Blanchard at 617-471-0750.

Linda Beeler Leaving Her Mark At Crane Library

If there were ever the perfect person for one specific job, it is Linda Beeler as the head of the reference department at the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Beeler, who began her library services career at the Crane in 1972 and became a reference librarian in 1975, will retire next month after 41 and a half years of dedicated service at the library. Since 1987, she has served as the head of the library reference department, a position she has both excelled and enjoyed day-in and day-out for more than 25 years.

"I got the most satisfaction just being able to say yes to more people and being able to learn things myself. That's my secret love of the job is how many things I learn every day," Beeler says. "I am interested in everything which is why I never wanted to stop doing this particular thing in libraries. I didn't want to narrow my focus down."

"It's the message that we received when we graduated from college. This is what commencing is. Commencement is going forth into the world and starting your learning life."

"I took that to heart and I really feel my career has been a part of that."

As the head of the reference department, Beeler's job responsibilities could be described as part historian, part detective and part computer programmer. The reference department provides a myriad of necessary functions and services to library patrons and the public.

They include: locating hard to find books, making sense of complicated medical information, finding out how much houses have sold in a certain neighborhood, explaining how to download e-books and locating pictures of buildings that no longer exist in Quincy.

Need help finding branches in your family tree? The reference department will help people start genealogy. Not a techie? Beeler and her department can help focus internet searches that may involve using databases or simply to find a book similar to the one you just read and loved.

"We can help find information on anything under the sun," she says proudly. "We listen to your question, we try to figure out what you really need to know and then we either provide an answer or steer you in the right direction."

Working the reference desk can also provide some humorous moments.

Beeler recalls the time a gentlemen came into the reference room in the old library from the bar across the street to settle a bet.

"He weaved his way into the room and blurted out a question about John L. Lewis, the heavyweight fighter. Evidently my answer was the one he'd bet on, because he turned, made a sweeping gesture and proclaimed, 'A round for the room!'"

Beeler grew up an avid reader in upstate New York and graduated from Hobart and William Smith Colleges in New York with a degree in English. She then enrolled in graduate school at Simmons College to study library science.

"I took four courses right away and decided I had to be in a library. I have to do what I'm learning," she recalls.

She looked on the bulletin at Simmons and there was a job posting on a hand-written, 3x5-inch index card for an assistant librarian at the Crane Public Library.

"I had never been to Quincy before and I took the train to Quincy and I interviewed with (former library director) Mr. Warren Watson. At the time he was trying to upgrade the library staff to include more library school graduates - professional librarians. He hired me and I thought I was just there to finish my education. They helped pay for the courses, they gave me time off."

Son Beams

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

LINDA BEELER, head of the reference department at the Crane Public Library, will be retiring next month after 41 and a half years of service at the library.

"They were very, very helpful but I had no idea that my entire career would be spent there."

Her first job?

Doing everything.

"I worked in every department, checked out books and I worked on the bookmobile which was a fun experience. The bookmobile went to all the neighborhoods and I got to learn about the neighborhoods that way. I also got to meet some of the kids when they were young and later they came into the library when they were in high school."

"It started out my education on who was who in Quincy."

Linda accompanied George Zeba who drove the bookmobile for many years before it was sidelined in the early 1990s.

"George was a good teacher because he knew everybody's story. He had sympathy for everybody's issues. He never charged overdue for anything. He knew his collection and his clientele. He brought individual books to people. It was a great way to start out."

"It made Quincy feel like a small town to me."

And for Beeler, that made the city feel like home.

She was raised in a small town in northern New York State near the Canadian border. The little girl took to libraries like a bee takes to honey.

"I knew libraries were for me when I was a little girl and I would go into the school library and the school librarian would have an exhibit every year of the Newbery Award winners for children's literature. They were on exhibit so you couldn't check them out."

"She would let me stand next to the table and read as much as I could during library period. I'd put the book down and come in the next day and I would read the rest of it."

Her favorite authors included Laura Ingalls Wilder who published the acclaimed "Little House" literary collection. "Every time a new one was published, that's what I got for Christmas. I have them all and they have my handwriting."

Linda started at the reference desk in 1975 and became the head of the department in 1986.

"The job has certainly changed but it is one of the highest levels you can be and still be in direct public service and I never wanted to leave direct public service because it's so fun, it's so interesting."

The changes in reference have been evolutionary.

"When I started out, there was a card catalogue with index cards in the drawers. The good thing was it was physical, you could look at it, you could thumb through it. Sometimes with a computer, you don't get that feeling of just thumbing through things. You have to really know where you are going and use key words."

But the computer age revolutionized the reference department and the ability to help the public.

"It's so much better, easier to answer people's questions today. We had a card catalogue for our building (back in the day). It wasn't for the branch libraries or libraries in other towns. Any of those you had to get on the phone and call and say 'can you look and see if you have this?' without any concept of whether they would or not."

"The biggest change has been the internet and our ability to help people in so much more complete ways than we could ever before. When I trained people in my department, I always tell them: try to say yes to people. Try not to say 'oh no, we couldn't do that.' Try

MEN'S WEDDING RINGS

The days of traditional, flat, gold wedding bands that uncomfortably pinched men's fingers are over. Today's grooms are choosing wedding bands that not only flatter their fingers and show signs of personality, but are also very comfortable. Jewelry designers are offering men's wedding bands with slightly curved interior surfaces and beveled edges, inside and out, which will not chafe the skin. Some rings differentiate the top from the bottom with a taper at the bottom that resists knocks. As far as style is concerned, men's wedding bands increasingly incorporate diamonds into their design for more than a little touch of sparkle and sophistication. Diamonds under a carat set flush with the ring's surface are most popular.

Men's wedding rings are as varied as women's wedding rings. Express the standards of love with a bold wedding ring. Choose from thick or thin bands in a variety of fanciful precious metals. We offer a large selection of men's wedding bands and rings. You will find a variety of styles and metals to choose from that will fit any budget. Come into our store located at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center and view all that we have to offer or call us at 617-773-3636. Our experience, skill and knowledge will help you make a confident purchase.

String Beans And Potatoes

When we were growing up, we had a garden full of vegetables. And one of our family's favorite dishes was fresh string beans from the garden cooked with potatoes.

But today, of course, we can either use fresh string beans from the supermarket, or frozen string beans. All work very well for this dish.

Even though there are only two major ingredients, the taste of the combination is super.

STRING BEANS AND POTATOES

4-5 potatoes

1 pound string beans (fresh or frozen)

3 tablespoons olive oil

2 cloves of garlic
salt and pepper to taste

Boil the potatoes with the skin on. Cook the string beans until tender.

When the potatoes are cooled, peel and mash them roughly so that they are chunky. Set aside.

When the string beans are cooked, cut them up in halves and set aside.

In the hot olive oil, sauté the garlic, and add the potatoes. Cook for a few minutes before adding the string beans. Remain cooking until the beans are well blended with the potatoes, and then serve hot.

This is a great side dish that goes with anything from meats to fish.

Firefighter Michael Eastwick Hailed A Hero Again

By SCOTT JACKSON

Quincy Firefighter Michael Eastwick is being hailed as a hero once again.

In February, Eastwick was driving with Weymouth Firefighter Tom Higgins to Higgins's mother-in-law's house. The two were on East Street in Hingham when they noticed smoke pouring out of a house. The two firefighters quickly ran to the house and heard a woman inside.

So, without any protective equipment or tools, Eastwick and Higgins pulled the woman from the home.

"My friend Tom Higgins and I were traveling to his mother-in-law's house to fix the heating system and we went by the house and saw the smoke. We realized that it was a house fire and we got to the door and heard someone calling for help. We forced the door open, got the lady out," Eastwick said.

That wasn't the end of the ordeal. The house's occupant had a dog trapped in the house, and she tried to get back in and save it. Fearing for her safety, the two firefighters had to hold her back.

"She continued to try to get back into the house to get the family pet. We were unable to get the dog; we had to stop her from getting back in a couple times," Eastwick said.

Eastwick received a commendation from Fire Chief Joseph Barron for his actions.

"This rescue was performed in a smoke filled building with deteriorating conditions without the protection of personal protective gear, a charged fire hose, or immediate emergency personnel on scene," Barron said. "By all accounts the woman would not have survived without the swift actions of these off duty firefighters.

"Firefighter Eastwick's unselfish act of bravery is a credit to this department and the entire fire service. The citizens of this city are safer due to the commitment of this man."

Eastwick was honored with a Firemark Award from Liberty Mutual Insurance's Hingham branch on Friday during a brief ceremony at Quincy Fire headquarters. That makes him eligible for a national Firemark Award at the end of the year; if he does win that award the Quincy Fire Department would receive a $10,000 grant.

This isn't the first time Eastwick has been recognized for helping someone in need while he's off duty. In November 2011, he pulled a 71-year old woman out of a crashed car in Abington, administered life support, and kept passersby from moving her while emergency personnel were en route to the scene. Eastwick received a commendation from the City Council for that, but he said he's no different than any of his fellow firefighters.

"It happens quite a bit - pretty much everyone here on this job at one time or another does something off the job," Eastwick said. "For example, another firefighter here - Jimmy Leonard - he just recently helped someone out of a two or three car accident. A year or two before that he had helped somebody at the Boston Garden who was having a seizure.

"It's pretty common for guys to happen across things and lend a hand. You don't just standby and say, 'I'm not on duty so I'm not going to go in,' you have the compassion to help out."

School Committee Considering 2 Part-Time Athletic Directors

get done with all the responsibility of the AD and the teaching or administrative responsibility."

If two part-time AD's are hired the concern amongst the committee is having administrative help in each office to answer the phones when the AD's are not in their respective offices. As of right now Rendle, who is the full-time AD, has a part-time secretary answering the phones at the office.

School Committee member and athletics coach Paul Bregoli said that it's a good idea to have two part-time people because the job is so overwhelming for one person.

"I think it is a good idea, right now it is an overwhelming job for one person," said Bregoli. "If the two part-time people are also going to be teaching a class or classes, like it is being discussed, in addition to the AD position, who is going to answer the phones during those hours? We need an administrative assistant in those offices answering the phones when the two people aren't there, in case of weather issues, and re-scheduling that might have to occur because of it."

Bregoli added that before Rendle became the AD there was an AD for each high school, both where full time back then, but the concept worked in the school system.

Collaboration would be necessary between the two AD's in terms of scheduling and facilities for games and practicing. Having a dedicated person at each school would allow the AD to focus on recruiting new students to athletics, and help resolve issues with the students, parents, and coaches.

"I think that this notion of having two has tremendous merit. The person has to have a lot of energy, passion for the student athletes, parent groups, and coaches, and make sure there is a lot of visibility," said School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro. "I think that it was difficult for Jim to be all the places he wanted to be and that's what we are hoping to accomplish with hiring two part-time people. This is a unique situation and a unique position because it will be both union based and manager based. We are hoping to begin interviews in three weeks or so and have someone hired in early May."

Rendle said he thinks two part-time people would be a positive thing for everyone involved, and would allow the AD to be present at more events.

"I think it's a positive move and you would get more out of two than you can out of one, as long as there is some administrative help to assist the two people when they are not in the office, because this is such a busy office," said Rendle. "I think it is important to have an administrative assistant capable of running the office when the two people are at meetings or in the classroom. Having someone at each school that is accessible to the athletes and coaches is a positive thing for everyone."

DeCristofaro said the current full-time AD salary could cover the salaries for the half-time teacher that would be hired to teach the rest of the course load, the AD stipends, and potentially administrative support. DeCristofaro said that they are still working with the Quincy Education Association about the stipend.

"I think from this point we're going to have this job posted and we're going to see what type of response we get from both North and Quincy in regards to someone in-house bidding on the job. I think at the same time we're not closing the door on any other options if for some reason we feel this isn't going the right way," said McCarthy.

"We are going to keep working at this. I'm going to kind of keep this open-ended a little bit to see how this all pans out over the next month or so and see if we have two viable candidates and we all agree logistically this could happen," he added.

39th Annual South Shore Walk, Family Fun Celebration April 20th

The 39th annual Interfaith Social Services' South Shore Walk will be held Saturday, April 20, rain or shine.

Proceeds benefit thousands of local families in need of food, counseling and emergency assistance.

The event features a 3-mile route which starts and ends at The Kennedy Center in North Quincy. After walking, participants are greeted by a festive Family Fun Celebration featuring food, kids games, a fun photo booth, face painting, clowns, bouncy house, music, raffles, silent auction and much more.

"People are always so enthusiastic to participate in this Walkathon," said Interfaith's executive director Rick Doane. "The kids especially love the ice cream."

For the third year in a row New England Ice Cream Corporation is participating as the walks' lead sponsor.

Interfaith operates a variety of programs designed to help the community. Each year Interfaith Social Services' food pantry serves over 18,000 South Shore residents. Their homelessness prevention and emergency assistance program assists hundreds of families every year.

Whether they have health insurance or not, Interfaith's New Directions Counseling Center starts the healing process for many local families and individuals who are dealing with traumatic and emotionally charged issues.

"This fundraiser is critical to our organization," said Doane. "The only way that we can serve all of the people who turn to us for assistance is with support from the community. We hope that more people than ever will gather pledges and walk on April 20th."

READERS FORUM

C-Mart's Allegations Of Discrimination Untrue

(Editor's note: A copy of the following letter was sent to The Quincy Sun for publication.)

Dear Mayor Koch:

I just want to tell you that C-Market's allegations of discrimination by the city, for its difficulties in opening a store in North Quincy, were uncalled for and untrue.

You and your administration have tried its best to, and put its best foot forward, in encouraging Asians to be part of the Quincy fabric in terms of businesses, civic participation, politics, education, etc. Our seeing you at QARI's annual Lunar and August Moon Festivals and other Asian events have been source of comfort and pride, not only to us Asians, but also for the city of Quincy.

C-Market's false allegations of discrimination sound like "sour grapes" and frustrations on its part for not able to set foot in Quincy by due process. Why doesn't it just face the fact that traffic in that area of Quincy is bad now, and will get worse with another market in that area? Why won't C-Market realize that its presence in North Quincy is a detriment to the quality of life in North Quincy? And why doesn't

C-Market just tell the truth that it really doesn't care about the neighborhood, but only $$$?

C-Market, with its dire, volatile, ugly way of influencing the city council and residents of Quincy, will fail.

Oh, one more important fact: Quincy is the home of a Kam Man Market and a Thuan Dat Market, both large Asian supermarkets. So, representatives of C-Market, how can you say there's racial discrimination in the licensing process??

Judge C-Mart Proposal On Its Merits

Thank you to Mayor Tom Koch for standing up to the attack on Quincy by an apparent frustrated developer and many supporters of a C-Mart supermarket location in North Quincy.

This controversy of the siting has been going on for too long to date. There are legitimate concerns over the North Quincy supermarket site and none of which have been proven to be racially motivated. When those who support something have to resort to the race card, you know that it is a seemingly attempt to vilify your opposition. Someone once said that "Patriotism is the last resort of a scoundrel" but I believe in this instance, the race card is looking like that last resort.

The mayor has rightly rebuked those alleged racist motivations of Quincy calling them both grossly unfair and dishonest. Mayor Koch is right that this ad hominem attack is "an affront to each and every resident of Quincy."

After having had resided in North Quincy almost a quarter-century, I have seen especially my old surrounding neighborhood of North Quincy and also Wollaston to have been very open to newer residents who have become new neighbors across the city. Quincy is among the most diverse municipalities in the commonwealth. Of course, there is a culture clash that has hit Quincy but little by little folks are finding much commonality that have with each other.

After having left Quincy, I ended up in East Boston which is also going through cultural changes with its own growing Latino community. Like Quincy, long timers and newcomers are arriving at the same spoke in caring about the whole community. New businesses solidify the new growing diversity. If Quincy folks in the area around this new proposed C-Mart are opposed to the site why not sit down with folks rather than name-calling which can only widen the gap between people? Calling anyone a racist is little more than race-baiting which by the way I saw more than enough of during my days as a Charlestown activist fighting forced busing in Boston. I believe we should all be in the business of tearing down walls not in building them.

The final decision on the C-Mart location will be decided on its merits and not on unfortunately made racial comments by supermarket supporters.

QMC Nurses Voice Concerns Over Patient Care, Staffing

unit that was provided for patients that are undergoing minimally invasive total joint replacements. So in addition to what was happening in February with the staffing crisis they closed the 40-bed (nursing) unit, and they also closed this 14-bed orthopedic unit. We have great concerns for the quality of care that is being delivered to the patients at our hospital."

Kathy Lionel, a nurse for QMC for 39 years who worked as a resource nurse in the 40-bed unit that was recently closed at the hospital, said that she is very frustrated that she and the rest of the nurses aren't able to provide the patient the type of care they deserve.

"The floor, since we made this move, has been utter chaos with this in and out, constant mix of two different staffs. I do understand the numbers but I think that the pressure that is put on the staff caring for the patients today is volatile," said Lionel. "My source of frustration is, we're not able to deliver the care that we want to deliver and we leave our shifts frustrated. We want to leave that hospital feeling we've done a good job and treat every patient as if they are a family member or they are someone else's family members. We want to look in that room and say that patient looked cared for."

For Emergency Department nurse Stacey McEachern going from being a part of a department that had one of the shortest wait times in the state to having patients waiting six hours shows the impact the staffing crisis has had on the hospital. The longer wait is a result of only two nurses being scheduled in the department instead of the five that are supposed to be on duty under normal circumstances.

"Up until very recently we had the pleasure of having one of the shortest wait times in the State of Massachusetts for patients to see a physician and get into a bed in the emergency department. Since the decision was made to close the 40-bed unit we've had a very negative impact in the care that is given in the emergency department," said McEachern.

"We've had patients that are admitted to the hospital that have received their emergency treatment that are being admitted for a condition that warrants further treatment nursing care and there is no bed for them to go to. The wait in the waiting room has gone from being very short to up to six hours as many as 10-15 patients waiting six hours at a time waiting to get into the emergency department."

McEachern also mentioned that because of the short staff and lack of rooms some patients end up in the hallway on a stretcher waiting for a room after being treated.

"I'd also like to mention the impact this has on the patients. Instead of going up to a room, where you have your own room, your own bathroom, a television to take your mind off of whatever sort of condition you are being treated for, a telephone, and a private area for your visitors to come, patients are staying on stretchers," said McEachern.

"They're being forced to share what we have in the emergency department, which is two bathrooms with as many as 30-35 patients at any given time. Some of them, that are not required to have heart monitoring, are waiting in the hallway for 24 hours, under the lights, never able to have a quiet dark environment to sleep, with no privacy. It's been very difficult for the patients, for the staff, you leave feeling as though you really haven't done what you have been trained to do, what you want to do."

A letter was sent and faxed to the management team at Quincy Medical Center informing them of the hearing but there was no one present to speak on their behalf. In the next week the board will be compiling a report based on the testimony they heard Tuesday morning along with their reaction. The report will then be released into the community and to the media.

"What is happening to the healthcare system is just awful - it is terrible. I am a physician and I would hate to think that you send a patient to your hospital knowing that they can't get good care there," said retired physician and board member Patricia Downs Berger, MD. "This is a real serious problem for Quincy in particular right now, but for all the hospitals that are now becoming private hospitals with service purposes."

QHS Students Visit John Adams Courthouse

PROTECTIVE SERVICES PROGRAM at Quincy High School recently visited the John Adams Courthouse in Boston, the home to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Massachusetts Appeals Court, and the Social Law Library. The Social Law library is the oldest law library in the nation. Students were given a tour by Robert Buchholz, a law clerk for one of the Supreme Court Justices. Students toured the building learning about the historical significance of paintings and sculptures, as well as how the justice system works in this facility everyday. Students also met Associate Justice Mark V. Green who shared his career path with the students and answered questions about the law. The court officers also fielded questions from students. Kathy Boczkowski, a parent of one of the students, helped coordinate this tour. # Leaders Highlight Washington Street Economic Growth eral Avenue in South Quincy to Washington Street. He chose to move his business because he felt it was in a better location than his old one.

"The loan they gave me was very helpful," Sholla said in a phone interview. "We expanded. We're doing more services than we used to."

The Community Block Development Grants are provided through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). Funds from the grants can be used for a number of purposes, including economic development and affordable housing. Mayor Tom Koch credited the Planning Department for their work in administering the grants.

"The Planning Department is an integral part of what we do everyday in the city and they play a major role. Part of that role is really overseeing the Community Development Block Grant Program for the City of Quincy. It has made a major difference in the quality of life of our city in so many neighborhoods and so many areas," Koch said. "I think the number is like $77 million since 1975 that has come into the city, whether it is economic development, whether its housing, whether its assisting several non-profits, but in any case Quincy has maximized every dollar because of the terrific talent we really have in the Planning Department."

Changes in Quincy Point aren't limited to the business community. In his remarks, Koch highlighted a number of infrastructure improvements - either underway or in the planning stages - taking place in the area.

"We have so many good things happening in our city. The Washington Street corridor will continue to see improvements going forward, obviously it's one of the gateways to our downtown," Koch said. "The Fore River Bridge is underway and through Majority Leader Ron Mariano we'll be getting a good portion of Washington Street paved as well, new traffic signals, and the Quincy Avenue and East and West Howard St. intersections are going to be rebuilt. There is a lot of excitement in this part of the city, a lot happening, and everybody is working together in this city and that's why things are moving."

"We've always been concerned about making sure that the areas of the Quincy community that needed attention were given attention. I think the Washington corridor did need some attention. The corridor along Washington Street did offer us some opportunities," Planning Director Dennis Harrington added.

Sean Galvin, chairman of the Chamber's board of directors, said revitalization of businesses on Washington Street is just one example of the work the Chamber has done over the past two decades.

"We've provided over almost four and a half million dollars to businesses over the last 20 years, 80 different companies creating over 750 jobs. In leveraging that money we've been able to create a lot of business opportunities. Since the partnership with the city began in 2002, we've been able to provide one on one technical assistance, small business counseling, entrepreneurial workshops to over a thousand individuals each of them looking to start up their own business or expand on their business here in the City of Quincy," Galvin said. We continue that partnership this month as we kick off a new CDBG backed six week entrepreneurial training program, and we are going to support this program with our private Quincy 2000 loan pool, and make available over $500,000 in loans to the businesses of the City of Quincy.

"If you look at the investment made here in the Washington Street corridor it's the success of the partnership, and it's just a small part of what we've been able to do. The Quincy Chamber is here to support any business and each business as often as we can and in whatever way we can do that."

Sean Glennon, who was named the city's community development director in December, said the Community Development Block Grants are just one of grants the federal government provides to Quincy and its residents.

"On an annual basis we receive over $6 million from the Federal Government to influence projects that provide a better quality of life for all of our Quincy residents, whether it is community center funding, street sidewalk repair, food pantry funding, or economic development programs like small business loans. We implement these programs on an annual basis. Last year we served over 31,000 people through our Community Development Block Grant Program, Home Investment Partnership Program, Emergency Solutions Grant Program, it goes on and on."

The grant programs Glennon referred to are all administered by HUD. Cedric C. I. Kam, an official in HUD's Boston office who helps administer the grant programs, said Quincy is held in high esteem by the department for the city's community improvement efforts.

"It's always a pleasure for us from HUD to come to Quincy because we work with all the New England states and among all of our grants in our New England region the City of Quincy is known as the city that has an excellent program that's run really well, and does a tremendous job trying to improve its community," Kam said. "The office Community Planning and Development and the Block Grant Program really have three primary goals and those are to provide decent housing, a suitable living environment and to expand economic opportunities for the residents in the community. I think you can see right here all of those goals having been accomplished and continuing to be accomplished by the City of Quincy.

"Quincy is one of our better grants and it was a real plum for me to work with the City of Quincy."

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest, who represents part of the Washington Street corridor, presented Rizzo with a plaque on behalf of the Planning Department honoring Rizzo for the assistance he has provided to the business community city-wide.

"In recognition of outstanding work as president of Quincy Chamber of Commerce and as Executive Director of the Quincy 2000 Collaborative. We are grateful for your partnership with the City's Department of Planning and Community Development, and promoting Quincy's economic vitality and making this great city of presidents an exceptional place to live, work, invest, and visit," Laforest said, reading from the plaque.

The award came as a surprise to Rizzo.

"I didn't expect that award, and on behalf of myself and the Chamber I thank you very much for the recognition. It's been a pleasure to work under Quincy 2000 and now the Chamber of Commerce and the partnership with the City of Quincy and the Mayor's Office, and the Planning Department and other entities, to work for the betterment of the community, certainly the business community, but all aspects of the community. It really takes a team effort," Rizzo said.

North Quincy Girls Experiencing All Golf Has To Offer

By BILL GRIFFIN

It seemed like a pleasant game to play. Take a walk, hit a little white ball around the rolling green of a golf course, and enjoy the sunshine and good times.

As freshmen, they had only played for fun. They knew little of the game. A few of them didn't own clubs. However, they were athletes. They were hockey players and although the two sports share little in pace and tempo, there is this natural draw between the two. There is more mystery than proof in the explanation, but the connection is there.

"First, we had to show them the swing was different," smiled North Quincy-Quincy girls golf coach Maureen Duggan whose club was 0-2 at the end of last week in a fitful start to the season due to the cold, wet weather. Quincy-North lost its opener to powerful Wellesley and fell to Fontbonne, 3 1/2-2 1/2.

As seniors, the hockey players have become golfers. Kennedy Harding, Erin McGinness, Katie White and Megan White have traveled a long, happy road and are effective varsity golfers. They have enjoyed each step of it and their improvement has been striking.

"You wouldn't believe how far they've come," said Duggan. "They improved because they listened, watched and responded to instruction. They've developed into good golfers."

They started at the very beginning. Grip the club. Address the ball. Keep your head down. Slow backswing. Swing easy and smooth. Follow through on the shot. It was Golf 101 and after the first halting steps, their learning curve has been quick and steep.

"We emphasized the grip. That's where it all begins," said Duggan.

In the beginning, there were misses, topped balls, dribblers, and shots squiring in different directions. They may not have been golfers, but they were athletes. They practiced and they watched. Jackie Eeley, a great player at North, worked with them.

Donnie Small, former pro at Presidents Golf Club and a North Quincy graduate, gave free lessons. Athletes connected with other athletes.

The dribblers and topped shots went away. In a matter of weeks, they were striking the ball solidly. Shots flew straight and true. Short games developed. They putt-ed, chipped, and played out of the sand. They played in the wild swings of weather from golf in March's snow flurries to golf under the hot May sun.

"They're a great group of kids and I'm happy that they've experienced what golf has to offer," said Duggan.

Harding, a captain on the hockey team, has emerged as the No. 1 player. She has a solid all-around game and has been an excellent leader in two sports in her time at North. She played a fine match against Wellesley.

"She's such a great kid and a natural athlete," said Duggan. "She's a very good all-around player. Her game has developed to where she doesn't have a big weakness. She can still practice and improve, but her game is solid."

McGinness, who was a terrific goalie on the hockey team, has an excellent drive and a good touch on the greens. Katie and Megan White played defense in hockey and are twin sisters. Not surprisingly, they have similar games. Against Fontbonne, Katie won 1-up and Megan lost, you guessed it, 1-down.

"The can both chip and putt. Each of them was strong against Fontbonne," said Duggan.

The gem to watch on the team is freshman Lily Chapman. Unlike the four seniors, she came to North with a fully-developed game and Duggan sees a bright future for her. Chapman impressed with a two-up win against Fontbonne.

"She drives the ball well. She chips and putts and she is straight," said Duggan. "She has a lot of potential. She could be one of the best players in the league (Mass Bay North) by the time she is a senior."

More than most sports, the late snows and wet grounds have limited the golf team. They were only able to get outside for three practices in March. Golf can only be practiced indoors at the risk of serious injury. Three of their first four matches were postponed. They played half a match at their home course of Furnace Brook, but couldn't find a course to finish it when bad weather struck. Presidents, Franklin Park, and Granite Links were all closed. It is golf in a New England spring.

"I don't think we've ever played in as much rain, snow and wet grounds," said Duggan who has coached North Quincy for five years.

There is a code and an etiquette to golf. It is the only sport where a player calls a penalty on herself. It is a social game, a game of conversation where opponents don't have to be enemies. Harding, McGinness, Katie White and Megan White have honored its customs.

"There is a social part of the game, meeting and enjoying other people. These girls have done that," said Duggan. "I think the thing that makes me proudest is we've been nominated for the sportsmanship award in the league twice in four years."

They have found a game they can play all their lives. As an athlete ages, football, baseball, hockey, tennis and running gradually become casualties to the passing of time. Golf is always there. Find a course and watch the players. They play through their 60s, 70s, and 80s. Some use carts. Some walk with a bit of a stoop and a hint of a limp. Still they play, in many cases, for as long as they can breathe.

"I told them golf was a game they would have all their lives. I'm happy for them that they found it," said Duggan.

Len Morris Screens Clips From Award-Winning Documentaries

Filmmaker Visits Quincy High School

Len Morris uses a movie camera to fight child labor.

At a recent evening at Quincy High School, Morris screened for the public seven clips from his award-winning documentaries.

He showed interviews he has conducted with people such as Nobel Peace Laureate Desmond Tutu as well as interviews with street children and migrant farm-worker children.

Len Morris and the charity he co-founded 10 years ago, The Kenyan School House Project, were selected by student members of Operation: Day's Work-USA (ODW for short) as their 2013 ODW Annual Charity partner. These ODW students, many from Quincy, meet after school to find ways to create more educational opportunities for peers in developing countries.

The ODW-Kenyan School House partnership was officially announced during the event at Quincy High School.

Following the formal announcement, Len gave a powerful but hopeful presentation. Members of the public, ODW members from Quincy High, Archbishop Williams High and Broad Meadows Middle were there in force, many with their families, neighbors and friends.

Earlier in the day, Quincy's Beth Bloomer (co-author of the ODWUSA Constitution and now a grade 8 L.A. teacher at Silver Lake Regional Middle School) arranged for Len Morris to address a school assembly at Silver Lake Regional Middle School. The night before, Len gave a talk at Thetford Academy in Vermont at which Vermont ODW members from Thetford Academy and The Newton School also attended.

At each presentation, Len screened clips of footage of child labor which he recorded using a hidden camera at great personal risk in eight countries. One never before seen clip was shown for the very first time ever at Quincy High.

Ron Adams, Broad Meadows teacher and ODW adviser said following Len Morris' Quincy High presentation:

"Len and his cameras are our eyes. Len reveals what is supposed to be hidden. His footage shows us respectfully some of the millions of children hidden away in sweatshops and in fields.

"Len sneaks in, uses hidden cameras, uses fake IDs, smuggles footage out of hostile areas, bribes officials, does whatever he can to show the truth about child labor IN OUR TIME. Len is the modern day Lewis Hine. Lewis Hine used still photos a hundred years ago to expose child labor in the U.S. Today, Len uses a movie camera, sometimes hidden in his sunglasses, to expose child labor globally."

Len was awarded the U.S. Department of Labor's 2012 "Iqbal Masih Award" for his years and years of fighting child labor through film.

labor, poverty and preventable diseases. His films and Kenyan School House charity also reveal the hope that child labor, poverty and preventable diseases can be defeated.

Len told the audience at Quincy High: "Child labor is a very complex issue, but one indisputable fact is that the solution is education."

Len tries to educate his audiences through his documentaries. Len also co-founded The Kenyan School House Project in Kenya to educate former child laborers, especially rescued girl child laborers.

The ODW students voted recently to partner with Len Morris' Kenyan School House Project as their "ODW Charity of the Year." The formal announcement was made last Friday at Quincy High School.

Len started The Kenyan School House Project ten years ago. Seven former child laborers who attended The Kenyan School House are now in college.

Len Morris ended his Quincy High presentation by saying, "We can because we all have the same heart. We care because we all have the same heart."

Len's new film which will debut in September will be titled "The Same Heart."

Traffic Issues Dominate Council C-Mart Review

sion and the proposal was remanded to the council as part of a settlement with the city. At Monday's meeting, Councillor Joe Finn — the sole councillor who voted in favor of C-Mart four years ago — reminded his colleagues that the judge's remand order instructs the council to compare C-Mart's traffic impact to traffic impacts of any uses for the site that would not require a special permit.

"One of the things I'd like to make sure we all have a very clear understanding of here," Finn said, "is that as this comes back before us, the settlement that we had defines certain parameters, so to speak, that are being imposed upon us in terms of how to consider the evidence that comes before us."

During the second public hearing on C-Mart, held two weeks ago, the applicants presented information on traffic that could be generated from possible by-right uses on the property. Compared to C-Mart, a combination movie theater, office, garden center, restaurant, and dental/medical office would generate 19 fewer vehicle trips during the peak hour on weekday mornings and 75 fewer during the Saturday midday peak hour; during the weekday afternoon/evening peak hour, however, C-Mart would generate 132 more trips.

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci asked BSC Group President Charles Kalauskas, who did C-Mart's traffic study, why he should vote in favor of the proposal when it would add 132 more trips during the p.m. peak hour. Kalauskas said that Fang would pay for mitigation, including a new traffic signal at the intersection of Hancock and Hayward and a left turn only lane on the northbound side of Hancock onto Hayward, to offset the increased vehicle trips. Such mitigation wouldn't be necessary for the by right uses.

"The as-of-right uses would not have any traffic mitigation along Hancock Street. It would not have a signal at Hancock and Hayward. It would not improve synchronization and signal timing along the corridor," Kalauskas said. "Those we believe are improvements made by the proponent and will improve traffic conditions."

In a peer review of the plan, Nitsch Engineering Vice President Fayssal Hussein said re-signalization of the lights on Hancock would improve flow on that street, but would also hurt traffic on side streets. Ward 5 Councillor Kirsten Hughes asked him to elaborate on that Monday.

"The result shows that on Hancock Street traffic will operate better, however the side streets would be penalized, which means that at the signalized intersection when you assign the time, more time is given to Hancock Street and less time was given to the side street. They would be penalized more so people would have to wait longer to really enter the intersection to travel on Hancock Street," Hussein said. "After the first round, the traffic engineer did some analysis and adjusted some of the timing."

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin asked Quincy's traffic engineer Jack Gillon to compare the by right use's impact to C-Mart's, and for his thoughts on the proposed mitigation plan. Gillon said the by-right uses would be favorable to a supermarket, and that the mitigation efforts would come up short.

"We have a tough situation out there now. We're adding on a high generation use — it's not a low generation use as a warehouse, distributor, or a garden center," Gillon said. "I think you're going to have gridlock beyond what you're going to have right now and I think that there are better uses that may be permissible that won't have the same impact as what we're looking at with this one."

"I don't think that the mitigation is fully effective," Gillon continued. "I don't think that there is a fallback position or a fail safe that we can say 'let's put this money in the bank and if it doesn't work we're just going to come back and we're going to build this.' I don't think there's anything you can build without land takings other than what they're proposing. I'm not sure what they're proposing is going to work."

During the two public hearings, many residents backing C-Mart indicated that they would walk or take public transit to C-Mart and not contribute to the area's traffic woes by driving to the store. Finn asked Kalauskas if he felt that would be the case going forward. Kalauskas said both past studies and his observations indicated that C-Mart's customers would be less likely to drive.

"We looked at data on Asian-American shopping patterns. Studies have shown that they tend to use public transportation or walk more than the average population," Kalauskas said. "It's also from our observations — we've seen people in North Quincy with C-Mart bags with groceries carrying them home from the Wollaston MBTA station."

Coughlin, however, disputed that notion. He said he's seen an increase in the number of cars parked around North Quincy, and asked Gillon if it was safe to infer that the increase means more Asian Americans in the area are driving than the studies indicate. In response Gillon said that he found that most customers who shop at the Kam Man Plaza on Quincy Avenue drive there as opposed to walking.

Coughlin also raised questions about how many customers could be coming to C-Mart from places too far away to either walk or take public transit. Coughlin looked at reviews of a Boston C-Mart from customers on Yelp, and then looked at each user's profile to find where they live.

"When I did that I found that the locations of those people who are reviewing the store, some of them were from Boston, some were from Brookline, some were from Cambridge and Medford. But there were also people from Providence, Rhode Island, Warwick, Rhode Island, from Randolph, from Pembroke, from Dartmouth, from a variety of communities south of Boston and southwest of Boston," Coughlin said.

Coughlin asked Gillon if customers who drive from south of Boston would shop in Quincy if the C-Mart did open. Gillon said factors other than travel time could affect those customer's decision to shop in Quincy or Boston.

"If it takes you less time to come to Quincy than it does to downtown Boston, most people would make their decisions on that. Some people make their decision based on combining trips. If they go to Boston, they're also going to go to Chinatown to see uncle Larry or they have other stores they're going to go to," Gillon said.

The C-Mart site on Hayward Street is adjacent to a Hannaford's shopping center. Like C-Mart, a special permit was needed from the City Council before the market, at that time a Shaw's supermarket could open. Ed Fleming, an attorney representing C-Mart, said area residents raised the same concerns over traffic during when Shaw's sought a special permit but the council still approved the project.

"When the Shaw's proposal came before this board, the same concerns were raised back in 1994 and 1995. I was here, sitting in this room, listening to the same concerns that were expressed by the neighbors," Fleming said. "Although the concerns expressed by the neighborhood indicated at times that the traffic concerns could never be addressed, and that they would essentially prohibit the flow of traffic on Hancock Street, this body understood at that time that there were certain by-right uses, and the City Council had to consider those by right uses."

"Understanding those by right uses, they also understood the benefits of the proposal. Those benefits being that it would serve the community's interest in having a supermarket in that location. They also understood that the impacts of a proposal like the Shaw's development, that the council had the opportunity to implement certain mitigation measures to mitigate against any traffic matters or impacts."

Kalauskas used the Shaw's example to illustrate how traffic studies often overestimate the number of vehicle trips a new project will create. Traffic engineers predicted 600 new trips during the weekday peak hour, but Kalauskas said they only observed 340 trips during that same time period. On Saturdays, engineers predicted 850 trips but only 400 were observed.

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest challenged those numbers. The Shaw's proposal included an automotive shop that was never built, and she felt a car care center like that would generate more traffic than the other businesses that took its place.

"Not only was it a supermarket going in there, but Bob's Speed Shop. Bob's Speed Shop was anticipated being in there, which would have been a much higher traffic generation. I was concerned we were skewing data," Laforest said. "There were different components of the project that did not occur. I don't think that's a fair data analysis to be using."

Fleming responded that disparity between projected and actual vehicle trips was so high that it would be hard for those numbers to be skewed because the auto shop didn't open.

The C-Mart site is located in Ward 5; Hayward Street is actually the boundary between Wards 5 and 6. Councillor Doug Gutro, who represented Ward 5 for a decade before being elected at-large, recalled that residents protested the opening of a similar supermarket, Super 88, elsewhere in Ward 5 at 733 Hancock St.

"I was also involved in the Super 88. That had an equal level of proponents and opponents and was a fairly big issue. People had extraordinary concerns about the traffic generation and the parking havoc," Gutro said. "That was a 21,000 square foot store that entire building — double the space — was a Capital Supermarket when I was a kid. Folks in the neighborhood genuinely thought, as did some of the abutters, that this would tip the scales traffic wise. It was conditioned to have parking attendants outside and all of that."

"It turned out in short order none of that was needed. They've since transferred ownership to Thuan Dat Grocery Store. In my tenure as the ward councillor I didn't not receive any calls or complaints relative to that."

No vote was taken at Monday's meeting, and the council has until June 20 to do so. Another meeting has been scheduled for April 23 at 7 p.m. inside City Hall.

The council requested more information be made available at the meeting. That includes more details on the number of delivery trucks to the site. C-Mart's representatives have said only a handful of trucks are needed a day, but Coughlin said Hannaford's — a larger market than C-Mart — has 175 deliveries a week. Laforest asked for more information on how many employees would work at the store, and how many would park there. Gutro said he plans to raise issues regarding lights, signs, carriages, and drainage at that next meeting.

During this week's meeting, Palmucci took an opportunity to refute statements made at the public hearings that assumed opposition to C-Mart was based on anti-Asian sentiments.

"I was troubled by the racial component that was brought into it at the proceedings. There were several folks who were in favor of this project who brought race into and several folks who were opposed. I think I can speak for my fellow members here, but for me anyways, this issue will not be decided on race, on ethnicity, or on anything of that nature. It will be based on the merits," Palmucci said. "It was raised that the city isn't as accommodating to Asian business owners as it is to others. I know from personal experience that that's not the case."

"Since 2008, when this was first proposed, 1,815 business have opened up in the City of Quincy — 474 were owned or operated by people of Asian decent. That's 26.1 percent. From the last census, the Asian population in the City of Quincy is approximately 22 to 24 percent."

Palmucci also lamented the fact that Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee was ordered to recuse himself as part of the settlement.

"We shouldn't be voting as an incomplete body. We should be voting as a complete body. Obviously Councillor McNamee was excluded from this process in a formal way, and I just think that it's a mistake to not allow his voice to be heard as a member of this body," Palmucci said. "I was contacted by a number of his constituents who were quite frankly dismayed by the fact that he wasn't allowed to sit up here and be a voice for the folks he represents. I share their concern. I just can't be silent about a process that excludes one of our members and in turn the members they represent."

HEALTH CARE IS HERE IN QUINCY.
BUT THE MNA LEADERSHIP IS LIVING IN THE PAST.

The Massachusetts Nurses Association claims that its upcoming strike against Quincy Medical Center is all about maintaining the quality of care for patients.

But for years, the MNA was part of the problem that drove Quincy Medical Center into bankruptcy. It wasn't until Steward Health Care took over in 2011 that the tide finally began to turn. And today, the contrast between the old model and the new model couldn't be any clearer.

	OLD QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER	NEW QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER
Hospital Safety Score by The Leapfrog Group	B	A
Mortality Rate	--	6% reduction
Hospital-Acquired Infections	--	49% reduction
Capital Investment	$0	$57 million to date; commitments for an additional $20 million
Taxes	$0	$2.5 million in estimated taxes in 2013
Financial Performance	Bankruptcy Case #11-16394-MSH	Continued investment to promote long-term stability

Which begs the question: Is the MNA really concerned about maintaining quality care at Quincy Medical Center? Or is it more concerned with maintaining an outdated model that failed the people of Quincy?
